"I don't want to see it." He turned away, refusing to watch.

"Why don't you want to see it, my boy?" Bai Six bent down, looking over Tawil's shoulder at the image in the watery wall in front of him. "Are you jealous?"

"Jealous of that vessel you are as a human being, about to have the Bai Liu you dreamed of. Jealous that this vessel is like you were at the beginning—transformed from a lonely, cold creation into a monster with a soul because you were loved by Bai Liu."

"Jealous that Spades will see, embrace, and kiss the happy Bai Liu that you sacrificed your soul to wish for?"

"Yes." Tawil remained quiet for a long time before slowly opening his eyes to gaze at the image in the watery wall. "I was jealous of him... of my vessel."

"I suffer from jealousy and the inability to have."

Countless transparent threads fell onto Tawil's body like snow from the depths of the stars, enveloping him in a cocoon called [Pain]. His face became obscured, and only his voice, light and calm, could be heard emerging from the threads.

"But I know it wasn’t his fault. He didn’t choose what he was born for; it was all just a game of yours."

"The relationship between me, Bai Liu, and Spades is one of God, sacrifice, and servant."

"One of the three of us must be a god, one a sacrifice who suffers because of the gods, and one a squire who guards the sacrifice."

The threads continued to fall around Tawil, their sound growing fainter with each passing moment.

"No matter who becomes the god, who is the sacrifice, or who is the servant, everyone suffers."

"So you made a wish to prevent Bai Liu from becoming a god, choosing instead to make the most painful wish for yourself." Bai Six raised an amused eyebrow. "Did you intentionally allow Spades to be born?"

Tawil was silent for a long time before he finally spoke.

"Yes."

His gaze passed through the densely woven silk threads, settling on Bai Liu's image on the watery wall screen. Spades, with a cool expression, pushed forward, his pupils glimmering with dappled light, and his tone soft.

"I can't think of a second way to make Bai Liu happy while making myself miserable at the same time."

"What a great sacrifice," Bai Six remarked with a smile. "This plan you and Lu Yizhan worked on would have been flawless. As you intended, you would have become my heir, an evil god, guarding the door from the heretics on the other side to restore the world line to normal."

"Bai Liu's memory would have been sealed by Lu Yizhan. He would have grown up under his care, becoming an ordinary person in this mundane world. Then, he would have met your stripped vessel, Spades, in a light-hearted love story."

"Lu Yizhan won the game, others won world peace, and Bai Liu won family, friends, and lovers."

"Only you, my poor boy," Bai Six continued, placing his hand on Tawil's silken shoulder as if in pity. "You've lost everything you had, a lonely, miserable soul watching a world where everyone else is happy from the door."

"It's amazing this is the best ending you could conjure."

"But here's what you didn't anticipate." Bai Six raised his hand in front of the watery wall facing Tawil, snapping his fingers as he smiled. "There was someone who didn't follow the trajectory you and Lu Yizhan predicted."

The image on the watery wall paused, then rewound rapidly, the scenes blending into a fragmented patchwork, finally stopping at the image of young Bai Liu, fourteen years old, lying languidly by a pond.

At that moment, Lu Yizhan had just used his skill to forcibly erase all memories of Xie Ta from young Bai Liu.

Lu Yizhan asked Bai Liu if he wanted to change his name and escape, but the young Bai Liu, who should have forgotten everything, turned toward the pond and spoke in a hoarse voice.

"I don't accept too many name changes."

"Why?" Lu Yizhan asked.

Bai Liu, his eyes listless and distant, responded, "...I don't know. I always had the feeling that maybe someone... would come to me under my original name."

"I don't want him to be unable to find me."

Tawil's pupils, hidden in the threads, snapped shut.

"Surprised, aren't you?" Bai Six smiled. "I'm surprised too. I thought Bai Liu had completely forgotten you. The memory-wiping skill I gave to Lu Yizhan is a god-level, world-line skill, which means even a god can't fully erase Bai Liu's memories of you."

"He doesn't know who you are, doesn't remember your connection, but he instinctively does everything he can to keep you."

The scene on the watery wall shifted to Lu Yizhan escaping the orphanage with young Bai Liu.

Just as they were about to leave, Bai Liu suddenly turned back, running inside: "Wait, I need to get something."

"What is it?" Lu Yizhan asked desperately. "They're coming after us!"

Bai Liu didn't pause. "Something very important."

Lu Yizhan was stunned when Bai Liu returned, panting, holding something in his arms—bloodstained bandages and a storybook, torn and glued back together.

The image in the watery wall shifted again, showing a slightly older Bai Liu, around 17 or 18, in a school uniform, standing on the street, staring at a doll waving at him from outside a shopping mall with a big sale.

Bai Liu approached the doll, meeting its eyes. "Hello."

The doll froze, then removed its hood to reveal a confused man inside. "You... hello? What can I do for you?"

"I'd like to ask," Bai Liu said calmly, "How much does it cost to do this for about a month?"

The man in the doll suit scratched his head helplessly. "Look at the dress. You're still a high school student, right? It's not even a holiday.

You might as well study hard before worrying about making money."

"It's tiring doing this. Look at me—hanging around here all day for just sixty bucks, all covered in sweat."

"I'm not afraid of being tired." Bai Liu nodded, "Sixty a day? Thanks."

As he turned to leave, the man in the doll suit called out, somewhat irritated, "Hey! Are you in some kind of trouble? Do you have any adults to take care of you?"

Bai Liu's back stopped, but he didn't turn around. His voice remained calm. "I don't know."

"But I feel as though I have someone else to feed."

The man didn't hear the first part clearly, only the second half, and he bitterly advised again, "Then don't bother with the doll suit. It's not much money."

"I don't want it. He does." Bai Liu's tone was cold. "But he's not very good at it, so I'll do it instead."

"How much money can I make playing a doll? Will it support us both?"

"[I don't need you to feed me, and you can't afford it. Just mind your own business.]"

Bai Six curled the corners of his mouth.

"Bai Liu clearly doesn't remember you, but since you disappeared, he's never stopped searching for you in this world line where your existence has been erased."

"Although he never found you, he never doubted your existence."

Bai Six reached out, brushing the watery wall. The image shifted once again, and he spoke with a low, amused smile.

"Even when he questioned his own sanity, he never doubted you."

In the watery wall, an image of Bai Liu appeared—now an adult, likely in his twenties. He sat in a poorly equipped community counseling room, staring levelly at the psychiatrist across from him. He calmly described his condition.

"...I always feel like I met someone who was very important to me when I was about fourteen, someone around this tall, supposedly good-looking—though I can't really remember. They had silvery-blue eyes that seemed to drive people crazy. But I've checked countless times and never found any information about this person."

The psychiatrist, flipping through Bai Liu's case notes, paused.

"Mr. Bai Liu, some children who experience extreme loneliness in their youth tend to imagine a friend of their own—sometimes these friends take on surreal qualities, like fairy tale monsters."

"But these fantasies usually don't last into adulthood, do they?" Bai Liu asked, his tone cool. "I might be a psychopath, but there's no way this person is just a figment of my imagination."

"Because...?" The psychiatrist prompted.

Bai Liu suddenly fell silent.

The psychologist looked up, waiting for an answer. "Because of what?"

Bai Liu lifted his gaze. "Because I can tell he's not some imaginary friend, or some monster."

"He's someone very important to me."

Bai Six smiled and whispered into the silk-covered ear of Tawil.

"Bai Liu is still in love with you."

"He loves the soul you abandoned and sacrificed."

A tear slowly fell from Tawil's eye, and the watery wall before him cracked like shattered mirrors. Countless threads from his body flew outward, cascading like falling snow in the playback.

"Don't," Tawil whispered through his tears, reaching out for the silk threads that slipped away from him. "Don't say that."

"Don't let me know he's still in love with me."

Tawil's voice was hoarse as he stared at Bai Liu through the fractured image in the watery wall, tears streaming down his face.

"Because if I know... I'll never be able to stop suffering. And then, it will be his turn to suffer."

Evil God Festival – Boathouse

The mirrored water wall reflected Tawil and Spades on either side.

The countless threads of Tawil and Spades soared upward, pulled straight out, and were carried deep into the universe, spreading endlessly, flowing through a distant door.

Behind the door sat a young Bai Liu, aged fourteen, in a chair, with Bai Six embracing him. A silk thread ran directly from beneath Bai Liu's chair, tying around his wrists and ankles.

Bai Liu was wrapped in thick silk threads, and Bai Six gently stroked the strands falling across his shoulders, smiling softly as he spoke.

"The suffering of the sacrifice and the attendant is ultimately offered to God. The more they struggle, the more suffering God receives."

"Only God, then, is the most painful of all creatures."

"Do you agree?" Bai Six's hand passed through the silk threads, brushing them away from Bai Liu's face. He cupped Bai Liu's cheek and said softly, "You wear such a sad expression, but it's perfect."

"There's no better heir than you."

Bai Six gazed down into Bai Liu's pitch-black eyes, which reflected no light, and a smile curled on his lips. "If you were a god, who would you choose as your beloved sacrifice?"

"Is it necessary to choose?" Bai Liu suddenly spoke, his eyes lifting to meet Bai Six's through the silk threads. "The sacrifice before me, the soul that offered me love... hasn't there only ever been one?"

[System warning: Player Bai Liu's spirit level is at zero, and the berserk panel has been activated!]

Bai Liu's right hand grasped the silk thread, pulling it toward him. Bai Six, also tangled in the threads, was dragged a step toward Bai Liu. Together, they both stepped into the void.

"You surely can't be fooled," Bai Six said with a smile as they descended. "You're far too perceptive about the love and pain you receive."

"You are the most perfect mirror I've ever seen."

Bai Six's hand reached out to touch Bai Liu's dark eyes through the overflowing silk threads. He whispered dreamily, "I can see clearly in your eyes what I have."

"What I have..."

Bai Liu's hair floated upward, strands of it and transparent threads brushing past the corners of his eyes. His gaze remained calm as he looked directly at Bai Six, yet his eyes reflected only the universe—nothing more, except for a door with a silvery-blue glow.

"It's just a door without a key."

Bai Six laughed and snapped his fingers. The door appeared beneath them, opening, and he and Bai Liu fell into it, entangled in the silk threads.

"Bai Liu, where did you say the key to this door is?"

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has triggered a plot point to enter "The Evil God Festival - Act 3."]

Flames raged, and screams echoed from within the shrine, now engulfed in fire.

Inside the Shrine.

Bai Liu was instantly transported back to a timeline from five years ago. He locked eyes with Bai Six, his eyes glowing an eerie silvery-blue, before snapping a sharp whip toward Bai Six's face.

The whip tore through the air, smashing directly into the pond beneath the shrine, cracking the bottom and causing water to spill into the cracks, revealing the barren pool floor.

At the center of the pool lay Tawil, blindfolded with silk, soaked through, and huddled at the bottom. He choked weakly, clutching the coin Bai Liu had given him.

Without hesitation, Bai Liu leaped into the pool and dashed toward Tawil.

A black bone whip fell in front of Bai Liu, spinning a bone spike outward. Bai Liu skillfully leaped backward to dodge and blocked the strike with his own whip.

The whips intertwined as Bai Liu and Bai Six moved in perfect synchronization, pulling the handles in opposite directions.

Bai Liu looked up at Bai Six, who smirked back. "Although I'm using a weak shell now, and you've forced yourself to explode to your limits, it's not going to be that easy for you to defeat me."

As soon as the words left his mouth, Bai Liu released the whips and shifted his right hand into a monkey's paw, his gaze sharp and unwavering.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu uses Player Mu Sicheng's Burst Skill (Thief Stalking) - Super Full Speed Stamina Slot Empty Status.]

In an instant, Bai Liu appeared in front of Bai Six, his long fingers flipping, and his sharp monkey claws slashing at Bai Six's neck.

Bai Six raised an eyebrow and swiftly crouched down, letting the pendant fall back onto his neck, while swinging his whip backhandedly to ensnare Bai Liu's wrist. Bone spikes shot outward, attempting to shake him off.

Bai Liu twisted his wrist and pressed forward, his monkey paw aimed directly at Bai Six's throat.

"Nice response," Bai Six said, leaning back and stepping away. He smirked, pointing to the reverse cross pendant at his chest. "When did you realize that this body is using this pendant and not the supposed wish to summon me?"

Bai Liu's eyes remained cold and focused. Without a word, he raised his hand and attacked Bai Six's left hand, targeting the reverse cross pendant.

"Ah, it seems you won't speak," Bai Six said thoughtfully, a smile playing on his lips. "Then I'll have to guess."

"You figured out that the wishing level here doesn't even reach divine status, and you once used the reverse cross to summon Tawil in reality, didn't you?"

"But unfortunately..." Bai Six's gaze scattered as he raised his hand, intercepting Bai Liu's strike. He smiled, "This pendant no longer serves its purpose, because Spades has completely destroyed Tawil."

Bai Liu's chest rose and fell with a slight shudder, his wrist, now held by Bai Six, bloodied from the bone spikes that had pierced it, the blood dripping steadily down.

Bai Six laughed. "With your current strength, you're not lucky enough to take the Reverse Cross from me."

"But alas, it seems your luck is... running out."

"Die, Bai Six!" A harsh female voice shouted from behind him, and a short knife pierced through his chest.

The force of the stab pushed Bai Liu slightly forward, just enough for his outstretched monkey paw to snag the Reverse Cross pendant, which hung before his heart.

Bai Liu yanked the pendant free, but the grin on Bai Six's face only deepened as he backhanded a whip at Beiyuan Xiaokui, who had thrust her sword into his body with all her might. The whip turned into a poker, gleaming coldly as it slashed toward Bai Liu's right wrist, where he clutched the pendant.

Bai Liu's hand dropped with a crash, blood pouring from the wound.

Xiaokui, struck by the whip, was thrown against a pillar. She collapsed to her knees, coughing up a mouthful of blood.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu switches to the system panel of player Liu Jiayi and uses his personal skill (Antidote) on himself.]

Bai Liu tossed an antidote bottle into the air, interrupting the flow of blood, and grabbed at the Reverse Cross pendant slipping from Bai Six’s grasp. The antidote splashed across Bai Liu’s severed hand, and within seconds, his hand regrew, just in time for a whip to smash the bottle.

The force jolted Bai Liu’s hand away from the pendant, but despite the brief disconnection, he reacted quickly. With near-invisible speed, he used his fingers to hook the Reverse Cross back.

As he grasped it, Bai Six paused, a low smile curling his lips. He raised his right hand, opening it slowly.

A coin-shaped pendant fell from his fingers, swinging like a pendulum.

At the bottom of the pool, Tawil, bruised and scarred, coughed as he opened his hand—not holding coins, but the Reverse Cross pendant, now in his possession.

[System Warning: Player Bai Six's token prop (Reverse Cross Pendant) for summoning the Evil God has disappeared. The Evil God will soon leave the game copy.]

"That's funny," Bai Six muttered, his body paling with each passing second, like a corpse, yet he continued to smile at Bai Liu with amusement. "That's funny."

"In that moment, you seized the opportunity to work with the others and trade the Reverse Cross pendant from me."

"You really placed your hopes on such a risky gamble, helping the other side to help you."

Bai Six glanced over at the limp Xiaokui, still slumped against the pillar. "Just like in the last match."

He smiled, eyes flicking to the bloodied Bai Liu. "I wonder, when did you start believing in this 'good things come in return' nonsense?"

"Are you really going to beat me with your 'good will triumph' mentality?"

A chuckle escaped Bai Six's lips. "A friendly reminder: the last person who thought like you never beat me."

Bai Liu, battered and leaning against the pillar, looked up slowly, his voice hoarse yet firm. "I don't believe in good karma either."

"In my experience, the bad guys often fare better than the good ones."

"You've made me even more curious," Bai Six mused, tilting his head. "Why did you choose to play this game?"

"You clearly don't think that helping others will get you anywhere, but you did it anyway."

Bai Liu's eyes narrowed as he responded coolly. "Because I beat you once before."

"I'm not being nice."

"I simply repeated my last victory over you when I had no other choice."

Bai Six paused, realization dawning on him. "Ah, I see. You helped Yuan Guang defeat me by mistake last time. You hoped it would work again this time, didn't you?"

"That's interesting."

Bai Six gazed at Bai Liu with a soft smile. "You've only gotten negative feedback from me—'good actions lead to bad outcomes,' 'helping others only brings misfortune.'"

"But just once, you helped someone, and now you're starting to see positive feedback."

"Bai Liu," he said with a knowing smile, "you're making me wonder if I might be a good person at heart."

"I'm really looking forward to our next encounter."

[System Alert: Evil God leaves player Bai Six's body.]

Bai Liu collapsed to his knees as Bai Six's body shut its eyes and crumpled to the ground.

He took a shaky breath, his face pale and bloodless, and steadied himself before slowly rising to his feet.

Bai Liu used the antidote to heal himself and staggered toward Tawil in the pool.

Pausing beside him, he bent down and lifted Tawil horizontally. Tawil, blindfolded by silk thread, weakly wrapped his arms around Bai Liu's shoulders, his voice soft and confused. "Bai Liu?"

"You hold on tight." Bai Liu took a deep breath, adjusting his grip. With his other arm, he hoisted the unconscious Xiaokui onto his back. His face remained calm as he spoke, "What Bai Six left us isn't over."

"The Gifune family's waiting outside. I'll get you both out of here before you say anything."

Evil God Festival – Boathouse

The shrine doors burst open as Bai Liu kicked them down, sending a rush of endless flames surging toward him. Ash and heat collided in the air, enveloping him.

He lifted his gaze. His dark eyes reflected the burning orange glow of the fires, the blackened mountains, and the dazzling fireworks exploding across the sky.

From afar, he heard the crowd at the foot of the hill cheering, their voices rising in unison as they began the countdown.

"As the Festival of Evil begins and the fireworks reach their grand finale, let's count down to the happiest time of the year!"

"Ten!"

Brilliant bursts of fireworks erupted one after another, like glittering bouquets unfurling in the night sky—an offering to the gods, heralding the start of a beautiful story.

Bai Liu moved forward, head bowed, carrying Tawil—bruised and broken—in his arms, while Beiyuan Xiaokui, bloodied and barely conscious, hung from his back. His steps were slow, his body weighed down, as if the burden he carried was far too much.

From the shrine, countless threads still bound Tawil, wrapping tightly around his limbs, around Bai Liu's arms, their cruel name: [Pain]. They coiled like vines, constricting, strangling them both. Their mingled blood dripped onto the scorched earth below.

"Nine!"

Bai Liu stumbled, his breath turning ragged, his entire body leaning forward as he fought to walk—away from the shrine, down the hill.

But the threads tethering him and Tawil refused to let them go.

"Bai Liu." Tawil's voice was soft. His face, torn by the silk threads, was eerily calm—he showed no sign of pain. Instead, he reached out, his fingers gently tracing the wounds on Bai Liu's body, as if committing them to memory. His gaze never wavered, intent, like he wanted to remember Bai Liu for eternity.

"Put me down."

"You won’t make it out with me."

"Your hands are shaking."

"Eight!"

"I don’t care." Bai Liu’s eyes locked onto Tawil’s. "You gave yourself to me. That means I have the right to take you with me."

Tawil exhaled softly. Standing on Bai Liu’s shoulders, he hesitated for a moment before leaning down and wrapping his arms around him.

He whispered, "But I love you."

Bai Liu’s pupils contracted.

"Seven!"

Tawil’s eyes fluttered shut. "I finally understand now."

"The feeling you had when you came to see me—it was love, wasn’t it?"

"Six!"

"I wanted to see you. I wanted to escape the shrine and see the person you chose as your prince charming. I wanted to ask why you never stepped inside to see me."

Tawil buried his face against Bai Liu’s shoulder, holding him so tightly that Bai Liu, for once, felt breathless. His voice came out hoarse, barely above a whisper.

"I wanted you to come see me every day, to talk to me, to look me in the eye and tell me your thoughts."

"I wanted you to take me away. I wanted to go with you."

A silk thread tightened.

"I wanted you to be with me forever."

Two silk threads tightened.

"Five!"

Bai Liu's arms instinctively tightened around him. "…You're leaving me again, aren't you?"

"God spoke to me once," Tawil murmured, his voice feather-light, "He told me that I would be his heir when I learned to generate pain worthy of sacrifice."

"He said that only love can make a god suffer."

The threads constraining Tawil suddenly pulled taut.

"Four!"

"The more love a person receives, the more painful their sacrifice to the gods becomes." Tawil, bound in silk threads, lifted his eyes to Bai Liu and smiled—soft, almost joyful. "That pain is what gives gods control over mortals."

"I am already a puppet of the gods."

"The prison that holds me—" Tawil's voice was quiet, but steady, "—was built by my own love and suffering. I cannot leave it."

"Three!"

"Two!"

"ONE!!!"

"The Festival of Evil has officially begun!!!"

Heavy figures surged up the path behind Bai Liu, each clutching a lifeless, sacrificial offering. These were men from the eight great families, those who had come in advance to make their tributes—and now, their voices rose in furious chants.

"What's going on?! Why is the shrine burning?!"

"Where's the body?! The one in the shrine—it's gone!"

"Was it the Bei Yuan family who allowed this, or did one of the defected offerings steal it?!"

Behind them, fireworks burst in the sky, brilliant explosions of color.

"I love you." Tawil closed his eyes and let himself fall, pressing his cold lips against Bai Liu's unresponsive ones as he whispered, "My soul will only exist for you."

"But you cannot stay here."

"Because here, there is only pain."

[System Prompt: Congratulations to player Bai Liu for obtaining one of the main quest objectives (Evil God Spirit). He is about to depart to the timeline five years later. Please prepare for player Bai Liu.]

Threads of light stretched from Tawil's body, pulling him backward. His eyes remained shut as he embraced Bai Liu one last time, fingers threading through the long hair at the nape of Bai Liu's neck. His lips moved soundlessly, as if trying to speak.

Bai Liu barely had time to register the armed men rushing toward him—knives, guns, clubs raised in rage—before another firework exploded overhead, casting a kaleidoscope of color across his vision. He shut his eyes for just a moment.

And in that moment, Tawil's voice reached his ear in a final whisper.

"Farewell, Rapunzel who came to rescue me."

Bai Liu's eyes snapped open.

He was lying on his side on the cold floor, as if he had collapsed from exhaustion. The shrine's dim training hall stretched around him, shrouded in darkness, save for the pale glow of moonlight filtering through a distant window. His gaze landed on the wall opposite him—on a picture of the Sea Wave Shrine.

The same image that had first led him into this nightmare.

Everything—the fire, the frenzied crowd, Beiyuan Xiaokui bleeding, the corpse of the evil god who had kissed him so tenderly—had vanished like an illusion, a dream unraveled at dawn.

For a long moment, Bai Liu sat in silence. Then, without hesitation, he rose, draped his coat over his shoulders, and strode toward the door.

Two servants knelt just beyond the threshold. Their garments bore the embroidered insignia of the Gifune family.

As soon as Bai Liu stepped forward, they raised their hands, barring his path. Their heads remained bowed.

"Master Bai Liu, you cannot leave."

"Lord Gosho has decreed that unless you complete the sacred dance for tomorrow's ritual, you must not step beyond this shrine."

Bai Liu's gaze flickered between them and the shrine behind him—so different now from the one he remembered. His voice was cool, edged with suspicion.

"Is this the Luming Shrine?"

The maid hesitated, then nodded. "Yes. You've been practicing your dance here in the worship hall. Don't you remember?"

Bai Liu's expression remained impassive. "If this is the shrine," he asked, voice quiet yet sharp, "then where is the evil god who lived here five years ago?"

The servants stiffened. As though he had uttered something unspeakable, they paled, heads lowering further. Pressing their hands together in desperate prayer, they whispered rapidly:

"Evil God, do not blame us, do not blame us… We did not mean to move you from the Luming Shrine to the Sea Shrine after the great fire."

"It was just that… after the catastrophe you unleashed five years ago, half the people in Luming County went mad. They took their own lives in their sleep, driven to despair by the horror you brought upon them."

"Evil God, please, do not blame us…"

Bai Liu's face betrayed nothing. Slowly, his gaze shifted—past the kneeling servants, past the shrine walls—to the distant sea, where the shape of a shrine rocked upon the waves.

A floating temple.

Thunder rumbled overhead. Then, without warning, rain came pouring down.

A girl stumbled into the boathouse, shivering violently, her thin undergarments soaked through. Her lips were bloodless, her skin pallid and bruised. But despite the relentless downpour, she didn't shut the door behind her. She simply knelt, letting the wind and rain lash against her face, as if welcoming the suffering.

By the entrance, a weathered wooden plaque swung back and forth in the storm. The inscription was nearly worn away, but the name could still be discerned—

[Beiyuan Xiaokui]

"Xiaokui, what the hell are you doing?"

A male voice, sharp with alarm, cut through the rain. A drenched Beiyuan Cangtai rushed inside, closing the door and setting down his overturned paper umbrella. He turned to Xiaokui, his expression hard with reprimand.

"Why didn't you close the door? In this weather?!"

Xiaokui barely blinked. Her voice was detached, hollow.

"Maybe I haven't suffered enough from the training room."

Cangtai flinched. His gaze flickered to his own hands—knuckles raw and bloodied. Clenching them into fists, he said nothing.

Xiaokui's dull eyes sharpened, catching the movement. "You went to the suffering room too?"

"...Yeah." Cangtai forced a wry smile. "Ever since they found out we helped set the shrine on fire five years ago, the Bei Yuan family fell from grace. We don't even have a proper mansion anymore. But even though they can't train us like they used to, they never stopped torturing us."

"Of course not." A sharp grin flickered across Xiaokui's face—both triumphant and bitter. "What happened five years ago scared them shitless."

Cangtai chuckled under his breath, nostalgic. "Yeah. That night, the shrine was burning, Bai Liu was trying to save the evil god, and we ran back to help him."

"I was the one who ran back to help him!" Xiaokui shot back. But her bravado faded quickly. "Not that I was much help. I got knocked out almost immediately."

She exhaled shakily. "But I remember… Bai Liu carried me down the mountain. He was trying to save the evil god, but the shrine's silk threads pulled him back. He couldn't leave."

"And then the eight families arrived with their sacrifices."

Xiaokui laughed suddenly—wild, unhinged, her arms trembling with mirth. "And then the imperial boat dragged Bai Liu into the shrine to sacrifice him."

"But the evil god—"

Her voice dropped into a whisper, thick with something almost like awe.

"He refused."

"He refused to open his eyes. Refused to sacrifice Bai Liu. He shut his eyes tight and said, 'I will not allow you to do this to him.'"

"And that night—" Xiaokui's grin stretched wide, sharp as a blade. "The evil god threw a tantrum."

Cangtai's breath hitched.

Xiaokui's laughter was feverish. "He unleashed his power, burying half of Luming County with him—all for the sake of Bai Liu."

"He entered their dreams, looked straight into their souls."

"And those beasts—those lustful, disgusting creatures—couldn't withstand it. They went insane. Killed themselves in their sleep, unable to bear the weight of the evil god's gaze."

Her voice softened, distant.

"It was the first time I ever saw an evil god kill someone."

Evil God Festival – Boathouse

Cang Tai smiled faintly, but the smile soon faded. His gaze lingered in awe on the picture of the Wave Shrine hanging on the wall. In a hushed voice, he murmured, "But after that, the people of Luming County began to fear this 'evil body.'"

"They were terrified to place the body of the Evil God—the very entity that had suffered so much for their own selfish wish—back in the shrine on the hill after the fire. It was too close. It frightened them. And yet, they refused to abandon the annual Evil God Festival. So they built a massive shrine in the shape of a ship and moved the entire body of the Evil God, along with the original Luming Shrine, far out to sea, away from Luming County."

Xiaokui let out a sharp, sarcastic laugh. "The same people who once longed to be closer to God now want to be as far away as possible, even if it kills them."

"Yes." Cang Tai lowered his head, staring at his bloodstained knuckles. "Later, to prevent the sacrifices from uniting and rebelling during training, they were separated into individual chambers. That's when the Bitter Chamber was built."

"Every year, during the Evil God Festival, the chosen sacrifice would travel by small boat, escorted by servants from the eight families and the villagers who had once made a wish, to the Sea Shrine—where they would be offered up."

"We board the ship every year," Xiaokui said with an indifferent shrug. "But we always come back because the sacrifice fails. Bai Six, too."

Cang Tai hesitated before whispering in defense, "But our failed sacrifices aren't quite the same as Lord Bai Six's, are they?"

"We couldn't awaken the Evil God because we didn't suffer enough. But Lord Bai Six… he suffered more than any of us."

Cang Tai fell silent for a moment before continuing, his voice barely above a whisper. "I heard from the other retainers that the Gifune family insisted on sacrificing Lord Bai Six year after year. He was the most agonized sacrifice they had ever made. Even when the Gifune servants dragged him by the hair, forcing him against the Evil God's altar, the god stirred… but never opened his eyes."

Xiaokui turned away, her voice muffled. "Because if he opened his eyes, Bai Six might be sacrificed."

She let out a bitter chuckle, almost to herself. "Those two… they're such a yin and yang."

"When Bai Six stood guard outside the shrine door every night, he never spoke a word. And now, it's the Evil God's turn—trapped in the Sea Shrine, only able to see Bai Six once a year, yet unable to open his eyes and look at his only beloved."

"What kind of twisted fairy tale is this…"

Cang Tai, too, fell silent. "The Gifune family claims they placed the Evil God in the Sea Shrine, yet every year, when we go to offer the sacrifice, we see nothing. The shrine is empty."

"They say the only way to meet the Lord of Evil is by awakening him with one's own pain."

Cang Tai frowned, worry flickering across his face. "But you and I have searched the Sea Shrine countless times, even in secret. We've never found him. I wonder where the Gifune family has hidden him."

Xiaokui clenched his fists, hatred flashing in his eyes. "Those bastards. Five years ago, when the Evil God slaughtered, they were about to take their own lives under the influence of his corpse. But then, a true Evil God appeared in their dreams and interrupted them—let them live. And now those mangy dogs are still alive today."

Cang Tai looked out at the storm outside the window. "I wonder if I'll make it through this year's Summer Festival."

The Summer Festival Grounds, Under Heavy Rain
Umbrellas bobbed like scattered petals as festival-goers hurried for cover. Vendors scrambled to pack up their wares, muttering curses at the unexpected downpour. Rain drummed against the makeshift shelters set up along the shore.

"This has never happened before," someone grumbled. "It never rains during the Summer Festival…"

"Even the fireworks display has been delayed."

"The divine service rehearsal is tonight too, right? Are they still dancing in all this rain?"

On a raised platform overlooking the chaos, the head of the Gifune family stood rigidly, his hands clasped behind his back. His face was grim, his expression unchanged from five years ago—eyes filled with shadows. A servant, bowing respectfully at his side, murmured cautiously:

"Lord Gosho, the rain is heavy. Would it be appropriate to postpone or cancel some of the rituals?"

The imperial ship's master narrowed his eyes. "The fireworks display is postponed. Everything else proceeds as scheduled."

The servant hesitated. "But Lord Gosho, the tradition dictates that the eight great family offerings leave for the Sea Shrine by boat tonight. With the wind and waves like this, should that not be reconsidered?"

Gosho let out a thin smile, his jowls shifting. "Ask them. If they wish to cancel, they may. If not, they may sail their own boats. But whether they go or not, the Gifune family will not cancel tonight."

"Prepare the sacrifice, Bai Six, and his squire. Tonight, we sail for the Sea Shrine."

The servant flinched, eyes widening. "Bai Six… again?"

Gosho shot him a sidelong glance. "You have a problem with that?"

"I-I wouldn't dare!" The servant quickly lowered his head. After a long pause, he cautiously asked, "But… Lord Gosho, we've privately sacrificed Bai Six nearly two dozen times without success."

"Isn't that why you chose him as the heir to the Evil God? Why you made him perform the Dance of the Evil God?"

Gosho's expression twisted into something unreadable. "Yes."

"That's exactly why I insist on sacrificing him. He is a sacrifice so agonized that even the Evil God refuses to open his eyes."

The servant looked up, confusion flickering in his gaze. "But… if the Evil God won't open his eyes, then the sacrifice will fail again. What's the point of bringing him to the shrine?"

Gosho's cloudy eyes drifted toward the breaking waves, a chilling smile spreading across his face. "Last night, I had a dream."

"The real Evil God spoke to me. He told me that tonight, I would finally be able to offer up the most tormented sacrifice in the world… and usher in the birth of a new god."

The Boats on the Waves
Two small boats rocked violently on the churning sea, swallowed by the darkness of the storm. They drifted so far apart that, on this rain-drenched night, one could not see the other.

On each vessel, a boatman stood, shrouded in a straw raincoat and a wide-brimmed hat.

"Lord Bai Six," a servant of the imperial ship's family murmured, bowing deeply. Rain slicked his translucent cloak as he gestured toward the small boat. "Please, step aboard."

Bai Liu, dressed in full ceremonial attire, held a delicate paper umbrella in his left hand. His white robe, crimson hakama, and semi-transparent golden-feathered shawl clung to him, soaked through by the storm. The long strands of his hair trailed over his shoulders, wet against his pale skin. A faint red tint marked his lips, subtly smudged, standing out vividly in the dim rain.

He slowly raised his umbrella, dark eyes peering through the curtain of falling water at the boatman who beckoned him forward. It was as if he already knew where this journey would end.

The servant averted his gaze, unsettled.

No wonder Lord Gosho said… this man is the Evil God's…

Bai Liu's voice was calm, cutting through the rain. "Wasn't I dressed like this to dance for the gods? Where are you taking me?"

The servant swallowed. "Lord Bai Six, due to the heavy rains, the divine festival dance will no longer be performed on the shore. This year, it will be held at the Sea Shrine."

He bowed lower. "Please… step aboard."

Bai Liu exhaled softly, then stepped onto the boat.

As the vessel swayed and the boatman pushed off into the storm, Bai

Liu flicked his fingers.

A system panel materialized before him.

[System Alert: Congratulations, Player Bai Liu, for unlocking the final scene of "Evil God Festival – Boathouse" and triggering the final node of the story.]

Meanwhile, on another ship.

Spades stared at the Gifune family's maid standing before him. His expression remained unreadable as he stated flatly, "I want to go to the Sea Shrine."

The maid, eyes darting to the whip in his hand, shrank back in fear, her voice trembling. "B-But... you're not Lord Bai Liu's squire! Please wait a moment!"

"If you want to go to the Sea Shrine, you can wait for the other squire's boat tomorrow—"

"No waiting." The moment Spades finished speaking, he stepped into the boat, flicked his whip, and sent the shrieking boatman flying onto the shore. Then, he turned back and said, just as indifferently, "They can wait. I'm in a hurry."

With that, Spades raised his whip and cracked it against the water. The sheer force of the strike sent ripples across the sea, and as if propelled by an unseen force, his boat shot forward like an arrow toward the shrine.

The maid and the boatman, left speechless on the shore: "....."

Meanwhile, at the ornamental pool.

Mu Sicheng glared at the big screen, his face darkening like a storm cloud. He shook his leg restlessly, his voice sharp with irritation. "What kind of shit broadcast is this? I've been watching this dumbass the whole time—where the hell is Bai Liu?! Why aren't they showing him?"

"It's already halfway through the game, and all I've seen is Bai Liu practicing some damn dance routine! And when they finally cut back to him, he's still practicing!"

"I don't buy it!" Mu Sicheng smacked his thigh in frustration. "There's no way Bai Liu would waste time dancing in a competition!"

"Is the system rigged or something? Why is there so little footage of Bai Liu? Are they deliberately cutting him out?"

"Stop swearing. There are kids here." Tang Erda said this, though his own frown deepened as he stared at the screen. His scowl only grew as he watched Spades leap onto the boat. "But... there is something off about this broadcast. Bai Liu only appeared briefly at the start and in a short cutscene midway. The rest of the time, it's been Spades. This isn't how league broadcasts usually work."

Muke shifted uncomfortably. "Could it be that Bai Liu's footage isn't being released?"

"What do you mean?" Mu Sicheng turned to him.

Liu Jiayi, arms crossed, stared at the screen, her voice flat. "Like the Five Buildings incident."

Tang Erda snapped his head toward her. "You're saying—"

Before he could finish, Wang Shun's voice rang out in an excited tone, cutting him off. "Switch to Bai Liu's feed!"

Every head turned toward the big screen.

On the rain-drenched night, Bai Liu stepped off a boat onto the Sea Shrine's stone steps, his heavy hakama lifted in one hand. An umbrella, now uselessly soaked, hung from his other hand as water dripped from his hair and clothes.

In the corner of the screen, Mu Sicheng caught sight of Spades at nearly the same moment—leaping from his boat onto the shrine's wooden platform.

The shrine, shaped like a boat itself, rocked slightly from Spades' landing. Both men, arriving from opposite sides, looked up simultaneously—locking eyes.

Mu Sicheng let out an exasperated yell, balling his fist and punching Tang Erda's leg. "What kind of shitty system is this?! I wait forever for a proper broadcast, and when they finally cut to Bai Liu, they make it a damn dramatic entrance scene!"

Tang Erda: "....."

Evil God Festival – Boathouse

Wang Shun's voice trembled as he broke into a cold sweat, eyes locked on the big screen. "Is this a straight fight? Bai Liu doesn't have a death exemption, and his panel stats can't compete with Spades!"

"Bai Liu, can you avoid Spades for now?"

Muke shook his head grimly. "He can't. The Sea Shrine map is too small to hide in, and neither Bai Liu nor Spades is the type to avoid the main quest. This is the final stage of the game, and both of their objectives are to sacrifice each other."

"They'll definitely clash head-on."

Wang Shun felt the cold sweat trailing down his back, his voice hoarse with fear. "Doesn't that mean… one of them has to die for the game to end?"

"Shit!" Mu Sicheng shook his leg so violently that his knee bounced up and down, his nerves stretched to the limit—though his mouth remained as brash as ever. "That has to be Spades, not Bai Liu!"

"Bai Liu is steady," Tang Erda agreed calmly. "Let's see how this plays out."

"Wait." Liu Jiayi narrowed her eyes, staring at Spades' main quest panel. "No… Spades' objective isn't to sacrifice Bai Liu. It's to sacrifice [the most painful offering]."

Muke frowned. "But Spades is the squire of the most painful offering. His mission is to sacrifice that offering. We just saw the selection process on the big screen—Bai Liu was the most painful sacrifice in the Luming County boathouse."

"Yes," Liu Jiayi's voice grew cold. "Bai Liu was the most painful sacrifice in the boathouse—but not necessarily [the most painful offering]."

Muke was stunned. "What do you mean?"

"Haven't you noticed the wording?" Liu Jiayi's tone was icy. "There's no qualifier for [the most painful offering]."

"Qualifier?" Bai Yi, watching the game from the assassin's bench, tapped Liao Ke on the shoulder, confused. "What does that mean, Brother Liao?"

Liao Ke's expression mirrored Liu Jiayi's. "Spades' main quest doesn't specify where the most painful offering comes from. There's no restriction."

"If there's no qualifier," he continued, his voice steady but grim, "then the system will default to—"

"The most painful offering in the entire world at this moment."

In the audience, Hearts leaned against his seat, resting his chin lazily in his palm as he gazed at the big screen. "Not just the one from Luming County."

Phoebe leaned over the railing, blinking curiously as he turned to Hearts. "Wasn't Spades' sacrifice supposed to be Bai Liu?"

"Not necessarily," Georgia, seated beside them, straightened his posture. His voice was precise and articulate as he analyzed the situation. "Right now, the most logical sacrifice for Spades would be Bai Liu—but that doesn't mean it has to be Bai Liu."

"If Spades is meant to find his sacrifice," he continued, "then his best method would be to do so as the squire of the most painful offering himself."

"If it's not Bai Liu…" Armand stared at the screen, his voice trailing off. "Then who does Spades serve?"

"Yeah, yeah, yeah." Across from Armand, Daniel sat in the audience, legs swinging excitedly over the railing divider. He spun a bloodstained clown mask around his right index finger, his apple-green eyes fixated on the top right corner of the screen. A grin stretched across his face. "We're at the final stage. If Spades doesn't find his sacrifice soon, it'll be Bai Liu's win~"

Cen Buming, who had remained silent until now, lifted his gaze to the big screen. "The most painful offering can't be Bai Liu."

"He doesn't feel pain."

Daniel turned his head, grinning, and flicked the clown mask straight at Cen Buming's face. "Then who do you think it is, President?"

Cen Buming calmly removed the mask from his face, his expression unreadable. His eyes darkened, and his lips curled into a slow smile.

"I think it's—"

"Xie Ta."

Daniel leaned in with interest. "Who's Xie Ta?"

Cen Buming paled slightly as he placed the mask back over Daniel's face. He stared through it into the green eyes behind the mask and murmured, "It's normal that you don't recognize him."

"His existence was erased from this world line."

"All you need to know is that he is Bai Liu's [anchor]."

Before the weight of his words could settle, the commentator's hysterical voice shattered the tension.

"BAI LIU MAKES THE FIRST MOVE!"

"He just threw his whip straight at Spades' face!"

In-game, waterfront boathouse.
Cang Tai stood by the door, staring at the heavy downpour outside, his worry deepening. "Why is the rain getting heavier and heavier?"

"What, do you have a problem with that now?" Xiaokui, lying on the floor, rolled her eyes. "Would you rather the Evil Festival go ahead as planned?"

"No." Cang Tai clutched the fabric over his chest, his expression tightening. "But if the festival is canceled, Bai Six wouldn't have to perform the dance tonight. He should have already returned to the boathouse by now—resting."

His voice dropped. "But it's almost midnight, and he still hasn't come back from the shrine..."

"You mean..." Cang Tai's heart pounded as he paled. "Lord Bai Six... wasn't taken by the imperial ship to be sacrificed alone, was he?"

Xiaokui jolted upright. She and Cang Tai locked eyes before quickly dismissing the thought. "Impossible! You're Bai Six's squire—he couldn’t have been taken to the ritual without you."

"And if Bai Six, the most precious sacrifice in the boathouse, had really been taken, Gosho would’ve followed him to the sea shrine himself to make a wish. But he was just here at the boathouse..."

Xiaokui abruptly pushed the door open. Her pupils dilated as she looked toward the patio at the boathouse’s center.

Just moments ago, Gosho had been standing there under an umbrella, inspecting the remaining offerings. But now, he was gone—only his footprints remained in the middle of the rain-soaked stone.

A servant of the Gifune family hurried down the corridor, and Xiaokui seized him by the collar. "Where is Lord Gosho?" she demanded.

The servant blinked at her in surprise. "Lord Gosho finished inspecting the offerings and went to the port."

The port. The place where boats depart for the shrine at sea.

Gosho was really going to sacrifice Bai Six.

Xiaokui’s face went white.

At the harbor, Gosho stepped into a small boat with the help of a few attendants. He shook off the water from his robes and sat down while a servant held an umbrella over him. Two boatmen gripped their oars, propelling the vessel toward the sea shrine—its silhouette barely shifting on the storm-lashed waves.

The rain poured relentlessly. As the wind howled, the boat rocked violently, but Gosho paid it no mind. He batted away the servant’s umbrella, rain drenching his face as he stared at the shrine in the distance. A dark, twisted smile curled his lips.

Finally. The day the gods had foretold.

He had waited ten years for this moment—to offer up the most painful sacrifice of all. To make this noble offering suffer the most on this night.

"Lord Gosho," the servant shouted over the downpour, wiping rain from his face. "For five years now, every time we've tried to sacrifice Bai Six, the evil god couldn’t be appeased because his eyes wouldn’t open. What makes you so sure tonight will be different?"

"Did the gods send you a sign?"

For a long moment, Gosho remained silent, gazing out at the turbulent sea. Then, suddenly, he let out a chilling laugh.

"Who said I was sacrificing Bai Six?"

The servant froze. "Didn't you say tonight's offering would be the one who suffers the most?"

"And who told you that the most painful sacrifice in this world is Bai Six?" Gosho's voice was low and feverish. His fists clenched. "Yes, Bai Six is in agony—that's why he was chosen as the heir of the evil god. He is meant to become the next one."

"But the sacrifice I'm offering tonight is someone even more tormented than Bai Six."

"The corpse of the evil god—trapped in this shrine, only allowed to see his beloved once a year, unable to open his eyes or utter a single word to Bai Six—that is the most agonizing existence of all."

Gosho's grin stretched grotesquely. "And tonight, the sacrifice is ready. The gods have sent the one who must oversee it to the shrine."

"Tonight, will be the night of ultimate suffering."

"The corpse of an evil god?!" The servant's hands trembled, nearly dropping the umbrella. "Are you saying... the one we've been worshipping all this time is what you intend to sacrifice?"

"After tonight, he will no longer be a god." Gosho wiped rain from his face, his smile sharp and cruel. "Or rather, he ceased being a god the moment I hid him away five years ago. Now, he is nothing more than an offering—one I will finally see destroyed."

"Hid him away...?" The servant's breath hitched. "But I've never seen the evil god's body in the shrine. And those who failed to complete past sacrifices always said they couldn't find him in the sea shrine... It was you, wasn't it? You hid him, Mikoto-sama!"

Gosho's smile deepened as he turned to the servant.

"Of course no one could find his body in the shrine."

He leaned in, his voice a whisper against the storm.

"Because I never hid him there in the first place."

A thunderclap split the sky, and in the blinding flash that followed, a bone whip lashed through the sea shrine like a lightning strike, shattering wood and sending bells crashing in all directions.

Bai Liu's chest rose and fell twice as he swept his gaze over the empty shrine.

—Tawil isn't here.

The shrine wasn't large. He had practically torn through every inch of it, leaving only one possibility—Gosho had hidden Tawil away.

Behind him, the black bone whip came down hard. Bai Liu twisted sideways to dodge, but the strike swept close—too close. He was forced to face it head-on.

Spades advanced, his pure black eyes locked onto Bai Liu, his tone devoid of emotion.

"This is a match between you and me."

"Who has your attention? Are you trying to lose to me?"

The whip in Spades' hand coiled and twisted with unnatural speed, snapping around Bai Liu's shoulder before he yanked it downward with merciless force.

Bai Liu's arms tore free. Blood gushed out.

A roar erupted from the crowd watching through the big screen as the host shrieked with excitement, "Spades has disarmed Bai Liu!"

Mu Sicheng shot up from his chair, gritting his teeth as he stared at Bai Liu bleeding out on the screen. He couldn't even swear.

"Sit down!"

Tang Erda shoved him back into his seat, his own head bowed, fists clenched so tightly they turned white. He refused to look at the screen, his voice low.

"Trust Bai Liu."

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu uses Player Liu Jiayi's panel to activate the Antidote skill.]

Bai Liu bit down on the antidote bottle, tilting his head to drink in nothing but air. Instantly, his severed arms regenerated. Without missing a beat, he twisted his grip—the whip in his hand shifting into a short knife.

His left hand grabbed Spades' shirt. His right hand slashed for Spades' throat.

Spades dodged.

In the split second that Spades turned his head, Bai Liu changed tactics. His knife shifted back into a whip, coiling around Spades' neck as he used the momentum to wrench him off balance.

Spades reacted with inhuman speed, shoving his hands between the whip's coils and prying them apart with raw strength. But the moment he widened the ring, Bai Liu flicked the handle—bone spurs flaring out and sinking deep into Spades' shoulder.

Without hesitation, Bai Liu pulled the whip taut.

Deep gashes tore across Spades' shoulder. Blood spattered toward Bai Liu's face, only to be washed away by the relentless rain.

The host shrieked, shaking the rafters of the viewing pool. "Bai Liu fights back! He's struck Spades with the whip!"

"I'm not here to sacrifice you."

Spades was immobilized, his arms pinned against Bai Liu's. His chest heaved, but his voice remained eerily calm as he met Bai Liu's gaze.

"You are not the sacrifice in my mission."

Bai Liu's grip on the whip tightened. A strand of hair slipped over his face, rain and blood smearing together along his lips. He lifted his gaze, voice quiet.

"I know."

"So I'm going to win you."

Evil God Festival – Boathouse

"Bai Liu flips Spades overboard!!!"

The presenter practically danced with excitement. "Spades fights back! He's caught Bai Liu by the ankle with his whip—dragging him down with him! Now both players are in the sea!"

"Unbelievable!"

"Shit, shit!" Mu Sicheng's hands were ice-cold, his teeth chattering as he clenched them. "How long is this fucking fight going to last?!"

Wang Shun couldn't bring himself to look at the big screen. Instead, he took a few deep breaths, forcing his focus onto the system panel to distract himself.

"Bai Liu's popularity is still rising—he's now ranked 48, closing in on the top 50."

He tapped on the panel, exhaling slowly. "The odds on Bai Liu and Spades winning are down to 4:1... and our betting pool has grown to..."

Wang Shun's voice faltered. He swallowed hard before finishing in a hushed tone.

"Fifty times what it was at the start of the game."

The numbers were staggering, but no one looked relieved.

—Because this wasn't strategy. This was Bai Liu throwing away his immunity, gambling his life for attention.

Liao Ke's gaze stayed fixed on the screen, where the sea was an endless stretch of dark blue, almost black.

Beside him, Bai Jiamu clenched his fist on his knee before exhaling. "Uncle Liao," he asked, "do you think Spades can beat Bai Liu?"

"It's hard to say." Liao Ke let out a bitter chuckle, shaking his head. "The Reverse God might be able to see a path to victory, but I can't."

He hesitated.

"If I had to guess..."

A pause.

"Fifty-fifty."

"Fifty-fifty?! That can’t be right!" Bai Yi’s voice rose sharply. "The betting odds are 4:1! That means Spades wins eighty percent of the time!"

Frustration mounting, he turned to the dark screen and stomped his foot. "Where is he?! Can you turn up the brightness? I can’t see a damn thing!"

"Bai Yi."

Bai Jiamu suddenly raised a hand, pressing it firmly onto Bai Yi’s shoulder. His grip was steady—reassuring, yet unyielding.

Bai Yi turned to face him, and what he saw in Bai Jiamu’s expression made his breath hitch. A look of desperate determination.

"If Spades loses," Bai Jiamu said quietly, "we have to win the double."

Bai Yi reacted instantly. "Spades won’t lose!"

"Spades can lose."

Bai Jiamu took a deep breath, squeezing Bai Yi’s shoulder tighter. His voice was firm—too firm for his age.

"The gamblers out there might think he can’t lose. And if he does, they’ll go crazy. They’ll curse him, abuse him." His grip tightened. "But we’re his teammates. We’re supposed to give him the right—the freedom—to lose."

"If we can’t even accept him losing... then no one in the world will."

Bai Yi’s shoulders sagged. His expression went blank, and his eyes glistened. Tears welled up, spilling over as he mumbled, "...But he didn’t have a get-out-of-jail-free card. If he loses, he dies."

Silence.

For a long moment, no one spoke.

Then Bai Yi inhaled sharply and forced out a laugh—too quick, too brittle. "I’m just joking!" His voice cracked as he grinned. "Spades will just—concede and quit, right? So it’s fine!"

No one answered him.

The smile on Bai Yi's face slowly faded.

Spades might be able to lose in a game. He might even be able to run away.

—If this were just a game.

But Spades was a player who had never clicked the quit button.

Not even when he was drowning in the mud last time.

Spades was a monster who never admitted defeat.

It was as if the [Quit] button had disappeared from his system panel the moment the league began.

After a long, long silence, Liao Ke finally spoke, his head bowed.

"Spades was born into a world that never accepted him. Let's not let him leave it as someone no one accepts as a teammate either."

"That's too much."

Bai Yi stared blankly at the rippling water on the big screen, tears slipping down his face as he slowly opened his mouth.

"So we should just accept Spades' death, then?"

A pause. His voice was barely above a whisper.

"…He hasn't even been to reality once."

The screen flickered—what had been unreadable darkness turned to light, and the image of two men locked in battle beneath the waves reappeared.

As the picture became clearer, the audience gasped. Many stood up, craning their necks to get a better look at the screen.

The presenter nearly leapt out of his seat. "Here it comes! Here it comes! The moment of truth!"

In the dark, churning waters, black and white whips of bone intertwined, darting beneath the turbulent surface like the skeletal remains of a stripped fish.

Bai Liu's ankle was ensnared by Spades' bone whip, dragging him deeper into the sea.

"Spades' bone whip is pulling Bai Liu down!" The host gripped the microphone, his voice electric with excitement. "As we all know, Spades' Bone Whip is one of the highest-intensity, highest-judgment skill weapons in the game! The Slayer Sequence spends millions of points every year maintaining this weapon. Once it wraps around you, there's basically no escape!"

Bai Liu's red hairband came loose, and his long hair fanned out in the water. Bubbles escaped his lips as his expression remained eerily calm. In a backhanded motion, he swung his whip like a blade, slashing at the bone whip around his ankle.

"Is Bai Liu seriously trying to cut through Spades' bone whip with a dagger?" The presenter sucked in a breath. "That's a cheap gamble. It's basically impossible."

But Bai Liu didn't hesitate. His short knife sliced cleanly through the water.

A thick ribbon of blood unfurled from his foot. The bone whip, severed, sank into the abyss.

The presenter gawked. "…Did contestant Bai Liu just cut off his own ankle?!"

"He actually broke free of Spades' Bone Whip!"

Bai Liu swiftly downed an antidote. His severed foot twisted outward, grotesquely regenerating. His face was ghostly pale as he shot toward the surface, gasping for breath as the rain lashed down against him.

He shut his eyes, inhaled deeply. His long hair trailed behind him, dark as ink against the waves.

A second later, something erupted from below.

The black whip lashed past Bai Liu's face, sending a massive wave crashing behind him. A thin, finger-wide gash split the right side of his face, and his shirt was torn from his shoulder.

Blood trickled down his cold, pale skin, merging with the water.

Floating on the surface, Spades held his whip, his expression unreadable. Wet strands of hair clung to his forehead, partially obscuring his eyes.

He raised his hand. The whip snapped in both directions, parting the water as it lunged straight for Bai Liu.

It sliced past Bai Liu's left side, severing strands of his hair. Bai Liu inhaled sharply and dived.

Spades followed in an instant, legs pressed together, his streamlined form cutting through the water like a hunting black-skinned tiger shark. His speed was so intense that the water distorted around him.

"Wow! He's keeping up!" The host hammered his desk, nearly breathless. "Incredible! Every opponent who's fought Spades says his aquatic combat ability gives him a total attack advantage underwater —and now we see why!"

"Bai Liu doesn't stand a chance!"

"What a load of bullshit!" Mu Sicheng rolled up his sleeves, ready to climb over the railing and throttle the host. "What kind of commentary is this?!"

Tang Erda yanked him back. "You can't hit him from here."

On the big screen, Spades' hand was just inches from Bai Liu's waist.

At the last moment, Bai Liu twisted his body sharply, spinning out of reach. Their eyes met as Spades hovered just above him.

Without hesitation, Spades flung his whip, wrapping it around Bai Liu's waist.

But Bai Liu twisted like a fish, slipping free just as the whip tightened.

"He dodged it!!!" The presenter clenched his fist in excitement. "What a move!"

Mu Sicheng punched the air. "Hell yeah!"

Muke exhaled a long breath.

Liu Jiayi pressed her fists to her jaw, her eyes locked on the screen. "Judging by Bai Liu's current speed, he's using Mu Sicheng's movement panel—probably in full burst mode."

A beat of silence.

"But it only lasts five minutes."

Muke froze.

Liu Jiayi lifted her gaze back to the screen. "If Bai Liu doesn't finish this within five minutes, he'll be completely vulnerable."

Ripples and bubbles churned across the screen.

Deeper and deeper they dove. The color of the water darkened, the surface chaos fading into eerie stillness.

Bai Liu pressed forward, his gaze locked ahead. Behind him, Spades followed without wavering, his eyes never once leaving Bai Liu—as if, in the vast expanse of the ocean, Bai Liu was the only thing that mattered.

A warm white light pulsed from the depths.

Bai Liu veered sideways, swimming toward it.

He stopped directly above it, letting himself sink like a drifting leaf. His face was blank, his dark eyes reflecting the glow that seemed to breathe at the bottom of the sea.

At the center of the light, a man floated, bound in countless silken threads.

Tawil.

His head hung low as if in deep sleep, his silver-blue curls fanning through the water. His white clothing, stained with blood, rippled with the currents.

A reverse cross pendant—exchanged with Bai Liu long ago—rested over his heart, emanating a soft glow that blurred his face, the silk threads distorting his expression beneath the deep blue.

Following the threads upward, they led to the Sea Shrine, floating unmoving on the surface, untouched by the storm.

The moment their eyes fell on Tawil, both Bai Liu and Spades' system panels flashed simultaneously.

[System Alert: Congratulations, Player Spades, on discovering the ultimate sacrifice—Tawil. Please complete the sacrifice before the Night of the Evil Sacrifice ends.]

[System Alert: Congratulations, Player Bai Liu, on gathering the spirit and flesh of the Evil God in one place. Please complete the sacrifice before the Night of the Evil Sacrifice ends.]

Evil God Festival – Boathouse

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

The moment the prompt appeared, Spades' whip lashed out without hesitation, its sharp tip aimed straight at Tawil's heart as he drifted in the water.

Bai Liu spun around, his gaze sharp, and stepped between them, raising his own whip to block Spades' attack.

The two whips collided, the force of impact sending Bai Liu backward. He crashed into Tawil behind him, tiny bubbles escaping from between his clenched teeth, his long, dark hair billowing through the water.

The impact propelled Tawil as well, his silver hair tangling with Bai Liu's. Though otherwise motionless, Tawil slowly lifted his head, the silk blindfold over his silver-blue eyes concealing his expression.

Even so, he reached out, wrapping his arms around Bai Liu.

The reverse cross pendant at Tawil's lips suddenly flared with brilliant light. In the radiance, a barrier of shimmering air formed around Bai Liu, allowing him to breathe underwater.

"Bai Liu?" Tawil whispered against his ear. "Is that you?"

Bai Liu's voice was barely audible. "It's me."

"I've come for you."

Tawil chuckled softly. "You're always a mess when you come to see me."

Before Bai Liu could respond, Spades' whip struck again. Bai Liu reacted instinctively, but Tawil pulled him behind him, stepping forward in his place. With a pale expression, Tawil raised his right hand, fingers splayed.

Ripples of light spread through the water like an unseen current, stirring the hair of the two men facing each other across the barrier—identical faces locked in a silent standoff, both eerily calm.

"No concession?" Tawil asked softly, blindfolded yet unwavering.

Spades' expression was unreadable. "No."

His whip lifted and struck down with enough force to tear through space and time, crashing against the watery wall. Though his attack was meant for Tawil, Spades' gaze was locked firmly on Bai Liu, who stood behind him.

"I refuse to accept this," Spades said, his words sharp and deliberate. "I will win Bai Liu."

"I'll sacrifice you—and become his most worthy monument."

A crack splintered through the water barrier.

Tawil's brow remained smooth, his voice steady. "Do you even know whose relic you are?"

Through the fractured veil of water, Spades met Tawil's unreadable gaze. And in the instant Tawil's wall shattered, Bai Liu moved. Without hesitation, he pulled Tawil behind him, his whip twisting into a short blade that slashed toward Spades.

The blade grazed Spades' cheek, leaving a thin line of red that bled into the sea.

For the first time, Spades hesitated.

He could have dodged. But in that instant, as Bai Liu's eyes bore into him, something wrenched inside him—a sudden, phantom pain at the old bullet wound in his back, locking his body in place.

Bai Liu's gaze, dark and unreadable, held nothing in it for him.

As the blade struck, the silk thread binding Tawil's right wrist unraveled. At the same time, a new thread coiled itself around Spades' wrist.

"The pain between us is shared," Tawil murmured, his voice a muted echo in the water, resonating only in Spades' ears. "The more joy I feel from Bai Liu's love for me, the more pain you will feel."

"And the more joy Bai Liu gives you, the more pain I will bear in turn."

"One of us must be sacrificed—an [anchor] for Bai Liu, an offering to the gods."

Bai Liu pressed forward. Spades stepped back.

With every move Bai Liu made, Tawil's threads unraveled—while Spades' bindings grew tighter.

The more the silk threads wove around him, the heavier Spades became, the more sluggish his movements, until at last he was wrapped nearly entirely in a cocoon, bound beneath the sea shrine—transformed into the new anchor.

The other end of the filaments extended to the great ship-like shrine above, the weight of its burdens and [pains] sinking into Spades' body.

Through the suffocating silk, Spades lifted his head with effort, staring at Tawil, who now stood free, holding Bai Liu close. Tawil's lips curled into a faint smile.

Looking down on him like a god, Tawil's voice was gentle. "Now do you understand?"

"You'll never win against me."

"...I don't get it." Spades, trapped in [pain], hissed through his teeth. "But I will defeat you."

He met Tawil's silver-blue eyes, his vision blurring as the crushing weight pulled him downward.

It was so heavy.

He had never carried anything so heavy before. Even in the games, he refused to bring extra props—too cumbersome, too restrictive.

So this is what [pain] feels like.

Spades had never known it, not truly. He had never understood human joy or sorrow, never grasped the meaning of victory's tears, of grief's cries, of the quiet elation of understanding.

Even at the heart of triumph, pain, and desire, he had always been separate from them—a creature reaching out toward something forever unfamiliar.

But he had one memory.

A single moment burned into him.

The moment he was born in the drowning town of Siren, when a man stood before him—his long ponytail catching the light, his white shirt stark against the sea.

A man who had smiled at him, his features blurred by the sun, and reached out.

Handing him a black bone whip.

"This is a relic of your predecessor, which I return to you in its original form."

Spades looked up at the strange man. At that time, the man's mouth was still unable to speak, and only untuned syllables escaped.

The man smiled and crouched down, gazing at Spades, who lay on the ground. "The only reason I allowed you to be born—"

"—is that you will make people suffer with your triumphs and presence."

"The heart of pain is all black." The man chuckled softly and placed the black bone whip beside his head. "Let's call you Spades."

So, that was what the man wanted him to do.

So, that was what [the pain] was.

Spades slowly lowered his eyelids, his body sinking downward. He opened his mouth, and countless bubbles rushed across his face.

... Bai Liu, is it this hard when you're in pain?

"Spades."

"Wake up."

"Do not indulge in the illusion of suffering."

The wall of water in front of Spades shattered, and he snapped back to reality. Tawil was no longer holding Bai Liu and smiling. Instead, Tawil stood behind the wall of water, staring at Spades with no trace of sorrow or joy in his silver-blue eyes.

Tawil's gaze was calm as he observed Spades.

"Your desire for Bai Liu is so strong that you were affected by the [door] on my eyes."

"You've never had a drop in mental value before, have you?"

[System warning: Player Spades' mental value has dropped by 20!]

Instead of answering Tawil, Spades raised his hand, his face devoid of emotion, and slammed it against the watery wall. His voice hissed with determination. "I want to win!!!"

Bai Liu, from behind the wall, turned his whip into a knife and thrust it forward, just as Spades had hallucinated. Without hesitation, the blade headed straight for Spades' face.

Threads immediately dangled from Spades' right hand. His whip and Bai Liu's shuriken slammed into the watery wall, exploding in a massive wave of light and wind. Neither man flinched but instead pressed forward, their weapons locked, their faces contorted in fierce determination.

"Lose it for me!!!"

"I want to win!!!"

On the big screen, the presenter slowly lowered his microphone, his mouth hanging open. He was too stunned to offer any commentary.

The crowd was silent, almost unable to comprehend that this was the largest audience for a game since mid-season.

Mu Sicheng stared at Bai Liu on the screen, his mind reeling in disbelief.

"This vocal person... is that Bai Liu?"

Bai Yi was completely dumbfounded.

He had never seen Spades fight so desperately, chasing victory with such reckless abandon.

The two men, who appeared cold and self-controlled on the surface, were now caught in a chaotic battle. They fought without restraint, punches, kicks, bites, and knee strikes all blending together in a wild display of aggression, as if they were children fighting over a toy, trying to outdo one another.

As they struggled, threads emanated from their bodies, connecting them to the shrine, binding them like puppets manipulated by the gods. Yet, this savage clash, in spite of the threads, seemed like two puppets struggling to break free from their strings.

The two men pulled back after exchanging another blow.

Bai Liu's body was surrounded by an air film, his chest heaving with exertion. His face was marred with cuts, running from the left edge of his eyebrow to the right corner of his lip, some deep enough to bleed. Silk threads were attached to his shoulders, neck, and back.

He wiped the blood from his mouth and fixed his gaze on Spades across the room.

Spades, breathing heavily, held his bone whip in a backhand grip. His face remained expressionless, though bruises from Bai Liu's assault were evident, and silk threads connected his right hand and left wrist.

Tawil floated between the two men.

They looked at each other and, in perfect synchrony, turned and raised their bone whips, charging toward Tawil in the middle.

"I'll sacrifice him!!!" Spades chuckled dully, raising his whip high and slashing it across Bai Liu’s shoulder. His eyes burned with unwavering resolve. "Get out of the way!!!"

Bai Liu’s shoulder was shattered by Spades' whip, and the weapon fell to the sea floor. In a fit of rage, Bai Liu bit down on Spades' wrist, his teeth sinking into the skin as he hissed through clenched teeth. "I forbid it!!!"

Spades gritted his teeth, relinquishing the whip as he raised his fist and aimed for Bai Liu’s right eye.

The two men twisted, falling downward.

Spades bared his teeth and sank them deep into Bai Liu’s shoulder.

Bai Liu’s body trembled with the pain, and Spades felt a deep, searing ache in his own back, as though his very brain might explode from the intensity.

For some reason, his eyes burned in the cold water.

So many games won, driven by Bai Liu's verdict on his fate from the very beginning. It subconsciously pushed him to seek victory, to choose an ending that was painful for everyone.

But this time—this time, it was different.

It was his pain, his desire to win!!!

With a fierce expression, Spades bit down harder, deforming Bai Liu's shoulder and drawing blood. Bai Liu grunted, the sound of his shoulder blade cracking echoing in the water.

Without allowing Bai Liu a moment to recover, Spades slammed his right hand into Bai Liu’s stomach, sending him spiraling toward the depths of the sea.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has used Player Muke's personal skill (Flashing Strike).]

Bai Liu, now missing one hand, sprang into action. He stepped in front of Tawil, his long, blood-soaked hair trailing behind him as he shot Spades a menacing glare.

Time and time again, over and over, he had lost to this man in this twisted game.

—And lost everything that mattered.

[Will you always play games with me later?]

[Hmm.]

Xie Ta’s earnest reply still echoed in Bai Liu’s mind.

Liar. A lie. Not true.

Wouldn't it have been different if he'd beaten you, at least once, by now?

—Could it be that I will be the one to become the evil god?

Without hesitation, Bai Liu raised his hand and drove the knife deep into Spades' chest, twisting the blade as he pulled it out.

A spray of blood erupted from the wound, and a transparent thread instantly wrapped around Bai Liu’s left hand where the knife had been.

The two men staggered back, bruised and battered, but didn't wait for a moment's respite before charging at each other again, fighting like wild animals, their whips raised.

The rain had finally stopped falling.

On a small boat, Gosho could not hide the joy that spread across his face as he noticed the shrine had calmed. "Let's go see. Maybe the sacrifice has been made, and we can make a wish."

"Aye." The boatman bowed and began rowing.

As the boat neared the shrine, the imperial boat rocked steadily, and then, without warning, a great explosion of fireworks burst into the night sky, as beautiful as starry flowers.

The servant next to Gosho whispered, "Lord Gosho, the fireworks display should have started now that the rain has stopped."

"Perfect timing." Gosho smiled smugly and made his way toward the disordered shrine. "A lively backdrop is perfect for wish-making."

But as they took only a couple of steps, the shrine suddenly shook violently, as though something beneath was tugging at it.

The maid screamed in terror, and Gosho gripped a stone lantern for balance. "What's happening?! The evil god in my dream clearly told me it would be safe to make a wish..."

Before he could finish, the entire boat-shaped shrine flipped over!

The imperial boat plummeted into the sea!

Gosho, panic-stricken, flailed in the water, bubbles escaping his mouth as he tried to stay afloat.

Below the surface, Bai Liu and Spades fought almost beyond recognition, their bodies covered in blood and threads, as they struggled for control over Tawil, who was once again sealed by the threads and asleep.

The overturned shrine crashed onto Tawil, and Gosho frantically paddled to avoid getting caught in their fight, knowing that a brush with the two men would mean certain death.

But before he could escape, Bai Liu's bone whip lashed out, wrapping around Gosho's ankle and yanking him toward Spades, preventing him from stalling the fight.

Spades did the same.

The imperial boat was tossed around like a ragdoll by the two men, and soon, Gosho was suffocating. His face turned purple as he struggled to breathe, entangled in the silk threads. Tawil was pulled downward by the force of his thrashing, and the now-sunken shrine continued its descent.

Bai Liu reached for Tawil, but was suddenly stopped by Spades, who missed Tawil and instead grabbed the silk threads wrapped around him.

Spades pinned Bai Liu down, blocking his movements and snatching the threads from Bai Liu's grasp.

Bai Liu took a sharp breath, as though he had been waiting for Spades to get close.

Before Spades could react, Bai Liu jerked back and kissed him, his eyes closed.

Spades' pupils widened in shock.

At the same moment, Bai Liu yanked Tawil upward, restraining Spades in a brutal way as he pushed Tawil’s body into Spades’ from behind.

Spades’ pupils dilated instantly as Bai Liu kissed him, and his heart raced as something cold was pushed into his mouth.

It was a coin.

[System Alert: Player Spades' soul fusion initiated.]

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu used the Soul Trade skill to trade with Spades' soul. The soul is now returned to its rightful place, and the trade coin is located on Spades. The trade is effective.]

[Player Bai Liu now officially owns Spades' soul and has access to his system panel.]

[Player Bai Liu uses Spades' soul note to access Spades' system panel and prepares to hit the game exit button.]

[System Warning: Is player Bai Liu sure to hit the game exit button for player Spades? Player Spades is in the middle of a match, and the default exit is a forfeit.]

[Player Bai Liu identified.]

[System Alert: Player Spades has exited the game. Game over.]

As fireworks exploded above, Gosho's body, bound by silk threads, sank into the sea. His twisted face grimaced in pain as he became the sacrifice for the night.

From the boathouse, Xiaokui watched the disappearing shrine, her eyes filling with tears as she heard a calm, familiar voice in her ears.

It sounded like Tawil's voice—the evil god's voice—and like Bai Liu's voice.

[God grants your wish.]

[Someone is coming to your rescue.]

Xiaokui clutched the paper door of the boathouse, staring at the dazzling fireworks, tears streaming down her face.

Had this game of sacrifice, this torment, finally come to an end?

The moment the screen went dark, both the wandering circus and the killer sequences leapt to their feet, rushing toward the exits.

After the life-or-death struggle they'd just endured, both Bai Liu and Spades were surely in bad shape and needed assistance.

Bai Liu staggered out, his second step faltering before he collapsed. Spades didn't even make it to the exit before he fell to the ground.

Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng quickly caught Bai Liu.

He gasped and coughed, his face pale, his hair dripping seawater, the strong scent of blood filling the air.

Liao Ke and Bai Yi were about to reach for Spades when Liao Ke noticed something and pulled Bai Yi back, shouting, "Wait! Don't go near Spades!"

Spades, who had fallen to the ground, coughed and slowly pushed himself up onto his elbows. He lifted his head, his silvery-blue eyes cold and distant.

A loud alarm blared across the ornamental pool.

[System Warning: Please move away from the source of contamination and use mental bleach to maintain your mental values!]

[Top-tainted NPC exodus detected in game!!!]

Spades' face, drenched with water and broken hair, revealed his silvery-blue eyes, filled with an eerie, otherworldly calm.

Chapter End Notes

> Gosho drowned. Not in some heroic struggle, but because the world finally stopped tolerating him. Funny how life always finds a way to balance things out.
>
> Not one soul mourned him. His death was the only good thing he ever did: made the world a little less disgusting.
>
> To Gosho — may the fishes find his company as unbearable as we did.

The Challenge

The entire pool was shrouded in a dense cloud of white mist, and all that could be heard was the constant choking and coughing of the audience.

“What’s going on? What NPC exodus?”

“I’m still waiting for the results! Well, now I can’t see a thing.”

Before Bai Yi could react, he saw Spades collapse to the ground not far from him. He reached out to help, but Liao Ke stopped him.

“No!!!” Liao Ke pulled Bai Yi behind him, quickly accessing his system’s prop panel. He turned away from the battered and bruised Spades, who was struggling to rise, his voice low and serious. “Spades is in grave danger.”

“If you don’t want to leave the game, go crazy and kill yourselves. Now behave yourselves!”

“Don’t look into his eyes.”

Liao Ke dragged Bai Jiamu and Bai Yi backward, moving quickly until they reached the edge of the inner perimeter of the viewing pool, where they could just barely make out the faint silhouette of Spades through the mist.

The figure was trying hard to stand, but it seemed too injured to do so on its own. He took a few unsteady steps before collapsing again, only to struggle and try to rise once more.

Climb up, fall down. Climb up, fall down.

Spades seemed to be searching for someone, moving in a nearly crawling manner. He resembled a lizard newly transformed into human form, uncoordinated and awkward, struggling to move on all fours.

Bai Yi’s heart clenched as he watched. “Are we just going to leave him like this?”

Liao Ke’s expression was grim. “We can’t afford to get involved right now.”

“We’re his teammates! We can’t just leave him!” Bai Yi’s eyes filled with tears, his voice trembling. “He’s hurt like this because of our game!”

“He doesn’t know anything,” Liao Ke said, his tone cold. “We forced him onto the field, taught him the rules, told him to win these games, and banned him from reality.”

“We’ve taught him all these rules meant to benefit us humans in the real world, but we’ve never treated him with the same kindness we show to people in reality. He lives like a monster even when we’re around.”

“Everyone fears him.”

Bai Yi’s voice became almost a whisper, his eyes brimming with tears. “If even we, his teammates, won’t help him now... then he truly has nothing left.”

Liao Ke clenched his fists and lowered his head. He opened his mouth to speak, then paused. “You’re not allowed to help.”

“I’ll go.” He looked up, determination in his eyes.

Bai Yi panicked. “I didn’t mean to force you! I’ll go! I’ll go myself!”

“None of you need to go.” From the mist, a slender figure emerged, slightly hunched over, coughing harshly. With clenched fists and a warm smile despite the bloodstained uniform draped over his shoulders, the man spoke softly. “Someone will go.”

Liao Ke exhaled deeply, a small, genuine smile finally breaking through his serious demeanor. “You’re finally here.”

Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu stared in stunned silence at the man who had appeared from the mist.

Bai Jiamu’s shoulders relaxed, but Bai Yi couldn’t hold back the tears. He rushed over and hugged the man like a lifeline. “Captain!”

“We lost the singles!!!”

Lu Yizhan caught the wailing Bai Yi with a raised eyebrow. “Really? Looks like I missed a great game.”

“I’m the one who’s late.”

Meanwhile, in the white mist, Spades continued to stumble alone. His clothes were soaked, blood dripping from the ends of his hair and the corners of his coat. His face was expressionless, ears ringing with the system's endless warnings.

[Please do not approach player Spades! He is now in a dangerous monster book state!]

[Please stay away from player Spades!]

[Please do not approach player Spades!]

Oh, keep them away from me.

Only now did Spades' mind process the system's messages that were still echoing in his ears.

He collapsed again, his knees buckling as he tried to rise. With a determined calm, he considered his next move.

There's no need for these warning messages, he thought. They're superfluous.

These people, these players... they won't come near me, even with the warning.

They're afraid of me.

It's just like being afraid of a monster in a game.

Spades tried to move again. His knees buckled, and he fell hard to the ground.

Blood and seawater dripped from the tips of his hanging hair, and pools of blood misted away from his knees as he knelt, Spades thought somewhat dazedly.

Yeah, I was supposed to be a monster in the game.

No one should have ever come near me in the first place. My role is to kill those who approach, to make them feel fear, pain, to let them drown in their own desires.

The only purpose of my birth and existence is this.

[Not so.]

Suddenly, Spades recalled what Lu Yizhan had said when the strange prophet leaned over the balcony fence of the killer sequence, smiling at him. He had reached out, gently patted his head, and said:

[Not so. We Spades do not exist to cause pain and fear to others. No life in this world was created for that purpose.]

[You must have been born because someone loves you.]

[And your presence will surely bring them immeasurable happiness.]

And who is this person? Spades asked.

Lu Yizhan had smiled and answered: [That person is the one who brings you into reality and turns you into a human being.]

Does this person really exist?

Spades looked at the blood beneath his knees, at the blood-stained hands, at the empty, silent white mist around him, and wondered deeply:

So many humans... Why should this one love such a monstrous creature as me?

"Bai Liu, what are you doing there?" Mu Sicheng's urgent voice cut through the tension. "Shit! That's Spades over there! The system won't let you pass! It's dangerous, don’t you hear?"

"Bai Liu, you're badly injured, don't do something reckless!" Tang Erda warned, his tone serious.

"Don't go over there," Muke said softly, "Spades has his teammates to handle this. Rest first, okay?"

"Bai Liu." The final voice was Liu Jiayi's, who had been silent for a long while before speaking, "Go if you want to."

"I know you've made your choice."

Throughout it all, Bai Liu didn’t respond. He was silent, his determination clear as he pushed past the people blocking his path, stepping into the white mist with unsteady steps, moving toward Spades.

Spades slowly looked up, and before him appeared a similarly broken figure—thin, alone, and struggling to maintain his balance. Like him, this figure swayed a few steps toward him.

No matter how many obstacles stood in the way, neither of them took a step back.

The piercing warning grew louder:

[Please do not approach player Spades!]

Why should this man love me, a monster to be feared, when there are so many humans? Spades had asked Lu Yizhan, bewildered.

[He's so strange.]

Lu Yizhan had smiled: [I thought he was strange too.]

[But when you meet him, you'll like him a lot.]

At the time, Spades had been confident: [I wouldn't like him.]

Lu Yizhan laughed and asked: [Why?]

Spades had replied bluntly: [Because I don't like it.]

Bai Liu reached Spades, who was still kneeling, pale and breathing heavily, his blood trailing from his wrist and ankle wounds.

Bai Liu looked down at Spades, who gazed back up at him. A drop of blood mixed with seawater fell from Spades' eyelids.

Bai Liu extended his hand to Spades, holding a game coin in his palm. His voice was light as he spoke: "I win."

In that moment, Spades couldn't hold back his tears.

He didn't understand why he was crying, just as he didn't understand many things about humans. He didn't realize that in this moment, he was experiencing all the human emotions he'd always wondered about—like, hate, love, jealousy, pursuit, pain, and resignation—emotions he had never fully grasped before.

"I lost." Spades' voice trembled as he clenched his fists. "I'm an unqualified memento."

Bai Liu paused, then tucked the coin away. Kneeling in front of Spades, he unwrapped a roll of bandages and carefully began wrapping Spades' silvery-blue eyes. Their breaths came close together as Bai Liu worked with meticulous attention.

"No," Bai Liu whispered softly in his ear, the warmth of a smile in his voice. "You passed."

[System Alert: Player Spades' danger level has been neutralized. The danger alert has been lifted.]

The spray of psycho-bleach ceased.

As the white mist began to clear, Bai Yi rushed forward, excitement in his voice: "Spades! The captain's back!"

The circus crew gathered around to assist Bai Liu.

Spades was placed on a stretcher, his eyes still wrapped, and Liao Ke held his hands, guilt evident in his expression. "Is everything alright? I'll take you to the killer's office and get your wounds checked."

"I'm sore," Spades mumbled dully. "It's heavy again."

Spades had never cried out in pain during the game, and when Bai Yi heard it, his heart skipped a beat. But then Spades spoke again, confused: "Heavy... what's heavy?"

"I feel like my body..." Spades said slowly, "it's so heavy."

"It's normal," Lu Yizhan replied, stepping forward with a smile as he touched Spades' forehead. "Because soul and love—they are heavy things."

"Eh..." Bai Yi noticed a paper-like object clutched in Spades' left hand and tried to tug at it, curiosity getting the best of him. "Spades, what's in your hand?"

Spades gripped it tightly. "Mine!"

"No robbery, no robbery!" Bai Yi immediately backed off with a raised hand in surrender, laughing nervously. "I just thought it might be something bad you brought out of the game."

"No," Spades said simply. "Bai Liu gave it to me."

Bai Yi hesitated, then asked carefully, "You're blindfolded now... do you want me to help you see what Bai Liu gave you?"

Spades lay still on the stretcher for a long time before slowly releasing the small, crumpled note from his grasp.

Bai Yi froze when he saw what was written on it.

It was a simple note with only a string of twelve digits.

—It was a coordinate from reality.

Access to Bai Liu's rental house.

The Challenge

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

The white mist cleared, and everything in the audience pool came into full view again.

A mechanical voice echoed through the arena, announcing:
[System Alert: Player Spades voluntarily exited the game...]
[System Alert: Player Bai Liu wins the single-player tournament and earns 1 point.]
[Game over for "Evil Ritual - Boathouse." Congratulations to the Wandering Circus for winning the single-player tournament.]

A pin could have dropped in the audience as an eerie silence settled.

The host, sitting on the rocking arm of his chair, took a deep breath, staring at the astonished faces in the crowd. With trembling hands, he shouted, "Bai Liu won the match! He shattered Spades' undefeated streak! He's the first player ever to defeat Spades in a single-player tournament!"

Wang Shun, sitting on a wooden bench, stared at the system panel in disbelief. For a moment, he thought he'd misread the numbers. The pool was expanding at a staggering four hundred times the rate it had at the start of the tournament, and the Circus members' popularity was skyrocketing, reflected in the stats panel's top right corner.

Liu Jiayi's ranking surged twice, stopping at 52nd place.
Tang Erda's ranking climbed to 67th.
Mu Sicheng shot up into the top 50, landing at 48th.
Muke advanced to 77th.

Wang Shun stared at Muke's final ranking three times before collapsing onto the bench. His hands braced the edge to keep him from sliding off as he exhaled a long, hollow breath. "Bai Liu's final placing—sixth. Top 10 in popularity. He's a star player now," Wang Shun muttered in awe.

In a single game, the entire team had earned a free pass to the next round, their star status secured exactly as Bai Liu had predicted.

This was... simply unbelievable.

"Bai Liu!!!"
The front-row spectators, who had been silent until they saw the match results, suddenly erupted in cheers. They jumped to their feet, their faces flushed with excitement, their necks strained from shouting, all chanting the name of the match's winner.
"Bai Liu!!!"
"Bai Liu!!!"

The energy spread to the back rows, and soon, the entire pool was filled with the unified roar of the crowd. Even Daniel stood on the fence, arms raised, smiling and chanting Bai Liu's name alongside everyone else. The host, still rocking in his chair, couldn't help but join in.

"It's a miracle!" the host shouted, his voice hoarse. "A new myth has been born! A rookie breaks Spades' undefeated streak in a singles match!"

"Let's give our heartiest applause, points, and cheers to this brave newcomer!"

The crowd erupted in applause, throwing clothing into the pool, shouting Bai Liu's name, and igniting electronic fireworks—an unexpected spectacle.

Normally, players would respond to such interactions by collecting some of the clothes thrown in and signing them before tossing them back—a tradition for star players after a great game.

Wang Shun stepped forward, leaning close to Bai Liu's ear to explain the custom. Bai Liu nodded in understanding, giving a subtle glance to the audience.

Tang Erda noticed the underwear, bras, and socks being thrown in and, in a serious manner, covered Liu Jiayi's eyes.

Liu Jiayi, who couldn't see. "..."

Wang Shun, both embarrassed and excited, added, "Some celebrity players even strip down and sign autographs, throwing their clothes back to the crowd. It really ramps up the points rush."

Liu Jiayi, her eyes still covered, replied calmly, "Hearts did that last time. She took off her heels and stockings, signed them, and threw them back. The points surged two or three times faster than before."

Tang Erda, realizing the situation, silently uncovered Liu Jiayi's eyes.

Mu Sicheng let out an exasperated breath. "Isn't that just selling your body?"

Bai Liu, thoughtfully resting his index finger on his chin, responded, "Well, it's rare that my body is worth this much."

Mu Sicheng froze. "....."

Shit, I forgot... this guy will do anything for money!

The three large men beside him all flinched, their eyes subtly and critically scanning Bai Liu, who was drenched in a wet white shirt, dripping suit pants, and regular black leather shoes with white socks.

Tang Erda paused for a moment, then spoke calmly, "Don't force it. The point rush is moving fast now."

"There's nothing on you to take off," Liu Jiayi pointed out bluntly. "They want clothes that fit snugly. You can only take them off if you do it inside…"

Muke calmly covered Liu Jiayi's mouth. "Personally, I think a normal interaction is fine."

"Usually, it takes three pieces off," Wang Shun muttered, clenching his fist and coughing. He glanced at Bai Liu in front of him, uncomfortable and unsure where to direct his gaze. "...Better forget it, President."

"Well, three?" Bai Liu paused, then smiled, heading toward the audience. "Three should be fine."

With that, he raised his hand and pulled it back, shaking out the ringlets in his hair. His long, wet locks cascaded over his shoulders. Bai Liu looked up, smiled, and tossed the ringlets toward the audience.

"Ohhhhhhh!!!" The crowd erupted, rushing toward the stage. "Bai Liu, I love you! Throw it this way!!!"

Bai Liu lowered his eyes, pulled on his shirt tie with one hand, then bit the cap off the marker Wang Shun had handed him. He signed his name on the tie, rolled it into a bundle, and tossed it lightly toward the front row.

“Ah! Mine! Mine! I got it!” The audience went wild, nearly contorted with excitement.

Mu Sicheng watched, stunned.

This man is too skilled at undressing! Does he have no shame?

Bai Liu reached into his collar with two fingers, pulled out a bandage, and tossed it into the crowd. Then, he turned around nonchalantly, ignoring the chaotic crowd behind him, and returned to his position like a gamer who had completed his mission.

“All right,” Bai Liu glanced at Wang Shun. “Now the whole crew gets a free pass, right?”

Wang Shun, still dazed, nodded blankly. “You’re sixth, President.”

“Sixth place?!” Mu Sicheng gasped, pointing at Bai Liu. “This guy is already in sixth place? Is he on a rocket?”

“Not far off from it,” Wang Shun sighed. “You’re all in the top 100 for popularity too. Besides that, the popularity of the top players has shifted after this game.”

“Spades has seen a significant drop in popularity, falling from first to second,” he continued.

“So, does that mean the original number two is now number one?” Muke asked, frowning. “I remember the original number two in popularity was…”

Wang Shun smiled bitterly and stepped aside, glancing at the man in the killer sequence. The man was smirking, his gaze fixed on them helplessly. “Yes, the current number one in popularity is the Inquisitor of the Reverse Gods, the top tactician in the game.”

“The focus is on the next regatta,” Wang Shun added.

After a brief moment of excitement, the crowd calmed down at the host’s hysterical shout. “Both tacticians, please come forward to shake hands, warm up for the next double-header, and announce the names of the players for the next game!”

Bai Liu, surrounded by a group of players bandaging him, raised his hand to stop their movements and stood up with an unruffled expression.

The Reverse God removed his jacket, looking toward Bai Liu and stepping aside.

The two men met at the center of the big screen.

The Reverse God extended his hand first, a smile on his face as he sincerely asked, “How are you hurt?”

“I was going to ask you the same thing.” Bai Liu’s tone swept over the Reverse God’s right shoulder. “If you can’t hold out, just admit defeat.”

“I don’t mind.” The Reverse God scratched his head, laughing lightly. “Is that trash-talking me?”

“No,” Bai Liu responded flatly, reaching out to take the Reverse God’s hand. “It’s just a genuine suggestion.”

“Spades is off the court and won’t be playing for a while,” Bai Liu continued. “Add to that, you’re a tactician in bad shape. That’s four gaps for me.”

Bai Liu lifted his eyes, his gaze sharp. “You don’t have much of an advantage in the group game. If anything, you’re at a disadvantage.”

The Reverse God’s smile narrowed slightly, and he sighed. “Yes, you’re right.”

“Bai Liu, you’re a real distraction,” he added.

“So, you’re giving up?” Bai Liu met the Reverse God’s eyes, his expression steady.

The Reverse God stared at Bai Liu, his gaze deep. He exhaled slowly. “I think you already know the answer.”

With that, he slowly raised his hand.

The host noticed the Reverse God’s movement and nodded at the spatial barrier between the two tacticians. “May I ask the player, Reverse God, do you have anything to say to the public?”

“Yes,” the Reverse God smiled sheepishly, lifting his face. “It’s like this, host: no more double-match players on the Slayer Sequence side. We forfeit the double match.”

“Straight into the team match.”

Chapter End Notes

The ringlets are tightly curled or spiral-shaped strands of hair.

Qiao Mu Private High School

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

After the announcement that the Killer Sequence had forfeited the doubles match, the room erupted.

Doubles was their dominant event in the Killer Sequence, yet they had chosen to forfeit another match at a critical moment—right after losing the singles, when they needed crowd support the most.

It was an entirely unexpected decision.

This meant the Killer Sequence had now lost two games in a row to the Wandering Circus, a newcomer guild.

Whispers spread through the audience. Sitting on a wooden bench, ready to play, Mu Sicheng furrowed his brows in confusion. "Wait, I don't have to play in doubles?"

Bai Liu adjusted his collar, straightened the bandages on his wrist, and mumbled, almost plaintively, "Straight to the tournament."

"President." Wang Shun hesitated as he glanced at Bai Liu's composed expression. "I know Spades, the ace player of the Killer Sequence, isn't participating, and their core tactician, Reverse God, is seriously injured, so our odds of winning look better…"

"But personally," he paused before finally voicing his thoughts, "I still think they have a higher chance of winning than we do."

Bai Liu's sharp gaze swept toward him. "Do you have new data?"

Wang Shun scratched his face with a wry smile. "Not exactly new, but I've been analyzing the major star teams, especially their team performance, and I know their win-loss ratio."

"They're missing Spades, and at first glance, that seems like a major loss. But it's not."

Wang Shun tapped into the system panel. "Spades has always been a lone wolf in team matches. He never played well with the rest of the team, as you all know. He trains alone most of the time."

"The one actually practicing with the other four in Killer Sequence is someone else—a reserve player named [Zhou Gong]."

A photo popped up on the panel: a fresh-faced boy with a few pimples on his forehead, looking younger than expected.

"He doesn't seem like much. Why's he called [Duke of Zhou]?" Mu Sicheng couldn't help but scoff.

"It's skill-related," Wang Shun replied, then looked at Bai Liu with a complicated expression. "From what I've heard, in the early stages of the playoffs, Spades struggled to sync with the team. Reverse God was already making preparations to replace him with [Zhou Gong] for direct team matches."

"Because he actually fits with the team."

"In the end, Spades managed to keep up, so they didn't make the switch," Wang Shun took a deep breath. "But that says a lot."

"It means that, from Reverse God's perspective, as a tactician, [Duke of Zhou] is actually more useful than Spades in a team game."

Bai Liu glanced at the photo. "So he's the one replacing Spades in the tournament. Anything else on him?"

"Not much. He's rarely played official matches, so there's little data." Wang Shun shook his head. "The only thing I do know is that he has an unusual relationship with Liao Ke, another Killer Sequence player."

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow. "Unusual?"

"They seem to share the same skill type," Wang Shun explained. "[Duke of Zhou] calls Liao Ke his teacher."

"So Reverse God is fielding two control players?" Liu Jiayi frowned. "Is he planning a long-range, offensive-defensive strategy?"

"That's right."

Tang Erda, suddenly remembering something, turned to Bai Liu with a serious expression and whispered, "Did you get Spades' soul in that scene just now? Can you use his panel?"

"Not quite," Bai Liu opened his system panel, his gaze lowering to the soul note data. "I can't use his panel until he fully remembers who he is."

The last entry in his soul note displayed an image of Tawil lying in a white baptismal font, eyes closed, hands resting over his chest, clutching the coin Bai Liu had given him.

Killer Sequence's side.

Reverse God patted the pimple-faced boy on the shoulder, looking completely at ease. "Zhou Gong, I'm leaving the next game to you—Bai Liu."

Zhou Gong took a deep breath and lifted his head, eyes brimming with determination. "Don't worry, Captain! Leave it to me!"

"I've been preparing for this match against Bai Liu for a long, long time under my teacher's guidance!"

Liao Ke, standing beside him, nodded, his gaze complicated as he looked at Reverse God. "We've been preparing for ten years."

"We won't lose, Captain."

The host raised his hand, voice filled with passion. "Both teams, please enter the arena!"

Reverse God shrugged on his uniform jacket with one hand, his eyes calm and resolute. "Let's go—to face my greatest opponent."

Bai Liu stood as well, tightening his gloves. His expression was unreadable, his tone steady.

"Let's go—to face my best friend."

"This is a life-or-death match. The loser's league career ends here!" The host raised his left hand high before bringing it down with force.

"Will this year's biggest dark horse, the Wandering Circus, continue their meteoric rise? Or will the legendary duo of the Killer Sequence defend their championship glory?"

"Will both tacticians please step forward and shake hands!"

Bai Liu and the Reverse God ascended the steps, closing the distance between them with steady, unhurried strides. Their expressions remained composed—calm, almost indifferent—as if this wasn't a crucial final match but just another game, one of countless others they had played over the years.

The Reverse God glanced at Bai Liu, a faint smile curling his lips as he extended his hand. "Still here, playing with you," he remarked lightly.

Bai Liu's gaze flickered downward, settling on the offered hand. He let out a quiet hum before clasping it, speaking abruptly, "It's been almost ten years of playing these absurd games together, hasn't it?"

The Reverse God hesitated for a moment, then returned the hum with a knowing smile. "Almost ten years."

Their hands remained interlocked, yet the tension that should have defined this moment—the sharp, electric anticipation of battle—was absent. There was no wary stiffness, no instinct to tighten their grips or test the strength of the other.

—Because they knew each other too well.

—Because, deep down, there was an unshakable conviction that neither would truly harm the other.

In the end, it was just another game.

"You're the prophet." Bai Liu raised his eyes, his voice calm. "Have you ever seen how our game ends?"

A long silence stretched between them. The Reverse God finally looked down at their joined hands and answered softly, "No."

"Why not?" Bai Liu asked.

"Because I was afraid." The Reverse God exhaled, rubbing the back of his neck with a wry smile. "I'm a coward, Bai Liu. When I fear a future… I don't look at it."

Bai Liu remained unfazed. "What exactly are you afraid of? That I'll win? That I won't die like you hoped?"

"Don't make me sound so heartless." The Reverse God met Bai Liu's gaze, his smile gentle but his eyes glistening as if on the verge of tears. "I've watched you grow for ten years. I know, deep down, that to you… I'm your best friend."

"But you're my last friend."

Bai Liu's breath hitched.

The Reverse God stepped forward, placing a firm hand on Bai Liu's shoulder as he pulled him into a brief, one-armed embrace. With his eyes shut, he whispered in Bai Liu's ear:

"I fear both endings."

"I fear you losing. And I fear me losing."

"The game—officially begins!" the host announced, his voice cutting through the air.

"Both teams, log in now!"

Their hands loosened and slipped apart. Without hesitation, they turned away from each other, walking in opposite directions—neither looking back, their gazes locked ahead, toward their own battle groups.

—Toward their own futures.

[……Loading game……]

[System Alert: Players have entered the game—Qiao Mu Private High School.]

[(Killer Sequence) vs (Wandering Circus), five-player team competition—officially begins.]

Chapter End Notes

> Zhou Gong (Duke of Zhou) is a historical and mythological figure from ancient China, known for his wisdom and contributions to governance during the early Zhou Dynasty. He is often associated with dreams and interpretations of dreams in Chinese culture.

Qiao Mu Private High School

[Player Bai Liu logging into the game copy: Qiao Mu Private High School.]

Qiao Mu Private High School is a prestigious institution known for its high graduation rate. Equipped with state-of-the-art facilities, it boasts a student and faculty population exceeding 10,000 across its middle and high school divisions.

But in recent times, the school has been plagued by a series of disturbing incidents. It started with a senior girl drowning in the man-made lake less than a meter from the back hill. Then, senior students began committing suicide one after another in their homes. Whispers of hauntings spread rapidly among the students.

You are a senior at Qiao Mu Private High School. After a week-long break, you return to campus—where seventeen students have already taken their own lives—to continue preparing for the upcoming exams.

[Player Bai Liu's academic records analyzed. Player Bai Liu is classified as a "poor student" in this game copy and has been assigned to a regular class.]

[Class Assignment: Upper Thirty-seventh]
[Main Task: Achieve the top rank in this year's entrance examination.]
[Time remaining: 50 days until the exam.]

Bai Liu slowly opened his eyes. For a brief moment, everything around him was frozen in time before the scene came rushing back to life in a chaotic symphony of sounds.

A day student tossed a blackboard eraser. A boy laughed with the student beside him. A girl in the front row wore earbuds, lost in her own world. From the corridor, the class representative waved a stack of papers, shouting:

"Who hasn't picked up their second-year English test yet? Mr. Xu's marking them later! Come get them from the podium yourself!"

Outside, basketballs pounded against the pavement. A whistle blew. The trees cast shifting shadows against the windows, and across the schoolyard, a large red banner stretched across the opposite building:

[50 days until exams. Pre-exam assembly today.]

[Current time: 14:00]

Bai Liu withdrew his gaze, turning just in time to see the English class representative approaching. Without a word, she slapped a test paper onto his desk.

She raised an eyebrow, crossed her arms, and scolded, "Bai Liu, didn't I tell everyone to pick up their English papers? Yours has been sitting on the podium all day, and you never came to get it. What's your excuse?"

The English class rep was a striking girl with shoulder-length hair, a small braid behind her right ear, and a butterfly hair clip. She was quite tall, standing at around 5'7" or 5'8".

Bai Liu met her gaze, his expression unreadable. As he looked at her, memories of his high school years slowly resurfaced.

Her name was Hou Tong—a classmate, the English class representative, and a member of Fang Dian's volleyball team. She had been placed in a regular class due to her lackluster grades, but her wealthy family had paid for her enrollment at Qiao Mu Private High School.

Bai Liu had a hazy recollection of most of his classmates. But he remembered Hou Tong clearly because…

Hou Tong, under Bai Liu's unwavering gaze, clenched the edges of his test paper. Her lips pressed together, her face gradually turning red, but she still held her ground.

"Last time, you left your English test on the podium, and Mr. Xu made you clean the toilets for a month! If you do this again, do you want to clean them for two months?!"

Ah. That was why he remembered her.

This young lady had a crush on him.

Or, to be more precise—she had a crush on his face.

Bai Liu accepted the test paper from Hou Tong, lowering his gaze slightly as he said in a quiet, almost lazy voice, "Thanks."

"No need to thank me. It's my job as class rep." Hou Tong feigned indifference, ruffling her hair as she turned away. "Don't let this happen again. Delivering your papers is a pain in the ass."

Bai Liu glanced down at the test in his hands.

His score on the English II paper: 83/150.

Not a disaster, but… utterly hopeless.

There were no distinct strengths or weaknesses—just an even spread of mistakes across the entire paper.

His gaze shifted to the name scrawled on the upper margin. The handwriting was slightly messy, still carrying a hint of youthful inexperience.

[Bai Liu]

Yes. That was his handwriting at seventeen or eighteen.

And Qiao Mu Private High School… was indeed where he had studied at that age.

Back then, Qiao Mu Private High School collaborated with both the education department and the orphanage. As part of a government mandate, elite private schools like Qiao Mu were required to allocate a certain number of spots each year to orphanage students.

But while Qiao Mu did accept orphanage students, they were all placed in the lowest-ranking general classes. Compared to other orphanage students who managed to enter public high schools, those assigned to Qiao Mu were considered unlucky.

Public high schools required entrance exams. Bai Liu, having transferred to a public orphanage at fourteen, had taken the exam a year later—and failed. His only option had been an allocated spot at a private high school.

Among the private high schools, Qiao Mu was considered the worst placement.

At first glance, a near-aristocratic institution like Qiao Mu seemed like a good opportunity. But for orphanage students, it was a nightmare.

Most teachers and students here looked down on orphans.

Bai Liu was the third orphanage student to attend Qiao Mu on an allocated spot. The first had dropped out due to a mental breakdown.

The second had disappeared after skipping school one day.

Lu Yizhan was the fourth.

Originally, Lu Yizhan had ranked first in the entrance exam and secured a place in a public high school. But when he learned that Bai Liu had been assigned to Qiao Mu, he gave up his spot without hesitation to follow him.

The orphanage only had one allocated spot at Qiao Mu, so Lu Yizhan had to get in on his own.

Not only did he succeed, but he ranked second among all Qiao Mu's selective students—just behind Fang Dian. Both of them had been awarded full scholarships and were placed in Class I, the prestigious Special Merit Class.

After spending time at Qiao Mu, Bai Liu finally understood why the previous orphanage students had ended up the way they did.

There are three types of students at Qiao Mu High School.

The first type consists of the wealthy—some extremely rich, others simply well-off—but with unremarkable academic performance. These students often carry a sense of entitlement and look down on those from less privileged backgrounds, particularly those from the orphanage. They take pleasure in mocking them for being orphans and, at times, resort to petty bullying—throwing their textbooks out before class, barricading the bathroom stalls to keep them out, and other similar antics. However, their bullying is usually childish and superficial, easy enough to ignore.

The second type includes students with outstanding grades but modest family backgrounds. They attend Qiao Mu on substantial scholarships —students like Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan. They generally avoid conflict but also show little sympathy for the children from the orphanage. Their admiration is reserved for high-achieving students, and they tend to look down on those who enter through social welfare programs, like Bai Liu. Even when they witness bullying, they turn a blind eye and walk past without intervening.

The third type comprises students who neither excel academically nor come from affluent families. Unable to secure a spot at a prestigious public or private high school, their families scrape together the tuition fees for Qiao Mu. Many of them, being only children, quickly fall into the orbit of the wealthier students, becoming their lackeys and joining in on the bullying of those lower on the social hierarchy.

This third group poses the most trouble for Bai Liu. They despise the fact that he, a welfare student, gets to attend Qiao Mu without paying or achieving top grades.

Take Bao Kangle, for example.

Bai Liu's gaze shifted to the second row, where a male student sat glaring at him with open hostility.

The boy had buck teeth and metal wire braces. His hair was cut in an unflattering watermelon style, his bangs thick and heavy. He was short, his legs slightly bowed when he sat, and his face was marred by inflamed, pus-filled acne.

Bao Kangle.

A third-rate student who had targeted Bai Liu for all three years of high school.

Most of Bai Liu's troubles with the third group were manageable, something he could deflect with minimal effort. But Bao Kangle was different. While he technically fit the profile of a typical third-type student, his circumstances set him apart. Unlike the others, he hadn't gotten into Qiao Mu by paying his way in.

The classroom door swung open, cutting through the tension. A woman strode in, red-painted nails tapping against a lesson plan in her hand. She wore seven-centimeter heels, her hips swaying as she moved.

She was petite, no taller than 5'5", dressed in black stockings and a fitted pencil skirt. Her hair was the same unflattering watermelon cut, her bangs heavy, her slightly bucked teeth peeking through as she surveyed the classroom. Her expression twisted in visible distaste the moment her gaze landed on Bai Liu.

She tapped her lesson plan against the podium. "Class."

A crisp voice rang out. "Stand up!"

"Good afternoon, Mr. Xu," the students chorused.

Bai Liu rose naturally with the others, bowing along in unison before glancing up at the teacher.

Xu Wei.

His English teacher.

His homeroom teacher.

And a faculty member at Qiao Mu High School.

She was also Bao Kangle's mother.

Bao Kangle had entered Qiao Mu through a special staff-affiliated admission pathway. Like Bai Liu, he hadn't needed to pay tuition. But unlike Bai Liu, he resented that fact.

And, in a way, Bai Liu could understand why.

He lowered his gaze as Hou Tong cast a quick glance back at him, a small smirk curling her lips. It was a fleeting gesture, but both Xu Wei and Bao Kangle caught it at the same time.

Bao Kangle liked Hou Tong. Or rather, Xu Wei had instructed Bao Kangle to like Hou Tong.

She had gotten him into Qiao Mu and placed him in her own class for a reason—to position him close to Hou Tong, a "white swan" from a prestigious background. With Xu Wei as his wingman, Bao Kangle, an unremarkable "toad," was supposed to seize the opportunity to climb the social ladder.

But Bai Liu—an orphan with no family connections, no outstanding academic achievements, no wealth—had unknowingly disrupted those plans.

All because Hou Tong liked looking at him.

Hou Tong's voice rang out, cheerful. "Good afternoon, teacher!"

"Good afternoon, everyone," Xu Wei replied with a nod. "Sit down."

The students moved to obey—

"Wait," Xu Wei said, flipping through the attendance roll. Her tone was indifferent. "Bai Liu, remain standing."

Bai Liu didn't react as the others paused.

"You scored an 83 on your English exam this time," Xu Wei continued, her voice sharp. "Half of your completion blanks were wrong. I don't know how you manage to listen in class and still do so poorly."

She sighed, shaking her head. "I know you were born into unfortunate circumstances, that you don’t have parents to guide you. But that should be all the more reason for you to work harder."

A faint glimmer of satisfaction flickered in her eyes as she looked down at him.

"Bai Liu, you are different from the other students in this class. They have parents, they have futures. You sit here by the grace of social welfare. I hope you can carry yourself accordingly and consider where you’re headed in life."

Her lips curled slightly. "You'll stand for the remainder of this lesson."

The classroom erupted into laughter. Someone snickered, "Be grateful for charity, Bai Liu."

Hou Tong’s head snapped up, her expression one of disbelief.

Bai Liu had only scored 83. He wasn’t even the lowest in the class.

So why was he the only one being singled out?

Qiao Mu Private High School

“The pep rally is at 2 PM. We’ll start half an hour early, go over the paper for twenty minutes, and then take a ten-minute break before the meeting.”

Xu Wei looked up and, as if she didn’t even see Bai Liu standing there, spoke kindly to the other students. “It’s almost May. It’s hot, and we’ll be standing for two or three hours. Drink some water before you head down, and be careful not to get heatstroke.”

“Alright, everyone, turn over your papers.”

The air buzzed with cicadas under the sweltering summer sun. Bai Liu sat in the third-to-last seat by the window in the back row. To his left, the glass framed the world outside, where the heat shimmered in waves.

Dressed in a crisp white student shirt and black trousers, Bai Liu leaned lazily against the curtain, his head tilted slightly as he flipped through his English paper with one hand. The sheer white gauze behind him blurred into a mist-like backdrop.

The collar of his shirt fluttered in the warm breeze, half-covering his pale lower lip. His damp hair clung slightly to his forehead, tousled by the wind, while the broad green leaves outside cast shifting patterns of light onto his lashes, creating a faint shimmer.

Sensing someone watching him, Bai Liu lifted his eyelids. His gaze met Hou Tong’s—she had turned to sneak a glance at him from behind the cover of her paper.

Her face flushed instantly. She whipped her head back around, clutching her chest, took two deep breaths, and pounded her fist on the desk.

Damn, he’s handsome! I’m going to get him!

Xu Wei’s expression darkened as she took in their small exchange. With a dull thud, she slammed the lesson plan onto the podium. “Bai Liu, come to my office for a moment.”

Without waiting for a response, she turned sharply on her heels and strode out.

As Bai Liu gathered his things, a few boys passed by, snickering.

“Another orphan training session?”

“Better work harder for yourself, Bai Liu, so you don’t have to rely on teachers hanging you out to dry~ Don’t let down society and the state that raised you~”

“Fuck off!” Hou Tong slammed her hand on the desk and stood up, eyes blazing as she glared at them. “You’re the ones spouting bullshit! Say one more word, and I’ll slap the shit out of you with a volleyball!”

Hou Tong was tall, beautiful, and a star player on the volleyball team. Coming from a well-off family, she had plenty of admirers.

But she was also terrifying. Not only was she vicious when provoked, but no high school boy her age could stand a chance against her in a fight. Years of training had given her absurd strength—she could probably snap someone in half with a single move.

One unlucky boy once found himself on the receiving end of her wrath. He walked away with a grade 2 concussion.

Since then, no one dared to make crude jokes around Hou Tong.

Seeing her genuinely angry, the boys muttered under their breaths and backed off.

It was an open secret that Hou Tong liked Bai Liu. That was precisely why the boys in the class resented him so much.

Bai Liu turned to her and said politely, “Thank you.”

“N-No problem.” Hou Tong, who had just resolved to flirt with Bai Liu minutes earlier, suddenly found herself scratching at her ears in embarrassment. Now that Bai Liu was earnestly thanking her, she blushed, looked away, and shuffled back two steps. “Go see Mrs. Xu already.”

Then, as if trying to escape, she blurted out, “I-I’ll go get you water and ice cream!”

Before Bai Liu could respond, she bolted.

Bai Liu simply pushed the door open and stepped out, indifferent to the whispers that followed him.

Bao Kangle trailed after him, walking just behind. He shot Bai Liu a hateful glance, purposefully brushing past his shoulder as he sneered. “Going to leech off Hou Tong for free snacks again?”

His lips curled in disdain. “Seriously, Bai Liu, you’ve been drinking her water and taking her ice cream for free this whole time, but I’ve never seen you treat her back, huh?”

Bai Liu lowered his gaze slightly, his voice soft and unhurried. “But… Hou Tong insists on treating me every time. If I refuse, wouldn’t that break her heart?”

Bao Kangle’s face turned red with fury. Bai Liu’s deliberately innocent act—like a sly green tea manipulator—made his blood boil. He cursed under his breath, spun around, and stormed toward the teacher’s office at the end of the hall.

Bai Liu, on the other hand, strolled at his own pace. As he walked, he turned his head slightly to gaze out into the corridor, taking in the familiar sights of his old high school.

Qiao Mu High School is a secluded institution built on a private mountain. It has two large teaching buildings, two dormitory buildings, and separate facilities for exceptional students—a specialized teaching building and a dedicated dormitory.

At the base of the hill stand the General Building and the Laboratory Building. These two structures are similar in size and height, facing each other. From Bai Liu’s seat in the General Building, he has a direct view of the Laboratory Building.

However, the Laboratory Building is clearly superior—better constructed, with more qualified teachers and fewer students per class. Unlike the crowded conditions in the General Building, the Laboratory Building’s classrooms are spacious, clean, and bright. The students there appear well-mannered and composed, in stark contrast to the chaotic atmosphere of the General Building.

Admission to the Laboratory Building is reserved for students with strong academic records, influential backgrounds, or specialized skills. Most of them are guaranteed to secure spots in top universities, whether through the college entrance exam, artistic or athletic achievements, or studying abroad. Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian were among these students during their first and second years of high school.

By the time they reached senior year… Bai Liu's gaze shifted to the far end of the hill, where two other buildings stood.

These buildings, though smaller than those at the base, had been renovated so luxuriously that they barely resembled school facilities. Instead, they looked like high-end apartments, complete with manicured gardens and artificial lakes. These were Qiao Mu High School's pride—the Exceptional Academic Building and the Exceptional Hostel.

It was said that each classroom in the Exceptional Academic Building was twice the size of regular classrooms, equipped with fully digital teaching tools, and provided each student with a personal tablet. There were only ten students per class, each guided by three to four senior instructors.

The dormitory was equally extravagant. Each student had a private room with an en-suite bathroom, measuring 20 to 30 square meters—two to three times the size of ordinary dorms. No more than ten students lived on each floor, attended to by two wardens and a personal cook. Rumor had it that students could order meals at any time, even in the middle of the night.

Bai Liu knew this was no rumor.

On their first day, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian ordered an entire feast, smuggling the food down the mountain under their clothes for Bai Liu. After calculating the cost, Fang Dian nearly broke down.

"Fuck, this meal cost over a thousand," she cursed, tears welling in her eyes as she stuffed food into her mouth. "Can I resell it?"

"Nope," Lu Yizhan sighed, patting her back as she choked on a bite. "We should just be grateful we even got to bring it down."

Qiao Mu High School was strict with ordinary students. Those from general classes, like Bai Liu, were not even allowed near the Laboratory or Exceptional buildings.

When Bai Liu tried to approach Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian in the Laboratory Building, he was coldly stopped by teachers and security guards.

"Don't you know regular students aren't allowed here? Poor students like you will only distract them."

“Friends? What friends? Students in the Experimental Class don’t mix with poor kids. If you want to be here, stop making excuses and study harder—get into the top 400 in the next exam.”

Yet, the school turned a blind eye to students with special privileges. Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian, ranked first and second in their year, could openly sneak food to Bai Liu without consequence.

After all, how much could three students really eat?

As long as Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan maintained their top rankings, Qiao Mu High School’s reputation would continue to soar. More parents, eager to see their children excel, would send them here.

Bai Liu withdrew his gaze from the hilltop and walked into the teacher’s office around the corner.

Unlike the Laboratory Building, where each teacher had a private office, the General Building housed a collective workspace—one large office where all the teachers on the floor worked together. Gossip spread fast in such an environment.

Standing before the door, Bai Liu lifted his eyes.

“Report.”

“Come in.” Xu Wei didn’t even glance at him, blowing on her rose tea. “Stand in front of me.”

Bai Liu stepped forward, stopping a meter away from her. “Did the teacher need something?”

Xu Wei finally sighed, setting down her cup. She lifted her puffy eyes, sneered, and dropped a few test papers at his feet.

“These are your results from the second round of mock exams,” she said. “Pick them up and see for yourself.”

Bai Liu bent down slowly, gathering the papers.

Math: 72.
Language: 78.
Science: 158.
English: 83.

Total—

“—391 points.”

Xu Wei’s hand slammed against her desk with a loud bang.

“With scores like these, can you even call yourself a student of Qiao Mu High School?”

A snicker came from the side.

Bao Kangle, who had come to get water, muttered under his breath, “He only got in because his parents died. Pretty sure even he’s too embarrassed to say he’s from Qiao Mu.”

Xu Wei shot him a look. “Watch your mouth. Get your water and leave.”

Bao Kangle smirked, glancing at Bai Liu’s test papers before heading for the door. As he walked out, Bai Liu overheard his cheeky voice in the hallway.

“Hey, guess how many points Bai Liu got this time?”

“Didn’t you bet he’d break 400? Missed it by nine points, huh? Hahaha!”

Xu Wei’s cold gaze returned to Bai Liu.

“You’ve dragged down our class average again,” she said flatly. “Do you know how many quality points that costs us?”

She exhaled, pressing her fingertips against her temple. “I don’t expect you to be a top student. But at least act like you value your place here. Do you have any idea how much others had to pay to get in?”

Setting her teacup down, she took a deep breath.

“I won’t compare you to students from normal families—it wouldn’t be fair to you as an orphan. But look at Lu Yizhan.”

She leaned forward, voice sharp.

“He grew up in the same place as you. Do you know his second mock exam score?”

“687.”

“Your score isn’t even half of his.”

She scoffed. “And yet, he still comes from the Laboratory Building to find you in class. Why don’t you learn from him?”

Shaking her head, she muttered, “Honestly, I don’t understand why he even bothers with you. Don’t you feel ashamed standing next to him?”

Bai Liu stared down at the papers in his hands. He blinked, slow and deliberate.

"I don't even ask much of you." Xu Wei scolded until her throat was dry, then took another sip of water from her cup. "I didn't care what you did in your freshman and sophomore years, but it's your senior year now. If you're willing to show up to class, shouldn't you at least take it seriously?"

She glared at Bai Liu, then threw a sketchbook onto the desk, pinning it down with a sharp tap of her red-painted fingernail. "Look at what you're doing in my class!"

The name Bai Liu was scribbled across the cover, alongside a few unfinished equations, the last letters trailing off in distorted strokes.

Bai Liu picked up the sketchbook, his fingers tracing the familiar texture of its cover. Flipping it open at random, he took in the crude sketches scrawled across the pages—then it clicked.

So it’s this book.

He used to skip class often in his early high school years. By the second semester of his sophomore year, Lu Yizhan had found various ways to drag him back, but Bai Liu never really paid attention in class. Most of the time, he drifted off or absentmindedly doodled in his notebook.

This was the very same book he used to sketch in—confiscated by Xu Wei at some point. No wonder he never found it after graduation.

Xu Wei snatched it from his hands before he could turn another page, slamming it back down. She flipped through it angrily, thrusting it toward his face.

"What is this nonsense you've been drawing?!"

Bai Liu lifted his gaze, his expression unreadable, and looked at the sketches.

The drawings, made with blue and red ballpoint pens, were crude but clear enough to decipher.

The first half of the book was filled with depictions of a grotesque female demon with bulging eyes and red-painted nails, being slain in various ways. Occasionally, a grinning toad with a watermelon-shaped head appeared beside her, as if watching the scene unfold.

But then, the drawings shifted.

A faceless, spindly figure in a school uniform began to appear. The little figure sat alone on the edge of a flower bed, staring down at two ice cream sticks in its hands. There was something desolate about it.

On the next page, a black, tangled mass of lines—roughly the size of a small dog—materialized in front of the figure.

The inky scribbles were vague, as if the artist hadn't fully grasped the shape of the shadow before him, only able to depict it in blurred outlines.

The creature crouched by the little figure's legs. A speech bubble was scrawled beside it:

[Can I have one of those ice creams you're holding?]

The small figure replied with a curt [No give.]

The creature pressed on: [Then can I trade with you?]

The figure hesitated. [Trade for what?]

[For my newly born soul.]

Bai Liu stared at the sketchbook, reaching out to take it.

He didn't remember ever drawing this.

Xu Wei yanked it away before he could touch it. She opened her mouth, ready to scold him further—then hesitated.

Bai Liu was watching her.

His gaze was flat, unwavering.

A shiver ran down her spine. Her voice faltered. "...Why are you looking at me like that?"

She had never seen that expression on him before. For a brief moment, the room felt colder.

Clearing her throat, she straightened her posture, forcing a firm tone. "The teacher is only scolding you for your own good," she said, though her movements were smaller now, more careful. She gestured toward the book. "Just look at what you've drawn. It's a mess. If you had real artistic talent, I could at least help you apply for art and physical education programs—but this?"

She tapped a fingernail against the page. "Red-nailed demons? That ridiculous toad? It's all too grotesque. They're from those horror games you like to play, aren't they?"

Bai Liu glanced at her red nails. The corner of his lips curled slightly.

"Sort of."

Xu Wei exhaled sharply and flipped to another page. "And these little figures—this one is supposed to be you, isn't it? And what's that… that scribbled mass talking to you?"

She sighed, adopting a feigned look of concern. "You know, with everything happening lately, people are paying close attention to the mental health of senior students. I was worried about you, so I showed your sketches to the school psychologist."

She folded her arms. "They said these kinds of drawings indicate self-imposed isolation. If taken too far, they suggest deeper psychological issues—like lingering childhood fantasies of imaginary friends that haven’t disappeared."

Bai Liu remained silent, his head bowed, fingers gripping the edge of the book.

When Xu Wei saw Bai Liu’s reaction, she couldn’t help but feel smug. She slowly puffed up her chest, her expression turning hypocritical and arrogant.

"Of course," she said, her tone laced with condescension. "It’s not that the teacher doesn’t understand why you have these issues. After all, you grew up in that kind of environment, and with that kind of personality… you didn’t have any friends in the orphanage, did you?"

Bai Liu remained silent.

Xu Wei’s smile widened.

"Senior year at Qiao Mu is very demanding, and stress can easily worsen psychological problems. As you’ve seen, several students have already had difficulties this year. The teachers don’t want you to be one of them."

She paused, as if considering something, before suggesting lightly, "How about this? I can help you apply for a withdrawal first. Once you're feeling better, you can transfer to another class."

As long as Bai Liu was forced out, her class rankings wouldn't be affected. And more importantly, Hou Tong would stop pestering him.

Seeing that Bai Liu still wouldn't respond, Xu Wei frowned and was about to press further when another teacher approached her desk and tapped lightly.

"Mrs. Xu, we're heading down for the assembly."

"Got it." Xu Wei stood, sweeping one last glance at Bai Liu. "Think it over."

She added, almost as an afterthought, "I'm doing this for your own good."

Outside, the loudspeaker crackled to life.

[All students, please assemble in the playground! All students, please assemble in the playground!]

Students bustled into the hallway, dragging their stools along with them, complaining about having to sit through a pep rally in the 2 PM heat. Almost everyone clutched a frozen bottle of mineral water, their pockets stuffed with sorbet and ice-cream snacks.

Qiao Mu High School wasn't short on resources—no one here would sit through a pep rally without a cold drink or something to eat.

No one except Bai Liu.

He couldn't afford to buy them.

But that didn't mean he couldn't eat them.

"Mrs. Xu kept you for the whole break again," Hou Tong grumbled as she walked up, fishing something from her pocket. She held out a popsicle. "At least let you get a sip of water?"

Bai Liu closed his half-open sketchbook, his gaze flicking to the popsicle in her hand. He thanked her, polite and distant.

"Thanks, but no thanks."

Hou Tong froze, then quickly realized what he was thinking. Before he could turn away, she grabbed his sleeve and hurriedly explained, "I didn't buy it for you!"

"Fang Dian did! She told me to bring it to you!"

Bai Liu paused, turning to look at her.

"I swear, I didn't buy it!" Hou Tong waved the popsicle for emphasis. "Look, it's the cheapest kind—only fifty cents! I wouldn't buy this for you."

She wasn't lying.

Her small pocket was filled with expensive ice-cream bars—seven, eight, even ten dollars apiece. And among them sat a single, cheap, double-stick popsicle that seemed completely out of place.

But it was the kind Bai Liu had eaten the most throughout high school.

During the summer, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian would pool their money to buy them for him.

"...Thanks." Bai Liu took it, his expression softening slightly. He wasn't as detached this time, his gaze serious. "Please thank her for me."

Hou Tong sighed in relief when he accepted it. But as she looked down at her bag of overpriced ice-cream bars, none of which seemed as valuable as that fifty-cent popsicle, she felt a sharp pang in her chest.

She stomped her foot, her eyes reddening.

Why is Fang Dian any different from me?

Why won't you ever take anything from me?

Bai Liu walked away, casually tearing open the wrapper. Cheap popsicles like these always came with two stick-shaped halves fused together.

Before Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian got together, Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan used to share them—one half for each. It was a good deal.

But after Lu Yizhan started dating Fang Dian, things changed. There were only two popsicles to split between them. Three people made it awkward.

So Bai Liu, the unnecessary third wheel, had quietly removed himself from their little world. While they shared their popsicles, he would leave for the office to get a drink of water instead.

At eighteen, Bai Liu had thought about it rationally:

It was finally time for Lu Yizhan to have his own circle.

He had always wondered why Lu Yizhan kept him around for the past four years. But that question faded once Fang Dian appeared.

Probably because there was nothing better to focus on at the time.

He must have just been bored.

But soon, Bai Liu found himself facing a far greater confusion.

He had assumed Fang Dian's presence would finally set Lu Yizhan on the right path—get into a good university, graduate, land a decent job, get married, have kids, make plenty of new friends. Eventually, his life would drift far away from Bai Liu's.

Their relationship should have ended at half of a fifty-cent popsicle.

Because Lu Yizhan shouldn't have to keep eating these cheap things, splitting them with someone like him.

They were never in the same world to begin with.

It was Lu Yizhan who had been forcing himself.

Forcing himself to be kind. To lower himself.

Wasn't he?

But… that wasn't what happened.

Instead of taking away Bai Liu's half of the popsicle, Fang Dian's arrival had done the opposite.

It had doubled it.

This woman would laughingly buy the same fifty-cent popsicles and break one in half—giving the extra piece to Bai Liu.

She'd ruffle his hair, grin, and say, "What are you hiding from? I like you too."

Since then, Bai Liu's confusion had only grown.

Because now, instead of one half, he had two.

"Bai Liu!"

A bright, lively voice called out from the crowd.

A girl with a high ponytail, dressed in a school uniform and skirt, waved at him with an easy grin. Sunlight poured over her, making her seem almost dazzling, her warmth cutting through the suffocating air.

"Bai Liu! Over here!"

"Come sit next to me!"

"What are you hiding from?"

Fang Dian closed the distance between them in a few quick steps, grabbing Bai Liu's face and giving it a vigorous rub. When she finally let go, she studied him for a moment, tilting her head as if contemplating something. "Weird… I feel like you've grown up in just a few hours."

Even inside the game, Bai Liu felt his back tense under Fang Dian's thoughtful gaze.

It always seemed like she knew nothing—but at the same time, like she knew everything. Bai Liu had lost count of how many times he'd felt that way since he was a child.

If Spades was a purely instinct-driven wild animal, then Fang Dian was one that also knew how to think for itself—twice as terrifying. Bai Liu had almost never been able to fool her.

Fang Dian's uncanny ability to deduce why Bai Liu was messing around—and exactly what he was thinking—once made him unexpectedly sympathetic toward Lu Yizhan.

…Spending time with someone like this. Bai Liu sighed inwardly. Lu Yizhan, it's lucky you're a good person.

He averted his eyes and changed the subject smoothly. "Come on, how much could I have grown in just a few hours?"

"Hmm…" Fang Dian rubbed her chin, scrutinizing Bai Liu for a long moment before nodding. "You feel like you're twenty-three or twenty-four now. So mature."

Bai Liu, who was, in fact, twenty-four: "…"

"Ah, I'm probably overthinking it!" Fang Dian laughed and threw an arm around Bai Liu's shoulders. "Come on, let's go watch Mr. Lu speak at the pledging ceremony!"

"Lu Yizhan? On stage?" Bai Liu raised an eyebrow. "Aren't you in first place? Why is he speaking?"

Fang Dian waved dismissively. "Ah, it's a shame. A student got hit during a football game a while ago, and his family made a huge fuss with my dad. I got dismissed because of it."

Something stirred in Bai Liu's memory. "That student's name?"

"Bao Kangle." Fang Dian thought for a second before turning back to Bai Liu. "I think he was your English teacher's student? I hit a ball between his legs, and he landed on his ass, scared half to death. His face went completely pale. His mom wanted to storm into our classroom and cause a scene, but since I was in the elite class, a regular English teacher like her couldn't even get in. So, they just pulled me from the pep rally speech, and that was that."

She shrugged, unconcerned. "The way Bao Kangle was screaming, I thought I actually broke something."

Bai Liu: "…"

Well, now he knew where Hou Tong got the habit of breaking bones so casually.

Bai Liu glanced at Fang Dian and hesitated. He wanted to ask, Do you know about Bao Kangle and me? But before he could, Fang Dian caught the change in his expression and frowned.

"What?" She looked puzzled. "Isn't it normal for me to hit people during a game? You and Lu Yizhan got hit too, didn't you?"

That was it.

Fang Dian always made it seem like she wasn't doing anything special—but somehow, she knew everything about you. And because you could never trace her intentions, it all just felt like coincidences or accidents.

You couldn't even owe her a favor. You couldn't even say thank you.

Fang Dian was simply too good at this.

Bai Liu inhaled deeply, his expression momentarily unreadable.

It wasn't unusual for Fang Dian to hit someone with a ball. She hadn't said anything outrageous. But it was true—he and Lu Yizhan had both been hit.

Lu Yizhan had always lingered around the volleyball courts, pretending to look for someone. When Bai Liu had asked him why, he'd practically panicked, waving his hands frantically and insisting that he was just passing by.

But if Lu Yizhan wouldn't go, Bai Liu would. He was far too curious about what had drawn the usually mild-mannered Lu Yizhan here.

And the answer had been obvious the moment Bai Liu stepped onto the court.

Fang Dian shone. She practically sparkled.

"Steady, don't panic!"

She wore sports shorts and a cropped top, her toned body gleaming with a thin layer of sweat. Her sharp features were lively, and her entire being radiated the exhilaration of someone utterly immersed in the game. Her ponytail bounced with every light-footed movement, her focused gaze locked onto the blue-and-yellow volleyball soaring over the net.

"I've got it!"

"Pick it up! Second pass!"

Fang Dian took two quick steps back and leapt, her flexible waist arching mid-air as her eyes tracked the ball's trajectory. She swung down as if wielding a heavy sword.

"I'LL DO IT—!"

BANG!

The ball struck just inside the white line. The whistle blew. Another point scored.

Fang Dian raised her hand with a dazzling smile. "Good shot! Keep up the good work, everyone!"

"Yes, Captain!"

Meanwhile, Lu Yizhan—who had been looking for Bai Liu—spotted him standing courtside, staring at Fang Dian. His heart nearly stopped.

He sprinted over, panic written all over his face. "Bai Liu! What are you doing!?"

At that exact moment, Fang Dian sent a serve flying over the net—right onto Lu Yizhan's head.

"OW!" Lu Yizhan yelped, clutching his head.

Fang Dian blinked, then stuck out her tongue.

A teammate called out from behind her. "Captain, you hit someone again!"

"It's fine, it's fine!" She jogged toward them, waving a hand dismissively. "I'll go apologize and see how bad it is."

As Fang Dian approached, Lu Yizhan rubbed his head, blinking dazedly at her. For a moment, they just stared at each other through the wire mesh fence.

The wind blew lightly through their hair and clothes, isolating them from the rest of the world.

Standing between them, separated by the wire mesh, Bai Liu: "…"

…Suddenly, I feel like I'm intruding.

Lu Yizhan turned bright red, fumbling for words. "H-hello, Fang… student?"

His grip tightened around the volleyball. "Is this… your ball?"

As he spoke, he wiped it awkwardly on his uniform and tried to step forward—only to trip over himself.

Still flustered, he glanced up at Fang Dian through the fence. "Um, how… how do I give it back to you with this in the way?"

Bai Liu is beside himself with expressionless thoughts. …You could just walk inside and hand it to her.

Lu Yizhan, aren't you usually a clear thinker? Why are you acting so out of it right now?

Fang Dian leaned against the wire mesh, her whole body still radiating the post-exercise heat. With her hands resting on the mesh, she squinted at Lu Yizhan's face. "Your name is Lu Yizhan, isn't it?"

Lu Yizhan quickly straightened up, holding the ball and shouting reflexively, "Yes, Captain!"

After a moment, he looked confused and asked, "Do you know me?"

Fang Dian couldn't suppress a snort of laughter. "You and I were in the same exam batch. You came second, I came first. My picture's been hanging on the honor roll wall for a semester, so it's not unusual that I know you, right?"

"Oh, right," Lu Yizhan scratched his head in embarrassment, his face turning redder. "I should have known about that picture..."

"It's not very flattering," Fang Dian added generously. "But you're much more handsome in person than in the photo."

Lu Yizhan blushed even harder, looking like he might combust. He forcibly pulled Bai Liu over and seriously introduced him to Fang Dian. "This is Bai Liu, my good friend."

"I know," Fang Dian smiled with an arched eyebrow. "I've seen you two eating together in the cafeteria."

Lu Yizhan gulped nervously, his words stumbling as he asked, "Do you think Bai Liu is a good person?"

Fang Dian turned her head, appearing seriously impressed by Lu Yizhan's earnest question. She stroked her chin thoughtfully through the wire mesh and then scrutinized Bai Liu.

Bai Liu, standing awkwardly by the mesh, thought, ...This feels like a single mother on a blind date, asking if her date can accept raising her child alone.

"I think..." Fang Dian paused, then looked at Lu Yizhan, her expression playful. "I believe in your choice. Yes, I think he's a good person too."

Lu Yizhan, visibly relieved, sat down with a dazed look, tears welling up in his eyes. He murmured, "Thank you for agreeing with my choice, Captain."

From behind, the team urged, "Captain, you're almost done! Stop flirting with cute guys and finish your training!"

Fang Dian waved an OK gesture without looking back. "Give me five more minutes, I'll be right there."

Lu Yizhan scrambled to his feet, wiped his eyes, took a deep breath, and tossed the ball over the mesh. He then tugged at Bai Liu's collar, attempting to leave. "Thanks, Captain Fang... We'll just go now."

"It's taking you a while," Fang Dian called out.

"Wait!" She caught the ball as Lu Yizhan tried to leave. Her voice dropped to a whisper, "Can you do me a favor before you go?"

Lu Yizhan, already walking quickly toward the exit, froze, then turned halfway, as if too afraid to face her. His voice tightened. "I have to go first. If it's not urgent, Fang... maybe find someone else to help."

"Is that so?" Fang Dian's tone remained calm. "I'll find someone else then. I was playing too hard earlier, and I accidentally unbuttoned one of my underwear buttons in the back. Can you block me, Lu Yizhan, so I can button it back up?"

"Now, Lu Yizhan, since you won't help, I'll just find someone else."

Lu Yizhan: "!!!"

"No way!!!" Lu Yizhan spun around, rushing to Fang Dian's side. When he saw her holding the ball with a mischievous smile, he lost all energy. His face turned bright red, and he muttered, "I... I'll block for you, you can button it."

Bai Liu, who was dragged along by Lu Yizhan, could only stare, numb. Why am I even involved in this right now?

He should be under the net, not in the middle of this situation.

Fang Dian worked quickly, finishing up before Lu Yizhan could run away again. She lowered her voice, whispering, "Lu Yizhan, can I ask you for one more favor?"

"Come closer. I'm too embarrassed to say it out loud."

Lu Yizhan, afraid to run this time, stayed put, thinking that, like earlier, it must be something girls weren't supposed to say aloud. He leaned in, putting his ear near the mesh. "What is it?"

With a smile on her face, Fang Dian leaned in and whispered in his ear, "I want to hit on you."

"Can I get your personal contact info, handsome?"

Lu Yizhan's face turned an even brighter shade of red. His mouth dropped open in shock. "Eh?!"

Bai Liu, standing to the side, turned his eyes away, unimpressed.

So dumb.

Qiao Mu Private High School

Fang Dian is a woman who claims she often hits people by accident, but it's amazing how her balls always seem to fly with such precision. They generally land on only two types of people: those she likes, and those she hates.

At one point, Bai Liu wondered if Fang Dian did it on purpose. But after being forced to watch the game several times, he had to admit—reluctantly—that she hadn't done it intentionally.

He couldn't quite figure it out.

Fang Dian, this perplexingly magical person, was always up to something Bai Liu just couldn't understand.

Take this moment, for instance.

"Are these the ice-cream sticks you've been secretly saving?" Fang Dian, who was about half a head taller than Bai Liu in high school, naturally pinned him down with a laugh, then pulled a bundle of sticks from the pocket of her skirt. "I found them under my bed. You're really good at hiding things."

Bai Liu took the ice-cream sticks from Fang Dian's hands, his expression unnervingly blank for a moment.

Back in high school, many ice-cream manufacturers ran a campaign called "one more," similar to the "one more bottle" promotions for drinks today. If the wooden stick from an ice-cream had "one more" written on it, you could exchange it for another ice-cream at the kiosk.

Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian were always lucky—most of the ice creams they bought had the "one more" stick, and they would leave that stick with Bai Liu.

Rather than eating them, Bai Liu would save the sticks and tie them into bundles, hiding them in a place he felt was safe—like the compartment under Fang Dian's bed.

Lu Yizhan sometimes hid things there too, like money for Fang Dian's birthday present, and Bai Liu would follow his lead.

Now, both suspects—Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan—had been caught red-handed by Detective Fang Dian herself.

"Lu Yizhan actually hid a hundred dollars under my bed," Fang Dian mused. "Was he saving up for a present for me?"

"..." Bai Liu remained stoic. "You don't need to ask me if you've figured it out."

"I'm more curious about why you're suddenly rummaging under your bed," Bai Liu added. "It's heavy and dirty, don't you ever clean it?"

Fang Dian laughed, scratching the back of her head. "I had a feeling you guys would be hiding something there, so I lifted the bedpan and flipped it over. But I didn't expect to find this. Haha."

Bai Liu's eyes narrowed, and he thought: Lu Yizhan, do you really want to spend your life with this horrible woman?

"But I didn't expect you to save these sticks, I thought you'd already eaten them." Fang Dian brought the bundle of sticks up to Bai Liu with a mischievous glint. "Why did you save them?"

Bai Liu's gaze shifted. "I'm saving them to sell for money."

"Lies," Fang Dian dismissed instantly. After thinking for a moment, she shook her head. "How much could this sell for? If you were really going to make money, you'd do something bigger."

Then, an idea seemed to hit her, and she stared at the neatly tied bundle of ice-cream sticks in her hand with sudden realization. "These ice-cream sticks can be redeemed cumulatively! You want to save up for them and treat Lu Yizhan and me to two expensive popsicles, do you?"

Bai Liu, who had been caught dead to rights, didn't answer.

There was no point in arguing in front of Fang Dian, so Bai Liu calmly admitted, "You can't redeem those expensive popsicles. You can redeem only the popsicle that costs $2.50 each at most."

"Holy crap, that's awesome!" Fang Dian rubbed her hands together eagerly. "Two and a half dollars? That's a lovely treat!"

"I haven't had a 'lovely multi' in a while!" she added.

Bai Liu paused. "But you bought it for me."

"Really?" Fang Dian looked up, confused. "Is that how it is? I don't remember."

Bai Liu sighed.

Again.

Fang Dian was so skilled at this trickery that it was impossible to tell whether she meant it or not. You could never gauge what she gave you in return as part of some trade.

The $2.50 treat was something Fang Dian had bought for him the last time she received a scholarship.

Bai Liu had been punished by Xu Wei that day for sweeping the toilets. While he was stuck in the toilets, his classmates Bao Kangle and the other boys cornered him.

He calmly picked up his desk, which had been kicked around more times than he could count, wiped it clean of the "orphan" and "bitch" graffiti, and arranged his soaked textbooks to dry on the windowsill. Then, he walked slowly through the dark school building, his mind preoccupied with thoughts of what Xu Wei might say when she found him the next day.

"Why did you break another set of desks?" Xu Wei would scold. "Do you know how many desks and benches you've broken? Do you know how many desks and benches you've broken? You've been scribbling on your own desk, don't you know that's forbidden by school rules?"

At that moment, Bai Liu couldn't tell her that no one should ever have to scrawl the word "orphan" over and over again, nor should anyone smash desks repeatedly as though in a group fight.

That sort of thing was generally done by hyperactive, low-value teens.

If Bai Liu had said this to Xu Wei, the matter would not have been resolved so easily.

She would have raised her voice, asking: "You mean you're being bullied?"

Her eyebrows would be laced with sarcasm and a sneer. "What kind of families and backgrounds do the students in our class have? I'm sure you know perfectly well. You don't have any real connection to them. If you didn't do something to provoke them, would they really bully you for no reason?"

"Why don't they bully you instead of someone else? Have you looked at yourself?"

"Is it because you have too many reasons inside yourself to find them?"

Then, a half hour of arguing, name-calling, and finger-pointing would follow, until Bai Liu eventually bowed his head and admitted fault. Xu Wei would then take a long, satisfied breath and dismiss him, saying, "Go to class. Next time, look for your own reasons first."

So, Bai Liu simply admitted it: "I broke it. I'm a bad student. The orphanage will cover the cost of the damage. I don't have to pay for it."

That left Xu Wei with nothing to say but, "Watch out next time. Get out of here."

That evening, as Bai Liu reflected on everything, he unbuttoned his school uniform to let the wind dry his clothes. When he reached the bottom of the school building, he spotted Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan waiting for him.

Bai Liu paused mid-step.

They were holding up a cute multi-flavored cone, with a pair of cheap-looking birthday candles shaped like the number 18.

The candlelight illuminated their faces, which, though tired, still shone with smiles. The soft glow of the candle was warm and bright against the darkness of the building behind Bai Liu.

Fang Dian's face peeked out from behind the cone, her smile lighting up the hallway as if the entire space had been momentarily illuminated.

"Bai Liu, we've escaped down the mountain to find you!" she declared.

Lu Yizhan quickly removed his school jacket and draped it over Bai Liu's thin shoulders, his frustration and worry hidden beneath a mask of concern. "I've told you so many times—when you get into trouble like this, you should come to me. I've spoken to the security guard on the hill. He'll let you out if you come..."

"Not necessarily," Fang Dian interrupted, nudging Lu Yizhan aside and stepping forward. She met Bai Liu's eyes, her expression serious. "I know it's hard to get up the mountain, but if you need us, Lu Yizhan and I can skip class and come down to help you with these problems."

"Do you need us?" she asked.

Bai Liu met her gaze and was quiet for a long moment. "I don't need you to," he replied softly.

Lu Yizhan, exasperated, cut in quickly, "This is exactly what I'm talking about! Why do you always try to act tough like this?"

Fang Dian, as if not hearing Lu Yizhan at all, nodded at Bai Liu. "Then wait until you do need us," she said gently.

Lu Yizhan turned sharply toward Fang Dian. "Wait until he needs us? If this keeps up, Bai Liu's going to end up completely—"

"Change what?" Fang Dian interrupted, looking at Lu Yizhan with a clear, open gaze. "I really don't think this will change anything about Bai Liu. It's not much of a situation—it's just a bunch of idiots messing around."

"I don't think something this small is going to change Bai Liu. Besides, Bai Liu will talk to us if he needs to. It's not like he's handling this alone."

"We'll always be on his side, Lu Yizhan."

Lu Yizhan fell silent, his anger subsiding. Slowly, he dropped his hand from Bai Liu's shoulder and looked down. "I see. I was thinking too much."

"You've known Bai Liu for so long, and you worry about him," Fang Dian continued, crossing her arms with a mock sigh, though a smile lingered in her eyes. She reached out and playfully nudged Lu Yizhan's head. "But you can't treat him like a kid forever. He'll grow up too."

"He'll go from being a good little kid to being a great adult."

"Isn't that an interesting change?"

Fang Dian lifted her arm and pushed the ice cream cone in front of Bai Liu.

The candle atop the ice cream was more than halfway melted, its flickering light casting a shaky glow on Bai Liu's emotionless face. His damp hair hung loosely, droplets of water dripping down as his dark eyes reflected Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan standing before him.

"Happy 18th birthday, and happy bar mitzvah, Bai Liu," Fang Dian said cheerfully. "Blow out your candle, make a wish, and then have a bite of your birthday ice cream!"

Bai Liu closed his eyes, then slowly blew out the candle and tore it away before taking a bite of the ice cream, which was already starting to melt.

Fang Dian leaned in next to him, her eyes wide with curiosity. "What does it taste like?"

"Strawberries," Bai Liu replied, pausing. "Didn't you buy it? Didn't you see the wrapper?"

Fang Dian pressed further, "Just one question: What did you wish for? Was it for me and Mr. Lu or not?"

Bai Liu was quiet for a long while. He opened his mouth as if to say something but then simply took another bite of the melting ice cream. "Nothing was promised," he said softly.

"If wishing on some so-called god could make things work, there'd be no need for you or me to take the entrance exams," he added.

Fang Dian sighed, resting her cheek against her hand. "You're so realistic, Bai Liu. Wishing is just an excuse. I don't believe you didn't make a wish."

Bai Liu remained silent, another droplet falling from the end of his hair. He lowered his eyes to the ice cream, now nearly deformed in his hand, and whispered quietly.

"I made a wish... that next year, you'll buy me ice cream that isn't strawberry."

"It's so hard to eat," he added, a slight smile playing on his lips.

Qiao Mu Private High School

It had been more than six months since Bai Liu first tasted the overpriced $2.50 ice cream of his life on his eighteenth birthday.

Since then, Bai Liu had started saving the popsicle sticks Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan bought for him after each treat.

But the sticks weren't safe to leave lying around at school or the orphanage, so Bai Liu hid them in the only place he felt secure—Fang Dian's home.

Now, thinking back, he seemed to remember saving up to...

Bai Liu's gaze shifted to Fang Dian's hands. She followed his line of sight, unfolding one of the popsicle sticks. Her eyes narrowed with a sudden realization. "There are five of them."

"That's not right." Fang Dian rubbed her chin, brow furrowing as she narrowed her eyes at Bai Liu. "If I remember correctly, given how often we've bought you popsicles, you should have seven."

"I don't think you'd be the type to eat two of them yourself halfway through saving them."

She twirled the stick in her hand, then raised an eyebrow. "So, where are the other two?"

Bai Liu: ...

The same woman who had once claimed she couldn't remember buying him a popsicle now had an oddly precise memory of the exact number of sticks.

Bai Liu decided to go with the flow, learning from past experiences. "I don't remember either."

"I don't believe you." Fang Dian wasn't about to let it go. Grinning mischievously, she elbowed Bai Liu's shoulder playfully. "Two missing in one go? Why does this feel like..."

"Who did you treat to a popsicle?"

Without turning his head, Bai Liu slung an arm around Fang Dian's shoulders as they walked toward the playground. "Why would someone as stingy as me treat anyone?"

"You're not stingy; you're just vindictive and pragmatic," Fang Dian replied with a shrug. "Why would you buy a popsicle for someone who hasn't done the same for you?"

Bai Liu: ...

Fang Dian didn't stop there. Leaning in, her enthusiasm grew. "So now I'm really curious. I haven't heard of anyone other than Hou Tong sharing snacks with you recently, and you haven't taken anything from her. That can only mean one thing!"

Bai Liu glanced sideways at her. "What does that mean?"

"You offered to buy someone a popsicle!" Fang Dian's eyes lit up as she grabbed Bai Liu by the neck, shaking him gleefully. "Who is it? Hou Tong from your class? Wei Shuang from our class? Or Du Yishan, the second-string volleyball player? Who got your 'first kill' out of everyone chasing you?"

"You little iron tree finally blossomed secretly behind my back after being chased by so many people, didn't you?"

Bai Liu, shaken out of his usual composure, replied with a cool, slightly uneven tone. "I'm curious about two things."

Fang Dian stopped shaking him and tilted her head. "What two things?"

"First, how do you connect me buying someone a popsicle with being in a relationship?" Bai Liu's voice remained calm, though his eyes carried a tinge of disbelief.

"And second, why are so many girls from your circle chasing after me?"

"Why would someone like you spend money on someone else if you didn't have feelings for them?" Fang Dian replied bluntly. "I haven't seen you spend money on anyone except me and Lu Yizhan."

"Besides, you didn't even give me two!" She waved the stick in her hand playfully. "Lu Yizhan and I haven't had one yet, but you've invited someone else. Ungrateful, much?"

Bai Liu's expression twitched subtly.

“As for the second question...” Fang Dian scratched her head, looking a bit embarrassed for once. She glanced away before sticking her tongue out. “Isn’t it nice to have so many rich and beautiful women chasing you?”

Bai Liu dismissed the idea without hesitation. “No.”

Most of the girls who pursued him were from Fang Dian’s neighborhood or the volleyball team she played for. They were, as she claimed, rich and beautiful, excelling either in sports, academics, or both. Someone like Hou Tong fit that description perfectly.

Even by Bai Liu’s utilitarian standards, they were objectively “valuable” individuals.

But there was one point Bai Liu couldn’t ignore—Fang Dian’s volleyball teammates were all athletic types.

Which meant...they were exceptionally tall.

Hou Tong: 179.
Wei Shuang: 178.
Du Yishan: 182.

Bai Liu, in high school, stood at a modest 172.5.

Add a little heel height to the girls, and Bai Liu found himself at an uncomfortably perfect height difference for romantic clichés like kissing.

Fang Dian wrinkled her nose and retorted, "What’s so bad about that? If I had so many beautiful people chasing after me, I’m sure I..."

Bai Liu interrupted flatly, "Then Lu Yizhan would cry and hang himself at your doorstep."

Fang Dian paused mid-sentence, "..."

Fair point.

"Eh, I just talk about you casually with them," Fang Dian said, scratching her head in rare embarrassment. "You know me. I like to make sure everyone knows what I’m up to, and you’re interesting, so I might’ve mentioned you a few times while playing."

Bai Liu’s smile didn’t quite reach his eyes. "Like discussing who gets my 'first kill' during games? Auctioning me off to potential suitors and hosting bidding parties?"

Fang Dian’s eyes widened in horror as she took two steps back. "How did you know?!"

Bai Liu's brow twitched.

He had only found out after graduating, during a drunken confession at a party at Fang Dian’s house. She had openly admitted to holding mock bidding sessions during volleyball practice, where her teammates speculated on his "first love" and who would get to date him. The highest bid had reportedly reached a million dollars for a year of his time.

At the tender age of eighteen, Bai Liu had unknowingly been auctioned off to the highest bidder.

"A lot of people want to date you," Fang Dian had said, laughing as she slurred her words. "Hou Tong said she’d pay a million dollars a year just to spend time with you!"

"If Mr. Lu weren’t around, I’d consider it," Bai Liu had replied sarcastically.

Now, Bai Liu shook his head at Fang Dian’s antics. "You’ve likely added fuel to their fantasies."

"What?! No!" Fang Dian exclaimed, running to catch up with him. She turned to walk backward in front of Bai Liu, grinning as always. "I think it’s just your beauty and charm doing all the heavy lifting."

"After all, you’re actually quite inviting."

"If I were as rich as Hou Tong, I’d pay a million a year to be your friend too," Fang Dian added with a mischievous wink.

Bai Liu gave her a cold, unimpressed look.

Without breaking stride, he extended a hand toward her. “Then we’ve known each other for two years. At a million per year, you owe me two million."

Fang Dian blinked, then placed the five popsicle sticks into Bai Liu’s hand with a mockingly serious expression. "Here’s $2.50 worth of collateral. I’ll put the remaining $1,999,997.50 on credit and pay it later."

With that, she waved and darted off, her ponytail swaying as she called over her shoulder, "Mr. Lu is about to speak on stage! I'll bring him to you later!"

Bai Liu watched her leave, then glanced at the five popsicle sticks in his palm. Slowly, his hand curled into a fist around them.

"Bai Liu!"

A tall high school student with monkey-themed headphones called out as he navigated through the bustling crowd, holding up a bench for support. "Finally found you!"

Mu Sicheng approached, brushing dust off his school uniform before casually slinging an arm over Bai Liu's shoulder. "Wow, Bai Liu. You're still so young… and so small."

Bai Liu looked up, his gaze unamused.

Mu Sicheng immediately stopped teasing. Clearing his throat, he leaned closer and began to report. "I'm identified as a student in Senior Class 4 in the lab building."

Bai Liu's gaze shifted to Mu Sicheng's system panel.

[Based on the analysis of player Mu Sicheng's high school results, player Mu Sicheng in this copy is identified as an honors student and assigned to the experimental class.]

[Classification Class: Senior 4]

Mu Sicheng clicked his tongue. "The system pulled my high school scores—over six hundred points. Looks like it's simulating our academic performances pretty accurately. What do you think about Liu Jiayi?"

"She's never been to high school. She'll get stuck in a bad class, right?"

"You're the bad student," a voice cut in, icy and sharp.

Mu Sicheng turned, startled, to see an eighteen-year-old girl with short hair standing nearby, arms crossed. Liu Jiayi regarded him with mild disdain.

"This system doesn't just simulate the high schools we attended. It predicts where we would end up based on our trajectories," she explained coolly.

Liu Jiayi stepped up next to Bai Liu and turned her system panel toward him.

[Player Liu Jiayi has no high school results. Simulating her likely outcomes based on available data... Simulation complete.]

[Player Liu Jiayi is classified as an exceptional student and assigned to the Premium Class. (Note: The Premium Class is located at the top of the hill.)]

[Classification Class: Senior Class]

Mu Sicheng gaped. “Why is she an exceptional student? She’s eight years old! Shouldn’t she be in a remedial class?”

Ignoring him, Liu Jiayi continued, “I used my privileges as a top student to gather some information about our group.”

“Tang Erda is in the PE class for art and physical education students, Senior Class 12, in the laboratory building. Muke is in my class, one of the top 100 scorers."

Liu Jiayi paused, glancing at Bai Liu. "So far, our team’s distribution seems decent. We have representatives across different classes. Two exceptional students and no bad students yet."

Bai Liu, the team’s only underachiever: “…”

Bai Liu's expression remained calm as he steered the conversation. "We can argue about who's the best or the worst student later. But let's focus on the real issue first. The main quest requires us to rank first in the exams, but there's a glaring loophole in the mission parameters: no time limit is specified."

Mu Sicheng blinked, tilting his head in confusion. "No time limit? What's that supposed to mean?"

Suddenly, Muke's even voice interrupted. "Exactly what he said." He adjusted his gold-rimmed glasses and continued seriously, "The quest doesn't specify when we need to achieve this first-place ranking."

Mu Sicheng flinched, nearly tripping over his own feet. "Damn it, when did you sneak in?!"

"I came with Jiayi," Muke replied smoothly, his tone lightening. "We're both 'special needs' students."

Mu Sicheng froze, defensive. "Hey, special needs students are awesome, okay?!"

Shaking off the awkwardness, Mu Sicheng opened his system panel and pointed to the countdown. "It says fifty days until the entrance exam, so doesn't that mean we have fifty days to complete the quest?"

Muke shook his head politely. "That's just the countdown to the exam date. The system doesn't explicitly state that it's the deadline for the quest."

"Then how else could it work?" Mu Sicheng frowned, his voice rising in irritation. "It can't be less than fifty days—what, seven days or something ridiculous?!"

[System Alert: Congratulations, player Mu Sicheng, for unlocking hidden information about the main quest: [Quest Duration].]

[The main quest has been updated: Achieve first place in the university entrance examination within seven days.]

Mu Sicheng stared blankly at the system panel before slapping it in frustration. "SEVEN DAYS?! I haven't even finished the third mock exam—how the hell am I supposed to top the whole school in seven days?!"

Liu Jiayi shot him a flat look. "Oh, because you were totally going to be first in fifty days, right?"

Ignoring Mu Sicheng's indignant sputtering, Liu Jiayi turned to Bai Liu with a grim expression. "This isn't our only problem. The real nightmare is the entrance exam itself."

Her voice dropped. "The system marked me as a 'special merit' student, but I don't have any high school-level knowledge. I can't even begin to function in the Gao Kao session."

Bai Liu's sharp gaze shifted to Mu Sicheng. "What about you? If you took the exam now, could you even crack 600 points?"

Mu Sicheng flinched, scratching his neck awkwardly. "Uh… maybe three, four hundred? Tops? I've sort of forgotten everything."

Bai Liu turned to Muke.

Muke adjusted his glasses again, his expression apologetic. "I studied abroad for high school. I didn't take the exams here, so my score wouldn't be very high either."

"Great," Liu Jiayi muttered, rubbing her temples. "Bai Liu, what about you? You said you scored over a hundred points lower than Mu Sicheng last time. You have a better memory—maybe you haven't forgotten everything?"

Bai Liu's response was calm and immediate. "Still over a hundred points lower than Mu Sicheng."

Silence fell over the group as Bai Liu glanced around, his expression unreadable. "Let's not despair just yet. The game has a solution. There's still a way forward."

Mu Sicheng leaned in eagerly. "Wait, really? You have a plan?"

Bai Liu tapped his chin thoughtfully before asking a question that made everyone groan. "Do you think Captain Tang could be the top scorer in his province?"

Their collective hope plummeted.

"High achiever?" Tang Erda asked, baffled, as the group cornered him to explain the situation. After a moment, he answered seriously, "I didn’t even take the entrance exam."

Mu Sicheng exploded. "HOW DID YOU NOT TAKE THE ENTRANCE EXAM?!"

Tang Erda rubbed the back of his neck awkwardly. "I trained with the Heretic Authority. We had promotion exams, not regular ones."

"And maybe," Mu Sicheng tried one last desperate attempt, "you’re just naturally brilliant at high school subjects?"

Tang Erda shifted uncomfortably, coughing into his fist. "Uh… I scored 507 on this copy’s mock test. That’s not great, right?"

Bai Liu grasped Tang Erda’s hands dramatically. "Captain Tang, you are now the hope of our entire team."

Tang Erda: "…"

It wasn’t until Muke quietly compiled their scores and explained Bai Liu’s reasoning that Tang Erda finally grasped the gravity of the situation. He glanced around at the group, his expression one of bemused disbelief. "I never thought I’d be considered the ‘top achiever’ of any team."

His humor quickly faded as his gaze dropped to the system panel, where the looming [seven days] deadline cast an ominous shadow. "But honestly, the time limit is the real issue here. It’s April 25th in this scenario, meaning we’re still 43 days out from the actual exams. How are we supposed to take an exam that hasn’t even happened yet?"

His voice dropped lower. "It’s impossible."

Bai Liu’s expression remained calm and calculating. "There’s no such thing as an unsolvable game," he said evenly. "The key to completing this mission is hidden somewhere in the copy. We just need to find it."

Tang Erda hesitated but nodded, his jaw tightening in determination.

The pep rally felt suffocating.

The headmaster, a sharp-faced man in his forties, strode onto the stage in a pristine suit. His presence immediately commanded attention, though not in the way a respected leader might. Instead, he radiated an air of arrogance and disdain, his eyes sweeping over the gathered students like a predator sizing up its prey.

"Good afternoon, Qiao Mu High School," he began, his voice clipped and patronizing.

He raised the microphone, amplifying his voice further. "Originally, this pep rally was scheduled for thirty days before the exams. But as I'm sure you all know, certain events forced us to adapt."

His tone turned sharp, venom lacing his words. "Someone decided to contact the education department about... rumors concerning this school. And thanks to their interference, we lost an entire week of valuable study time."

The students remained silent, their heads bowed like prisoners awaiting judgment.

"You're probably wondering why I've brought you here early." The headmaster tapped the microphone twice, producing an ear-piercing screech. His lips curled into a sneer. "It's simple. I want to warn the misguided seniors among you to stop your nonsense and focus on your studies!"

The tension in the air was palpable as his gaze slithered across the crowd, like a snake sizing up its next victim.

"I've told the teachers repeatedly to avoid discussing those... unfortunate incidents," he continued, his voice icy, eyes narrowing. "But some of you thought it would be amusing to stir up trouble, didn't you? Reporting the school and causing chaos?"

A boy in the crowd trembled, his classmates whispering and pointing at him.

The headmaster's smirk widened. "Well? Do you have anything to say for yourself? Stand up and own your actions!"

The boy burst into tears, shaking his head frantically. "It wasn't me! I didn't report anything!"

His protests were ignored as the headmaster gestured for him to be escorted away.

"Take this as a lesson," the headmaster said coldly, addressing the remaining students. "You wasted a week of precious time. Every senior who fails to meet their potential this year will have you to blame. You will be the reason for their failure."

The crowd fell into a suffocating silence, each student shrinking under the weight of his words.

Satisfied, the headmaster nodded. "Good. Now, let's hear from one of our top performers. Please welcome Lu Yizhan, who scored 687 on the most recent exams. He'll share his insights and lead the pledge."

Polite applause followed as Lu Yizhan ascended the stage. His steps were steady, his posture confident. Unlike the headmaster's predatory demeanor, Lu Yizhan exuded calm authority.

Lu Yizhan took the microphone with a curt nod, pointedly ignoring the headmaster.

He began his speech with practiced ease. His voice was clear and firm, yet carried a weight that silenced even the faintest whisper in the crowd.

"I have two statements to make regarding the report and the tragic deaths of seventeen students," he began, his expression unreadable.

The audience tensed, the headmaster's smirk faltering ever so slightly.

"First," Lu Yizhan continued, his tone unwavering, "the person who submitted that report to the education department was me."

A collective gasp rippled through the crowd.

"Second," he said, his voice sharp as steel, "those seventeen students were not losers. They were victims."

Qiao Mu Private High School

Chapter Notes

> For those who don't know :
> Essentially, GCSEs are exams designed to assess the knowledge, skills, and understanding students have gained across a variety of subjects during secondary school. For international students, GCSEs serve as an equivalent to high school diplomas or certificates in other education systems.

The whole school was in an uproar.

"That's not...?" Mu Sicheng glanced at the young, somewhat familiar face in the stands, frowning as he nodded. "Who is that again? Have I seen him before?"

Tang Erda also frowned.

"Lu Yizhan? Isn't that Bai Liu's best friend? Why is he here as an NPC in the game?" he thought, trying to make sense of the situation.

-- Is it the same situation as with the Rose Factory?

Muke and Liu Jiayi paused when they saw the face and both turned toward Bai Liu, wordlessly waiting for his reaction.

Bai Liu remained calm, offering no explanation.

The headmaster, furious, attempted to climb up and pull Lu Yizhan down from the stage. "What are you talking about, Lu Yizhan?! Get down from there!"

But Lu Yizhan skillfully dodged the approaching headmaster, running around the stands with the microphone in his hand, reading his commentary at breakneck speed.

"These seventeen students were all students who improved to the top 100 in one of their senior exams, went up and then came back down the hill..." Lu Yizhan's voice echoed through the stands.

Mu Sicheng furrowed his brow. "What does it mean to 'go up the mountain and then come back down'?"

As Lu Yizhan continued reading from his script, Bai Liu's calm explanation from below gradually aligned with his words.

“The students in that area of the hill at Qiao Mu High School are ranked based on their exam results. The top 100 students in each exam get to go up.”

Bai Liu continued, his tone even and measured, "The fact that they went up and then came back down means these seventeen students were not originally in the top 100, but they managed to climb into it through chance in one of the exams—weekly or monthly. However, in a subsequent exam, they fell out of the top 100 and came back down.”

Liu Jiayi, sharp as ever, caught on immediately. She turned to Bai Liu. “You know this school so well, Bai Liu. This wouldn’t be your high school, would it?”

The other four men turned their heads in surprise, eyes fixed on Bai Liu. His face was expressionless as he observed Lu Yizhan, who was still evading the headmaster's frantic attempts to catch him in the stands.

Meanwhile, the headmaster, like a thunderstorm, was chasing Lu Yizhan through the stands. Lu Yizhan continued to dodge with ease, his voice growing louder and clearer as he read from the script.

“Although the police have confirmed the seventeen students did commit suicide, there’s no reason for a series of deaths to occur in such a specific place,” Lu Yizhan’s voice rang out.

“Everyone has the instinct to survive. When seventeen people from the same environment cross the line of instinct and choose death, there must be a compelling reason behind it—a reason that forces them to escape from an environment that makes survival impossible, even at the cost of death.”

Offstage, Liu Jiayi stepped closer to Bai Liu, meeting his gaze directly. "Did this copy land in your high school? What happened back then?"

Bai Liu was silent for a moment before he lifted his eyes. "There weren’t seventeen deaths."

"No one died in my high school, and this copy failed to land."

"Failed to land?!" Tang Erda stared at Bai Liu in shock. "How can a copy fail to land without strong external intervention?"

He recalled the failed landings at the Rose Factory and Ice Age, where the Heresy Bureau had mobilized almost all its resources, resulting in deaths and injuries.

Tang Erda had checked the files on Qiao Mu High School, and it wasn't listed. This meant the Heresy Bureau hadn't intervened, and yet the copy had failed to land on its own without any casualties.

How is that possible?!

Bai Liu lowered his gaze. "A man prevented this copy from landing."

"A man stopped the landing of a copy?!" Tang Erda repeated, almost disbelieving. "And there were no casualties?"

"Mm," Bai Liu replied, lifting his eyes and turning toward the stands. "He wouldn't let innocent people die under his watch."

"He's a rotten person."

Meanwhile, in the stands, Lu Yizhan and the exhausted headmaster were at opposite ends. A crowd gathered around the headmaster's side, trying to catch Lu Yizhan, but he was so agile that even after twenty minutes of running, no one had managed to lay a finger on him.

The students, already riled up, had begun laughing and running around in the same carefree manner as Lu Yizhan.

On stage, Lu Yizhan, with a composed smile, held up the microphone as he calmly negotiated with the group of teachers. "When a school allows seventeen students to choose to end their lives, there must be something deeply wrong with that school."

"These are students who went up the mountain, only to come back down before committing suicide… Have you ever considered, headmasters and teachers, that the problem might not lie with these seventeen students, but with the mountain itself?"

"The mountain?" Muke caught on quickly, sensing the underlying message in Lu Yizhan's words. "Is there some kind of clue hidden on that mountain?"

"You could say that," Bai Liu replied indifferently.

"What's on the mountain?" Liu Jiayi asked, her gaze fixed on Bai Liu.

“Have you figured out how to clear this copy?”

“I have a rough idea of how to clear this copy in seven days,” Bai Liu responded flatly. “Back in my high school, there was a very strange campus legend.”

“A campus legend?” Mu Sicheng asked, intrigued.

Meanwhile, the headmaster in the stands gasped in disbelief, his voice cold and biting. “What could these seventeen students possibly have to do with something on the hill, when they committed suicide on their own?”

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan turned their heads in unison, both gazing toward the dark mountain looming behind the campus. Their eyes focused on the peak as their voices gradually merged.

“Gaucho Lake on the Hill.”

The headmaster’s expression shifted, as if something had been exposed. He scolded them sharply. “What nonsense! That lake is just an artificial lake for the entrance exam, a ridiculous rumor spread by students! Lu Yizhan, stop spreading these lies!”

Mu Sicheng, still curious, pressed on. “Gaucho Lake? What is that?”

“A man-made lake at Qiao Mu Private High School, situated up on the hill,” Bai Liu explained calmly. “I’ve never been there myself, but those who have say it’s a very beautiful lake, right in the middle of the hill. It’s especially stunning when the moon reflects off it.”

“The reason it's called the ‘lake for the entrance exam’ is because it’s said that every senior who takes the exam must walk around the edge of the lake alone, three times on a moonless night. You must do it on both the front and back sides of the lake, without getting a drop of water on your feet. When you look into the middle of the lake, you’ll see the yellow moon disappear, transforming into a set of yellow tables and chairs.”

“And in the center of that table is a set of papers,” Bai Liu added, his tone steady. “Those are the GCSE exam papers for that year.”

“The so-called Gaucho Lake can predict the exam papers for that year.”

“At that point, you must jump into the lake, dive to the bottom, and complete the GCSE papers. The marks you get will be your actual marks for that year. If you don't jump in, the tables and chairs will turn back into the moon and vanish under the water."

Mu Sicheng was taken aback. "Isn't that cheating?"

"You could say that," Bai Liu responded nonchalantly. "But supposedly, that's why Qiao Mu Private High School had such a high promotion rate. It's also why so many wealthy and powerful families sent their children here, up the mountain."

"It's all because of the legend of Gaucho Lake."

"In terms of this legend," Muke frowned. "Isn't it troubling that the results of the Gaucho Lake exams are the entrance exam results? Why would so many students go down there?"

Bai Liu replied in a flat tone, "Because they only believe part of the legend."

Mu Sicheng asked rhetorically, "What do you mean by believing only part of the legend?"

"They thought they might actually see the GCSE papers," Bai Liu explained, "but they didn't believe that the marks from the papers done at the bottom of the lake were the real GCSE marks."

Mu Sicheng puzzled, "Why?"

Bai Liu glanced at him before speaking indifferently, "If you took the GCSE paper once underwater and then did the same paper again in the real exam room, knowing the questions and having time to revise and find the originals, would you feel your performance in the first exam would match the second?"

"Of course not," Mu Sicheng responded without hesitation. "If I did the same paper again, I'd get a higher mark because I'd already know the questions."

"Exactly," Bai Liu said, looking away. "That's how the students around me felt, so they all tried, but no one ever really saw much. In the end, the Gaucho Lake legend remained just a legend."

He paused, then added, "But it's also said that some people have actually seen the GCSE papers in the lake."

"There was a girl who fell into the lake in my second semester of senior year," Bai Liu continued. "She said she saw the GCSE papers, but she drowned before she could do them."

"After that, the GCSE lake was filled in."

All four men were shocked. "Filled in? Why?!"

Bai Liu explained calmly, "A student reported that Qiao Mu Private High School was leaking entrance exam questions and provided evidence."

He paused, then added, "The evidence was a complete set of GCSE papers from that year—six sets, all the questions, said to be the ‘A’ papers."

"A whole set of GCSE papers?!" Mu Sicheng was stunned.

Bai Liu’s gaze shifted to Lu Yizhan in the stands. "The GCSE questions weren’t finished, but the ones given by this student overlapped with most of the questions that would be included in the real exam. As a result, someone came to inspect Qiao Mu Private High School. Afterward, they filled in the Gaucho Lake, fixed up the school, and even changed the GCSE questions for that year. After that, no more students had trouble on the hill."

"The girl who fell in the lake?" Liu Jiayi asked, suddenly aware of the keyword. She tilted her head and looked at Bai Liu. "The system’s background says a girl fell into the lake and died, which led to a series of events. But in your reality, this girl didn’t die, right?"

Bai Liu paused and shook his head. "No."

"She was rescued from the bottom of the lake by a student, carried down the hill overnight, and taken to the hospital, where she was resuscitated. She later sat for the entrance exams and did well."

Bai Liu then looked up at the student in the stands who was excitedly delivering his speech, trying to avoid the headmaster, security guards, and teachers chasing after him.

--The student who rescued the girl from the bottom of Gaucho Lake was Lu Yizhan, who was on the mountain at the time.

From the bleachers, Lu Yizhan delivered an impassioned speech while dodging the headmaster’s pursuit. "I joined forces with four other students who, like me, had concerns about the school system, to speak out about the problems at Qiao Mu Private High School."

"I hope the headmaster deals with this issue fairly and does not vilify students who were not involved."

The headmaster, out of breath and furious, demanded, "Which students were involved?"

"Senior 2, Special Achievement student Bai Jiamu, myself and Liao Ke," Lu Yizhan listed, "Experimental Class 3, Class 11 students Zhou Gong and Bai Yi."

Lu Yizhan flashed a bright, warm smile. "Five students in total."

The headmaster's furious expression slowly softened as he stopped his chase and stood still, gazing thoughtfully at Lu Yizhan. The teacher next to him whispered in his ear, "Three special merit students and two special merit reserves, all of whom could go to prestigious schools. Lu Yizhan is still a top reserve."

"Principal, perhaps we should handle this lightly and let it go?" the teacher suggested quietly.

Both the headmaster and Bai Liu narrowed their eyes at the same time.

"The killer combination of three exceptional students and two front-row students in the lab class," Bai Liu said calmly, analyzing the situation. "We don't have any advantage. Plus, Lu Yizhan is an excellent student with a great memory. If he takes the college entrance exams now, he'd probably score over six hundred and seventy easily."

Mu Sicheng, still a bit disoriented, asked, "What killer combination? Isn't Lu Yizhan your friend and an NPC at this school?"

Tang Erda, reacting slowly, turned sharply to look at Bai Liu, stunned into silence.

Bai Liu had just implied that the student speaking earlier wasn't the Lu Yizhan they thought was an NPC but a player who had logged into the game—one of their biggest opponents. And the player who had logged in as [Lu Yizhan], Bai Liu's only friend, was now a formidable adversary in this game:

—First Tactician, Judge Against God.

Muke and Liu Jiayi quickly grasped Bai Liu's implication. Liu Jiayi nodded and asked seriously, "Can I ask how many points Lu Yizhan scored on the college entrance exam?"

"718 points," Bai Liu replied coldly. "First place was Fang Dian, with 732 points."

Before Mu Sicheng could fully process who Lu Yizhan was, he was dumbfounded by the score. "What did you say?!"

"No way we can catch up to those scores, no matter how hard we try." Muke took a deep breath. "We'll lose to them unless we find another way to beat them."

"We can't win through the normal route." Bai Liu's expression turned cold. "Now we have to take the unorthodox path."

"What unorthodox path?" Tang Erda asked, his expression hardening.

Bai Liu glanced at Lu Yizhan on stage, his tone flat. "There are two ways to win in a game like this. The first is to progress step-by-step through the main quest, the typical way of playing a competitive game."

"The second is..." Bai Liu's voice hardened, "...to kill your opponent outright."

Tang Erda snapped his head up. "You're going to kill them?!"

The headmaster on stage finally spoke grimly, "I can let the five of you go this time."

"But from now on, anything that happens on this mountain, you better pretend you didn't see it. Don't say a word about it."

Lu Yizhan laughed. "That's no good, Principal."

"I have eyes to see and a mouth to speak. So let me pretend I didn't see or hear anything—pretend these seventeen dead children don't exist, pretend that you didn't force those kids into the lake to do the exams, or leak the GCSE questions to the offspring of the powerful..."

Lu Yizhan's smile faded, and his expression turned lighter. He drew a massive sword from behind him, one so large it spanned his entire height. Lifting his chin slightly, he looked at the headmaster with an impassive gaze, then curled his lips into a smile.

"An ordinary person like me, who would run away from the scene, also occasionally has some bloodlust and wants to stand up for himself."

With that, he swung the heavy sword downward, the blow landing with a force that made the headmaster stumble backward in terror, trying to escape.

Just then, a snow-white bone whip struck the back of the headmaster, its force enough to make him nearly vomit blood. But before the whip could cause further harm, Lu Yizhan blocked it with his sword.

Lu Yizhan glanced helplessly at Bai Liu, who had jumped onto the stage. "Don't be so radical. Just scare the NPCs. If you kill him and turn him into a monster, we'll be in trouble later."

Bai Liu gave him a flat look, his expression indifferent. "You guessed I would attack you here?"

"I put the bait out so obviously, several of your squad members reported it to you," Lu Yizhan grinned, raising his heavy sword. "If you could resist biting the bait, then it wouldn't be you."

"After all, you don't have many other options, and no one in your team seems good at GCSEs."

Lu Yizhan's smile was gentle as he teased, "Bai Liu, do you regret not studying harder in high school?"

Bai Liu swung his whip again, his tone cold. "Who's to blame for that? Who told you not to mention there was such a game in the future? Otherwise, I would have studied hard to beat you."

"..." Lu Yizhan stood firm, holding his sword as he cried and laughed at the whip. "You didn't study, and now you're blaming me?!"

Bai Liu didn't answer. Instead, he swung his whip again, more forcefully this time.

Lu Yizhan took two steps back to block the strike.

The whip hit the bullet hole in the center of Lu Yizhan's sword—a hole caused by a bullet Bai Liu had fired previously. The hole was surrounded by tiny cracks, the sword barely repaired after it was sent to General Hua for urgent mending.

The sword had been shattered once before, when Lu Yizhan had tried to stop Bai Liu and Spades, blocking their bone whips.

This sword had been with Lu Yizhan for 658 world lines, and he cherished it. But now, seeing Bai Liu's whip strike the fragile spot without mercy, Lu Yizhan winced in pain as if he himself had been hit. He cried out, "Be gentle!"

"I only have this one sword! If you break it, I'll be useless!"

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow, looking at him indifferently. "You won't have a weapon to use? Isn't that a good thing?"

Lu Yizhan: "..."

What a cruel son of a bitch!!!

Fang Dian is right—Bai Liu really is an ungrateful son!

Qiao Mu Private High School

Seeing Bai Liu point to the most vulnerable bullet hole in the heavy sword, Lu Yizhan felt a sharp pang in his heart. He quickly switched his grip on the sword, withdrawing it and transitioning into a tai chi stance. With a swift motion, he lightly thrust the sword, sending Bai Liu onto the stage.

From the stands, Lu Yizhan called out, his tone helpless, "I don't want to fight you anymore. You'll break my weapons."

"I'll find someone else to fight you." Lu Yizhan added, and with those words, he vanished from the stands, replaced by a serious-looking Zhou Gong in a bright yellow school uniform and glasses—the new challenger, the third-generation hunter, Zhou Gong.

Zhou Gong raised his hand in a polite bow, then glanced up at Bai Liu below the stands, offering a slight nod. His voice was sincere and solemn: "Hello, Bai Liu. I am the third-generation hunter chosen by the captain, and a disciple of Mr. Liao. You can call me Zhou Gong."

"My goal in this match is to render you incapable of attacking anyone in front of me or moving." Zhou Gong added, his tone firm.

Bai Liu narrowed his eyes, then leaped up, grabbing the bleachers with one hand, while striking out with his whip. Zhou Gong quickly reacted, retreating and assuming a martial arts stance. With a swift "ahhh" sound, he threw something... a stethoscope.

"Please, Mr. Bai, enlighten me." Zhou Gong held the stethoscope in his right elbow, brow furrowed in seriousness, while his left hand extended flat toward Bai Liu.

Bai Liu: "....."

The situation quickly spiraled out of control as students either gathered on the sidelines to cheer or, for reasons unknown, rolled up their sleeves to join the fray.

Meanwhile, a few teachers and security guards struggled to manage the chaos. Several classes were already in hysterics, calling the police, while the headmaster hid behind a curtain in the stands, trembling.

Lu Yizhan jumped down from the bleachers and hurried to meet Liao Ke, who had come to meet him. Liao Ke couldn't help but glance back at Zhou Gong and Bai Liu, who were still locked in battle, and asked, "Shall we handle this together?"

"Hmm." Lu Yizhan replied, his expression unreadable, "Bai Liu won't beat Zhou Gong. Let's go deal with the rest of the Wandering Circus crew."

"I thought you were opposed to selecting Zhou Gong as a third-generation hunter." Liao Ke remarked, scanning Lu Yizhan as they ran. "You wouldn't be so quick to pit him against Bai Liu."

Lu Yizhan exhaled deeply, closing his eyes without responding.

The Hunter card in Werewolf Kill, a powerful card that helps the Prophet lead the civilians to victory, has two main functions: protecting the Prophet and eliminating those the Hunter deems werewolves, essentially causing them to self-destruct for the benefit of others.

It could be said that every generation of hunters is designed to eliminate the werewolves, with each generation possessing unique skills tailored for this purpose. However, the skills of the hunters have always been created with the primary goal of eliminating Bai Liu.

The first-generation hunter, Cen Buming, with his skill [Punishment], traps anyone he deems guilty—especially Bai Liu, the person he sees as the most sinful in the world. Once Bai Liu is trapped, escape is impossible.

The second-generation hunter, Tang Erda, known as the [Rose Hunter], uses the [Rose Revolver], and his key skill is [Suicide Bullet]. This skill involves a deadly gamble: whoever is unlucky dies first, ensuring Bai Liu's guaranteed demise due to his luck value of 0.

Then there's the third-generation hunter, Zhou Gong. His skills—[Hypnosis] and [Dream Interpretation]—are unique. This generation isn't about eliminating Bai Liu but monitoring him instead.

Lu Yizhan let out a slow, heavy breath.

At first, he hadn't planned to choose a third-generation hunter. It all began ten years ago, the moment he laid down the knife that killed Bai Liu.

Ten years ago.

Liao Ke stared incredulously at the young, fourteen-year-old Lu Yizhan, still syncing with the world line. He asked in disbelief, "Captain, what did you just say?"

"You want to spare Bai Liu?!"

Lu Yizhan seemed just as stunned by the words himself, feeling guilty yet resolute. He repeated his decision, "I don't think we should kill him."

Liao Ke took a deep breath. "Captain, I haven't been with you since the first world line, but I've served as your vice-captain in countless others. Do you know what you're doing?"

"That's the final world line!"

Lu Yizhan bowed his head, silent for a long moment. When he finally spoke, his voice was hoarse, "But Bai Liu hasn't done anything yet."

"He's not a bad person. We can't kill him."

Seeing Lu Yizhan like this, Liao Ke slumped in his chair, staring at the ceiling, lost in thought. "Captain, I don't understand..." he muttered.

"Even if there's a one in a thousand chance that Bai Liu isn't a bad guy, how can you choose him over so many others?"

"With so many dead already, does it really matter whether he's good or not?" Liao Ke's voice cracked with emotion, and tears welled in his eyes as he faced Lu Yizhan, who remained silent.

"Isn't it more important that these people, who have been good their entire lives, finally have a chance to survive in this world line?"

"Do you even remember who you are and what your role is?" Liao Ke stood up, gripping Lu Yizhan's shoulder with force. "Who told me that it's the Prophet's duty to protect civilians?"

"He's a civilian, too." Lu Yizhan replied steadily, looking up at Liao Ke, his voice calm and firm.

Liao Ke nearly shouted in frustration, "He's not!!!"

"He is." Lu Yizhan's gaze didn't waver as he gently removed Liao Ke's hand from his shoulder. "He hasn't committed any crime. He hasn't done anything wrong, so he is a civilian."

"I know you want to kill him," Lu Yizhan continued, his tone matter-of-fact. "But if you want to kill him, kill me first. Otherwise, I won't let you touch him."

Liao Ke staggered back, as if struck by a punch to the face. His chest heaved with heavy breaths, his emotions bubbling to the surface, but he remained silent.

"I'm sorry." Lu Yizhan whispered, shaking Liao Ke's hand firmly. "I'm not a very good captain."

Liao Ke slowly lowered his hand, a complex expression on his face, and sighed deeply. "It's not your place to say you're incompetent, Captain Lu."

"You're just too competent, but if you were a little selfish, you'd have killed Bai Liu."

"So, what's your plan now?" Liao Ke finally relented, his face etched with exhaustion. "If you're going to let him live, what happens next?"

Lu Yizhan scratched his head awkwardly. "I haven't really thought it through yet."

"But we can't just leave him be. I'll keep an eye on him, make sure his desires remain steady, and prevent him from joining the game."

Liao Ke locked eyes with Lu Yizhan, his tone serious. "How long do you plan to watch him?"

Lu Yizhan paused before answering, "We'll watch as long as we can."

"So your next move for Bai Liu is 'supervision'?" Liao Ke asked, raising his hands in resignation. "But you and I both know that once he enters the game, he'll become a serious threat in just a few rounds."

"You can't just do nothing, Captain." Liao Ke's voice grew insistent. "This is the most basic precaution."

Lu Yizhan remained silent for a long moment before finally looking up and saying, "You train a student with psychological suggestion techniques."

"When the time comes, I'll introduce him to Bai Liu."

Although Lu Yizhan had opened the door and Liao Ke had quickly trained his students, their efforts never came to fruition.

Bai Liu's desires wavered significantly after failing his exams at the age of fifteen.

Liao Ke suggested, "It's time for Little Zhou and Bai Liu to make contact."

Lu Yizhan stood on the windowsill, gazing down at Bai Liu in the orphanage, his fists slowly clenching. "Wait a little longer," he said softly.

"He's not going to enter the game over something so trivial."

Bai Liu was forced to drop out of school at eighteen by Bao Kangle. He failed his entrance exams, and his desires fluctuated drastically.

Liao Ke insisted, "No more delays, Captain Lu!"

Lu Yizhan sat by a flower bed on the campus, staring at the ice-cream stick Bai Liu had saved for him, his voice strained. "Wait a little longer."

"He'll make it through this and won't enter the game."

At twenty-two, Bai Liu faced an accident involving Fang Dian, and his desires shifted once more, dangerously close to pushing him into the game.

"We have to make contact now," Liao Ke said, standing at the corner of the stairs outside Fang Dian's hospital room. He turned to Lu Yizhan, "If we delay any longer, Bai Liu's psychological defenses will only grow stronger, and Little Zhou's hypnosis points won't be buried deep."

Lu Yizhan leaned against the wall, chain-smoking, his voice muffled by the smoke. "Wait a little longer."

"I've folded his memories; he'll forget this part and won't enter the game."

Liao Ke shook his head in frustration, his voice heavy. "This is your last memory fold. Why waste it like this?"

"You and I both know that Bai Liu is eventually going to enter the game. Bai Six won't let him live a normal life in reality."

"It's not a waste." Lu Yizhan exhaled slowly. "Every day Bai Liu stays out of the game is another day he can live a normal life. It's not a waste."

When Bai Liu was twenty-four, he was laid off.

Despite that, his desires remained stable. Lu Yizhan invited him to dinner, and he found himself a new job, as if the strange events of the past had no bearing on his current life—he moved forward in a normal, ordinary way.

Lu Yizhan sat on the sofa, scrolling through his phone, reading the news:

"Today, in a seaside town, there have been a series of disappearances among innocent tourists. It's suspected that the local townspeople may be involved in robberies..."

"A town renowned for having unearthed the most complete mermaid skeleton ever found..."

Suddenly, Lu Yizhan's phone rang. It was Liao Ke, his voice gravely serious. "You saw it, didn’t you?"

"Bai Six has devolved copies in reality—it's the Little Town of Siren, where Bai Liu’s [anchor] is located."

"He’s about to enter the game. We can't delay any longer, Captain Lu."

Lu Yizhan stayed silent for a long time, staring at the papers Bai Liu had left behind on the coffee table: high school notes, coupons for a hot pot restaurant they’d gone to recently, and two ice-cream sticks in a pencil holder, each with the phrase "one more time" written on them.

He blinked slowly, feeling as though his self-made illusion was shattering.

"Alright," Lu Yizhan said, his voice soft. "Let the third generation of hunters make contact with him. I've buried all my points in the game."

Hearing Lu Yizhan's decision, Liao Ke let out a long, relieved sigh, though his tone remained dark. "But I don’t know if it’s too late. Bai Liu is already twenty-four. Little Zhou may not be able to plant the hypnosis points deep enough into Bai Liu’s subconscious mind."

"I’ll have Little Zhou try as a free community trainee psychiatrist first," Lu Yizhan said. "I’ll recommend him—just tell them he’s providing unemployment counseling."

That evening, Lu Yizhan went to see Liao Ke and Zhou Gong in the community psychologist's consultation room.

Liao Ke and Zhou Gong exchanged complicated glances as Lu Yizhan entered.

Lu Yizhan seemed to grasp something. "So, is Bai Liu the kind of person who's too guarded for the hypnosis point to work?"

"Not at all," Zhou Gong replied lazily, scratching his head. "The hypnosis went smoothly. Both Mr. Liao and I were surprised at how easily the points were buried in his subconscious."

Lu Yizhan frowned. "Bai Liu trusts you? He's never met you before."

Zhou Gong looked at him for a moment before speaking, pursing his lips. "Bai Liu said you recommended me."

"So he just trusted you?" Lu Yizhan asked, confused.

Zhou Gong nodded. "He thought he had a psychological problem, so he believed that your recommendation to see me was genuine. From start to finish, there was no resistance to the hypnosis points or my consultation."

Lu Yizhan shifted, leaning against the door, a small laugh rising in his throat, though he swallowed it back. His eyes welled with emotion.

"So many people in high school said he had mental problems, and he never believed it... but when it comes to me, he believed it without a second thought."

Lu Yizhan looked up, his expression softening. He smiled faintly, glancing at the silent Liao Ke and Zhou Gong. A tear slipped down his cheek.

"Bai Liu is so gullible."

Liao Ke recalled that moment with a sigh, his voice tinged with sorrow. "Yeah, no one expected it to be so easy to implant hypnosis points in Bai Liu."

He had mixed feelings about it, and so did Lu Yizhan, who had raised Bai Liu as his own.

It was hard to say whether implanting the hypnosis points in Bai Liu had been easier or harder than expected.

Lu Yizhan didn't respond to Liao Ke's words. Instead, he looked away slightly and shifted the topic. "Let's stick to the plan."

Liao Ke returned to the matter at hand, his expression serious. "We'll have Bai Jiamu and Bai Yi hold off Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng, while we handle Muke and Liu Jiayi. That way, Bai Liu and his group won't have any special students left."

"Without the special merit students, they won't be able to make it up the hill to get close to GCSE Lake, and our next move should be quick."

"Agreed," Lu Yizhan said, exhaling slowly. He looked up, his resolve firm. "Let's move."

Muke eyed Lu Yizhan warily as the man blocked his path. With a smirk, Lu Yizhan approached Muke, hefting a massive heavy sword. "I didn't expect you to do so well with your studies abroad."

"I'm flattered," Muke said impassively, stepping back and casually flipping a brightly colored shuriken into his hand. "Your high school grades are as good as Bai Liu said they were."

"Is that so?" Lu Yizhan chuckled, scratching the back of his head. "Bai Liu still talks about my high school grades, huh?"

Muke met Lu Yizhan's gaze steadily. "There's no one else he can talk to but you."

The smile on Lu Yizhan's face faded slightly. He raised his heavy sword slowly above his shoulder. "That's my mistake."

"I didn't let him make more friends in high school."

"But," Lu Yizhan's smile returned, gentle but still carrying a hint of sadness as he looked down at Muke, "the high school crowd didn't deserve him."

"I know there are plenty of good friends waiting for him in the future who will never turn their backs on him."

"That's my cheating as a prophet. There's no point in making him settle for a brief moment of conformity when there are good people waiting for him ahead."

Lu Yizhan's smile grew as a breeze brushed past him, tousling his hair and fluttering the edges of his school uniform. "I'm sure, if Bai Liu had to choose, he wouldn't pick those guys from high school."

"He must have waited six years, until the moment you appeared, to finally make a real friend."

Muke, now cornered by Lu Yizhan, clenched his jaw and bit his lip. His gaze turned cold as he drew his knife and lunged for Lu Yizhan's face. In the blink of an eye, he vanished, reappearing behind Lu Yizhan. With a leap from the wall, Muke aimed his knife at the back of Lu Yizhan's neck.

"It's my choice, and Bai Liu's, to be friends with me! It's none of your business!"

[System Alert: Player Muke uses skill (Flash Strike).]

Without turning around, Lu Yizhan swiftly raised his blade sideways, intercepting Muke's knife. The sudden force caused Muke's body to jerk, his gaze going slack as he trembled.

The knife fell to the ground, disintegrating into countless points of light.

Liao Ke appeared behind Muke, holding up a hypnotic clock that swung back and forth. The stethoscope around his neck was now attached to Muke's heart. Muke collapsed, unable to move.

[System Alert: Player Liao Ke uses skill (Asking for Medical Advice) on Player Muke.]

[System Alert: Player Liao Ke uses personal skill (Hypnotic Point Recovery) on Player Muke.]

[(Hypnotic Point Recovery) can hypnotize a player, commanding them to act based on the hypnotic message. The skill requires physical contact to bury the hypnotic message in reality, which then affects the player in-game once the point is embedded in their subconscious.]

[Information about (hypnosis points) buried in Player Muke's body has been detected. Retrieving data... Retrieval complete.]

[A total of two hypnosis points have been found, along with a memory replay confirming the hypnosis immersion process.]

Muke's mind was in turmoil. His heart, connected to a stethoscope, fluctuated violently with each beat, and a sharp pain throbbed in his head, as if two needles were buried deep inside, piercing outward.

His mind began to involuntarily replay fragments of past memories, as if a videotape of his life's experiences was rewinding rapidly in his head.

"Click."

The tape suddenly stopped rewinding and began to play forward. Muke's head shot up in pain as he stared at the scene unfolding before him.

-- It was Bai Liu, leaving his post.

Bai Liu, in the midst of packing up his belongings, threw his computer aside. At this moment, they had argued, and Muke had always believed their conflict was what had drawn him into the game, as though his exposure to Bai Liu as a player was the catalyst.

But no, Bai Liu wasn't even in the game yet.

As the scene played on, Muke's pupils dilated, and his expression went blank.

-- Lu Yizhan appeared.

Lu Yizhan stood at Bai Liu's vacant seat, collecting the belongings Bai Liu had left behind. Liao Ke was also there, helping to gather Bai Liu's things.

Muke watched the scene, seeing himself approach the two men arrogantly, demanding to know what they were doing there.

Lu Yizhan looked up and smiled at Muke. "We're here to invite you to play a horror game, Mr. Mu. A game called 'Siren Town.'"

The Muke on the screen frowned. "No, I'm not interested in a horror game developed by Bai Liu. Get out of here."

"You'll play," Lu Yizhan said, his smile unwavering, as though he had already seen Muke's future, as if he knew everything that was about to unfold. "You'll regret doing such an outrageous thing to Bai Liu back then."

Muke waved his hand dismissively. "Security, get rid of them."

The screen froze.

Muke slowly raised his head and looked at Lu Yizhan, whose face remained expressionless. "It was you. You engineered my hypnosis point to get me into the game. You dropped me into Siren Town, made sure I met Bai Liu, who entered the game at the same time, and erased all memories of our contact."

"-- You made me one of Bai Liu's players. A friend. One of the people around him."

Muke's voice trembled with disbelief. "You... you controlled every step of Bai Liu's path once you were in the game, just like Bai Liu did?"

"You could say that," Lu Yizhan replied calmly. "You were indeed placed around Bai Liu by me."

"You are one of my divine cards."

Six months ago, at the Shrine.

Bai Six sat in front of Lu Yizhan, his body half-turned into a stone statue. With a smile, Lu Yizhan rested his jaw on his hand. "Our game is about to begin again."

"With your efforts in this world line, we're starting the werewolf game later than usual," he continued.

"The copy I've chosen this time is Siren Small Town," Bai Six said, flipping over a face-down card depicting a beautiful silver-blue fish tail, its edges corroded into white bone. He smiled at Lu Yizhan across from him. "Traditionally, the first copy I would have prepared for Bai Six in each world line would be The Evil God Ritual – Boathouse."

"In this copy, I will have Bai Six kill his anchor once and for all and follow the path I've designed for the heir of the evil god."

"But," Bai Six's smile faltered, "in a desperate attempt to prevent this copy of the Evil Ritual from entering reality, the Tawil of this world line swam as far as he could. Instead of drifting toward Luming County as I intended, his body washed up in a distant seaside county, becoming The Little Town of Siren."

"But none of it matters," Bai Six said, looking up with a smile. "This world line between Bai Liu and Tawil isn't the same either."

"Perhaps it would have been more powerful for Bai Liu to see Tawil—or Xie Ta's body—in reality than to kill him?" Bai Six mused. "I'm looking forward to the moment when Bai Liu sees the eyes of Xie Ta's corpse, filled with lust, and enters the game filled with both lust and hate, ready for a killing spree."

Lu Yizhan, his face covered with stone spots, slowly raised his head. "I won't let Bai Liu see Xie Ta's body again in reality."

"So what are you going to do about it?" Bai Six chuckled softly. "There's nothing you can do to stop me from making them meet in reality."

"There is a way," Lu Yizhan's voice was so soft it seemed as if only he could hear it. "As long as I... as long as I..."

His voice began to tremble uncontrollably. "As long as I get Bai Liu into the game before you let him see Xie Ta, that's all that matters."

Bai Six went silent for a rare moment before narrowing his eyes and smiling, applauding lightly. "Wow, what a surprise."

"Our prophet did everything he could to keep Bai Liu—the good boy he raised—from entering the game, only to end up sending him into it himself."

Lu Yizhan closed his eyes.

He had personally instructed Zhou Gong to plant hypnotic triggers in Bai Liu's consciousness, allowing him to enter the game under Zhou Gong's subtle guidance.

He had stopped this moment for ten years, never imagining that he would end up creating it with his own hands.

Soon, Bai Liu entered the game, and the werewolf game between him and Bai Six entered its second round.

"This opening makes me curious to see how you'll play Werewolf Kill in this world line," Bai Six said, propping his head lazily on his hand, sweeping the deck in front of Lu Yizhan. A smirk deepened on his face. "Originally, the only god cards in your hand were Prophet and Hunter."

"But you previously housed Mu Sicheng in worldline 0045 and Liu Jiayi in worldline 0068, implanting hypnosis points in Muke's subconscious and essentially semi-housing him."

"Now, you have in your hand a god card with a hunter, a seer, a thief, a sorceress, and a yet-to-be-formed assassin."

"This is the most chips and cards you've ever played against me."

Bai Six sat up slightly, amusement twinkling in his eyes. "It took you so much work, so many sacrifices in so many worlds, to assemble such a complete deck of Werewolf God cards from those derivatives, Lu Yizhan."

"What are you going to do with this deck?"

Lu Yizhan didn't hesitate. "I want to devolve this sacred medal to Bai Liu."

Bai Six crossed his arms and propped his jaw on his hand, intrigued. "Taking a god card from another worldline's werewolf and delegating it to a werewolf in this worldline? That's funny."

"And how are you going to delegate it?"

Lu Yizhan slowly raised his eyes and, with a steady hand, pushed a card toward the center of the stone table. "Devolve by winning against you."

"This time, I'm devolving Muke in Siren Small Town, and he'll be the most consistent backup in Bai Liu's team."

Muke falls into the endless depths of Siren Town. In a panic, he pleads for help on a small TV screen:

"Whoever it is, come and help me!"

Bai Liu, passing by the small TV with his bone whip, is pulled by an invisible force. He turns back, his expression light, gazing at Muke who is dying and begging for help, tears streaming down his face.

"Please," Muke sobs, tapping the screen. "Help me."

Finally, Muke, from Qiao Mu Private High School, looks up with vacant eyes. His gaze locks onto Lu Yizhan, tears unconsciously flowing down his face. His smile is strange as he speaks, almost as if talking to himself.

"Bai Liu told me earlier that he always felt someone in his life was manipulating him, pulling him down the most dangerous path to seek an end where everyone is safe in the midst of danger."

"He didn’t want that."

"When Bai Six appeared, we all thought the one controlling everything and forcing him onto that path was Bai Six."

Lu Yizhan slowly raised his heavy sword at Muke, who was kneeling on the ground.

"I didn’t expect that," Muke burst out laughing through his tears. "So there’s you, Lu Yizhan."

The heavy sword falls.

[System Alert: Player Muke has zero life and is out of the game.]

Qiao Mu Private High School

Liu Jiayi, amidst the bustling crowd, heard the system announce that Muke had been eliminated. She jerked her head back as students rushed past her in a flurry of activity.

Thoughts raced through her mind at lightning speed, and she quickly reached a conclusion:

— Muke has been sniped, and she's next in the killer sequence!

She was the only exceptional student left in the circus!

Quickly, Liu Jiayi turned and headed toward the location where she knew Mu Sicheng and Tang Erda were. As a witch, she was in control, not much of a fighter, and far too dangerous to be left alone. But she'd never been so far behind in the game for this long.

Bai Liu wouldn't leave her stranded for long—he would come to her aid soon. But this time...

Liu Jiayi took a deep breath and glanced at her phone. Her lip quivered as she saw the row of missed calls from Bai Liu. She couldn't reach him, and in this critical moment, she had no choice but to turn to other forces for support to ensure her own safety. She was the healer—the lifeline of the entire team. She was the one who could never fail, especially not against a strong team like the Killer Sequence.

If anything went wrong with her, the entire team's survival would be jeopardized. Liu Jiayi knew this well and had always protected herself. But unfortunately, her opponents knew this, too.

"Hello, Jiayi." Lu Yizhan dropped down from a tree, a smile on his face as he drew his heavy sword, the tip trailing a deep scratch on the ground. "It's been a while. You've changed so much."

"So have you." Liu Jiayi stepped back, wary, narrowing her eyes. "You've changed more than me, Lu Yizhan."

"Or maybe it isn't a big change after all," she added with a cold voice, "but the true nature you've been hiding for so long is finally out in the open, right?"

Lu Yizhan scratched his face with some embarrassment and let out a helpless sigh. "Maybe that's how it looks to you guys."

"Not to us," Liu Jiayi shot back. "It's to Bai Liu."

"We've only met you a few times, and we don't care about your face. But Bai Liu cares."

Lu Yizhan's face paused slightly, and he looked up at her with a bemused expression and a faint smile. "True."

"Not many people would care about what face I have," he added, "but Bai Liu is indeed one of them."

Before Liu Jiayi could respond, a stethoscope flew from behind her ear. With a sharp sidestep, she dodged the attack.

A massive cloud of purple poison spiraled up, engulfing the entire area.

[System Alert: Player Liu Jiayi uses Personal Burst Skill (Poison Fountain).]

Liu Jiayi quickly retreated, sprinting through the dense, poisonous fog. She raised her sleeve to cover her mouth and nose as she headed toward the stands.

Bai Liu had planned for her and Muke, the weaker UEs, to retreat to the classroom and stay out of the fight, while he, Tang Erda, and Mu Sicheng—three of the more aggressive players—would target Liao Ke, Lu Yizhan, and Bai Jiamu, using the underclassmen to fight the upperclassmen.

She had already informed Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng that they were coming to join her, and that they had orders from Bai Liu to eliminate Bai Jiamu's team. But the fact that Liu Jiayi hadn't rejoined them meant only one thing:

— These two men were haunted by Bai Jiamu.

And on top of that, Bai Liu was missing...

Liu Jiayi pursed her lips. In such a chaotic situation, the loss of their tactician was disastrous. Without him, their side lacked leadership and couldn't react quickly to the evolving crisis.

As much as she disliked being the healer and tactician at this point, it was the best course of action. She had to bring Bai Liu back to the contact center!

"Are you trying to get to Bai Liu?" A sturdy figure, trailing a heavy sword, loomed through the thick poisonous fog. His voice was clear and calm, yet carried an unfamiliar sense of oppression. "That won't do."

"It was a difficult task, controlling your tactician," the figure continued, his tone almost detached. "I sacrificed three of my team members just to control him for this long. But now, with that sacrifice behind me—"

"—Bai Liu will move, at least after I kill you."

Slowly, the figure raised his sword with one hand, holding it flat against his arm. Purple smoke slashed down the sides of the blade as it cut through the air.

Liu Jiayi quickly turned and retreated. She knew she was no match for Lu Yizhan's strength, and fighting back wasn't an option. However, she soon found her way blocked.

The stethoscope that had emerged from the smoke twisted into a ring, blocking her path. Gritting her teeth, Liu Jiayi watched Liao Ke emerge from the mist. She jerked her head back to see the figure approaching with the heavy sword.

The figure drew closer, a thick purple mist swirling around him. His head was bowed, his expression unreadable. His left hand was clenched, and his right hand held the heavy sword flat, blood oozing from his shoulder.

—That's the unhealed wound from the gunshot that stopped Bai Liu in the last game.

"Lu Yizhan," Liu Jiayi managed, struggling to maintain her composure. "What do you think will happen if you kill me and take down Bai Liu?"

"Did you have to go this far with Bai Liu, with us?"

"You've changed, Jiayi," Lu Yizhan's figure seemed lighter now, his eyes filled with emotions Liu Jiayi couldn't quite read. But those eyes were deep. "But this isn't a game for good kids."

"Get out of here."

Without effort, the heavy sword swung toward her.

Liu Jiayi's pupils shrank. A figure suddenly penetrated the fog with blinding speed. The figure raised a pair of monkey paws, blocking Liu Jiayi's face. She heard a hiss of pain as the sword's blade scraped against the sharp claws.

The poisonous mist was blown away by the force of the clash, and everything was briefly illuminated by a flash of fire.

Mu Sicheng's chest heaved as he held onto the blade of the heavy sword with a desperate grip. Blood oozed from his hands as he struggled against the weight of the sword, sliding backwards, leaving deep imprints in the ground. Despite the pain, he flashed a gangly smile and raised an eyebrow. "Looks like I'm just in time?"

[System Alert: Player Bai Jiamu has zero life, exit the game.]

Mu Sicheng was covered in cuts from Bai Jiamu's razor blade, his clothes torn. Yet he couldn't hide the smug grin on his face as he looked at Lu Yizhan.

"Sorry for clearing out your players while you were about to take us down."

Liu Jiayi winced and held her forehead. "Muke's been taken out by them."

"Shit!" Mu Sicheng exclaimed in shock, "When did that happen?!"

A silver bullet struck the stethoscope blocking Liu Jiayi's path, causing it to crumple with a crunch before being snatched up by Liao Ke, who was lurking nearby.

Tang Erda, similarly covered in razor wounds, leaned against a wall, changing magazines. "Didn't you hear the system beep when you were fighting Bai Jiamu?"

Lu Yizhan looked over at Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng, both standing in Liu Jiayi's way, watching him with hostility. He sighed, shaking his head. "Bai Jiamu is really a bad boy, isn't he? He was taken out so quickly? Wasn't he supposed to stall for at least ten minutes?"

Lu Yizhan smiled faintly, flipping the heavy sword in his hand, his expression suddenly fierce. "Well, there's no way out now."

Taking a deep breath, he tightened his grip on the sword, his gaze hardening. "I'll finish this with a pair of three."

"You're too arrogant…" Mu Sicheng started, but before he could finish, Lu Yizhan vanished from his spot and reappeared right in front of him.

Lu Yizhan swung the sword from the bottom to the top, its blade already at Mu Sicheng's throat. Mu Sicheng had no time to react, his eyes wide with astonishment. The sword was so close he could feel the air shift as it cut through the space.

For a moment, Mu Sicheng froze, unable to resist at all, his body trembling. He could only back up, the heavy sword looming dangerously above him.

The cold, dangerous look in Lu Yizhan's eyes shattered the image of the gentle tactician that Mu Sicheng had always known. This man, holding a sword to his throat, was no longer the friendly, easy-going one who cared about every player's life.

No. This look—it was the look of a god who had already passed judgment on countless players and heretics. A god who had killed them without hesitation, whose eyes held the cold certainty of someone who had already carried out countless executions.

This was a look that only someone who had already slain so many could possess.

With a swing of his sword, blood sprayed.

"Mu Sicheng, look out!" Liu Jiayi shouted, grabbing his hair just in time to yank his head back from the sword's swing. But it was too late —Mu Sicheng's right hand had been severed.

Leaning against the wall, Mu Sicheng's pupils were dilated as he covered the gushing wound on his hand. He shakily looked up at Lu Yizhan, now drenched in blood—Muke's, Liu Jiayi's, his own, and the blood from the wound on his shoulder.

That sword could have decapitated him with a single blow.

"Who the hell… are you?" Mu Sicheng asked, his voice shaky.

Lu Yizhan looked up with an innocent smile, scratching his head. "Why are you asking this now, in the middle of a fight?" He gave a sheepish grin, as if he was just some confused high school student.

But his uniform was stained with blood—Muke's, Liu Jiayi's, Mu Sicheng's, and his own.

"Let's see… I have more identities outside of the game. Some call me the Prophet, others the Judge against the Gods, the Reverse God, some call me the Captain," Lu Yizhan said seriously, rubbing his jaw. He smiled and added, "But personally, I prefer to be called Lu Yizhan. Mr. Lu works too."

He then drew the heavy sword from the ground with one hand, the wind ruffling his bloodstained hair. "But in this game, I should only have one identity."

With a gentle smile, he added, "And that's what you're up against."

Qiao Mu Private High School

Lu Yizhan looked across at Liu Jiayi, Mu Sicheng, and Tang Erda, took a deep breath, and raised his heavy sword again.

Three months ago, at the Shrine.

Bai Six looked at Lu Yizhan with amusement. "Are you sure you want to devolve the Witch card? It's one of the few high-level God cards, and a healing card at that. I suggest you think carefully before making a decision."

He smirked. "Besides, didn't Fang Dian want to adopt the Witch card? Are you really going to hand it over to Bai Liu instead?"

Lu Yizhan lowered his head. "…I'm sure."

Bai Six folded his hands under his chin, watching Lu Yizhan with a smile laced with amusement. "The Witch card is a clever one, and in this game, our Werewolf is just as clever. Giving the Witch card directly to the Werewolf… well, he won't necessarily devour it. Instead, he'll likely use it to his advantage, turning it against the Werewolf. Have you thought about what you're doing?"

Lu Yizhan stared at the Werewolf and Witch cards leaning together on the table. He opened his mouth, hesitated for a moment, then exhaled slowly. "I've thought about it."

No wonder.

He hadn't thought about it either. Not fully. He had come this far, yet with each step, it became harder to tell if his choices were right or wrong.

Later, at home.

"Wow, that smells amazing! Lu Yizhan, what are you making?"

As soon as Fang Dian hung up her bag after work, the rich aroma from the kitchen hit her. Eyes lighting up, she hopped excitedly and rushed inside, wrapping her arms around Lu Yizhan's waist from behind. She peeked over his shoulder, her voice brimming with curiosity. "What are you cooking?"

Lu Yizhan, standing in his small kitchen, wore an apron while holding a spatula. He focused on the pan of sizzling oil, flipping the meat with practiced ease. After a moment of silence, he spoke.

"…Wife, do you think Bai Liu would make a good older brother?"

Fang Dian never questioned why Lu Yizhan asked strange things out of nowhere. She simply considered the thought seriously, resting her chin on his shoulder.

"It's hard to imagine that little brat having a sister."

Then, as if picturing something, she suddenly burst into laughter. "I bet he'd bully his sister to the point where she'd get sold off and still help him count the money."

Lu Yizhan licked his lips, his voice dry. "…So, that means he wouldn't be a good brother?"

"No, it fits." Fang Dian smiled, arching her eyebrows. "But he'd be the kind of bad brother who would also protect his sister. The kind who'd brush her hair, take care of everything behind the scenes, and make sure no one but himself could bully her."

Lu Yizhan closed his eyes.

The following day, at the hospital.

"It must be tough for you to take on this case over, Mr. Lu."

The policeman guarding Liu Jiayi rubbed his shoulders, sighing. "How can an orphanage treat children like this? Feeding them mushrooms without testing for toxicity—what were they thinking?"

Lu Yizhan glanced over the officer's shoulder into the hospital room. Liu Jiayi lay in bed, her face pale, with Liu Huai sitting beside her. His voice was barely above a whisper.

"Yeah."

The policeman turned to look at him. "By the way, Mr. Lu, why did you suddenly decide to take on this case?"

Lu Yizhan lowered his eyes. "…No reason. I just happened to have time to take care of it."

The officer clapped him on the shoulder, half-joking. "You really can't stay idle, can you? A hero saving the world, as always."

Hot Pot Restaurant

Lu Yizhan sat across from Bai Liu, his expression unusually serious. Bai Liu had just logged out of the game, still adjusting to reality, when Lu Yizhan spoke.

"I came across a case recently. Can you help me?"

Bai Liu had just broken apart his disposable chopsticks. He lifted his eyes, glancing at Lu Yizhan.

"Sure."

Then he smiled.

"This hot pot is on you."

Inside the Game

Lu Yizhan's heavy sword slashed downward, piercing Liu Jiayi's chest.

Blood spilled from the corner of her lips as she stared at him in disbelief. Yet, she didn't hesitate. As soon as her skill cooldown reset, she flung the first vial of antidote to Mu Sicheng, her voice hoarse.

"Take it, Monkey!"

There was no point in using the antidote on herself. Lu Yizhan was targeting her—if she wasted it on herself, she'd still lose. Better to help a teammate instead.

But he had prepared for this. Every move she made, every retreat she attempted, he countered as if he had fought her hundreds of times before. No matter how hard she tried, she couldn't break through his strategy.

In the end, she could only admit defeat.

Liu Jiayi, bloodied and fading, slowly closed her eyes. Her small body slid off the heavy sword and crumpled to the ground.

[System Alert: Player Liu Jiayi's health has dropped to zero. She is out of the game.]

The moment Liu Jiayi vanished, Mu Sicheng clutched the antidote she had thrown him. Tang Erda's stance shifted instantly—from protecting Liu Jiayi and Mu Sicheng to launching an all-out attack on Lu Yizhan.

With Liu Jiayi gone and Mu Sicheng's skills on cooldown, Tang Erda struggled to hold the line alone. He shot a quick glance at the phone in his breast pocket, clenching his teeth.

If Bai Liu were here…

If that guy was with him, one versus three wouldn't even be a problem. Hell, even one versus two would be easy.

But the issue wasn't the numbers.

The issue was that their opponent was Lu Yizhan.

He knew them—knew them too well. He could read their every move and exploit the smallest gaps in their defense. He had already slipped past Tang Erda's guard multiple times.

Frustration burned in Tang Erda's chest as he coldly reloaded his gun, flipping it in his hand before pulling the trigger.

[System Warning: Lu Yizhan's life expectancy has dropped to 28!]

Lu Yizhan looked up at Tang Erda, who was reloading.

For a brief moment, his gaze softened.

The rookie who used to complain about running laps as punishment…

Now, that same trainee had grown into a soldier—one strong enough to stand against him.

This was the second-generation hunter he had chosen. The one he had personally trained and shaped with his own hands.

And yet…

Tang Erda had never even met him before. His fate had been decided by Bai Six and himself, long before they ever stood face to face.

Is this what it means to play God?

What an awful power.

Two and a Half Months Ago, at the Shrine.

"You only have one God-ranked card left."

Bai Six tilted his head, a smirk playing on his lips as he eyed Lu Yizhan—half-petrified, stone creeping up to his waist.

"Are you really going to delegate the powerful Hunter card to Bai Liu?"

Lu Yizhan's voice was hoarse but unwavering.

"Yes."

Bai Six chuckled. "This is a God card even more dangerous and extreme than the Witch card. A Hunter on the verge of madness. You're handing it to Bai Liu just like that? Aren't you afraid the Hunter will take out the Werewolf in a single blow?"

Lu Yizhan slowly lifted his head. His eyes were resolute.

"I won't let anything happen to Bai Liu."

Same day, Heretics Authority.

"Captain Tang." Su Yang stepped forward, a dossier in hand, his expression serious. "A regional police officer contacted us regarding the mushrooms used in the mass poisoning at the orphanage. He suspected they weren't normal. After our investigation, we confirmed it—they weren't."

Tang Erda took the folder. "A sample of the mushrooms?"

He tore open the file bag. Alongside the mushroom sample vial, a surveillance tape tumbled out.

Tang Erda frowned, picking it up. "What's this?"

Su Yang glanced at it. "Hospital surveillance footage of the five surviving children from the poisoning case. Somehow, it was slipped into the folder and sent to us along with the samples."

Tang Erda shoved the tape into the player. The moment the screen flickered to life, his pupils contracted.

The image showed Bai Liu walking in.

"Who sent this?!" Tang Erda snapped, whipping around to face Su Yang. "Who is this person?!"

Su Yang, startled by Tang Erda's reaction, quickly answered, "We checked—his name is Bai Liu. The officer who sent the tape over is called Lu Yizhan."

He hesitated before adding, "I hear they're… pretty close friends."

[System Warning: Player Tang Erda's life points have dropped to 17—imminent danger of zero!]
[System Warning: Player Lu Yizhan's life points have dropped to 15—imminent danger of zero!]

Fire erupted as steel clashed with gunfire. Tang Erda gritted his teeth, staring down Lu Yizhan, who was closing in on him with his heavy sword.

—What the hell? This was the Heretics Authority's melee combat style. Since when did Lu Yizhan fight like this?!

He had never seen Reverse God—or even Lu Yizhan himself—engage in close combat like this.

Lu Yizhan's blade pressed against Tang Erda's shoulder. His eyes, reflected in the cracked steel, were sharp and unyielding—the gaze of a true judge, a man who had cut down countless heretics and sinners.

Tang Erda let out a choked, breathless laugh. "Where did you learn to fight like this?"

Lu Yizhan's right shoulder was drenched in blood. He coughed, red staining the corners of his lips. His grip tightened. His voice was soft but unwavering.

"I created this method. Specifically to deal with heretics."

Tang Erda's pupils shrank. "You're the first detachment captain who committed suicide ten years ago?!"

Lu Yizhan exhaled, pale-faced, then suddenly smiled, his eyes curving with an eerie gentleness.

"Such a heavy title," he murmured. "I'd rather you just call me senior."

With that, his heavy sword flipped and slashed across Tang Erda's throat.

[System Alert: Player Tang Erda has reached zero life points and is out of the game.]

Mu Sicheng's severed right hand regrew as the antidote Liu Jiayi had thrown at him took effect. But his skills were still on cooldown, and he was trapped—tightly bound by a stethoscope that had burst to life. He grimaced, thrashing against his restraints.

"Let me go!" he yelled.

Liao Ke, watching over him, sighed. "I can't hypnotize him—he's too early in the game. He doesn't have the points I need to plant suggestions. This is the best I can do."

Lu Yizhan turned, dragging his heavy sword behind him. His gaze landed on Mu Sicheng, his expression unreadable.

"Too reckless," he murmured. "Far too reckless."

Mu Sicheng had been an anomaly in his God deck. Before he could even decide how to delegate him, the fool had run straight to Bai Liu and logged in with him. Lu Yizhan had nearly gone into cardiac arrest watching it happen.

And sure enough, in just half a day, Mu Sicheng had already made a mess of things.

At least, the outcome hadn't been disastrous.

Lu Yizhan crouched down, staring at the bound Mu Sicheng, who glared at him with furious defiance. He exhaled a long, weary sigh.

—This guy.

No matter the world line, Mu Sicheng was always the first to die at Bai Liu's hands.

Yet in every timeline, without fail, he was also the first to approach Bai Liu.

Especially in this world line.

Lu Yizhan had deliberately kept them apart, ensuring Mu Sicheng stayed away from Bai Liu, planning to delegate the Thief in a later instance.

And yet, the moment Mu Sicheng caught a glimpse of Bai Liu on the small TV, he had been drawn in—irresistibly, instinctively, almost as if fate itself demanded it.

Mu Sicheng had first approached Bai Liu intending to steal from him.

Instead, Bai Liu had stolen his soul.

But it wasn't just Mu Sicheng.

The Witch, whom Lu Yizhan had believed would poison the Werewolf.

The Hunter, who was supposed to shoot him.

All of them—every single one—had ended up as cards in Bai Liu's hand.

Even himself.

Bai Liu…

Lu Yizhan clenched his heavy sword, lowering his gaze.

—What is it about this werewolf I've watched grow up?

How does he make everyone—every enemy, every adversary—abandon their defenses and willingly offer him their faith, their trust, their very souls?

Lu Yizhan still didn't know the answer.

But instead of finding it—

He closed his eyes.

Bracing himself on his heavy sword, he took a deep breath—

And raised it.

Mu Sicheng panted heavily, his eyes fixed on the heavy sword poised to decapitate him. The muscles in his face were so tense they trembled.

"…Damn," he muttered, "you've already killed three in a row—couldn't you at least push me around a little first?"

Villains always liked to push before they pushed! Bai Liu liked to push! Lu Yizhan, on the other hand, didn't even give you a chance—he just went ahead and wiped out the entire field without a word!

"There's no time for that." Lu Yizhan raised his heavy sword high, grinning. "If I dragged this out any longer, I'd be the one getting wiped out instead."

The heavy sword fell.

Mu Sicheng clenched his teeth, squeezing his eyes shut. The cold system beep rang in his ears just as a flash of silver cut across his vision.

BANG!

A violent clash echoed as weapons met in front of him.

In the Spectator Pool

Muke, Liu Jiayi, and Tang Erda, already eliminated by Lu Yizhan's heavy sword, sat on the bench with grim expressions. Their heads were bowed, hands clasped in front of them, and not one of them dared to look at the big screen.

Beside them, Wang Shun tried to keep watching, but the moment he saw Lu Yizhan dragging his sword toward Mu Sicheng, his heart pounded wildly. He quickly averted his gaze, his face twisting into the same bitter grimace as the others.

…Shit. He was so nervous he felt like he was going to dry heave. Someone say something.

"I'm half responsible for this," Tang Erda suddenly said, exhaling deeply. "I should've realized from the start that Bai Jiamu's plan was to sacrifice himself to stall Mu Sicheng and me. I should have abandoned the struggle and gone back to support Bai Liu."

"No, it's my fault," Muke countered, his lips tightening. "I let my emotions get the best of me. When I sensed Lu Yizhan's intent, I should've retreated and regrouped with Bai Liu instead of engaging him head-on."

"Will you two shut up?" Liu Jiayi snapped irritably. "I, the witch who got wiped out in the opening scene, haven't even started taking responsibility. You two don't need to fight over who's to blame."

Wang Shun swallowed hard, struggling to keep his nausea at bay.

For God's sake, could they not say things like that?!

…Jesus Christ, why did it sound like they were holding a post-match review when they were still losing the game?!

And then—

Wang Shun glanced at the big screen again. The moment he saw Lu Yizhan raising his heavy sword for the final strike, his face fell. He groaned and buried his head in his hands.

No! Are they really going to lose their first team match like this?!

Their opponent had only lost one player, while their side had already lost three—and was about to lose a fourth.

The audience wasn't taking it well either.

Wang Shun's system panel kept flashing—every indicator for the Wandering Circus was plummeting. Especially Bai Liu, who had barely clawed his way up to sixth place in popularity—he'd just dropped over twenty spots due to this pitiful performance.

Wang Shun could hardly bear to watch anymore.

But even if he didn't look, the host kept riling the crowd up.

"Oh my god, oh my god!" the commentator exclaimed. "The Reverse God Inquisitor—normally a calm and strategic player who avoids direct kills—is now leading the attack and clearing out players one after another!"

"He's eliminated three opponents single-handedly and is about to take out a fourth! Could he be about to wipe out the entire enemy team by himself?!"

"I never imagined the Reverse God would take on a main attacker role, let alone execute it so flawlessly! Up until now, he's been known for playing control and roaming positions, adjusting his tactics dynamically to the team's needs. But now, he's proving he can even be the main attacker—he truly is a master tactician!"

As Lu Yizhan's heavy sword descended on the big screen, Wang Shun curled into a ball, squeezing his eyes shut as he braced for the system alert signaling Mu Sicheng's elimination.

[System Alert: Player Bai Yi has zero life. Exiting game.]

[System Alert: Player Zhou Gong has zero life. Exiting game.]

Wang Shun's eyes flew open. He turned toward the player logout display—only to realize he wasn't looking at Mu Sicheng's elimination.

Instead, two members of the Killer Sequence had just been cleared.

Zhou Gong and Bai Yi lay sprawled on the ground, battered and bloodied. The rest of their teammates rushed to their aid, their bodies covered in deep whip marks.

The audience and commentators were dumbfounded.

"W-What just happened?!" the host stammered. "Two members of the Killer Sequence were eliminated back to back?!"

"Who took them out?!"

"There's another player besides the Reverse God clearing the field… Is someone else about to single-handedly wipe out the entire opposing team?!"

The answer was obvious.

All eyes turned to the big screen.

Wang Shun's brain nearly short-circuited.

"Wait, I'm dizzy. I get that Bai Yi got eliminated with an immunity card, but Zhou Gong didn't even have one!" His voice was filled with disbelief. "How the hell did Bai Liu drop his HP to zero and still safely knock him out?!"

Muke's eyes gleamed with an unspeakable intensity as he stared at the screen.

"Because he's Bai Liu."

In-Game

Mu Sicheng's eyes snapped open as the system alert rang out.

Above him, Bai Liu leapt from the first floor of a nearby school building. He landed lightly on Lu Yizhan's right shoulder, pressing down on his back while simultaneously winding his whip around Lu Yizhan's heavy sword and yanking it upward. The blade was wrenched from its downward arc, its hilt dragging away from Mu Sicheng's vulnerable throat.

Bai Liu's eyes were sharp and calculating, his half-loose hair whipping in the wind. A fresh slash ran along the side of his face, and his white shirt—now missing most of its buttons—hung loosely from his frame. His black leather-gloved hands gripped the whip with practiced ease, one holding the hilt while the other pulled taut.

The redirected blade pressed against Lu Yizhan's own neck, forcing him to lean back just in time to avoid a fatal cut. A deep wound opened along his brow, blood spilling down to stain half his face red.

"Captain Lu!!!" Liao Ke's pupils contracted in shock.

"Bai Liu!" Mu Sicheng's voice was filled with elation.

Liao Ke lunged forward, attempting to separate Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan.

Bai Liu smoothly flipped backward, landing effortlessly on the ground. He tossed a small bottle toward the kneeling Mu Sicheng.

"Drink it. Recover."

Then, without another word, he turned and lashed his whip forward once more, diving straight back into the fray.

Mu Sicheng caught the bottle—and then flinched. A cold shiver ran down his spine.

It was an antidote.

…Wait.

They had only been in this game copy for an hour. Even if Bai Liu and Liu Jiayi had used their system panels efficiently, the antidote's cooldown could have only reset twice at most.

Yet Bai Liu—without using an antidote himself or any attack-type system panels—had just eliminated two members of the Killer Sequence alone, using only his whip.

Mu Sicheng choked back a laugh, his hands shaking as he downed the bitter liquid.

"…Fuck," he muttered, wiping his mouth. "Thank god Bai Liu is my teammate."

Because otherwise, they'd all be doomed.

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng has recovered to 87 life points.]

Bai Liu nodded forward and flung his whip straight at Lu Yizhan—only to be caught mid-motion by a stethoscope thrown by Liao Ke. Without hesitation, Bai Liu let go of the whip, transforming it into a short blade. In the same breath, he flipped a switch on his system panel and vanished.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has used Player Mu Ke's system panel to activate the personal skill (Flashing Strike).]

In the next instant, Bai Liu reappeared behind Liao Ke. The man's pupils shrank to pinpricks, his breath catching as he felt the cold steel of Bai Liu's blade against his neck. Bai Liu's expression held no trace of warmth—only the detached efficiency of a killer. The knife slashed inward without mercy.

Blood gushed from Liao Ke's neck. He choked, coughing violently as his hands instinctively shot up to staunch the bleeding. His mind blurred, teetering on the edge of comprehension.

Trapped.

This guy... Bai Liu...

Lu Yizhan had never been the real target. He had.

Bai Liu never intended to engage in a drawn-out fight against Lu Yizhan, who had a deep health pool and an unknown skill base. Wasting time and resources against him would be inefficient. Instead, Bai Liu had chosen to systematically eliminate the players surrounding Lu Yizhan—cutting off his support and forcing him into isolation. A tactician like Lu Yizhan, who thrived in team-based strategies, would be powerless without his teammates.

Liao Ke felt a chill even as the blood drained from his body.

This guy... he was analyzing Lu Yizhan's weaknesses before making a move.

Cold. Calculated. Completely unfazed by the losses of his own teammates, as long as his objectives were met. Bai Liu was clearing the backline with ruthless precision.

Lu Yizhan was a weaker player than Bai Liu.

Unlike Lu Yizhan, Bai Liu had Soul Notes in his possession. Even with his teammates falling, he could still utilize their system panels and skills. Rather than engaging in a straightforward exchange—trading three players for three—Bai Liu had opted for a complete tactical sweep, eliminating the Double Captain Fang members first before leveraging his free-flowing solo playstyle against Lu Yizhan's now-crippled team.

These two had been playing the game for nearly a decade.

Lu Yizhan might know Bai Liu well.

But Bai Liu knew Lu Yizhan just as well.

Expressionless, Bai Liu pressed Liao Ke forward, controlling his movement. The short knife in his hand plunged downward, slicing through Liao Ke's body until the tip reached his heart.

Liao Ke let out a strangled grunt. His breath hitched. His body slowly slumped. The stethoscope around Bai Liu's wrist loosened as Liao Ke's fingers lost strength. His head fell against Bai Liu's shoulder, motionless.

[System Alert: Player Liao Ke has reached zero life. Exiting game.]

Bai Liu barely reacted as Liao Ke's blood seeped into his shirt.

Holding Liao Ke's limp body almost tenderly, he lifted his gaze. His face—already stained with the blood of Bai Yi and Zhou Gong—was an eerie contrast to the calmness in his eyes as he looked past Liao Ke...

...straight at Lu Yizhan.

Lu Yizhan, weakly propped up against his heavy sword, met his gaze without surprise. Blood drenched half his face, yet he smiled. As if he had expected this all along.

"It's really you," Lu Yizhan murmured. "You never make a losing deal."

"I took three of your players. You took four of mine."

In the Spectator Pool

Wang Shun watched in stunned silence as Liao Ke's name blinked out of the leaderboard. The blood still dripping from his severed throat on the big screen made it feel far too real.

Wang Shun swallowed hard. "Three... three for four..." he stammered.

Just a minute ago, he'd thought Bai Liu's team was doomed—a five-for-one trade at best.

Now?

Their tactician had turned the tide, eliminating three opponents in a single, calculated sweep.

For a moment, the arena was eerily still. Then—

The crowd erupted.

A deafening roar of cheers, screams, and fists pounding against seats filled the stadium.

Countless voices, hoarse with adrenaline and awe, chanted the same name.

"BAI LIU!!!"

Qiao Mu Private High School

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

"The Reverse God is running low on life now—Bai Liu is about to ride the wave!" The host raised his microphone, voice bursting with excitement. "Is he about to pull off a miracle and wipe out the top-ranked team all at once?!"

Then, his tone shifted—almost sympathetic, yet carrying an unmistakable note of amusement. "But unfortunately, that's impossible."

The host's smile deepened as he continued, "Bai Liu himself should be the next one eliminated from the competition."

"The Inquisitor of the Gods is currently at fifteen life points, and Bai Liu—staff, rewind the footage and bring up Bai Liu's life bar in the bottom right corner of the big screen—"

The moment it appeared, the host let the silence stretch before delivering the punchline.

"—everyone, take a good look. He only has three."

The once-deafening cheers for Bai Liu faltered, fading into uneasy murmurs as realization settled in. Spectators sank back into their seats, stunned.

One viewer sneered. "That's it? I thought it was impressive, but in the end, it's just a three-for-four trade that turned into a four-for-four draw."

"Leaving a roaming player on the field at the end… and still losing?"

Another rolled their eyes. "This guy has been pulling these flashy, pointless tactics since he was a rookie. How is he still playing in the playoffs? I've been sick of him from the start. Why the hell is he still around? How is he not dead yet?"

"I don't want to see this kind of player in the finals. It's boring—it makes me not want to bet."

At the front row, Daniel leaned against the railing, lazily twirling his sniper rifle between his fingers. His ears twitched at the comments, his narrowed eyes gleaming with irritation. Without hesitation, he reached for his gun.

Before he could fully draw it, a hand clamped down on the back of his neck.

"This is a playoff game," Cen Buming said coolly, effortlessly restraining him. "Unless you want to get written up for misconduct, control yourself."

Daniel clicked his tongue in annoyance, but the rifle spun back into place. "Tsk. So I can't even shoot a spectator in the playoffs?"

"Oh, you can." Cen Buming didn't bat an eye. "You'll just get a demerit, lose your standing, and never see your godfather on the field again. You'll be stuck watching him through a TV screen for the rest of your life."

Daniel's fingers froze mid-spin. He exhaled sharply, then slumped back, resting his chin on his hand as he stared at Bai Liu's image on the big screen. His apple-green eyes glowed with a strange, feverish light, his lips curving into a fascinated smile.

"President," he mused, "what do you think my Godfather would say about me now?"

Cen Buming's gaze flicked to the tie Daniel wore—just a little too small for him—then to the damp curls clinging to his fingers, and finally to the bandages wrapped around his sniper rifle.

All three had been acquired after Daniel had held three spectators at gunpoint for daring to grab Bai Liu's personal belongings, all while smiling and exchanging what could only be described as "friendly" words.

Daniel asked again, voice tinged with anticipation—almost childlike. "What kind of godson do you think my godfather sees me as?"

Expressionless, Cen Buming withdrew his hand from Daniel's neck. He wiped his palm clean with a tissue, as if it had been tainted.

—A deranged one.

Meanwhile, the host resumed his analysis.

"It looks like Bai Liu has the upper hand… but with only three life points left, that's misleading."

"The Reverse God is notorious for his defensive abilities and survival skills. In this scenario, if he makes a move, Bai Liu will be eliminated first—meaning both teams will be left with only one player each. A four-for-four trade."

"But!" The host's voice sharpened, drawing the audience back in. "The Wandering Circus will be left without a tactician!"

"A match without a tactician is practically over before it starts. Even if Mu Sicheng—the only one left on the field—has 87 life points, nearly seven or eight times that of the Reverse God, it won't matter."

"The Reverse God is not just a strong player—he's an elite tactician and an exceptional game decoder. Personally, I don't believe Mu Sicheng will be able to take him down, even if he's barely hanging on."

The host raised a hand and gestured toward the large screen, where Lu Yizhan's player stats were magnified for all to see.

"Because we all know the Reverse God's intelligence stat—"

With an air of exaggerated reverence, he grinned and pointed at the screen.

"—The highest in the game. A solid 96."

Liu Jiayi scoffed from the sidelines, unimpressed. "That idiot must have bet on the Reverse God. He's obviously leading the audience into placing bets on him too."

Her expression darkened as she glanced at the big screen, where Bai Liu stood facing Lu Yizhan. "But… he's not wrong. Taking Lu Yizhan out quickly is going to be difficult."

She hesitated, eyes narrowing at the life counter next to Bai Liu's system panel.

"And..."

Her lips pressed together.

"If Lu Yizhan decides to kill Bai Liu, there's nothing we can do to stop him. My cooldown isn't over yet—I already used my antidote on Mu Sicheng. Bai Liu has no way to restore his life points."

Wang Shun's hands were ice-cold with nerves. "How is he down to three? He doesn't even look injured! Why didn't he just use the antidote on himself?!"

If Bai Liu gets killed, like the host predicted—then what? What's the point of having just Mu Sicheng left on the field?!

Could he even beat the Reverse God alone?!

"Because Bai Liu is gambling."

Mu Ke's voice was tense as he stared at the screen.

"If he hadn't given the antidote to Mu Sicheng, Mu Sicheng would've been taken out instantly by Liao Ke. Bai Liu needed at least two of our players on the field.

"So he bet those three life points on saving Mu Sicheng."

"Bai Liu's only chance of winning," Tang Erda murmured, exhaling slowly, "depends on Lu Yizhan."

His gaze locked onto the screen.

"Lu Yizhan can't see Bai Liu's panel. He doesn't know Bai Liu only has three life points left."

Tang Erda clenched his right hand into a fist.

"It all depends on whether Lu Yizhan realizes the truth—"

"That Bai Liu in front of him can be eliminated with a single hit."

"If he figures it out..."

The air grew heavy.

The next move would decide everything.

A psychological battle between Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan had just begun.

But these two have been friends for ten years. They know each other too well—how could Bai Liu possibly fool Lu Yizhan?

"They're moving!" The host's voice cracked with excitement. "Bai Liu doesn't care that he only has three life points—he's walking straight toward the Reverse God!"

"Let's see how the Inquisitors against God will respond!"

Wang Shun felt another wave of nausea rise in his throat. He looked away from the screen, his heart pounding wildly. A bitter smile tugged at his lips—he was seriously going to need a motion sickness bag for the next Bai Liu game.

Even with only three life points left, Bai Liu was still taking the initiative against the top-ranked tactician in the entire game.

It was obviously just a bluff, a desperate play—an empty city strategy made to look like a real attack.

...No wonder Charles, the infamous gambler, had taken a liking to him.

Bai Liu had always been the kind of player who placed wild, reckless bets—and yet remained eerily calm even when the odds were stacked against him.

"The Judge against the Gods has moved! He's raising his heavy sword!!!" The host practically roared, his face flushed with anticipation. "Will this be the moment that decides the match?!"

He was midway through his shout, eyes bulging with emotion, about to declare—[The Reverse God has killed Bai Liu with one strike!]—

And then, an explosion erupted on the big screen.

The entire arena fell silent.

A girl appeared out of nowhere.

With a single sweeping motion, she cleared the entire area. She flung her empty pockets to the side, eyes blazing, and without a hint of hesitation, took two quick steps back before launching forward——and kicked the Reverse God straight in the waist.

The impact was brutal.

Caught completely off guard, the Reverse God let out a strangled cry, a sharp crack sounding from his ribs as he was sent tumbling across the grass, his heavy sword slipping from his grasp. Gritting his teeth, he stretched out a hand, bracing himself to rise.

The host choked on his words like a strangled goose. A dry, stunned sound escaped his throat: "What the hell—who is this NPC?!"

On the Big Screen.

Bai Liu, battered and bruised, watched impassively as Fang Dian grabbed Lu Yizhan by the collar and yanked him up like a misbehaving child before turning to walk away.

"Still trying to run? Stay put." Fang Dian crossed her arms, eyes sweeping over the two men with a sharp, no-nonsense glare. "Hands behind your head."

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan hesitated for only a fraction of a second before instinctively crouching down, heads bowed, hands laced behind their heads.

—Exactly the posture of two criminals caught red-handed.

Mu Sicheng stood frozen in disbelief. He stared at Fang Dian like she was some kind of divine entity—the Buddha who had finally subdued the havoc-wreaking Monkey King.

Fang Dian, sensing another presence, glanced at Mu Sicheng. Her sharp eyes narrowed as she assessed him from head to toe, a thoughtful expression crossing her face.

The weight of that look alone was enough to make Mu Sicheng's survival instincts kick in.

Without thinking, he immediately crouched down in the same position as Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan.

A few beats of silence.

Mu Sicheng, belatedly realizing what he'd just done: "....."

Fang Dian didn't even blink at his reaction. Instead, her lips curled into a grin, flashing her teeth as she waved dismissively behind her. "If you're just passing by, keep moving, class is in session. I'll handle the clean-up."

Mu Sicheng swallowed hard, a chill running down his spine as he glanced at the two "criminals" crouched in front of Fang Dian—Lu Yizhan and Bai Liu, both tacticians of the highest caliber.

...She was using words like clean up for them?

What a terrifying woman.

Fang Dian squatted down as well, extending a single finger to poke Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan on the forehead. She sneered.

"Well, well. You both really know how to use me, huh?"

She turned to Lu Yizhan first, eyes narrowing. "You. Lu Yizhan.

"You've never been nervous in your entire life—not even when giving speeches in front of thousands of people. And suddenly, today, you're ‘nervous’ and conveniently ask me to run across town to buy you some obscure, dirt-cheap energy drink that just happens to be unavailable on campus?

"So you could get me out of the way while you and Bai Liu duked it out?"

Her voice trailed off ominously.

Lu Yizhan flinched. His shoulders hunched, his head dipping lower as he muttered a sincere, guilty, "...Sorry."

Bai Liu, utterly unfazed, fanned the flames with a casual remark: "Wow. Lu Yizhan actually dared to order you around. How bold."

Fang Dian shot him an unimpressed look. "And you have the nerve to talk."

Her gaze sharpened as she jabbed a finger at Bai Liu’s forehead. "After getting your ass handed to you by Lu Yizhan, you deliberately brought me back here as backup, didn’t you?

"Every time you lose to him, you come crying to me, asking me to beat him up so he’ll think twice before doing it again.

"You're eighteen. Can you please learn how to lose gracefully?"

Bai Liu’s gaze drifted off to the side. "It’s only fair. If someone keeps making my life difficult, shouldn’t I be allowed to return the favor?"

Fang Dian sighed, pressing a finger to Bai Liu’s furrowed brow before shaking her head.

Her lips quirked up into a bright, exasperated smile.

"Bai Liu. When are you ever going to grow up?"

Chapter End Notes

Youhou!!!! Fang Dian

Qiao Mu Private High School

"Tell me, you two." Fang Dian couldn't help but laugh, resting her chin in her hand as she taunted Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan, who were crouched in a row before her. "What was so serious that you couldn't just talk it out? You had to fight, huh?"

"Two grown men, one swinging a broom, the other flailing a mop, brawling in front of the entire school—don't you have any shame? What is this, kindergarten?"

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan, heads bowed, responded in unison with a silent thump.

In the game, NPCs perceive players' actions through a special filter—one that rationalizes their behavior in ways that make sense within the copy's world.

For instance, if a player suddenly attacked another, an NPC might see it as a minor scuffle rather than a violent fight to the death. If a player died, the system would seamlessly erase their presence, treating them as if they'd simply transferred out of school.

So, by now, Liu Jiayi, Tang Erda, Bai Jiamu, and Bai Yi—having all been "killed" from the copy—were likely perceived by the NPCs as temporary transfer students who had already moved on.

Every experienced player understood these mechanics, but...

Bai Liu’s gaze flickered down to the whip in his hand. Then to the heavy sword Lu Yizhan was hiding behind his back, his ears burning red with embarrassment. His expression froze for a split second.

...So the system had rationalized his whip as a mop and Lu Yizhan’s sword as a broom?

Did that mean that, to all the student NPCs, Bai Liu had dramatically flung a mop into the stands to challenge Lu Yizhan—who had then brandished a broom and joined him on stage, shouting dramatic one-liners?

...This was humiliating.

Without a word, Lu Yizhan calmly let go of his sword. Bai Liu smoothly put away his whip. Then, as if nothing had happened, they both turned to look at Fang Dian.

Lu Yizhan—his right cheek smeared with blood—laughed heartily and threw an arm around Bai Liu's shoulder. "Haha, it's nothing serious! We just got a little worked up after losing a game."

Bai Liu, bruised and bloodied, his shirt slightly torn and stained red, nodded without a trace of guilt. "Just some friendly competition. Totally normal. Nothing to worry about."

From the sidelines, Mu Sicheng, still crouched in horror, screamed internally.

LOOK AT YOURSELVES! WHO WOULD BELIEVE THAT?!

A "friendly match" wouldn't have nearly sliced my neck open as collateral damage!

Fang Dian nodded, clapping her hands as she stood up. "Well, it's good you two made up." She smiled, dusting off her hands. "I'll go grab your stuff—got some popsicles along with the drinks."

Mu Sicheng watched in stunned silence as she left, his mind spiraling.

She actually believed them?!

His eye twitched. This had to be the NPC filter at work.

As soon as Fang Dian turned her head, Lu Yizhan, who had been crouching on the ground, immediately averted his gaze to the floor and raised the heavy sword he had just put down.

Bai Liu, holding his bone whip in one hand, slid it down against the blade of the heavy sword, while his knee swiftly met Lu Yizhan's left kick.

Both moved with remarkable speed, as though they shared some unspoken understanding. Almost as soon as Fang Dian stood up and turned her head, they struck in near-perfect silence, the clash of the heavy sword and bone whip sparking brilliantly.

Fang Dian walked over to the plastic bag she had tossed aside, then turned back, saying, "They're a bit melted. Are you still eating?"

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan instantly withdrew their weapons, both returning to their previous positions, casually hooking shoulders and looking at Fang Dian with friendly expressions.

Lu Yizhan smiled at Fang Dian and gave Bai Liu a hearty pat on the shoulder. "Of course, I'll eat what you bought!"

Mu Sicheng, watching the exchange, was left almost dumbfounded. He had seen Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan appear friendly and calm, but secretly, they had exchanged several blows and were ready to kill each other.

Is this what they call hypocrisy and acting by top tacticians?

Fang Dian, unaware of Mu Sicheng's internal turmoil, grinned and said, "I only bought two popsicles, but they come in pairs, so we can share them among the four of us." She handed one to Lu Yizhan. "Since you and Bai Liu have made up, do you mind sharing this one?"

"You're both long-time friends," she continued, glancing at Lu Yizhan with a soft smile. "Don't let a game win or loss get in the way. Bai Liu was raised by you, and you're like a brother to him."

Lu Yizhan hesitated for a moment, slowly shifting his gaze to the popsicle Fang Dian handed him.

It was a cheap, 50-cent popsicle, wrapped in paper and dripping as it melted. The taste was sugary and reminiscent of the cheapest popsicles from their high school days.

The smell was familiar to both Lu Yizhan and Bai Liu—the unmistakable scent of the simplest popsicle from the local kiosk.

Fang Dian handed it to him with an unspoken tenderness in her eyes, reflecting Lu Yizhan's bewilderment.

"And don't be so afraid of losing to Bai Liu," she added. "It's just a game between friends. If you lose, you lose nothing."

"When has Bai Liu actually won something from you?" she asked with a lighthearted tone.

Lu Yizhan paused for a moment, taking the popsicle and tearing open the wrapping to reveal two sticky, white popsicles, both melting and dripping with water.

The popsicles were frozen together in the middle but could easily be broken apart, looking like two brothers—hence the name "brother popsicles."

With a soft "chomp," Lu Yizhan broke the popsicle in half and handed the other piece to Bai Liu, who accepted it after a brief pause.

The two men, bruised and bloodied in their school uniforms, sat side by side in the chaos of the playground, each holding a popsicle stick in their left hand, silently biting into their treats.

None of them spoke, the only sound being the quiet crunch of the popsicles.

Lu Yizhan's eyes squinted as a soft summer breeze tousled their hair, lifting the dust and blood from their faces.

In this world, despite the looming threat of the evil god he was about to confront, and the constant worry over the eccentric little brat beside him, Lu Yizhan felt at peace. Surrounded by his ordinary girlfriend, Fang Dian, and his ordinary best friend, Bai Liu, he lived a simple life, free of complications, and would die a simple, happy death.

It was as if all the burdens, all the games that had torn him apart, had never existed.

Lu Yizhan closed his eyes, the weight of his thoughts heavy on him.

Fang Dian, sitting between them with a popsicle in hand, leaned back and looked up at the sky. She held Bai Liu in one arm and Lu Yizhan in the other, chewing slowly as she slurred, "I just gave one to Mu Sicheng. So, what are you two still squatting here talking about?"

Bai Liu turned his head slightly, chewing on his popsicle stick, and asked, "Talking about the game. Do you think there's a way to win the game 100% of the time?"

Fang Dian waved her hand dismissively. "Not in that way."

"But you win every time," Bai Liu said calmly. "Lu Yizhan and I have never beaten you."

Fang Dian shrugged with a cheeky grin. "Because I cheat."

"I play all the games with you guys, but I've buried a lot of hidden points, things only I know about. It's like playing with a secret pass—how can you beat me?"

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan were both stunned.

"You cheat?!" Lu Yizhan exclaimed, his voice filled with disbelief. "It's just a little game between us. Do you really have to cheat?"

Fang Dian spread her hands, smirking. "See, I'm just taking advantage of that mentality. It's second nature for me to cheat, which is why you can never win."

Bai Liu paused, deep in thought.

He had wondered many times why Fang Dian always beat him, but never considered that it might be because she was actually cheating.

"I never expected that," Bai Liu admitted.

Fang Dian took another bite of her popsicle, chewing lazily. "Cheating is the easiest way to win a game. It's better to make the rules of the game than to follow them. You all are smart, but there's one thing about me that beats you every time."

She shifted the topic. "So, what do you think is the best way to cheat in the world of gaming?"

Bai Liu looked at her directly. "What is it?"

Fang Dian rolled her eyes playfully, her smile mischievous. "You find someone who can't stand to see you lose, then use their trust in you to exploit their emotional weakness, and win."

"That's why I always win against you. It's just too easy to cheat and win based on your trust in me."

Bai Liu went silent, and Lu Yizhan kept his head down, contemplative.

"But then," Fang Dian continued, gazing up at the clear blue sky, her voice softening, "in my opinion, winning or losing a game between friends doesn't change the relationship."

"At worst, it might test the strength of your bond, but it won't break it."

She paused, as if a sudden thought occurred to her. "Oh, right. I almost forgot. I came to deliver a message from the headmaster."

Her expression froze for a moment, then she looked at them with a serious expression. "You've been punished with confinement and toilet cleaning for allegedly fighting in public."

Qiao Mu Private High School

"Grrrrr! It's not fair!" Mu Sicheng complained sullenly as he mopped the floor. "Why should the poor students get punished for fighting and clean the toilets, while the exceptional ones only have to be locked up on the hill?"

"You're an experimental student, and you'll only be confined for two more days." Bai Liu's tone was light as he wrung out his handkerchief. He was so used to these situations that he didn't think it mattered. He lifted his eyes to glance at Mu Sicheng, who had been cleaning toilets for what seemed like forever, cursing under his breath. "You don't have to clean toilets with me."

Mu Sicheng stopped mopping, propping the mop handle on the floor. He looked at Bai Liu with a questioning expression. "[Bai Liu, are you sick?] "I'm going to be comfortably confined, and I'm just going to leave you here to clean the entire school's toilets by myself?"

Bai Liu met his gaze and wisely swallowed the "ahem" that was about to escape his lips.

"You're my boss!" Mu Sicheng said incredulously. "How can you just let the boss get punished alone?"

"Whatever the punishment is, I'm definitely with you!"

Bai Liu was quiet for a moment, looking away. "As you wish."

He left Mu Sicheng, who was swearing while cleaning, to continue scrubbing the entire toilet with a quick and efficient rhythm. It was clear he had cleaned these filthy toilets a thousand times before.

Mu Sicheng, who was struggling to clean the toilets with none of the skill Bai Liu had, looked up in awe. "You're so good at cleaning toilets."

Bai Liu put the mop in the bucket, picked it up, and walked out of the toilet with a faint smile. "The class teacher probably thinks I enjoy cleaning toilets."

Mu Sicheng paused, dumbfounded for a moment. Then he quickly realized what Bai Liu meant, and his anger flared up. "Damn, this teacher is sick, isn't she? Is she trying to screw you over?"

"I can't say it was intentional." Bai Liu responded evenly. "It's just that I keep breaking the rules, and she has a good reason to punish me."

"Breaking the rules?" Mu Sicheng was puzzled. "What could you possibly do, you're just a high school student?"

"The things I've done should be catching up with me soon." Bai Liu stopped at the door of the toilet, his eyes catching sight of a girl's school uniform skirt peeking out from the corner. She looked slightly flustered, as if she had been caught in a rare moment of hesitation.

Bai Liu turned to Mu Sicheng, abruptly asking, "When you were in high school, did you ever get chased by a girl?"

Mu Sicheng grinned confidently. "Of course, I've been chased! I'm so handsome!"

"So how did you turn them down?" Bai Liu sidled up to Mu Sicheng with a mischievous smile.

Mu Sicheng rubbed his chin thoughtfully. "I never really turned them down... they didn't seem to like me directly. It felt more like they just admired the idea of a handsome guy."

Bai Liu's expression went blank. "...Really?"

He was tempted to ask, If these girls never said anything, what made you so sure they liked you?

"Why are you asking this all of a sudden?" Mu Sicheng asked curiously. His expression shifted to something narrower, suspicion creeping in. "You didn't get chased by a girl in high school, did you?"

"Almost," Bai Liu admitted calmly. He spoke gently, his voice smooth. "She offered me a million a year to be her boyfriend until she got bored of me."

"What?!" Mu Sicheng exclaimed in horror. "That's basically a contract!"

"Who is this girl?! The nerve of her!"

Bai Liu slowly looked up, his gaze drifting toward the toilet door.

There, standing in the doorway where she had been hiding, was a girl. She had clearly overheard Bai Liu's words of rejection.

"I don’t understand." Hou Tong’s voice was soft and nasally, and her eyes were slightly red, as if she had been crying. She clenched the side of her skirt nervously. "Why don’t you like me?"

Bai Liu’s voice remained calm. "I don’t understand why you like me."

"I’m a poor student, an orphan from the orphanage. I’ve been punished countless times. Everyone in my class avoids me, and when I first started hanging out with you, it was for your money. I come from a completely different world than you. I’m not the type of person you usually like."

Bai Liu walked up, washed his hands, and took a tissue from his pocket, offering it to Hou Tong, who was now quietly crying. His tone remained light.

"Your feelings are so inexplicable. Can you tell me what exactly it is about me that you like?"

"Because you’re just delightful!" Hou Tong cried, taking the tissue from Bai Liu. She looked away, her face flushed with embarrassment, as if she didn’t want him to see her humiliation. "You’re the first boy I’ve liked this much since high school. I don’t even know how you can be so obnoxious about it."

She paused, wiping her tears, and continued.

"That's not how Fang Dian described you."

"She said you play games and cheat when you lose, that you do things carefully, you remember those who are kind to you, and that although you seem cold, you're actually a very affectionate person who remembers the good in others."

"You and Fang Dian must be close friends, that's why you're fooled by her sweet talk," Bai Liu replied calmly. "I'm not at all like she says I am."

"Who's friends with that Fang Dian woman?" Hou Tong snapped, her frustration evident as she stamped her feet. She turned around, tears in her eyes, and looked at Bai Liu. "She's the woman I hate the most!"

"She's so good at everything. Since I met her, I can't beat her in studies, volleyball, or looks!" Hou Tong wailed. "And if I can't even beat her in having a boyfriend, then what’s left?"

"She's better than me at everything and keeps flaunting it..."

Hou Tong covered her face in despair, squatting down and hugging her knees as she cried, "I've never felt this humiliated in my life."

Bai Liu: "..."

The real reason for his perpetual "peachiness" in high school suddenly became clear.

A dumbfounded Mu Sicheng: "..."

"You..." Bai Liu asked with deliberate calm, turning to Hou Tong, "Why would you think that if I were your boyfriend, I'd be better than Fang Dian's boyfriend?"

Hou Tong looked up at him, her tear-streaked face softening slightly. "Because Fang Dian always said her boyfriend, Lu Yizhan, was the best man in the world. I thought if I found someone better than him, I'd win."

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow. "So, you think I'm a better man than Lu Yizhan?"

"No," Hou Tong huffed, recalling Fang Dian's words. "Fang Dian said her boyfriend was the best man in the world, and I couldn't beat anyone else. So, the only way to beat her was..."

"By finding the worst man in the world to be my boyfriend!" she said, shaking her fist in determination. "Fang Dian said you were the one with the potential to be the strongest bad guy and beat Lu Yizhan, so I had to chase you!"

Bai Liu: "..."

Fang Dian, this woman, is as good at manipulating women as she is at manipulating men.

Mu Sicheng, utterly bewildered, let out a confused "huh?"

Bai Liu's gaze softened as he bent slightly to meet Hou Tong's eyes. He spoke with quiet intensity, "Are you really ready to fall for the 'worst man in the world'?"

"I'm a bad man," he continued, "and if you insist on getting involved with me, there's a good chance I'll take everything from you—body and heart."

Hou Tong looked at Bai Liu, his wounds, the faint red marks beneath his eyes, his bloodied lips, his dark eyes, and the subtle, almost intoxicating aura he emitted. For a moment, her mind went blank, and she stammered.

"F-Fang Dian said that if I could maintain my composure while being with you, I'd never fall for another bad man again..." she whispered, her face flushed. "So being with you before anyone else is... the best deal I could ever get."

Bai Liu leaned closer, a soft, almost flirtatious laugh in his voice. "The best deal, you say?"

"Yeah..." Hou Tong barely managed to get the words out, her face turning red as she avoided his gaze. "I was going to offer you a million a year, so you'd talk to me until I was eighty. That's only sixty-two years, so for $62 million, I'd get the boy I like... and a lesson."

Bai Liu's eyes flickered, raising an eyebrow. "Did Fang Dian tell you all this?"

"Yeah..." Hou Tong mumbled, still blushing. "She said I could easily be tricked by men, but if I learned from you, I'd never be fooled again. You're the most advanced bad man, and if I learn your ways, I'd never fall for someone less clever than you. I could protect myself and my family's business."

Bai Liu gave her a nonchalant glance before speaking softly, as if coaxing her: "What else did Fang Dian tell you about me? Please, Hou Tong, tell me everything."

With a dreamy look in her eyes, Hou Tong replied, "She also said you liked horror games. I've bought a lot, but haven't finished any of them yet." She whispered, "She said if I wanted to win you over, money would help, but I don't think I'll use that anymore."

"Thank you, Hou Tong." Bai Liu straightened, his expression polite but detached. "I need to go clean the other toilets now. We'll talk later."

As Bai Liu turned to leave, Hou Tong, still lost in thought, called after him, "What about that million-dollar deal? Is it still on?"

Bai Liu paused, glancing back. "Now that I'm worth a million, I don't think I can accept it."

"Then name your price!" Hou Tong insisted, undeterred. "I can offer more!"

"Name my price..." Bai Liu half-turned, smiling faintly as he tilted his head. "How much you offer depends on how much the other guy is willing to pay to compete for me."

"If the price is the same, I would’ve chosen to sell myself to him!"

"Sold to who?" Hou Tong stomped her feet in frustration. "Who else from the volleyball team made you an offer behind my back?"

Qiao Mu Private High School

Mu Sicheng looked at Hou Tong, who was stamping her feet in frustration, tears welling up in her eyes. With the gaze of a warrior, he raised two fingers in a salute before stepping around her to chase after Bai Liu, who had already gone ahead.

"Bai Liu, don’t go alone—wait for me!"

It was 9:30 p.m. The students had finished their evening study sessions, and the building they had cleaned was now empty. Bai Liu walked down the dimly lit corridor, his gaze drifting outside. The dormitory buildings in the distance were sparsely illuminated, suggesting that not many students lived there.

"Wow, this school is packed, but the dorms aren’t even full?" Mu Sicheng followed Bai Liu’s gaze, curiosity piqued.

Bai Liu withdrew his gaze. "They’re not."

Most students at Qiao Mu Private High School preferred not to live in the dorms. Either they attended as day students, picked up by their parents every evening, or their families rented or bought houses nearby.

For many of these students, their entire household seemed to revolve around them, with their families bending over backward to provide the best conditions. The idea of them having to live in a dormitory was considered a disgrace.

The ones who did stay in the dorms were typically from more modest backgrounds—students who prioritized their academics above all else. Bai Liu’s dormmates were no exception.

They didn’t openly antagonize him like others at school did, but their dislike was apparent in a quieter, more passive-aggressive manner.

Whenever Bai Liu touched anything in their shared space, it would mysteriously disappear or get scrubbed down.

For example, if his towel so much as brushed against another person's, that student would wordlessly throw their own towel away, sometimes even doing it in front of him, before coldly stating:

"It’s dirty. I need to buy a new one."

As if discarding a towel made them somehow superior to him.

Bai Liu didn't mind. He saw through their behavior immediately. The more powerful students at school hated him loudly and openly. His dormmates—top students from average backgrounds—wanted to align themselves with that hatred to feel superior. But they were also afraid of the consequences if something serious happened to him.

So they settled for this—petty, posturing hostility.

It was a weak, vain display. But Bai Liu knew exactly how to handle it.

He would accidentally brush against their most expensive clothes and electronics and say, "Oops, I got your computer dirty. I'll throw it away for you so you can buy a new one."

At that, their carefully curated arrogance would crack.

Panic-stricken, they'd rush to stop him, scrambling for excuses.

"It's fine even if it's dirty!"
"I'll clean it myself!"
"You barely even touched it—it's not dirty!"

Bai Liu would feign innocence, "Oh, but I touched it again just now. And again. Now it's definitely dirty. I really should throw it away."

Watching their expressions shift between desperation and barely concealed rage was endlessly amusing.

That was how things were—until something happened later that year. After that, Bai Liu never stayed in the dorms again.

"Eh, now that Reverse God is on the mountain, we can't get up there because of our identity settings," Mu Sicheng muttered, a rare note of frustration in his voice. "But Gaucho Lake is up there too. If he plays it smart and there's moonlight tonight, he could jump into the lake and clear the game just like that."

"Is there any way for us to get up there?"

"There is." Bai Liu's gaze flickered slightly. "And that way will be coming to us soon."

Mu Sicheng blinked. "Huh? What do you mean?"

Bai Liu paused before answering. "Someone will be coming for me soon. They'll go out of their way to force me up the mountain."

Mu Sicheng's eyes widened. "Who?!" He suddenly straightened, then elbowed Bai Liu in the ribs with a knowing smirk. "Ohh, is it that girl from earlier?"

"No." Bai Liu denied it flatly.

Mu Sicheng frowned, but after a moment, his face lit up with sudden realization. "Wait—then it's Fang Dian!"

"No." Bai Liu shook his head again.

Mu Sicheng hesitated, then grinned slyly. "It's definitely Fang Dian, isn't it?"

Before Bai Liu could respond, Mu Sicheng spotted something ahead and let out an excited yell. He grabbed Bai Liu's arm and shook it frantically.

"There she is! Look! She's coming for you!"

At the far end of the corridor, in the shadows near the stairwell, a girl with a long ponytail stood leaning against the wall. As if she had heard her name, she stepped forward into the moonlight with a cheeky grin.

She raised a hand in greeting, her voice casual and playful:

"I snuck down the mountain to find you, Bai Liu!"

Fang Dian walked up to Bai Liu, greeted Mu Sicheng, then circled around him, nodding in approval. She lifted her chin and said, "You're looking pretty good—better than Mr. Lu, who's still locked up on the hill."

That was obvious, Mu Sicheng thought. Bai Liu had already used multiple antidotes from a couple of CD resets, restoring his health to near full. Of course, he was in better shape than Lu Yizhan, who had been beaten up by Bai Liu.

"It's good that you're okay." Fang Dian clapped her hands together. "I'll head back now."

"Eh, wait!" Mu Sicheng called after her. He hesitated for a moment, then asked, "Sister Dian, can you sneak Bai Liu and me up the mountain?"

Fang Dian didn’t even bother asking Bai Liu what he intended to do. She immediately started thinking, then answered seriously, "I don’t think so. The security on the mountain is really tight. Mr. Lu has tried bribing people countless times just to get in and see us, but it never worked. Only students and teachers assigned to the mountain can go up. And it's almost ten o’clock—once the big iron gate closes, only teachers have the key. The security guards don’t even have one, so there's no way for us students to open it."

Mu Sicheng let out a disappointed groan.

"It’s late, the moon is high—why do you want to go up there?" Fang Dian smirked. "You’re not thinking about testing the waters in Gaucho Lake, are you?"

Mu Sicheng shuddered, a chill running down his spine. "No, no way!"

Why did she have to guess right on the first try?!

"Then there’s nothing else to discuss. The gate's about to close." Fang Dian turned to leave again. "I’m heading back."

"Wait a minute." Bai Liu’s voice stopped her. He smiled faintly. "Let’s talk about Hou Tong’s 62 million, shall we?"

Fang Dian visibly stiffened before abruptly picking up her pace, striding away with a snort. "Have fun scrubbing toilets!"

Bai Liu watched her retreat with an expression of mild amusement. His voice, however, remained steady and indifferent. "Fang—Dian—"

Fang Dian’s footsteps faltered. She exhaled heavily, turned back with a look of resignation, and muttered under her breath, "...I can’t believe Hou Tong actually bought into that nonsense. I was just joking."

"Joking?" Bai Liu’s tone remained flat. "You planned out my entire life for the next eighty years with that 62 million."

Fang Dian sighed again. She leaned against the railing, resting her chin on her hand, and looked at Bai Liu. "Well, didn’t you agree to it?"

She studied him for a moment before continuing with a knowing smile. "You always say you love money, that you’d do anything for it —but when a girl genuinely offers you both her heart and her fortune, you won't take it."

"You don't actually care about the 62 million," Fang Dian chattered. "I think you just don't want to be the bad guy. You can tell that Hou Tong is sincere, and you don't want to trample on her feelings to get the money."

Bai Liu rejected her assumption without hesitation. "That's not the reason."

"Then what is?" Fang Dian challenged, her gaze locking onto him. "What other reason could there be for an eighteen-year-old you to refuse 62 million dollars being handed to him on a silver platter?"

Bai Liu paused. Something about her question felt... off.

...She had a point. Why had he refused Hou Tong back then?

Now, he had a reason—he had something worth more to him than 62 million.

A lizard.

A lizard that could make him turn down that amount of money.

But why had he refused at eighteen?

At that time, there shouldn't have been a single reason for him to reject such an offer.

Fang Dian studied his silent expression and narrowed her eyes, her voice taking on a teasing edge. "There's something really strange about those two missing ice-cream sticks..."

She leaned in slightly, her grin widening. "Bai Liu, did someone come along who made you give up the 62 million?"

Her eyes gleamed as she closed the distance between them. "Who do you like, Bai Liu?"

10:30 PM.

Fang Dian didn't get the answer she wanted from Bai Liu, and by then, she had no choice but to rush back up the mountain before the gates closed at ten.

After hurriedly scrubbing a few toilets, Mu Sicheng and Bai Liu stopped cleaning. They waited until they were sure the NPC guards patrolling the school building had left, then made their way back to Bai Liu's classroom instead of the dormitory.

In the empty room, Mu Sicheng yawned and slumped over the desk behind Bai Liu, exhaustion weighing on him. His eyelids drooped as he muttered, "Bai Liu, why are we in the classroom instead of going back to the dorm?"

"Waiting for an opportunity to get up the mountain," Bai Liu replied calmly, flipping open the sketchbook he had taken back from Xu Wei that morning.

He used to sketch and record whatever interesting things happened each day. In a way, these pages were fragments of his memory.

The puppy line in the drawings, the missing ice-cream sticks, his rejection of Hou Tong—these were all inconsistencies, gaps in his recollections.

Maybe the answer lay in this sketchbook.

The classroom was dark, the only illumination coming from the pale moonlight spilling through the windows. Mu Sicheng soon drifted into sleep, sprawled across the desk. Meanwhile, Bai Liu carefully turned the pages, searching.

He flipped to the first appearance of the puppy line and then continued forward.

From the moment those lines first showed up, they were always there—clinging to Bai Liu's feet during class, resting on his pillow at night, curling into his hair when he cleaned the toilets.

He couldn't drive them away, couldn't hit them, couldn't get rid of them.

They were like a shadow, a presence that only he could see.

In the sketches, a tiny figure asked the tangled ball of puppy strings: [Why are you following me?]

Each time, the puppy-like bundle of strings gave the same response: [I don't want you to be alone.]

[My wish is for Bai Liu to never be lonely or sad. So whenever you are, I'll be here.]

[What are you?] the little figure in the sketchbook asked.

The bundle of strings tilted its head and replied: [I am a qualified souvenir.]

Qiao Mu Private High School

"And what would it take for you to get away from me?" The little man in the manuscript asked indifferently, lifting the ball of tangled puppy string out of the way.

"You like me a little," the lifted puppy ball of string replied. "And I'll stay away from you."

A string of ellipses hovered next to the villain in the draft, followed by a simple question: "Why should I like you?"

In the moonlight, the puppy in the manuscript suddenly moved, as if animated, its silvery-blue eyes gazing upward. "Because the future you likes me a lot."

The moment Bai Liu, seated on the desk, met those silver-blue eyes, everything around him fractured into shifting lines, distorting instantly. He could hear it—the sharp snap of something unfolding in his mind, like a long-forgotten memory being unsealed. And then, all at once, they came flooding back.

The floor beneath him wavered, vanishing and reappearing. The moon outside the window melted into the sun. The blackboard in front of him flickered from black to yellow. Behind him, where Mu Sicheng had been dozing, the scene shifted—now, he was surrounded by murmuring, fidgeting classmates. The air grew swelteringly hot.

Bai Liu turned his head slowly, taking in the classroom, his gaze settling on the top right corner of the blackboard—

[300 days until the entrance exams.]

He was back. His first semester of senior year. The beginning of it all.

A strange sensation crept over Bai Liu. It was as if he were stepping into his own memories from the inside, reliving them as they solidified around him. But in turn, his more recent memories faded—everything that had happened after he turned eighteen gradually becoming a blank slate.

His gaze, usually calm and sharp, grew colder, more detached, mirroring the way an eighteen-year-old Bai Liu would have truly seen the world.

The classroom buzzed with whispered conversation.

"Do you think any of those top-ranked students who just went up the hill will go to Gaucho Lake?"

"They're all academic elites. Why would they care about a place like that?"

"Not necessarily," someone argued. "What if they go to help someone else with the test questions?"

A voice, slightly louder than the rest, cut through the chatter. "What if one of these top-ranked students has a friend who needs their help?"

The speaker shot a pointed glance at Bai Liu, sitting at the front row. The boy next to him caught on and snickered, covering his mouth before waving a dismissive hand.

"Forget it. Some people couldn’t solve the original questions even if they had them in the exam room."

Another student muttered under his breath, irritation and jealousy lacing his words. "I don’t get why Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian follow him around like ghosts. And he's all smug about it too. Does he really deserve that?"

"Now that they’ve gone up the mountain, let’s see how long he can keep up that act when there’s no one left to fawn over him."

Bai Liu remained impassive.

Qiao Mu Private High School thrived on the worship of academic excellence. Naturally, students like Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian, who excelled in everything, were at the top of the social hierarchy. Both top scholars and influential students vied for their friendship.

But while Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian were friendly on the surface, they kept most people at arm’s length.

Every time they came to Bai Liu’s class to see him, they were swarmed by eager students hoping to strike up a conversation. Yet, without fail, they would smile, politely decline, and speak only with Bai Liu.

This, of course, frustrated those who had repeatedly failed to win their attention—such as the student sitting diagonally behind Bai Liu.

He wasn't particularly gifted academically. He was at Qiao Mu more for networking than for studying, always eager to ingratiate himself with influential peers. He had been trying to get close to Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian for ages—without success.

"I think Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian are only with him out of pity. They're not even from the same world—"

"Bai Liu—!!!"

A cheerful voice interrupted the murmuring.

Fang Dian appeared at the classroom door, grinning as she leaned in, winking at Bai Liu, who sat by the window. "Mr. Lu and I snuck down from the hill to find you. Come on out!"

The student who had just been whispering froze, choking on his words. His expression twisted in disbelief, as if reality had just betrayed him.

Bai Liu, meanwhile, gathered his things with practiced ease, walking past the stunned student without a glance. He approached Fang Dian with the same cold detachment.

"Let's go."

"Mr. Lu is waiting downstairs," Fang Dian said as she led the way. "I checked your schedule and saw that you have PE next. I figured you could skip it, so I came down now."

"Why?" Bai Liu asked flatly.

Fang Dian slung an arm over his shoulder, grinning. "Because Mr. Lu and I went up the mountain, and I didn’t want you getting bored down here alone, so I came to play with you."

"That’s not the real reason, is it?" Bai Liu said, unimpressed.

Fang Dian rubbed her chin. "Well, that’s my reason. But Mr. Lu... yeah, he seems to have something else on his mind."

It was a bright day. Blue skies. Green grass. The campus thrummed with the energy of students running, laughing, and enjoying their youth. The scene should have been carefree.

"Lu Yizhan!" Fang Dian called, waving.

Lu Yizhan turned his head slowly.

Deep dark circles hung under his eyes. His lips were chapped. He clutched a pile of books, his entire presence exuding exhaustion. He looked one breath away from collapsing into the dirt.

Expression vacant, voice hoarse, he let out a dazed: "...Huh?"

Bai Liu's gaze flicked over him. "How long has he been like this?"

Fang Dian shrugged. "Who knows? At least a week."

Lu Yizhan dropped onto the edge of a flower bed, sighing as Bai Liu approached. He didn't waste words. "Bai Liu, I saw your first mock exam results."

"278."

There was something fragile in Lu Yizhan's tired eyes—a glimmer of hope. "Did you mess up your answer sheet?"

Bai Liu crushed that hope in an instant. "No. I just don't know how to do it."

Lu Yizhan dragged a hand down his face, exhaling sharply. "...I see." Then, with sudden determination, he pulled out a stack of books, rifling through them.

"Here. These are my senior year notes, along with Fang Dian's from her exams."

"This one covers the simple questions that make up 80% of the test—you should be able to score decently just by reviewing these."

"This one's for medium-difficulty questions. Not a priority, but if you have time, go over the most frequently tested types."

"This is a summary of biology answer templates. Word choice matters a lot in marking, so make sure to phrase things properly, or you'll lose small points."

"Chemistry—focus on inorganic salts. Skip the complicated organic ones if you're short on time."

"For math, just nail the first conic equation. That's two easy points."

As he spoke, Lu Yizhan kept pulling out book after book, each one neatly annotated with exam strategies—some even freshly written, his watermarker ink still new.

"Is this what you've been doing all night?" Bai Liu asked softly, glancing at the thick stack of notes.

Lu Yizhan let out a tired sigh. "I didn't stay up late just for you, so don't take it to heart."

He hesitated before continuing, frustration lacing his voice. "It's mostly because I found out you scored a 278." His eyes were shadowed with exhaustion and a hint of bitterness. "I couldn't sleep. I felt terrible, so I got up and wrote down all the exam points for you."

Bai Liu: "....."

This really isn't necessary.

Lu Yizhan looked at Bai Liu with a mix of despair and fondness, letting out another weary sigh. "You're smart. You've always picked things up quickly since we were kids. You can clear the hardest horror games on your first try—so why can't you do well in school?"

"I don't think the problem is that Bai Liu can't do it." Fang Dian pressed an elbow into Lu Yizhan's shoulder, thoughtful. "I feel like he just doesn't want to learn."

Lu Yizhan pressed on. "Bai Liu, why don't you want to learn?"

Bai Liu flipped through the notes, his expression unreadable. "I never saw the need to study in high school."

Lu Yizhan was stunned. "How can there be no need? If you get good grades, you can choose the university and major you like, go to a good school, get a stable job, and live a normal, happy life."

"I don't have a favorite university or major." Bai Liu rested his chin in his hand. "Nor do I have any aspirations for the 'normal, happy life' you're talking about."

Lu Yizhan fell silent for a moment before asking, "Then what do you like?"

Bai Liu's answer was crisp. "Money."

Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, trying to reason with him. "If you study hard, you can get into a top university, specialize in something profitable, and become rich faster than most people."

"But that's the problem." Bai Liu glanced up absently. "Sure, it's a normal and legal way to make money, but it's far too inefficient for me."

He tilted his head slightly. "I'm better at something less socially acceptable—something that makes me thousands of times more money than that slow, drawn-out path."

Lu Yizhan's heart skipped a beat. His voice snapped, sharp and uncharacteristically angry. "That's enough."

For once, his usually gentle face twisted with frustration as he stood up. "You know damn well that those 'other ways' come at the cost of injury and even death for countless people. And you'd still choose that path?"

Bai Liu paused for a moment before averting his gaze. "That's none of my business."

Lu Yizhan's chest rose and fell sharply. The anger in his eyes dimmed into something much sadder. His voice was quiet. "……You just had to go against me, didn't you?"

Bai Liu opened his mouth, as if to say something. But in the end, he said nothing.

A silence settled between them.

After a long moment, Lu Yizhan wordlessly pulled out a plastic bag and handed it to Bai Liu. "Here. A popsicle. Eat it and go back to class."

His voice was steady again, but distant. "If you don't want the notes, I'll take them back to the dorm."

Then, without another word, he gathered up the papers he had spent all week working on and left without looking back.

Fang Dian watched as Bai Liu stared after him, not moving. She sighed, then reached out and tapped Bai Liu's forehead with a finger.

"You. Just admit you don't want to study."

She shook her head. "He's really worried about you."

Bai Liu lowered his gaze. "Lu Yizhan wouldn't have given up on me studying, not until we reached this point." His voice was quiet. "But I'm just not cut out for it. I don't like studying."

Fang Dian studied him for a moment. "Was that really the reason just now?" she asked. "Do you actually believe those ‘other paths’ are better than studying?"

Bai Liu didn’t answer immediately. A long silence stretched between them.

Then, finally, he murmured, "No."

"What's that about?" Fang Dian tore open a popsicle wrapper and handed it to Bai Liu. "Here, have half."

Bai Liu took it, biting into the ice as his gaze dropped. "Studying is boring." His voice was quiet but firm. "I don’t know what I want out of life, or what I’m even studying for. Forcing myself to do something I’m bad at just isn’t worth it."

"The kind of life Lu Yizhan talked about..." Bai Liu took another bite, the ice sliding down his throat, spreading a shallow coldness inside him. His voice carried the same chill. "I don’t hate it."

"But I don’t like it either."

Fang Dian asked softly, "Then what kind of life do you like?"

Bai Liu's lips rested against the popsicle stick. He paused for a long time—long enough for his lips to redden from the cold—before he finally murmured, "I don’t know."

"Then think about it some more." Fang Dian ruffled his hair, her tone as lighthearted as ever, without a trace of worry. "You’re only seventeen. You’ve got plenty of time to figure out what you want. Take it slow."

Bai Liu glanced at her. "Is it okay if I only get 278? Is it okay if I fail the college entrance exam?"

"Hmm, well..." Fang Dian propped her chin in her hands, biting at the end of her empty popsicle stick. "Maybe it's not my place as the top student to say this, but honestly? I don’t think scoring 278 is that big of a deal."

Bai Liu studied her. "Aren't you afraid that if I don’t go to university, don’t get a good job, I’ll end up going astray? Become some kind of social outcast?"

"There are so many kids in the world. Not every single one of them needs to score above 278 to be considered a good person." Fang Dian turned her head slightly, giving him a sly wink. "It's not like the kid who finishes last on the test is doomed to delinquency."

She stretched her arms and smiled at the students running across the playground. "If that were true, we could just arrest the last-place student every year and—poof! No more crime in the world."

Her voice held laughter, but her eyes were clear.

"Failing an exam doesn't mean you can't live. Even the kid who comes in last still has the right to choose what kind of life they want."

Then, suddenly, she slapped Bai Liu on the back, making him stumble. "But!" She grinned brightly. "If you haven't figured out what you want yet, you should still study hard."

Bai Liu steadied himself, raising an eyebrow. "And why is that?"

Fang Dian's voice turned serious. "Because one day, when you do find something you want—something you really, really want—you won't miss your chance just because you weren't prepared for it."

She glanced at her watch and let out a small gasp. "Whoa, it's already this late? Next class is math! I have to get back."

She started jogging back uphill but turned back briefly. "You've really upset Mr. Lu. I don't think he'll be coming down the mountain to see you anytime soon." Tossing her finished popsicle stick at Bai Liu, she waved as she ran off. "I'm prepping for a physics competition, so be a good boy and sit with your thoughts for a bit. Talk to us if you need anything!"

And with that, she was gone, leaving Bai Liu alone by the flowerbed, staring down at the two sticks in his hand.

One from Lu Yizhan.
One from Fang Dian.

Both had the words "one more" printed on them.

Bai Liu was just about to get up and leave when he noticed something.

A book.

Lu Yizhan must have left it behind in his rush.

He hesitated before picking it up and flipping it open.

It was small, filled with page after page of chemical equations. To make things easier for Bai Liu, Lu Yizhan had written concise notes beside each one—equations Bai Liu had missed before—each written in neat, careful handwriting.

Bai Liu turned to the last page and stopped.

A scholar's prayer charm was tucked inside.

It was the kind of red paper talisman the stationery shop gave away for free with a ten-yuan purchase—a cheap superstition meant for nothing but psychological comfort.

Bai Liu unfolded it.

Inside, written in Lu Yizhan's steady, powerful handwriting, was a single wish:

"I hope Bai Liu studies hard, scores at least 400, and gets to do what he likes."

Bai Liu squeezed the talisman in his hand. Slowly, he blinked. Then, just as slowly, his fingers curled around the paper.

The playground was bustling—four classes were having P.E. at the same time. The students played basketball, volleyball, table tennis, chasing each other, laughing, talking. The noise carried easily to the flowerbeds where Bai Liu sat.

He should've been part of that scene.

But whether he was in the crowd or outside of it, Bai Liu always stood apart.

And he probably would for a long time.

He slipped the notebook into his pocket and turned away from the playground. Lu Yizhan had put the rest of the notes back in his dorm —Bai Liu figured he might as well go get them.

But just as he was about to leave, something tugged at his pant leg.

Bai Liu stopped.

He looked down.

His expression stilled.

At the base of the flowerbed, something sat—something small, fluffy, and about the size of a puppy. It looked like a tangled mess of black thread, as if someone had taken a 2B pencil and scribbled random loops in midair.

A tiny, thread-like limb reached out, grabbing the hem of Bai Liu's coat.

Its face—if it had one—tilted up to look at him.

Then it made a peculiar sound, like an animal whose vocal cords hadn't fully formed.

"That popsicle you're holding—can I have one?"

Bai Liu stared at the dark mass of lines, caught in eerie silence.

Qiao Mu Private High School

Fifteen minutes later, in the boys' dormitory.
As Bai Liu walked down the dormitory corridor, the other students cast him disgusted glances before quickly looking away, distancing themselves from him. He was used to these reactions and normally ignored them, but today, his gaze subtly drifted toward their ankles.

A strange, thread-like creature—a tangle of dark, stringy lines in the shape of a puppy—was attempting to swipe at their feet with its frayed limbs.

Yet, no one else seemed to notice. The students passed by as if the creature didn’t exist.

After fifteen minutes, Bai Liu was certain: he was the only one who could see and touch the thing clinging to him. But he still wasn’t sure what it was.

He shut the door to his dormitory, peeled the squirming ball of threads off his knee, and examined it with calm scrutiny.

"Where did you come from?" Bai Liu questioned. "Why are you here, and what do you want?"

"I'm from the future," the tangle of threads answered, voice slightly muffled as Bai Liu held it in place. "I came to keep you company."

"Keep me company?" Bai Liu raised an eyebrow. "You've never been here before. Why now?"

The creature's dark eyes blinked. "Because I like you."

"I didn’t want to miss any point in your life, so I came here—to be with you."

"I don’t need company," Bai Liu said coolly, shaking the thing off. "Go back."

The mass of thread trembled slightly, then pushed against Bai Liu’s hand, resisting. Its voice sharpened.

"You’re lying."

"I exist because of your love. If you truly didn’t need me, I wouldn’t be here at all—I would have disappeared."

"But if you need me, if you like me, if you love me... I will grow. I will take shape."

A pair of dark, unfathomable eyes stared up at him.

"I will become human—because of your love."

Bai Liu remained unmoved. "I'm used to being alone. Whatever you are, go back where you came from."

The tangle of threads didn't respond, but it did grow slightly—its silent defiance written in the way it held Bai Liu's gaze.

[You're lying.]

[Because I can tell—you don't like being alone.]

Bai Liu's breathing slowed. His thoughts wavered between Can I get rid of this thing? and Am I just hallucinating?

He chose to ignore it.

"I've probably just been playing too many horror games."

"Maybe I imagined a monster I'd actually want to kill."

"Suit yourself," Bai Liu muttered, turning his attention back to the notebooks Lu Yizhan had left under his bed.

As he knelt down to retrieve them, the thread-creature clambered onto his back, wrapping two wiry limbs around his shoulders in a loose embrace—like a person hugging their lover from behind.

Bai Liu paused but didn't react.

The creature pressed its head to Bai Liu's shoulder. "What are these?"

Bai Liu ignored it.

It started again.

"What are these?"
"And what's this?"
"Is that Lu Yizhan's name?"
"Your name is Bai Liu. Why do you have his things?"

"Are you stealing them?"

It was relentless. A persistent, babbling presence, determined to wear him down.

Bai Liu exhaled slowly, rubbing his temple as a dull ache set in. "They're teaching materials. Lu Yizhan made them for me."

"Oh." The creature quieted for a second. Then, "What are teaching materials?"

Bai Liu shot it a cold glance. "Aren't you from the future? Didn't you go to high school? Don't you know what teaching materials are?"

The tangled threads shrank slightly, its dark eyes narrowing in confusion.

"Should I have gone to high school?"

"You shouldn't just go to high school," Bai Liu said flatly. "You should also get at least four hundred points and a bachelor's degree."

"...What's a bachelor's degree?" The creature looked even more lost. "I've only ever been with you. Why would I need a degree?"

"I don't want to go to high school or university. I just want to be with you."

Something in its posture shifted. It slowly turned to look at the notebooks, and a dark gleam flickered in its black eyes.

Then, in one swift motion, it raised a wiry hand and whipped the pile of teaching materials.

"You can't go to high school," it hissed. "You can't get a degree. You can only be with me—"

"Enough." Bai Liu interrupted, pinching the bridge of his nose as a sharp pang struck his head. He inhaled deeply, then exhaled in slow, measured control.

"...What is your relationship with the future me?"

The thread-creature was silent for a moment, as if considering.

Then, it answered, dead serious—

"You let me bathe with you."

Bai Liu: "..."

He stared at the tangled mass in his arms.

What kind of disgusting relationship was this?

Bai Liu returned to the classroom with his teaching aid, the ball of tangled puppy lines now slightly larger, draped over his head like an oddly shaped hat. Its dark eyes darted around, surveying the surroundings like a cautious animal.

Just as he was about to step inside, a sharp voice stopped him in his tracks.

"Bai Liu, stop right there."

Xu Wei stood at the podium, lesson plan in hand, a thin smile on her face. "Skipping my class again, huh?"

A quick glance at the tired, uninterested students scattered across the room told Bai Liu everything he needed to know. Xu Wei had hijacked their free period to lecture about the upcoming paper, and since Bai Liu hadn't been present to sit through it, he was being singled out.

"You sure are arrogant for someone who scored 278 points," Xu Wei sneered. "Just because you were shoved into this school and can't be expelled, you think you can do whatever you want?" She gave a cold laugh. "Since you don't want to listen to my class, don't. Go stand outside."

Bai Liu, unfazed, turned around and walked out as instructed. He dropped his school bag at his feet, pulled out the English notes Lu Yizhan had made for him, and started reading.

From inside the classroom, occasional bursts of laughter and snide remarks drifted out.

"If you can only manage a 45 in English, how do you expect to have a future? The world is international. You'll be dealing with elite professionals from across the globe, and you won't even be able to introduce yourself properly. 'I am Bai Liu, fine, and you?' That's about as far as you'll get."

More laughter erupted from the students.

The tip of Bai Liu's pen hovered over his notes for a fraction of a second before he continued writing, his expression unreadable.

Above him, the puppy lines shifted, its tangled form tilting forward. Dark eyes peered down at him.

"I am Spades, fine," it echoed clumsily in broken English. "And you?"

Bai Liu ignored it.

"I am Spades, fine. And you?" the puppy repeated.

"...And you?"

"...And youuuuuuuuu—!"

"I am Bai Liu, fine," Bai Liu finally replied, voice flat. "Now shut up."

Satisfied, the puppy lines went silent for a moment—only to quickly refocus on the notes in Bai Liu's hands.

"What's this?" it asked.

"English."

The tangled mass of lines seemed to process that. "Oh," it said, as if coming to a grand realization. "That's what that monster woman was talking about learning just now."

The corner of Bai Liu's lips quirked up slightly—so quickly that it might have been imagined—before his expression flattened again.

"Why do you need to learn English?" Spades asked, full of curiosity. "Does it help you play the game better?"

Everything Spades had ever learned had been for the sole purpose of improving in the league. In his mind, education had only one use: winning.

Lu Yizhan had once tried to teach him literacy, math, even a little biology, but Spades had quickly realized none of it was useful for gaming and skipped out on lessons entirely.

Bai Liu paused before answering. "...No. Learning English won't help you play the game better."

Spades, confused, pressed on. "Then why learn it?"

"In a broad sense, it removes barriers to communication and expands the range of people you can manipulate in the future," Bai Liu explained casually. "Mastering English allows you to exploit native speakers more efficiently. In a narrower sense, it's about gaining an advantage in short-term competition—ensuring you get ahead of others and accumulate more resources for yourself."

Spades thought for a moment before replying, very seriously, "I don't really get it."

Bai Liu exhaled slightly. "Put simply, it lets you talk to foreigners."

Spades blinked. "Is talking to foreigners supposed to be impressive?"

"The group behind me seems to think so," Bai Liu said blandly. "They get a sense of superiority from speaking fluently with people they consider of higher status."

Spades nodded, as if coming to an important conclusion. "Then you're better than all of them."

Bai Liu gave him a dry look.

"You can communicate with me—an alien—without any barriers," Spades continued matter-of-factly.

Bai Liu: "....."

How the hell did he end up stuck with this mass of indistinct human-animal monstrosity, tangled up in wild wires, who only played games, never went to school, and had such a fundamentally bizarre way of thinking?

By the end of the school day, Bai Liu returned to the dormitory—with a slightly larger lump of tangled string still clinging to his head.

The dorm was empty. Bai Liu, accustomed to the solitude, set his bag down and made his way into the bathroom. Just as he was about to unzip his pants, he hesitated.

Slowly, he turned his head.

The puppy lines, now perched on his shoulder, was staring straight at his right hand as he reached for his zipper.

Bai Liu: "....."

Two seconds later, the puppy was unceremoniously tossed out of the bathroom.

A minute later, Bai Liu emerged, drying his hands. His gaze landed on the puppy now curled up on his pillow, looking as if it intended to sleep beside him.

Bai Liu paused mid-motion.

Three seconds later, the puppy was ripped from the pillow and thrown to the floor.

Looking confused, it asked, "Why can't I sleep in the bed?"

"Because I don't like sharing my bed." Bai Liu sat on the edge, not sparing Spades a glance. "Not with people. Not with pets."

"I want to sleep in the bed."

"Too bad."

Spades stretched out a wire-thin limb, defiantly tapping the edge of the mattress. His dark eyes locked onto Bai Liu's. "I want to sleep next to you."

Bai Liu gave him a slow, nonchalant side glance. "You can try."

Spades: "....."

A long silence.

He could tell—instinctively—that there was something dangerous in Bai Liu's gaze.

Maybe sleeping on the floor wasn't so bad after all.

Spades curled up into a ball at Bai Liu's feet, his voice slightly sullen. "I can sleep with you. Why can't I sleep in the bed?"

Bai Liu remained calm. "…You can't sleep with me now, either."

"Oh." Spades thought for a moment, then asked seriously, "Then can I sleep with you for forty-five minutes? After one class?"

Bai Liu: "You can't…"

Earlier, Bai Liu had explained to Spades that a lesson lasted forty-five minutes, after which the teacher and subject would change.

In Spades' mind, this translated to: The rules of this copy change every forty-five minutes.

Which meant that whatever was prohibited now could be allowed later.

"Then in ninety minutes, I can—" Spades began again, pressing his point.

"You can't," Bai Liu interrupted coldly. "You can only sleep on the floor."

Spades let out a soft oh, climbed off Bai Liu's foot, and crawled a little farther away—about thirty centimeters—before turning his back to him without another word.

A classic sulking posture.

Fifteen seconds passed.

Then, still facing away, Spades slowly extended one wire-thin jio toward Bai Liu's foot, wiggling it slightly—his way of asking for a handshake.

Bai Liu had spent enough time with this guy to recognize what was happening. This was Spades' way of making up after a silent tantrum.

Just like a dog—one handshake, and whatever grievance he'd been sulking over would be forgotten.

Bai Liu: "……"

Having a dog was so much trouble.

Expressionless, Bai Liu still reached out and shook the wire-thin jio.

Satisfied, Spades immediately turned back around and settled himself against Bai Liu's feet. "There are four beds in here. Are three other people sharing them with you?"

"Hm." Bai Liu responded absentmindedly.

"And where are they?"

"Out for a late dinner. They haven't come back yet," Bai Liu replied flatly. Anticipating Spades' next question—So why didn't you go eat?—he preemptively added, "I didn't go because I don't have money for food."

Qiao Mu Private High School had excellent meals—but they were also expensive. The orphanage provided a standard meal plan for the students they sponsored: three dishes, one soup, two meats, and one vegetable—enough to cover three full meals.

But not late-night snacks.

Qiao Mu had a dedicated late-night snack bar that opened after 9:30 PM, offering everything from fried chicken and cola to elaborate multi-course meals. Of course, it was expensive—twenty dollars a bowl at minimum.

Students ranked in the top 400 of the school received a $50 nightly snack allowance, but it could only be used for their own purchases.

In their first and second years, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian had tried using their allowances to buy snacks for Bai Liu.

Eventually, Bai Liu had stopped eating late-night snacks altogether.

But that didn't mean he wasn't hungry.

At seventeen or eighteen, they were all still growing. Even a full three meals weren't enough to stave off hunger by eleven or midnight. Most of the top students in Bai Liu's dorm would rush to the snack counter as soon as evening study ended, not returning until close to 10:30 PM.

Squeak—

The dormitory door swung open.

The three other students entered, chatting and laughing, but the moment they saw Bai Liu sitting at his desk, head down, reading his notes, their smiles disappeared.

Their faces turned cold, as if they'd just walked into something unpleasant.

All three carried food containers from the snack bar. One of them moved to place his food on the table, only to be stopped by another, who gave him a meaningful look before mouthing:

"Be careful—it might get stolen."

The first student hesitated, then glanced at Bai Liu. His expression darkened with disgust before he silently stowed his food in the cupboard, locking it away.

Then, as if making a point, he deliberately walked past Bai Liu and muttered, "Excuse me, I'm going to wash my dishes."

Without so much as a glance, Bai Liu shifted his foot to the side, giving way as if making room for a stray cat or dog.

The man looked at Bai Liu as if he didn't care about him at all, but his heart burned with anger. Raising his voice, he accused, "My bowl was moved today, and you were the only one in the dormitory without a bowl. Did you move it?"

Bai Liu glanced up. "I moved it."

The man, who had been planning to frame Bai Liu, froze in place. He hadn't expected Bai Liu to just admit it.

"I touched that bowl," Bai Liu continued, flipping through his book as if nothing had happened. "I thought it was dirty. You should throw it away."

That bowl had cost him over 3,000! It was the bowl he brought out during late-night snacks to show off! The other two dormmates thought he was rich because of it!

His face turned red with anger, but when he saw the other two looking at the bowl as if it truly was filthy, he hesitated. He wanted to save face, but he also felt bitter about losing it. Finally, he forced himself to say, "It's true that if you touched it, it must be dirty… but maybe I misremembered. It doesn't seem like it moved."

"I did touch it," Bai Liu said, looking up with innocent sincerity. "That bowl looked so expensive—I just couldn't resist touching it, inside and out. Sorry. It must be too dirty now. You should throw it away."

The man's face darkened. His teeth clenched. "Yeah… it must be dirty. I'll throw it away now!"

Bai Liu hummed nonchalantly. "That bowl is so expensive and beautiful. I really couldn't resist touching it a lot. You should smash it before you throw it away, or I might be tempted to touch it again."

Shit!

The man cursed inwardly. Now, he couldn't even retrieve it, wash it, and take it home!

With gritted teeth and teary eyes, he smashed the bowl while the other two dormmates watched in silence. Then, he wiped his face, stuffed the shattered pieces into a trash bag, and muttered, "Something dirty shouldn't be kept anyway. I'll go throw it out."

…

Later that night, crouched by the garbage heap, the man hesitated. He dug through the trash, trying to retrieve the pieces, but the dim light, the stench, and the sharp ceramic shards cutting his fingers made him curse in frustration.

"Shit! Bai Liu!"

It was as if he was the one being bullied.

When he returned to the dorm, he washed his hands furiously, climbed into bed, and pulled his curtain shut. Moments later, muffled sobs came from behind the fabric, as if he was crying under the covers.

The other two dormmates exchanged awkward glances before silently taking their own showers. No one dared to provoke Bai Liu anymore.

Bai Liu, meanwhile, occupied the entire dormitory desk, lazily organizing his notes. The other three didn't even dare to look at him.

—The scene looked as if Bai Liu was the one bullying them.

All three had drawn their bed curtains closed, isolating themselves from Bai Liu.

Qiao Mu's private high school forbade students from keeping their lights on at night, but the dorm supervisor often turned a blind eye to honor students. As long as they didn't stay up past 1 or 2 AM, no one would interfere.

Bai Liu took advantage of this. His dorm housed three honor students, meaning he could read Lu Yizhan's notes with the light on without being disturbed.

One by one, the others fell asleep, leaving Bai Liu alone.

He stared intently at Lu Yizhan's physics notes.

The problem on the page involved a complex magnetic field scenario —two overlapping fields, a positively charged particle, an emission machine, acceleration, deflection, and final impact on a plate. The question asked for the initial acceleration of the particle, factoring in gravity.

A full A4 page detailed Lu Yizhan's solution, diagrams, and key concepts.

Bai Liu had spent two hours on this problem tonight and still didn't understand it. He set the notes down, exhaled, and murmured, "...Studying really is the least cost-effective thing you can do."

On his shoulder, Spades stirred. He had been bombarding Bai Liu with questions, which Bai Liu had ignored.

"What's this?"
"Why did they say the bowl was dirty after you touched it?"
"What are you drawing?"
"Why is this dot spinning three times in a pile of dots?"

Now that the others were asleep, Bai Liu finally answered.

"It's physics."
"They're trying to feel superior to me, so they say anything I touch is dirty."
"I'm drawing a magnetic field analysis."
"I don't know."

Spades pondered this, uninterested in physics. Instead, he latched onto a more pressing question.

"But you're not dirty," he said. "You're cleaner than they are. So why do they think you're dirty?"

"It's not that they actually think I'm dirty," Bai Liu explained, his voice steady. "It's just a way to keep their distance. They don't want to touch me or have me touch their things."

"I see."

Then, suddenly—

Bai Liu's pupils contracted.

The small black mass on his head grew. In mere moments, it expanded into the size of a full-grown man. A pair of arms circled his waist from behind, clasping together. A chin rested on his shoulder.

A voice, low and indifferent, asked, “You don’t?”

“You obviously love to sleep with me in your arms.”

—

Bai Liu lay in bed, his back to the wall, eyes staring blankly ahead. Behind him, the figure of a man curled around him, arms wrapped tightly around his waist, legs entwined with his. Slow, steady breaths rose and fell against his shoulder.

...He had no idea how things had ended up like this.

One moment, Spades had been a tiny bundle of thread. The next, he had turned into a man, slinked into Bai Liu’s bed with stubborn persistence, and refused to leave.

“Get down.” Bai Liu pushed against him, his breath uneven. His usual calm was gone, replaced by the raw discomfort of having his personal space invaded. “You can’t sleep in my bed.”

“You can’t cuddle with me like this.”

Spades’ voice was heavy with sleep. “You don’t like it?”

Without waiting for an answer, he effortlessly flipped Bai Liu onto his side, pressing Bai Liu’s head to his chest. His large hands wrapped around Bai Liu’s back, holding him still. A warm palm patted Bai Liu’s shoulder in a slow, steady rhythm.

“You like to sleep like this, don’t you?”

“Go to sleep.”

Bai Liu lay there, limbs trapped, his mind blank. He glanced toward the three beds with their thickly drawn curtains, deliberately isolating him.

[So unlucky to be in the same dorm as the orphanage kid.]
[...Ugh, can't transfer, guess I'll put up with it.]
[I heard kids from orphanages steal, and they eat animal feed.]
[Gross, isn’t that dirty?]
[I really don’t want to share a dorm with him. Anyone willing to swap?]

[Who would?]
[Not me.]
[Not me either.]
[Fuck, no choice. Let's draw lots. Whoever gets unlucky, sucks to be them.]

Bai Liu blinked slowly.

All the parts of his body they had called dirty—his hands, his arms, his shoulders—were held tightly by Spades.

His fingers curled slightly.

Very, very slowly, he hugged Spades back.

He closed his eyes.

...Having a dog had some benefits, aside from the hassle.

Maybe his decision to pick this one wasn't so bad after all.

Hou Tong had noticed that Bai Liu had changed a lot recently.

Before, Bai Liu would often twirl his pencil absentmindedly in class, his gaze scattered and unfocused. When he was punished and made to stand outside, he would lean against the wall, half-asleep, exuding an air of indifference—like nothing truly mattered to him.

It was as if he had no favorite things, no favorite people, no aspirations—just drifting through life without care.

But recently, that sense of apathy had disappeared.

Hou Tong was almost startled to realize that Bai Liu had started studying.

He was no longer lost in thought during class but instead sat with a calm expression, flipping through pages of textbooks and notes. Occasionally, he would borrow her English papers to correct mistakes, and every now and then, he would twirl his pen before gazing out the window—with a faint, almost imperceptible smile at the corners of his eyes.

That smile lit up his entire face.

He had started taking things seriously. Xu Wei, despite himself, noticed Bai Liu's grades climbing with every mock exam—278, then the low 300s, then the mid-300s, and soon nearing 400, approaching the undergraduate admission line.

In the dormitory, Bai Liu's roommates were surprised to find that he had begun staying up late to study.

At first, they scoffed, making cynical remarks about his newfound diligence. But Bai Liu ignored them entirely, and soon, a strange sense of urgency took hold of them. His steady routine and rapid improvement made them uneasy.

Whenever they saw Bai Liu studying late, they felt compelled to outdo him. If Bai Liu stayed up until midnight, they stayed up until 12:15. If he stayed up until 12:15, they pushed to 12:30.

Before long, their grades started slipping.

One by one, they cracked under the pressure and abandoned their late-night study sessions. Yet Bai Liu remained steadfast, staying up until 1 a.m. with unwavering focus, his scores continuing to rise.

Even when they had given up, just the sound of Bai Liu turning pages from behind his curtain kept them awake at night. The thought of a former underachiever studying so relentlessly made them too anxious to sleep.

The first to break was a roommate whose grades plummeted past the 400th percentile. Chronic stress and insomnia took their toll, and he was eventually forced to drop out.

The remaining two grew increasingly alarmed. Their own insomnia worsened as their scores steadily declined—five consecutive weekly tests, two monthly exams, and a mock exam. When their parents finally arrived at the dormitory with grim expressions to collect their things, they stood there, heads lowered, sneaking uneasy glances at Bai Liu.

"I—I haven't been sleeping well because my roommate stays up late studying," one of them tried to explain, shifting uncomfortably. "That's why my grades dropped…"

His parents, unimpressed, scoffed.

"Everyone else stays up late to study and improves. You stay up late and get worse?!" they snapped. "It's your senior year! We didn't spend all that money for you to slack off and make excuses!"

“If you want to transfer to a day school, fine,” another parent said coldly. “But if your grades keep slipping, we’ll have a serious problem.”

With that, both students fell silent and followed their parents out, casting one last, complicated glance at Bai Liu. They looked as if they wanted to say something, but in the end, no words came.

After that, Bai Liu’s dormitory was empty.

His life, however, continued as usual—completely unfazed by the chaos his presence had caused.

Meanwhile, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian sat by the flower bed, upright and tense, staring at Bai Liu.

“…You called us here to show us your monthly exam results, didn’t you?” Lu Yizhan asked, his voice tight.

Bai Liu hummed in confirmation. “The scores aren’t out yet, but the test papers are. I figured I’d let you take a look.”

Lu Yizhan sucked in a sharp breath. His palms were already sweaty. Taking a moment to compose himself, he clenched his fists, exhaled twice, and finally spoke:

“…Alright. Let’s see it.”

Bai Liu handed over his paper. Lu Yizhan hesitated, squinting as he shielded the score column with his hand, as if delaying the inevitable.

As he and Fang Dian flipped through the exam, their expressions shifted. By the time they reached the end, Lu Yizhan’s eyes were red. He lowered his head and wiped at them with his palm.

“…Damn,” Fang Dian muttered, rubbing the back of Lu Yizhan’s head. Her own eyes shimmered with barely restrained tears. “351 points. Bai Liu, you—”

Bai Liu pursed his lips and looked away. “...It’ll do.”

Fang Dian couldn’t hold back her laughter. She ruffled Bai Liu’s hair roughly. “You idiot, this is amazing!”

Lu Yizhan, however, was already examining the paper with a serious expression. “Wait—there are still a lot of mistakes. We need to go over them and analyze—”

“Oh, come on!” Fang Dian cut him off impatiently. “We’re not analyzing anything right now!” She grabbed Bai Liu excitedly. “We’re going out for a celebratory meal!”

Qiao Mu Private High School

It had been a year since Bai Liu last had an eight-dollar bowl of beef noodles for a midnight snack.

There were three of them now, but only one bowl sat on the table—placed in front of Bai Liu. He hesitated, not yet picking up his chopsticks.
“Don’t you two want to eat?” he asked.

“We usually eat well. The dorm building upstairs gives us food at night,” Fang Dian sighed with some regret. “It’s just that today’s Sunday, and the kitchen’s closed. Otherwise, we’d have stolen something to feed you.”

“Keep your voice down,” Lu Yizhan laughed helplessly. “If someone hears you, Bai Liu won’t even get this midnight snack.”

“Okay, okay.” Fang Dian made an “OK” gesture, unbothered. She eagerly shoved the chopsticks into Bai Liu’s hand. “Eat up! If you don’t, the noodles will get soggy!”

She and Lu Yizhan looked at him expectantly, genuinely happy for him.

Since Bai Liu had been gone, the two of them hadn’t stepped foot in the cafeteria—not even once. Despite still receiving a daily midnight snack allowance of fifty dollars, they never went back.

It had been a year.

When Bai Liu asked why, Fang Dian only smiled and rubbed his head.

“It doesn’t feel right to eat with one person missing. So we just don’t go.”

Bai Liu sat silently for a long moment before finally picking up his chopsticks and slowly beginning to eat.

What did it mean to have “one person missing”?

At the time, he hadn’t asked. But now, he felt like he finally understood what Fang Dian meant.

After eating, Lu Yizhan rambled about all sorts of things until Fang

Dian eventually nudged him.

“Mr. Lu, it’s almost ten. We’ve gotta head back up.”

“I know.” Lu Yizhan looked at Bai Liu with a complicated expression. In the end, he simply smiled with relief and patted Bai Liu on the shoulder. “Don’t stress too much. Scoring 351 is already impressive.”

“I can tell you’re trying—you’re really a good kid.”

“You talk too much!” Fang Dian interrupted, dragging Lu Yizhan away as she pulled Bai Liu aside. Her eyes sparkled, as if she saw right through him. “So… did you find what you’re looking for in life?”

Bai Liu paused. “I think I have an idea.”

“Already? That’s fast,” Fang Dian said, stroking her chin, her tone teasing. “With how messed up your brain is, I thought you wouldn’t figure it out until senior year was over.”

Then she asked, almost slyly, “Did you… meet someone you want to spend time with?”

Bai Liu didn’t answer.

“Fine, don’t tell me.” Fang Dian waved it off. She pulled her heavy book bag around and started taking out notes and study aids. “Last time, Mr. Lu rushed those notes for you, and your basics are still pretty shaky. I got worried you wouldn’t be able to keep up, so I—the top student in our grade—personally sorted out all of senior year’s material and exam questions for you.”

“Read it carefully and I guarantee at least 400 points on the test!”

She dumped the hefty notebooks into his arms with a grin, the dark circles under her eyes clearly visible. “This is the weight of knowledge. Take it seriously!”

Bai Liu held the notes and was quiet for a while. “Did you stay up late doing this?”

“It didn’t take long,” Fang Dian said lightly. “I had free time anyway.”

Free time?

Bai Liu knew that she and Lu Yizhan were constantly preparing for competitions and the entrance exam. They didn’t have time to spare.

But Fang Dian made time anyway.

He hesitated, then accepted the well-worn stack of notebooks and study aids. “I owe you one.”

“That doesn’t count.” Fang Dian flicked his forehead and raised an eyebrow. “A favor’s something you owe when you ask for help. You didn’t ask—I did it because I wanted to. So it’s not a favor.”

Bai Liu lowered his head, staring at Fang Dian’s scuffed schoolbag—so full it looked like it couldn’t be held in two hands.

“I don’t get it,” he said quietly.

“Get what?”

“You and Lu Yizhan—you could spend all this effort on someone from the top of the hill,” Bai Liu said. “You could make friends with someone up there. They’d give you more in return—money, connections, a smoother future.”

“Why waste all that effort on me?”

“That’s easy.” Fang Dian didn’t hesitate. “Because we don’t want to be friends with them.”

“It’s not about liking them. We like you, and we want to be friends with you.”

“But you’re brilliant and valuable,” Bai Liu said, looking her in the eye. “You’ve worked so hard to be the top students—first and second in the school—and now you’re throwing all that away for me. It’s not worth it.”

Fang Dian’s amber eyes crinkled, and she gave him a gentle smile.

“Remember what I told you, Bai Liu?”

“I said, we study hard so that we can choose the life we want to live.”

“We didn’t work hard to gain more ‘value.’ We worked hard so we could choose the kind of life we want.”

“And choosing to be your friend—that is the life we want. Neither of us feels like we’re wasting anything.”

Moonlight fell across Fang Dian’s face. Her smile was bright and soft.

“It’s almost ten. Time to go!”

She turned and dragged Lu Yizhan uphill, her voice still ringing with laughter:
“See you next time, Bai Liu!”

Bai Liu watched her ponytail bounce as she ran off. Then, a dark mass of threadlike shadow appeared beside him, attaching itself to his body.

“Why’d you disappear earlier?” Bai Liu asked, his tone even.

Spades lay sprawled across Bai Liu’s back, resting his chin on Bai Liu’s head. His voice was low and a little sulky.

“I can only show up when you’re alone.”

“When I'm alone?” Bai Liu echoed. “But you’ve appeared before—like in the dorms or classrooms.”

“It’s not about how many people are around,” Spades said. “It’s about when you feel alone. When you feel that way, I can exist. But when you don’t, I can’t.”

“In the classroom, in the dorms—you still felt alone, so I could show up. But just now, when you were eating beef noodles with them… you didn’t feel alone. So I couldn’t exist.”

Bai Liu paused. “You and Lu Yizhan can’t coexist?”

“You could say that.” Spades buried his face in the crook of Bai Liu’s neck, voice muffled. “I’m the monster that exists to keep you from being alone.”

“When there are people who make you feel not alone… there’s no reason for me to exist.”

“You’re that kind of monster?” Bai Liu asked, reaching up to grasp Spades’ hand on his shoulder. His voice was calm. “Then you’ll probably be around for a long time. I like being alone.”

In his other hand, Bai Liu held the thick packet of notebooks Fang Dian had given him.

Then, slowly, he let it go.

The big exam was coming.

And right after that… the parents' meeting.

Lu Yizhan and Bai Liu, both students from unusual family backgrounds, don't have parents who attend parent-teacher conferences.

Neither does Fang Dian.

Bai Liu has never been one to pry into other people's family matters and has never asked why Fang Dian's parents never show up. But human nature has a way of tugging at our curiosity—especially when it comes to those who are talented and stand apart. It's as if understanding someone better might bring you closer to their world.

Bai Liu first heard about Fang Dian through the gossip of his dormmates.

In junior high, Fang Dian was top of her grade. Her parents were known to be kind and loving, and her family was well-off. For the first fifteen years of her life, Fang Dian's path was described as smooth, happy, and full of promise.

But as if fate couldn't bear to let her happiness last, everything changed when she turned fifteen.

Her mother fell seriously ill. Her father spent everything they had trying to save her, but it wasn't enough. Desperate to raise more money, he was deliberately drawn into gambling by someone who saw an opportunity.

In one night, he lost everything—and worse, racked up enormous gambling debts.

It should've been the start of a tragic spiral for Fang Dian. But it wasn't.

Instead, she took control. She dragged her father away from the gambling table, tied back her shoulder-length hair, and walked up to the table herself—empty-handed but determined.

And in one night, she won it all back. Then she stopped.

Her father, in a hysterical breakdown, grabbed her shoulders and shouted, "Keep gambling! You're so good at it! Win back your mother's medical fees!"

“If you’re so capable, then why don’t you do it yourself?”

Then, seeing Fang Dian shake her head resolutely, he collapsed to his knees. Tears in his eyes, he looked up at her and pleaded, “Please... for Daddy?”

“I cheated to win,” Fang Dian replied quietly. “I can’t gamble again.”

“In gambling, it’s not just money you put on the line—you put yourself in, too.”

“And I don’t want to see you destroyed by anything else besides Mom’s illness.”

Her father couldn’t understand her. He left the money to Fang Dian and vanished, leaving her to handle the wreckage alone.

And she did.

She topped the city in her secondary school entrance exams, earning offers from several prestigious schools, including public ones with great academic atmospheres. Originally, she had planned to attend a public school near her home, but in the end, she chose Qiao Mu—the school that offered the highest scholarship. The bonus barely covered her mother’s treatment costs.

Still, her mother’s condition worsened quickly. She passed away within six months.

Fang Dian arranged the funeral herself. The costs were covered by prize money from competitions, Qiao Mu’s annual special merit allowance, the little money left from her mother’s treatment—and a large sum that appeared in her bank account after her mother’s death, presumably sent by her vanished father.

With that money, Fang Dian bought back the old house her family had sold to pay medical bills. She finally had a home outside of school again.

—It became the place where Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan stayed most often when they weren’t on campus.

It was... a very small home.

It was odd—none of the top-ranking students at Qiao Mu ever had parents at parent-teacher conferences. But Qiao Mu treated its exceptionally gifted students with unusual generosity: the school allowed Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian to conduct their own parent-teacher conferences.

The logic was that students like them didn't need parental supervision. They could manage their own lives. They were their own parents.

Bai Liu, on the other hand, didn't receive this privilege. When conferences were held, his seat was always empty.

Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian would've liked to attend in his place, but Qiao Mu held all parent-teacher meetings simultaneously across classes, so Lu Yizhan would always be at his own meeting when Bai Liu's was happening.

It's worth mentioning that, for some reason, Lu Yizhan had an odd obsession with attending parent-teacher conferences on Bai Liu's behalf. He even tried to skip his own more than once—only to be caught by his homeroom teacher.

"Why are you so determined to do this for me?" Bai Liu asked him once.

Lu Yizhan gave him a mischievous look. "You don't get it. Everyone around me used to dream of being your father, you know?"

Who in the Heretics Bureau didn't call Bai Liu by six different nicknames and secretly try to be his dad back then…

Bai Liu, slowly: "?"

And so, once again, at this parent-teacher conference, Bai Liu's seat sat empty.

The classroom buzzed with chatter. Parents dressed to impress—dripping in the latest fashion, wearing their most expensive watches, ruby rings, necklaces, and leather handbags. Every now and then, someone's pigeon-blood ruby ring would graze another's freshly styled hair. "Oh, sorry," one would say, as their bespoke mechanical watch clinked against someone's calfskin bag. "My apologies."

It was like a parade of hens and roosters, strutting and fluffing their feathers for show.

The students had long since been forgotten as the parents exchanged fake smiles and pleasantries in loud, hypocritical voices. The whole scene resembled less a school's parent-teacher conference and more a flashy social mixer at a hotel:

"Hey, what did you drive here today? I came in my BMW and couldn't find a parking spot—Qiao Mu really needs to expand. It's impossible to find space during these parent meetings."

"Did your family snag another unit in the Sunnyside development?"

"I heard there's a promotion coming up—might be a position opening soon."

"Lan's cream is 10% off for Double Eleven, just over four grand! Want to split it with me?"

In short, while it was technically a parent-teacher meeting, it had little to do with the students themselves.

Bai Liu had never attended a single one of these meetings. Not that he needed to. After all, there were only ever two topics discussed:
One, parents scrambling over each other.
Two, students scrambling over each other.

While the adults cloaked their competition in civility, the jabs exchanged by the 17- and 18-year-olds were far more direct.

"My mum just bought me the latest drop," the boy sitting beside Bai Liu said smugly, swinging his legs to show off his sneakers. "Told her to bring them today so I could try them on."

"Damn, those cost over three grand, right?"

The boy wiggled his fingers dramatically. "Nuh-uh."

"No way! Is that a baller's signature on them?"

"Holy shit, that's a limited release from two years ago. How'd you get it?"

The boy shrugged with a casual smile, waving his foot closer to Bai Liu's face. "Money. Paid a premium, plus shipping—cost me nearly six grand."

"Six thousand?! What a steal. I want a pair too!"

"I'll ask my mum to look into it. My sister-in-law's overseas, she might be able to find them."

Bao Kangle, who'd been listening with a dark, jealous look, stared at the sneakers like they were treasure.

Bai Liu, having heard variations of this conversation countless times, turned away. He leaned against one of the windows in the corridor outside the classroom, staring inside.

Through the window, his seat was clearly empty—surrounded front and back by affluent parents. As if simply attending wasn't enough, they had casually dumped their designer handbags onto Bai Liu's desk.

It was as if his family's absence had always been expected. A void.

The boys, still buzzing about the shoes, noticed Bai Liu's silence. Their expressions soured, and they exchanged looks before moving closer.

The ringleader nudged Bai Liu's shoulder. "Hey."

Bai Liu turned to him with a cold look. "Yes?"

"Oooh, look at that glare," the boy teased, leaning in with a grin. "What were you staring at?"

He exaggerated a glance over Bai Liu's shoulder into the classroom. "Looking for your parents?"

"Oh right, you don't have any!" he added with mock sympathy, throwing his hands up. "Tell you what, I'm in a good mood today, got my new sneakers and all."

"How about you call me 'Dad' and I'll head in and sit through the conference for you?"

The others stifled their laughter, while Bao Kangle's previously gloomy face lit up. He looked at Bai Liu like he was lesser—like as long as Bai Liu was around, he wouldn't be the lowest on the totem pole.

"Not like I'm bullying you or anything," the boy continued, patting Bai Liu's shoulder with mock gentleness. "It's just that you're poor. And parentless."

"My folks have been amazing to me, so I figured—why not give back? Help someone from an orphanage, do my part for society, y'know?"

"Look," he said, grabbing Bai Liu's shoulders and turning him forcefully toward the classroom window. "My parents are sitting right in front of your seat, their bags are on your desk. You're literally basking in their good luck. Aren't I being generous? Call me dad?"

Bai Liu was about to reply when his voice caught in his throat.

Through the glass, a dark, human-sized mass of writhing black lines sat silently in his otherwise empty seat.

It looked around curiously, then casually brushed aside the two handbags that had been dumped there.

Inside the classroom, a man and woman turned, startled by the noise of bags hitting the floor.

"Who knocked our bags down?" the woman asked, frowning.

"Wasn't this spot reserved for bags?"

Someone nearby spoke up, "That's Bai Liu's seat. He doesn't have any parents coming today, so it's been empty."

The man and woman waved dismissively, clearly annoyed.

"The one you're talking about—Bai Liu—I know him. From the orphanage. Dirty and cheap. I heard he steals food from his classmates' lockers, which our kids absolutely hate."

"I didn't even know our son was sitting in front of him before. After the meeting, I'll talk to Mr. Xu about moving him. How can he focus on studying if he's staring at someone like that all day? It's bound to affect his mood."

With that, the two parents picked up their handbag and, without even dusting it off, placed it arrogantly and unceremoniously on Bai Liu's desk—as if it was theirs to begin with.

At that moment, the black, humanoid shadow slowly raised its head. Bai Liu—still being held down outside the window by a group of rowdy boys—stiffened. Through the glass, he saw the dark silhouette shift. The moment those two called him "dirty" and "cheap," the line twisted and morphed into the faint figure of a man.

The man had flawless, almost surreal features. He sat rigidly, as though determined to force his tall, long-limbed body into Bai Liu's tiny seat. His expression was utterly blank. He looked no older than eighteen or nineteen and had striking silver-blue eyes.

So this is what… the little ball of black lines—Spades—really looks like?

Apparently, his eyesight hadn't failed him yet.

Spades lifted his head with disinterest. His pale eyes locked on the couple about to place their bag on the desk.

The man and woman froze. They stared into the space above the desk, their faces stunned—as if they were witnessing a silver-blue door slowly opening in the air.

A second later, their faces contorted.

By the window, the boy continued mocking arrogantly. "Why don't you fight back? Look how impressed my parents are with me."

Then came a sudden scream from inside the classroom:

"Mr. Wang?! Mrs. Wang?! What are you doing?!"

The boy, still gripping Bai Liu's collar, turned to the window in confusion.

Inside, his parents looked like wild dogs. Their eyes rolled up, tongues lolling, and they were sprawled across Bai Liu's desk—licking it frantically as though tasting something unbelievably sweet. A strange, euphoric smile twisted their faces.

"Smells so good... hehehe… smells so good..."

It wasn't just a loss of dignity—it left the entire classroom stunned.

The surrounding students screamed, trying to pull the couple off the desk. But the two snapped their teeth threateningly, biting anyone who got too close.

After biting two frantic parents who tried to intervene, the boy finally panicked. He shoved open the window and shouted:

"Mom?! Dad?! What are you doing?!"

His parents slowly turned their heads toward him. Their gaze sent a chill down his spine, and he instinctively stepped back.

But before he could run, they leapt from the desk like beasts, diving out the window and pinning him to the ground.

The boy's head slammed into the pavement, his mind buzzing. He gagged, disoriented. But his parents didn't stop—they leaned over him, baring their teeth, sniffing him eagerly.

The boy thrashed and screamed, terrified. "Help me! Somebody help me!"

No one moved—except for Bai Liu, who watched coldly as the boy clawed at his pant leg for help.

"You want me to save you?" Bai Liu asked calmly.

The boy nodded frantically, snot streaming down his face.

"Call me Dad," Bai Liu said flatly.

The boy froze, blinking. He was just about to curse when his parents grinned again—those same horrific smiles—and the terror cracked him open.

"D-Daddy! Daddy, please! Save my dad!!"

It was as if that one word—Daddy—triggered something.

His parents abruptly crouched, their expressions going vacant and obedient. They bent down and began licking the boy's sneakers reverently, pressing their tongues flat against the dirty soles.

They were actually licking their own son's shoes.

"Hey, hey, Father-in-charge," the man murmured, his voice sycophantic and hollow. His empty eyes stared up at his dazed son. "I licked your shoes good, didn't I? I even gave you 1.6 million before… That job that just opened up—do you think it's mine now?"

The woman was licking too—delicate and precise, her shoulders swaying with pleasure. "Honey, honey, Daddy-husband~ Look how hard I'm working~ Can I get a little more for next month's allowance?"

"I want a two-hundred-thousand-dollar emerald bracelet~"

"Buy it for me, and I'll always call you Daddy~"

The boy stared, shell-shocked. Even he—spoiled and clueless—understood what this was.

The rest of the class looked on in stunned horror.

Halfway through their licking, the parents suddenly jerked back. The lustful haze on their faces faded as they groaned, gripping their temples as if waking from a nightmare. Dazed, they looked around—and then at their son.

They lowered their eyes and stared at the sneakers they had just been worshipping. A moment ago, their son had bragged about the fresh signature on those shoes—signed by his idol.

Now, thanks to their tongues, it was just a smudged blur.

Their mouths burned with the lingering taste of ink, tongues stained dark.

Soon after, the school security—called in by frantic parents—arrived. They helped the couple up and escorted them out, faces pale and twisted with shame.

As they passed the crowd, the father suddenly snapped. He grabbed his son's hair and slapped him twice.

"You little bastard! Look what you've done to us!"

"We spent so much money raising you, giving you the best! And you score this low on a test?! You're making me and your mom sick!"

The boy tried to defend himself, still reeling from the scene, but two more slaps cut him off. His cheeks puffed with red welts.

"Just wait until we get home," the man growled. "I'm not done with you yet."

The boy was slapped hard, over and over, and no one stopped him. His father all but dragged him away, his mouth slack and drooling from the beating, and the man didn't even pause—like he was venting some deep grievance through his son.

The students who had followed the boy earlier avoided his pleading gaze. Heads down, they quietly backed away, pretending not to see.

Bai Liu turned his eyes to the window. Spades was sitting inside, and their gazes met through the glass. Bai Liu raised his chin slightly—a silent gesture for him to come out and explain.

The sudden outbreak of violent parents… this had to be his doing.

Spades leaned back, propping his head in his hands, deliberately ignoring Bai Liu's summons. Instead, he demurely remained seated in Bai Liu's chair, mimicking the other parents who were earnestly reviewing their children's exam papers. His expression said clearly: I'm in the middle of a parent-teacher conference. Do not disturb me.

Bai Liu: "……"

Can you even read the paper from there...?

Yet, somehow, the parent meeting for Class 37 continued without incident after that brief, tense disruption.

Xu Wei stepped up to the podium and summarized the exam results—highlighting the top and bottom ten students. As each student was named, their parents stood to receive comments. Those with top-performing children basked in pride; those at the bottom shifted uncomfortably in their seats.

Bai Liu usually ranked near the bottom. But this time, miraculously, he'd managed to escape that category. He wasn't part of the students being criticized. He was... somewhere else.

"And now," Xu Wei continued, glancing down at her list, "let's go over students who made significant progress this time. These students have shown great improvement recently, and I encourage all parents to learn from each other. It's the final year—please pay more attention to your children."

She called names one by one, and the corresponding parents stood to modest applause—some awkwardly proud, some stiff, as if the praise was directed at them and not their kids.

"Hou Tong—improved by one hundred and twenty points," Xu Wei read aloud, looking at the man with approval. "Your child has shown consistent improvement."

"How could she not?" Hou Tong's father, an affable-looking man, laughed sheepishly. "She was rock bottom before. Anywhere from there is an improvement."

The class chuckled warmly.

"You may sit," Xu Wei said, scanning the list again. Her expression darkened. "The last student to show progress is a... special case. I won't mention his name—his parent didn't come."

Hou Tong's father raised a hand. "Teacher, even if their parent didn't show up, isn't it still worth saying? The kid still made progress, didn't he?"

Xu Wei hesitated, flustered. "Well, yes, but... this meeting was arranged on short notice, so maybe—"

"Go ahead, Mr. Xu," Hou Tong's father interrupted with a wave. He muttered under his breath, "Some teacher you are... no wonder Xiaotong doesn't like—"

Xu Wei forced a smile and cleared her throat. "The last student who made progress is Bai Liu."

Her eyes flicked toward Bai Liu by the window, her tone bordering on mockery. "Parent Hou Tong is right—all students should be treated equally. So let's stick to protocol. Even though Bai Liu's parent isn't here, they should still stand up to accept the praise."

"Let's give a round of applause to Bai Liu's parent."

All eyes turned to the empty chair.

Then, slowly, Spades stood.

He straightened his back, gave a reserved nod—an imitation of every parent who had come before—and accepted the applause as if he truly were Bai Liu's guardian.

Bai Liu's lips quirked into the faintest of smiles.

After the meeting, students were dismissed for a half-day and allowed to return home with their parents.

Bai Liu was the last to leave the classroom—not because he had no one to return to, but because his situation was reversed. His 'parent' was waiting on him.

Spades' transformation was visibly weakening. He lay still, clinging to Bai Liu's back, light as mist and fading by the second.

"You're not supposed to touch people," Bai Liu said flatly as he walked. "So what was all that about? Sweeping handbags, driving people mad—you seemed pretty powerful back there."

“I wasn’t supposed to,” Spades murmured, voice barely audible. “I’m not allowed to interfere with your school life. Those are the rules.”

Bai Liu paused. “And just now?”

Spades hesitated. “I was too angry. I broke the rules.”

“They can’t talk about you like that.”

“There’s a price for breaking rules, isn’t there?” Bai Liu asked calmly. “That’s why you’re too weak to walk and need me to carry you now?”

Spades gave a muffled mm, tucking his head against Bai Liu’s back like a scolded child.

The silence between them stretched.

The sun was setting, casting a golden light that slanted low and long, dragging Bai Liu’s shadow along the ground behind him.

“Next time,” Bai Liu said, eyes fixed on the shifting shadows at his feet, “don’t do something that stupid. It’d be pathetic if you broke yourself trying to protect me.”

Spades, clinging to his back, cast no shadow of his own. Only Bai Liu’s feet touched the ground. But somehow, it felt like the two of them were walking together.

Spades weighed nothing. Bai Liu carried nothing.

And yet—he leaned forward slightly under the burden. As if he were really carrying someone. A stray string monster who’d shown up just for him… just to attend a parent-teacher conference.

“Do you understand?” Bai Liu asked again, tone sharper. “Don’t do that next time.”

Spades was silent for a long time. Then, softly, “I can’t help it.”

“Why not?”

“Because I like you. A lot.” Spades tightened his grip, pressing closer. “I like you so much.”

“I like you, Bai Liu.”

“Bai Liu, I like you.”

“I really, really like you.”

Bai Liu was quiet for a long time.

“…I know,” he finally replied.

“Oh.” Spades paused, then softly added, “I like you, Bai Liu.”

“…Got it.”

“I like—”

“I said I got it.”

The sunlight stretched Bai Liu’s shadow behind him. It passed through the corridor window and cast its glow onto the back blackboard of Classroom 37.

At the center of the board was the honor roll for students who had improved. Neatly written names filled the space: second to last was [Hou Tong].

The final name, written crookedly in uneven strokes, was [Bai Liu].

Xu Wei hadn’t intended to include it. She assumed no one—certainly not in the school, maybe not even in the world—would care about Bai Liu’s small improvement in one exam. What did it matter if his name was missing?

After all, Bai Liu had no parents.

But there was a monster who cared. Who remembered. Who existed.

Quietly, clumsily, it had carried Bai Liu on its back. Then, draining its strength, it had picked up a piece of chalk with trembling hands and added that final name—stroke by painstaking stroke—at the bottom of the list.

Because, to the monster, Bai Liu was something worth celebrating.

—Just like the moment it stood up for him at the parents' meeting.

Qiao Mu Private High School

After the parents' meeting, Bai Liu was left alone—or rather, with only one other person—to live quietly, day by day.

As exam season approached, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian visited less frequently. Yet, Bai Liu didn't fall into the same kind of isolation he had once known.

Perhaps it had something to do with the fact that after the parents' meeting, the student who had previously caused trouble was withdrawn from the school, and the rest of the class had become noticeably more well-behaved.

In any case, Bai Liu's life settled into a peaceful and steady rhythm, unfolding in quiet, orderly steps.

Over time, Hou Tong, who had been secretly watching Bai Liu, noticed that he was changing again. But unlike the earlier changes in his academic performance or daily habits, this felt different. Perhaps it was the particular sensitivity girls have when it comes to boys they like.

She had the sudden realization—Bai Liu might be in love.

Like now, for instance—
It was a drowsy spring afternoon during study hall. The curtains swayed softly in the breeze, and sunlight poured through the windows. Bai Liu sat by the window in a white shirt, collar slightly open, chin resting on his hand, eyes lowered in lazy concentration as he drew in his sketchbook with a perfectly sharpened pencil.

The curtain drifted again and again, brushing past the ends of his hair like a quiet, fluttering backdrop.

Hou Tong leaned over her desk, hiding behind a stack of books as she stole glances at him.

And then, she saw it—the faint upturn at the corners of Bai Liu's lips.

He was smiling.

Not the polite, distant smile he wore when thanking her. Not the forced, performative smile he used in conversations with classmates. Not the kind of smile that felt like a mask.

This smile was different.

It was the kind of smile she herself made when she daydreamed about Bai Liu, when she unconsciously wrote his name in the corner of her notebook, when she imagined their future together.

It was the smile of someone in love.

But who exactly did Bai Liu like?

After nearly a month of secret observation, Hou Tong had come to a frustrating conclusion: Bai Liu didn't really interact much with anyone. He barely spoke to other students or teachers, and whenever he did, his attention was fleeting and impersonal.

There were no obvious clues.

And yet, her instincts told her—he was in love. She could feel it.

Her eyes flicked to the sketchbook he was working on. But after a few glances, she forced herself to look away, pushing a textbook in front of her face to block the view, frustration weighing heavy in her chest.

She thought about that soft smile again and took a deep breath, burying her flushed face in the crook of her arm, pretending to nap.

There were girls prettier than her at school, but they weren't as good at volleyball. Those better at volleyball weren't as wealthy. And those wealthier than her didn't like Bai Liu the way she did.

So then... how had she lost?

Was there really someone out there who was prettier, richer, better at sports and more in love with Bai Liu than she was?

A bittersweet mix of jealousy and disbelief swirled inside her, and she clenched her fists, silently vowing: I'm going to find the girl who managed to beat me.

Thus began Hou Tong's more intense—ahem, more detailed—observation of Bai Liu.

And soon enough, she began noticing strange things.

For instance, when Bai Liu ate, he would place a bowl of soup across from him, as if someone else were sitting there. It looked like a coincidence—until you looked closer.

When he studied, his body tilted slightly to one side, as if a tall person were beside him, leaning over his shoulder.

He always took the most secluded path back to the dorm, his fingers loosely interlaced behind his back—as if secretly holding hands with someone walking beside him.

The more Hou Tong watched, the more she realized something was off. Some of Bai Liu's gestures and reactions were just too strange.

Like now.

Xu Wei, who had always disliked Bai Liu, found an excuse to send him out into the hallway during class.

It was the second period of the afternoon, and the fifteen-minute relaxation break had just started—five minutes for eye exercises, followed by ten minutes of calming music.

Hou Tong's seat was by the window on the opposite side of the corridor. She pressed gently on her temples and scratched around her eyes under the guise of rest—but really, she was peeking through the narrow slit of her fingers, watching Bai Liu through the glass.

He stood just beyond the corridor, back to her, reviewing his notes while being punished.

The windows were so clean they gleamed. She could see him clearly.

Bai Liu stood with his back resting against the glass, head bowed. His developing shoulders pressed lightly against the white fabric of his spring shirt. The sides of the shirt were stretched slightly over his back, making his frame look thin, straight, and delicate. There was a faint dampness where sweat had gathered, and from this distance, she could almost smell the gentle scent of detergent.

His hair had slipped behind his ears, swaying in the breeze. Long eyelashes cast soft shadows across his cheeks. His lips were parted slightly as he read silently from his notebook.

Hou Tong froze for a second.

The whole scene—sunlight, reflections, the delicate lines of his figure—looked like something straight out of a film.

Bai Liu was reading so intently...

As if sensing her gaze, Bai Liu lifted his head slightly and glanced at her—just for a moment—through the glass.

The eyes were pale—almost colorless. The dark pupils caught in the pale orange light of the afternoon, lazy and focused.

Despite the absence of emotion in that gaze, Hou Tong's heart pounded uncontrollably. She almost fumbled as she snatched a book, flipping it open and clutching it tightly in front of her face to shield her eyes from Bai Liu's. She pretended to read.

Bai Liu's gaze flicked briefly from Hou Tong's upside-down book before returning to the notebook in his hands.

Hou Tong's wide eyes peeked out from behind the pages, quietly watching him as he read intently. But the more she watched, the more aggravated she felt.

The Bai Liu from before... would have smiled after a stare-down. Even though she knew the smile was calculated, a deliberate way to reel her in—he still smiled. But now, Bai Liu wouldn't even spare her that.

He's clearly distancing himself.

That person hadn't even shown up yet, and Bai Liu was already practicing everything about being in a relationship for her—even distancing himself from Hou Tong.

There was only one explanation that made sense to her: Bai Liu was doing things alone... that only people in a relationship would do together.

There was only one truth!

Bai Liu was practicing how to fall in love with someone he liked.

How much more like a boyfriend training arc could this get…

So serious, so earnest... so cute. But the worst part? He was already doing it for someone else.

Hou Tong slumped onto the desk in despair. But when she remembered that Bai Liu had been "practicing" like this for over six months—and this mysterious love interest still hadn't shown up—she couldn't help her growing frustration. She slammed her fist down on the table.

“Damn it! Half a year and that clueless woman still hasn’t shown up to date Bai Liu?!”

“If she doesn’t want him, I do! I want to date! I’ll pay to date!”

At the end of the five-minute eye exercise broadcast, the loudspeakers transitioned into a cheerful pop song. A light, bouncy melody played overhead:

“I just want to hold your hand and never let go—”

Hou Tong glanced toward the window where Bai Liu stood—and froze.

His outstretched right hand had curled slightly, as if being held by someone unseen. A larger handbag seemed to rest against it, fingers clasping his.

“You, lean on my shoulder—”

His right shoulder dipped subtly, as though someone had gently rested against it.

“You, asleep on my chest—”

Bai Liu leaned against the window, his neck tilted slightly to the side, as if someone lay asleep against him. And then it happened again—that faint smile Hou Tong had caught earlier returned. His lashes fluttered as he looked down… at something resting against his chest.

He gently pushed the invisible presence away, lips parting as he softly spoke.

Through the glass, Hou Tong couldn’t hear, but she could see his lips move. She mimicked them, mouthing each syllable in sync:

“What are you doing... acting out the lyrics?”

The song reached its peak: “A life like this—I love you, you love me—”

At that line, Bai Liu’s expression seemed to freeze. He turned his head abruptly, breathing uneven.

—Like a high school boy caught off guard by a sudden confession from his crush.

The next song began, an English track with an unmistakable opener: [KISS].

Hou Tong watched as Bai Liu took a deep breath, his gaze lowering calmly to his notebook. He murmured something—not rote memorization, but more like an explanation, as if translating the lyrics to himself.

“Kiss means… kiss?” Hou Tong mimicked his soft accent in confusion. “A kiss is very intimate and only happens between lovers and couples?”

...What’s this? English vocab?

But... Bai Liu doesn’t even know what ‘kiss’ means?

In the next moment, Hou Tong saw Bai Liu’s head tip back slightly, his shoulders jolted against the window. It was like something had slammed into him. His shirt gathered tightly around his waist, gripped by invisible hands. His body was locked in an embrace. His neck tilted back.

Hou Tong couldn’t see his face anymore, only the slight tremble of his back pressed against the glass. The faint outline of his shoulder blades strained against his shirt, his skin flushed red from his neck to behind his ears. Slowly, the notes slipped from his hands, fingers unclenching.

The spring breeze drifted gently through the 3pm air. Only one “bad student” had been punished to stand in the empty corridor. Camellias bloomed in riotous red on the hilltop. The lighthearted, ambiguous music danced through the halls of the school.

And in Hou Tong’s wide eyes was reflected that very student—the one she liked—eighteen years old, standing there with flushed cheeks and trembling hands.

She saw him, in the final chorus of [KISS], release his notebook completely.

Close his eyes.

And hug his invisible lover back—tightly, without hesitation.

Qiao Mu Private High School

Time was steadily ticking down—less than a hundred days remained before the entrance exams.

Hou Tong still hadn't found the girl Bai Liu liked, but with the exams looming, she was too distracted to keep an eye on him the way she used to.

Even Xu Wei barely had time to give Bai Liu a hard time anymore.

Qiao Mu Private High School held weekly exams, monthly assessments, and biweekly round-robin tests. On top of that, she had to deal with her son Bao Kangle's unpredictable grades.

Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian had been given extra lessons too. Every time they snuck down to find Bai Liu, they looked completely exhausted—Fang Dian often dozing off on Lu Yizhan's back, her eyelids drooping with sleep.

Eventually, Bai Liu told them to stop coming down so often, reassuring them that everything would be settled after senior year.

Lu Yizhan agreed, albeit reluctantly.

While everyone else was swamped with the chaos of senior year, Bai Liu remained a maverick—moving at his own pace, out of step with the urgency that gripped the others.

Evening Study, 9 PM, Class XVII.

In the final three months of senior year, most of the students in Bai Liu's class leave for home after school, with parents arriving at 9 PM to pick them up.

The classrooms are filled with disheveled, tired students packing up their materials, papers, and stationery boxes, heading toward the school exit where their parents wait anxiously.

"How was your day?"

Or, "How did you do on your test?"

Outside the classroom, a bustle of students and parents can be heard, but none of this concerns Bai Liu.

Bai Liu sits alone in the corner of the gradually emptying classroom, casually twirling his pencil as he rests his chin on his hand, working through a conic curve problem in mathematics.

He had already calculated the final result for this question three times in an hour—each time arriving at the same answer: one-half.

After going through the problem again without realizing where he went wrong, Bai Liu grew frustrated. He narrowed his eyes, scanning the problem once more, determined to solve it. Finally, his gaze stopped on the period at the end of the last sentence in the problem.

The final word and the period were unpleasantly crossed out.

Math, so annoying.

Time crawled by, the night growing later. The classroom on the first floor was slowly emptying, and Bai Liu, in the bottom right corner by the window, was still working through the conic curve problem for the fourth time.

In late spring, the subtle chirping of mosquitoes could be heard through the window. Suddenly, the empty chair in front of Bai Liu moved on its own, dragging itself closer until it was pressed against his desk.

If a student had passed by the window at that moment, they would have screamed in terror—this was straight out of a school horror movie!

Spades casually crossed his long legs and sat backward in the chair in front of Bai Liu, resting his head on the back of the chair and wrapping his arms around it. He tilted his head, studying Bai Liu. "Why are you still working on this problem? You were quick with the last one."

He looked a bit uncomfortable in the small chair, his long frame forcing him to sit awkwardly, feet restless against the floor, causing the chair and his body to sway.

Bai Liu’s chair also swayed slightly. He glanced up at Spades, his voice cold. "Stop shaking your chair. You’re making my desk move."

"Oh." Spades pulled his legs back and adjusted his chair so that it was squarely facing Bai Liu. He tucked his legs under the desk, pressing them against Bai Liu's calves.

The cramped space under the desk only added to the tension.

Bai Liu's pen made a mark on the paper as Spades' leg lifted the desk. His eyelids fluttered, but Spades continued, clueless. "Why are you still stuck on this question?"

The last problem had been the easiest geometry question—of course he solved it quickly.

But Bai Liu didn't explain it that way. He didn't look at Spades, instead focusing on the question as he answered casually, "Because this question won't let me get it right."

"What's stopping you from getting it right?" Spades frowned, "Just kill the problem."

Bai Liu paused, a faint smile curving the corners of his mouth before it flattened out again. "Can't kill it. This question..."

His words trailed off.

Spades propped himself up on the desk and leaned forward suddenly, one of his legs slipping under the desk to reach for Bai Liu's leg. As Bai Liu tried to move his chair back, Spades stepped on it, holding him in place.

Spades' left hand opened, palm up, and gently took hold of Bai Liu's right hand, which had been turning his pencil. He held it firmly at the spot where Bai Liu had made the mistake on his fourth attempt.

Spades held him so tightly that Bai Liu could barely move. A strange chill ran through him—Spades' skin against the back of his hand and his knee pressing against Bai Liu's thigh felt like an icy embrace.

It suddenly hit Bai Liu: the monster that had been with him all along, the one who had followed him through every stage of his life, had quietly invaded his space. By claiming the affection that had once been his alone, it had grown into a behemoth, controlling his every move.

He realized that, in the grip of this monster, he didn't even have the strength to reach for his pen.

Bai Liu lowered his eyes, watching Spades' hand cover his completely, feeling the smooth, firm muscles of Spades' arm.

It was astounding how quickly Spades had changed—what had once been the small figure of a child now pressed against him, his knees near Bai Liu's thighs.

"Why can't you solve this question?" Spades' voice was unusually soft, his tone sincere as he wrapped his hand around Bai Liu's pencil and said, "If you don't like it, I'll get rid of it for you."

Spades' head rested lightly against Bai Liu's, and he leaned in just a little closer, his breath hitching as their shadows intertwined on the paper.

The proximity made Bai Liu's breath catch. He quickly turned his gaze away, lowering his eyes.

It was hard to believe that this man—who looked so confident and imposing now—had once been a disorganized mess of puppy-like energy just six months ago. He was more handsome than any NPC Bai Liu had encountered in the game.

And he was so much more than that now, in every sense.

Bai Liu's right hand, still holding the pen, clenched tightly, his fingers turning white. His voice remained cold: "How exactly do you plan to help me solve this problem?"

Spades lifted his gaze, studying Bai Liu intently before his eyes dropped to his lips, a strong, purposeful look in his eyes.

"You reward me now, and I'll solve it for you."

Bai Liu instinctively pursed his lips before quickly rejecting, "No reward."

"I said, not in the classroom," Spades insisted.

"But you also said it's not allowed in the dorm room," Bai Liu countered. Spades gripped his wrist and pressed it down, leaning his head against Bai Liu's shoulder, his voice muffled as he spoke, "So where else is it allowed?"

"You haven't rewarded me in 84 minutes."

—Which was almost exactly one and a half periods of evening study time.

When Bai Liu was doing his laundry in the dormitory one and a half nights before self-study, Spades asked to hold his hand, wanting to take credit for it and asking for a reward. Bai Liu didn't want to give him one—he had no idea who had started this perverse trend of "rewards."

Just hugging him and doing the laundry already required an extra five minutes of kissing. Was this how future Bai Liu always made such unprofitable deals with this guy?

But for some reason, it ended up being a reward anyway, with another kiss added on the way out.

Bai Liu had forbidden Spades from following him to his evening study sessions, as Spades was truly detrimental to his academic performance.

Yet, it felt as though Bai Liu, when the door was closing, couldn’t help but glance back at Spades behind the door.

Through the small gap, Bai Liu saw Spades lying face down across his bed, his head buried deep in Bai Liu's quilt, wearing his freshly changed school uniform. A strong sense of abandonment radiated from the monster, like a dark cloud thundered above him, a storm swirling in his mind.

Then, without knowing why, Bai Liu felt something shift within him. He called out softly through the closing door, "Spades, are you coming with me?"

Spades looked up, his face expressionless but his silvery-blue eyes locking with Bai Liu’s. "I want it," he said.

Later, Bai Liu couldn’t recall exactly what happened, but he remembered that Spades had grabbed his wrist, pulled him into the dormitory, pinned him against the half-open door, and very much taken it upon himself to claim his reward.

Bai Liu drank two glasses of cold water before leaving the house to cool down the redness of his lips.

The more time Bai Liu spent with this creature, the more obsessed he became, which made him wary of the possibility that Spades had some sort of special ability—like making him blank out for a brief moment, leaving him unconscious.

For example, right now.

Bai Liu was about to say, "No more rewards tonight, and you can't go to bed," but then he tilted his head and locked eyes with Spades, who was leaning on his shoulder.

Spades lowered his eyes, a small beam of light catching his long eyelashes. His cold demeanor softened with a quiet warmth in the orange glow of the light. His silvery-blue eyes stared intently at Bai Liu, his voice suddenly softer.

"I like you, Bai Liu."

There was no emotion in his words, but they carried such tenderness that Bai Liu felt a trembling in his chest.

So, Bai Liu put down his pen, and the words that left his lips were calm. "I'm bored with the questions. Let's go for a stroll on the playground."

"There's a reward for you there too."

A year ago, Bai Liu would never have imagined being alone on the playground after 9:30 p.m. It was a place where the couples at Qiao Mu High School often snuck off to, hiding their love.

Back in his second year, Bai Liu had only come to the playground for one reason: to help Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian, a couple, escape the watchful eyes of the teachers.

Because every now and then, the head teacher would appear, torch in hand, roaming the playground, scanning the couples with a sharp gaze. His eyes were ruthless, always on the lookout to break up any adolescent love, like a lone wolf stalking its prey.

When the head teacher found Bai Liu, the emotionless "lightbulb," he was a perfect shield.

Bai Liu knew the playground well, and he was familiar with many places where couples could be alone, like the table tennis table by the stadium.

He knew how the adolescent boys, filled with hormones, couldn't resist kissing their girlfriends in these secluded spots, even going as far as putting their hands inside their school uniforms.

Bai Liu had often seen their panicked faces as they rushed to flee when the head teacher appeared, torchlight catching their terrified expressions, their hysteria so stark that the scene seemed absurd.

Some of the boys even abandoned their girlfriends to run away alone.

At those times, Bai Liu observed the farce with detachment, as though it was happening in another world, to another species.

He didn't understand why the boys were so restless or why the girls sobbed so heartbreakingly. He didn't understand why they scrambled to be together, engaging in such a meaningless act of sexuality when the head teacher's voice rang out.

A year ago, to Bai Liu, love seemed like a foolish pursuit, while desire was the true motivator.

But it seemed a waste of desire to be unable to control it rationally, to do things that could have no real consequence.

Bai Liu never imagined he would become part of this ridiculous couple, just as he never thought he'd lose control of his own desires.

Spades lowered Bai Liu onto the table tennis table, his lips trailing down from the corner of Bai Liu's mouth to his jaw, placing quick, tender kisses. His hands were already lifting the hem of Bai Liu's school uniform. The moment he reached beneath it and pressed his cold fingers against Bai Liu's skin, a shiver ran down Bai Liu's spine. His body trembled like a shrimp curling up from the cold, his delicate fingers clutching Spades' shirt with a vice-like grip.

Bai Liu's breathing became shallow and rapid, as though he was drowning. He slowly lifted his head from Spades' shoulder.

Under the dim streetlight falling on the table tennis table, Bai Liu's eyes were damp, his dark gaze hazy with confusion. His mind felt on the verge of shattering when he heard the distant voice of the head teacher.

Bai Liu didn't understand why the couples didn't separate, even as they heard the voice.

But in that moment…

He slowly closed his eyes, holding onto Spades, feeling his body dissolve into a warm haze as Spades kissed the corners of his eyes, whispered sweetly in his ear, and gazed at him with those silvery-blue eyes.

"I like you."

Maybe I'm actually psychotic, Bai Liu thought, or maybe I'm just crazy.

Bai Liu opened his eyes and looked at the approaching torchlight, his mind in a daze.

In that moment, he wondered: if the head teacher discovered that Spades had left without him, would he cry like the girls who had been abandoned?

Can he cry?

He didn't know.

Bai Liu clung to Spades' back as he closed his eyes and allowed himself to sink deeper.

... If we're meant to be together in the future, we shouldn't be apart.

Qiao Mu Private High School

The head teacher eventually missed Bai Liu, who was hiding in the corner, and Spades, who was crouched beside the wall behind the ping pong table. Both stood still, hands in the air, their breaths uneven as they waited for the head teacher to leave.

"When we get back," Bai Liu said, lowering his eyes. The soft glow still haloed his face, but his voice was cool. "Don't interrupt my studies."

Spades tightened his grip on Bai Liu's hand and let out a small ooh before asking, "So… can we come back here tomorrow?"

Bai Liu didn't respond. He simply squeezed Spades' hand back, slowly.

Amid the bustle of the school day, time passed quickly. Strange incidents occurred now and then, but they were soon uncovered.

For instance, a girl jumped into the lake on the hill, believing the legend of the high school lake. She was saved by Lu Yizhan, who happened to be passing by. Not long after, Qiao Mu Private High School was reported for omitting questions on their exams.

The entire school was thrown into chaos. A covert purge began, and disorder rippled through Qiao Mu like a fever.

Bai Liu, a student from the orphanage, came under special attention. An inspector pulled him aside for a conversation—not formal or rehearsed, but more like a casual chat.

"How are things going here?"

"Have you thought about your future?"

"Your grades have been improving lately."

The inspector handed Bai Liu a business card with a rare gentleness. "I've looked into your class. And into you."

"There's not much advice I can give you, but I want you to know—you're not alone."

He patted Bai Liu on the shoulder, his tone serious. "Many people are willing to help you shoulder the burden. I am. So is the orphanage. So are the friends around you. You don't have to fight injustice alone."

He said this with enough clarity to make his meaning understood, but not so plainly as to expose what he knew. Then, with a wave of his hand, he turned to leave.

Only later did Bai Liu learn the reason he'd been singled out. The anonymous student who reported the exam question omission had mentioned him—along with the many injustices plaguing the school.

Even Xu Wei, a minor player in the school's hierarchy, was dragged into the mess. She was investigated for her senior teacher title and suspended from extracurricular institutions. Her once-comfortable monthly income of over $30,000 plummeted to just $4,000—and it kept falling. Xu Wei came to class every day looking paler and more haunted.

One day, she collapsed in the middle of class.

Coincidentally, that was the same day she was found guilty of accepting nearly $200,000 in gifts from parents. She was ordered to repay the full amount.

Gifts that had already been sold were converted into cash to cover the debt.

The classroom descended into chaos. Bao Kangle clung to Xu Wei, who had collapsed at the lectern like a dead woman, sobbing, "Mom! Mom! What's wrong, Mom?!"

Looking at Xu Wei's face—white as death—the students who had once used money and power to bend the rules were visibly shaken.

…What happened to Xu Wei today could easily happen to them tomorrow.

Students and parents were being investigated too. The inspection team treated Qiao Mu High like their own home, visiting teachers and students one by one, as if they wouldn't stop until they unearthed the full truth.

And instead of dwindling, their numbers only grew.

By the window, Bai Liu watched yet another group of investigators arrive. This group wore octopus-shaped badges on their shoulders. The previous team greeted them with deference.

In this situation, Bai Liu—an orphanage student—was now under protection. No one at school dared speak to him or treat him with disrespect.

When Xu Wei was discharged from the hospital, the first thing she did at school was call Bai Liu into her office to apologize.

“Bai Liu,” she said. Her voice was weak. She wasn’t fully recovered, her pale face propped up by her thin body leaning against the desk. The stern tone she used to lecture him was gone. “The investigation team leaders spoke to me. Was it you who brought this to their attention?”

Bai Liu glanced at her indifferently. “Is that what you called me here for?”

The implication was clear: if this was all she wanted to talk about, he’d be leaving.

Xu Wei looked up at his expression—completely devoid of regard—and nearly ground her teeth in frustration. She trembled, on the verge of cursing him out.

But then she remembered the investigators, the strange rumors she’d heard about Gaucho Lake, and a chill ran down her spine. She stopped.

“...No,” she said quietly. “I just wanted to say I’m sorry.”

“Before, when I scolded you—it wasn’t intentional. I was just worried. I didn’t expect that what I said would degrade your character, would be taken as an insult. If my words hurt you, then I’m sincerely sorry.”

“Mm.” Bai Liu gave a noncommittal nod.

Xu Wei’s eyes lit up. She slowly pushed a document toward him and bit her lip. “Bai Liu, if you understand… please sign this letter of understanding. I need to show it to the investigation leaders.”

Bai Liu glanced at the letter, then picked up the pen.

Xu Wei’s eyes widened.

He signed with three titles: [Orphan of the Orphanage], [Social Scum], [Mental Patient]. Then he looked up at her with an unreadable expression. “Signed, teacher.”

“That’s not even your name!” Xu Wei’s face twisted, her voice rising into hysteria.

Bai Liu blinked at her calmly. “So you do know that’s not my name?”

“Then why did you always call me that?”

Xu Wei froze, her expression vacant, absurd. Her hands slipped from the desk as she slumped forward.

Yes… those were her own words—thrown back at her, just as they had once been thrown at him.

Bai Liu set down his pen as if it were weightless, turning to leave.

"If you really want to apologize, show some sincerity, teacher." He paused. "At least bring your fellow Bao Kangle students with you when you do."

The small flower bed near the playground.

Fang Dian listened as Bai Liu recounted Xu Wei’s apology, then gave him a thumbs up. "Cool!"

Bai Liu turned his gaze to Lu Yizhan. "What happened at Gaucho Lake? I heard it was you who saved that student?"

Lu Yizhan scratched his head and let out a long sigh. "I just happened to be there. I don’t know why that girl suddenly jumped in, but I was fast enough to pull her out."

Bai Liu’s eyes narrowed. "And why were you at Gaucho Lake in the middle of the night?"

Lu Yizhan hesitated. "Because I was investigating what’s going on with the lake."

"What exactly is going on at Gaucho Lake?" Bai Liu asked.

Lu Yizhan rested his hands on his knees, slowly clenching them. "I’ve been digging into the origin of the rumors and figured out the exact conditions for the lake to 'open.'"

"The specific conditions for Gaucho Lake to open?" Bai Liu’s gaze sharpened. "What are they?"

Lu Yizhan took a deep breath. "You've probably heard the version going around at the base of the mountain—that if the moon is reflected just right in the middle of the lake, you can see the future exam papers. But there's another version."

He lowered his voice. "A version whispered among some of the teachers."

"—that the student who opens Gaucho Lake must be one destined to fail the exam."

Lu Yizhan's eyes darkened. "It means the lake only opens for a student who will lose their future GCSE results."

Fang Dian tilted her head, curious. "Let's say the rumor is true. It still doesn't make much sense, does it? If a student sees the test paper in advance, learns the questions, and then does them again in the exam hall, they should do better, right?"

"It's not like that." Lu Yizhan's tone turned uncharacteristically grim. His lips pressed into a line. "Once you've seen the questions in the lake and you couldn't solve them—you'll never be able to solve them again."

Hospital, Ward 301.

A girl with damp hair lay pale on the bed—the same girl Lu Yizhan had saved the night before. Despite nearly drowning, her face wasn't the least bit disheveled. Instead, it was lit with excitement. Her eyes flicked anxiously toward the phone on the bedside table.

Her heart pounded as she slowly reached out and picked it up.

Screen on. Unlock. Open browser. Begin typing.

The ward was empty except for her—an upper-year student now trembling with manic energy as she searched. Her chest heaved with emotion, her eyes locked on the tiny, glowing screen.

[What are cyanobacteria?]

[Is "step by step" the correct idiom?]

She had seen them—actually seen the GCSE questions underwater. She'd remembered them. She got so many of them right in her head!

The more she searched, the faster she breathed. A flush rose in her pale cheeks, her lips trembling.

There was one big chemistry question—organic compounds. She never got it right. But she'd remembered the stem. She'd tried to hold on to it, to bring it back and search for it—

But now, as she tried to write it out, her mind blanked.

She couldn't remember the question.

How?!

She clutched at the memory, frantic, but the question spun uselessly in her head—fifteen points, slipping away behind some invisible barrier.

She pressed her lips together.

Maybe she'd just forgotten. Maybe it would come back. She opened her mistake log, the one for big organic questions she had carefully studied for months.

But when she looked—nothing made sense.

The stems of the questions blurred and twisted. Lines of text morphed into strange, twitching rows of alien characters. Each word twisted into a tiny, grinning worm with a human face, leering at her from inside the screen.

"Ah!" She shrieked, flinging the phone away.

"Miaomiao, what's wrong?" Her father burst through the door. He saw the phone lying on the quilt and reached to pick it up.
"Don't worry about the questions right now. Just rest, okay?"

But Miaomiao, wide-eyed and trembling, grabbed the phone back. She scrolled through her mistake log, now with horror in her gaze.

That big organic chemistry question—unsolved at the bottom of the lake—was gone from her memory.

The genetics question in biology—also gone.

The physics question on punch timer speed...

She slowly lowered the phone.

Her face was blank, distant.

A friend had once joked with her about the lake legend:

—“The score you get on the exam in the lake is your real GCSE score.”

She had laughed.

“How can it be the same score if you take the exam twice?” she’d argued.

Now, she understood.

Because the questions you can’t answer the first time—

—are erased from your world.

No matter how hard you try after that, you’ll never get them right again.

Qiao Mu Private High School

"Miaomiao, are you okay?" Her father asked with concern as he gently picked up his bleary-eyed daughter. He set the phone aside and continued, "You were unconscious for a long time after you drowned. You only regained full consciousness about a week ago. Try not to get too emotional—Dad gets really worried about you."

"By the way, your class teacher and the headmaster came to visit you."

Miaomiao looked up, dazed. "Who?"

Her father repeated patiently, "The headmaster and your class teacher, Mr. Ren."

The headmaster gave a stiff smile to Miaomiao's father before turning to look at Miaomiao in her hospital bed. His eyes gleamed like he was staring at a slab of cooked meat.

Unnerved, Miaomiao's father instinctively shifted to block his daughter's view from that unsettling gaze. Fortunately, the headmaster quickly looked away, and Mr. Ren—Miaomiao's class teacher—stepped forward.

"Mr. Wang, Miaomiao has missed quite a few revision classes recently. I'd like to discuss how we can help her catch up."

He glanced at Miaomiao, then lowered his voice. "Would it be alright if we spoke outside? I'm worried the conversation might stress her out."

After a moment of hesitation, Miaomiao's father nodded. "Alright, let's talk outside."

The ward door remained open. Inside, Wang Miao lay on one of the beds, separated by a drawn blue curtain. From outside, she couldn't be seen. The headmaster lingered by the doorway, staring at Miaomiao with a dark, calculating expression. Miaomiao stared back, confused, unable to reconcile this aged, sagging man with the proud headmaster she'd once seen during the 100-day countdown ceremony.

"You've seen the GCSE papers, haven't you?" the headmaster suddenly asked.

Wang Miao's heart skipped. She jolted upright instinctively. "How…

how do you know?"

"How many questions do you still remember?" he pressed, stepping closer. His expression grew darker, and he leaned on the hospital bed's railing. "You're a decent student. If you focus, can you recall the questions worth four or five hundred points?"

Terrified, Wang Miao shrank away, shaking her head repeatedly, unable to respond.

The headmaster let out a long breath, then lowered his hands and stared at her coldly. "Well, since things have come to this, let me be direct."

"As I'm sure you've realized after going to Gaucho Lake—those rumors are all true."

"There's something special at the bottom of the lake. It allows certain students—those doomed to fail—to see their actual future exam papers."

Wang Miao finally found her voice, trembling. "How do you know that?"

"Because I'm a player." The headmaster raised his heavy eyelids. "What's in that lake is a prop I redeemed from the game and planted there myself."

To Wang Miao, his words blurred into nonsense. She blinked at him, dazed. "What… what did you just say?"

The headmaster exchanged glances with the two teachers beside him, speaking in a low voice. "She's not a player. Where's Lu Yizhan—the one who saved her?"

One teacher replied seriously, "I checked. Lu Yizhan is in our class. He's not a player. He just happened to be there and jumped in to save someone. His behavior doesn't fit a player profile."

"Lu Yizhan even circled Gaucho Lake without showing any desire to enter it. Definitely not a player."

"So who solved all the questions, escaped the prop, and then reported us?" the headmaster's face flushed with suppressed fury. "Who tipped off the Heresy Authority and got our prop confiscated?"

"Have we screened everyone we've interacted with in the game?"

A teacher nodded. "Yes. All our identities in the game are disguised. No one's been exposed. It's unlikely someone tracked us from the game into reality just to target us."

"Then our original guess stands." The headmaster dropped heavily into a chair and gave a bitter laugh. "Some little brat from our school entered the game, survived, discovered the truth about heretics and props, and then decided to play the hero."

"Exactly," the teacher agreed. "Otherwise, how could anyone have completed that fake GCSE paper at the bottom of the lake, memorized all the questions, and then submitted them straight to both the investigation team and the Heresy Authority?"

"Only a player could've pulled that off."

Wang Miao watched the two teachers talk, but her ears rang and their words faded into static.

One teacher gave her a dismissive glance, like she was nothing more than an insect. "And Wang Miao? Just an ordinary student."

"Handle her like we've done in past years," the headmaster ordered with a wave, standing up. "You talk to her. I need to return to the school."

The sagging flesh of his cheeks trembled with suppressed anger. "I've already ordered a list of students who might be players. I'll verify them one by one when I get back."

"If I find the little brat who ruined everything..."

He didn't finish the sentence. On his way out, he exchanged a friendly smile with Miaomiao's father, as if he were simply a concerned educator, not someone who had just issued silent threats in a hospital ward.

Inside, the teacher sat down across from Wang Miao, adopting a formal tone.

"Student Wang Miao, you've already entered the GCSE lake and completed questions while the prop was active. That means the score you achieved there will be your real score during the actual exam. You understand what that means, right? It's not a very good result."

"You now have two choices. First: take the GCSE as is and accept whatever score you already got—it'll be the same no matter how many times you retake it."

Wang Miao shook and forced herself to speak. "I... I can repeat the year!"

The teacher gave her a pitying look. "Repeat? Do you think you'll still be able to answer the questions?"

"Didn't you hear me? That score is locked in. It's a rule-based prop. No matter what you do, your result won't change."

"So what's the second option?" Wang Miao's voice was hollow. She didn't fully grasp the conversation, only clung to the structure.

The teacher smiled.

"Tell us the questions you remember. We'll share them with students who need them, and in return, you'll receive a generous commission."

"What do you say, Wang Miao?"

Wang Miao sat frozen, her mind blank, the world spinning around her. She couldn't utter a single word.

Meanwhile, at Xu Wei's home—

"Students who've been acting strangely in class recently?"

Xu Wei was on the phone in the living room, nodding nervously as she spoke with quiet urgency. "Yes, yes, that's right, Headmaster. Bai Liu has been particularly strange. I received a book from him—it showed him with some sort of... strange creature, always with him."

"It started around senior year. He suddenly changed—he'd talk to himself, say things I didn't understand. His grades improved drastically. He used to do poorly, but then it was like something helped him, and everything turned around overnight."

"Is there something Bai Liu wants in particular?" she echoed the question from the other end of the call.

"Yes!" Xu Wei's tone lifted as she stood. "He's obsessed with money. He caused quite a stir with that charity orphanage thing before—all just for money. And he's obsessed with horror games. Always playing those when he has nothing better to do."

"He's especially drawn to horror games."

At that moment, in the headmaster's office—

Listening to Xu Wei's report, the headmaster narrowed his eyes. He circled Bai Liu's name in red ink on the student list in front of him, then hung up the phone.

"These seventeen students are our key suspects," the headmaster said, swiveling in his chair and tossing the list onto his desk. He eyed the four teachers standing before him, all with heads bowed. "Find a way to get them to jump into Gaucho Lake—watch how they react to props. We'll identify the real player that way."

"Especially this one—Bai Liu." His finger pressed firmly on the name at the top of the list. "I'm fairly sure he's a player. Probably has props from inside the game."

"Maybe not now, but definitely in the future. Keep an eye on him—we might be able to pull him into our ranks."

One of the teachers hesitated before speaking. "But this student is also under investigation by the Heresy Administration. He's from the orphanage, which puts him in a delicate position. It's risky for us to make any direct moves."

"And the team assigned this time is said to be the second squad of the Heretic Authority. Their leader is... notoriously harsh on players. We can't risk being exposed as players ourselves."

The teacher visibly shivered, voice softening. "...Principal, perhaps it's better if we don't act directly. We could have an ordinary person try something with Bai Liu instead?"

The headmaster paused, then nodded slowly.

"Principal, we're low on points," the teacher continued cautiously. "We already spent a lot just to buy that altered college entrance exam paper. It's taken us years to recoup those points. If we act now, we'll need props again... and we don't have the points to redeem them."

The headmaster let out a long breath, face darkening. "Understood. I'll spend some money. I'll have Xu Wei test him."

At 2 a.m., Xu Wei was stirred from sleep by her phone. Her eyes shot open at the voice on the other end.

“What? Two and a half million?”

The headmaster’s voice was calm, almost coaxing. “I don’t know if you’ll agree, Ms. Xu Wei. But if you can lure Bai Liu to jump into Gaucho Lake, I’ll give you two and a half million dollars.”

“No one will know. Just you and me. I promise nothing will happen to you.”

“Jump into Gaucho Lake?!” Xu Wei’s voice rose, but she quickly lowered it, trembling. “That means... Bai Liu could drown? Will I be held responsible?”

“Why should it matter to you if he drowns?” the headmaster snapped. “It’s the most stressful point of the college entrance exams—he’d have a million reasons to jump. No one will question it. You’ll be safe.”

“Fine. Let me... think it over.”

Xu Wei hung up, dazed. She slowly sank to the floor, staring blankly at her new home.

She had bought the place with a loan after landing her job at Qiao Mu High School. At $41,000 per square foot, the apartment was in a famously wealthy district. And yet, the monthly mortgage was $20,000—for thirty years. Now, under investigation, she couldn’t even make payments anymore. Rumors were spreading. Because Bai Liu refused to sign a letter of understanding, the investigation team was reportedly considering revoking her teaching license over so-called “ethical issues.”

If she couldn’t come up with the money, she’d lose everything.

Her eyes drifted through the glass balcony door to the coffee table. A porcelain cup held down the letter of understanding—the one Bai Liu had refused to sign, the one that still listed him as [orphan from the orphanage].

She would only be coaxing him to jump. If anything happened, she might face moral condemnation, at worst. But she’d walk away with two million dollars.

Xu Wei drew a deep breath, steeling herself to stand—

—when she saw the shadow in front of the coffee table.

Bao Kangle's eyes were bloodshot, his face twisted with manic excitement. "Mom, I heard everything. There's two million on the line."

"I'll help you push Bai Liu into the lake!"

Qiao Mu Private High School

Undercurrents swelled beneath the calm surface of everyday life, yet people walked across the rippling waves as if the ground were still solid beneath their feet.

Under mounting pressure from all sides, Qiao Mu Private High School announced an early exam break—one week off, no homework—giving students a chance to mentally adjust before finals.

The moment the notice was issued, students erupted into cheers, regardless of whether they had been involved in the recent commotion. Some even began tearing up their papers in celebration.

Snow-white sheets fluttered from the upper floors of the school building like confetti, and amid the jubilant cries of "liberation!", Bai Liu turned away from the window. His gaze returned to the unfinished math problem on his desk, and he calmly wrote the word “solve.”

While the rest of the class scrambled to pack up, Bai Liu remained still, indifferent, absorbed in his work as if the commotion had nothing to do with him.

One by one, the students trickled out. The once-lively classroom fell quiet. Outside, the sky dimmed. When Bai Liu finally looked up again, the room was empty.

He had spent half an hour on that probability question—and this time, he got it right.

His accuracy had been improving. His scores in major exams now consistently topped 400.

“Bai Liu!” Fang Dian called out, appearing in the doorway with a shoulder bag slung across her body, dressed in her sports uniform.

“You coming back or what?”

—By "back," she meant the little house. Back with Fang Dian.

Bai Liu glanced around. “Where’s Lu Yizhan? He’s not with you?”

“Something came up at the orphanage, so he went back to handle it.” Fang Dian walked in casually and sat across from Bai Liu. She studied his face for a moment before her eyes narrowed. “What’s wrong?

Don't tell me you're thinking of staying here instead of coming back with me?"

Bai Liu hesitated. "I was planning to stay and study."

Of course, that wasn't the truth. His gaze drifted to a shadow lingering in the corner of the room—a familiar figure: Spades. But the moment Fang Dian entered, the figure vanished. Bai Liu pressed his lips together.

...Lately, there had been too many people hovering around him. Teachers from the orphanage checking in, classmates like Hou Tong watching him during lessons, Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan dropping by almost every day to make sure he was eating.

He barely had any time to himself anymore. And as a result, Spades had been appearing less and less.

This seven-day break… it might be his only chance to spend some real time with Spades.

"Liar." Fang Dian almost didn't want to call him out. But sensing something, she leaned closer, studying Bai Liu's expression. Hesitantly, as if testing or confirming a suspicion, she asked, "Bai Liu, the reason you don't want to go back… is it because of someone at school?"

He didn't answer. Instead, he turned his face away, toward the window—away from her eyes.

"No way!" Fang Dian exclaimed, grabbing Bai Liu's chin and forcing him to face her, grinning mischievously. "Who is it? Huh? Who is it? Who is it?"

"Do I know them?"

"Which class is she from?"

"How tall? Cute? When did you start talking? Have you held hands yet?"

Bai Liu shot her a cold look.

Fang Dian raised both hands in surrender, still grinning. "Alright, alright, just one last question. You answer it and I swear I'll drop it. Won't even tell Mr. Lu."

Bai Liu gave a reluctant pause. "What is it?"

Fang Dian's voice softened. Her tone shifted as she rested her cheek on the desk, head tilted slightly. "This person…" Her eyes were gentle now. "Is this the person you want in your future?"

Bai Liu went quiet. His eyes drifted back to the corner where Spades had disappeared, and after a moment, he gave a faint, nearly inaudible, "Mm."

"Got it." Fang Dian ruffled Bai Liu's hair, ruining its usual neatness before pulling back. Then, she opened her shoulder bag, pulled out a crumpled hundred yuan note, and placed it on the desk.

"Here—your commission for playing matchmaker with me and Lu Yizhan."

She smiled. "I've been saving it for the right moment. I think this is it."

"Go treat yourself to something fun over the break."

Bai Liu glanced at the money, then paused. "Thanks. I owe you—"

"Nah." Fang Dian cut him off with a wave and slung her bag over her shoulder. She was already halfway out the door, tossing her voice playfully over her shoulder: "Just promise me you'll at least smooch, okay? Newbie in love~ Bye~"

As soon as Fang Dian vanished from sight, Spades reappeared. He leaned over Bai Liu's shoulder, brow furrowed in confusion. "What does 'smooch' mean?"

Bai Liu: "……"

...It's the meaning behind the reward you keep asking for every day.

The next day, Sunday.

Bai Liu, dressed in his school uniform, appeared beside one of the city's bustling shopping streets—with the invisible Spades quietly trailing beside him.

Spades looked around, visibly disoriented. "Where are we?"

"It's a busy street. Lots of foot traffic, lots of money changing hands," Bai Liu replied calmly. "Young people come here to waste their energy and kill time."

Spades furrowed his brow, even more confused. "Then… why are we here?"

Bai Liu paused.

This went back to the night before.

He'd used one of the school's computers to search things like [best places to go on a first date] and [fun date ideas under $100].

The answers weren't exactly helpful.

"A hundred bucks? Bro, don't be cheap."
"Honestly, just break up and give me your girlfriend—I'll take her out myself."
"Can you even buy a meal for two under a hundred anymore?"

But there were some more well-meaning responses too:

"Try the XX shopping street nearby—they're running lots of promotions. If your girlfriend doesn't mind discounts, it's a great budget-friendly date spot."

Bai Liu had considered asking Spades whether he minded discounted goods—but after he'd explained, all Spades seemed to register was: going out for a good time.

So he'd stared blankly at Bai Liu for half the night, not listening to a word.

Now, they were standing in a lively, slightly old-fashioned street filled with small shops and stalls. The crowd was dense, and as the post had promised, nearly everything was on sale or part of some event.

Even so, Bai Liu had very little money to spare.

"If you see something you like, you can tell me," he said flatly. "But I probably can't afford it."

Spades gave an interested "Ooh," then asked, "What would it take to afford one?"

"Discounts," Bai Liu replied, making eye contact. He pointed at a bright red logo. "See that sign? On sale. If it has that, we can consider it."

“But some cheap ones don’t even need a discount—”

Before Bai Liu could finish, Spades suddenly grabbed his hand and took off running.

They stopped in front of a large arcade.

“Can I buy this?” Spades asked.

Bai Liu glanced at what he was pointing to and froze for a second. It was a horror-themed shooting game—players took down zombies with guns in a dark booth concealed by heavy green curtains.

A large screen outside displayed the game trailer, and a bright banner hung beside it:

Amazing Price: $20!

“You like…” Bai Liu’s voice grew curious, almost amused, “playing horror games?”

Spades nodded immediately. “Mhm.”

Bai Liu blinked, then shrugged. “Alright. This one, then.”

As they entered, the arcade owner gave Bai Liu a strange look. “You sure about the two-player mode? You’re alone.”

“I’ll control both sides,” Bai Liu replied, expressionless.

“…Right.”

The owner raised an eyebrow but continued, “Just so you know, the screen projects your gameplay onto that big street display out front. You’ll draw a crowd. You okay with that?”

“I don’t mind.”

“Alright.” The owner accepted the cash, then lazily lifted the curtain for him. “Go on in.”

“Just a warning,” he added, “this new machine’s hard. You need to play two-player mode for at least a full minute to trigger any output. No refunds.”

Bai Liu’s eyes flicked to a sign with game details posted inside.

“You offer a bonus for playing more than thirty minutes?”

“Yeah.” The arcade owner chuckled. “Not that you’ll make it.”

“What’s the bonus?”

“Well, for couples who last over thirty minutes, we give out a movie ticket. Forty-five minutes gets you the movie plus a fifty-dollar meal voucher for the street. And if you last more than an hour—it’s a full date package. Movie, drinks, balloons, flowers, and a $300 voucher.”

Bai Liu’s gaze sharpened. “Over an hour?”

The arcade owner faltered at the intensity in his eyes. “Y-yeah… but the current record is thirteen minutes in two-player mode. No one's hit the reward threshold yet.”

“And you only get one try for the challenge…”

Before he could finish, Bai Liu had already stepped through the curtain.

From inside, the owner heard the student’s voice, calm and resolute:

“I only have one day off. I won’t be coming back for another try.”

Then, as if that settled it: “Are the movie tickets and vouchers redeemable today?”

The owner stared, dumbfounded. “If you win… yeah.”

So he’s really planning to win it all in one shot?

Why… do I feel like he actually will?

Twenty minutes later.

On the shopping street, a crowd had gathered around a large gaming screen, growing steadily as exclamations of disbelief filled the air.

"Holy shit, that move was insane!"

"...They haven't lost a single life yet? No way—is this even the same game I'm playing?"

On-screen, two characters armed with guns dashed through an abandoned building. Walkers roamed the ground below, but they were cleared out so quickly by the players that the audience barely had time to register their presence.

Each character's score bar—one on the left, one on the right—was climbing so fast it looked like they were about to break the game.

The arcade owner stared in awe, rubbing his eyes. If he hadn't seen Bai Liu walk in alone earlier, he would've assumed two top-tier players were inside doing some hardcore practice.

"Wait a sec… their life bars are linked. Isn't this couple mode?" a boy in the crowd suddenly asked, his face paling. "Shit—don't tell me one of them is a girl?"

"???? Whose girlfriend is that strong?!"

"Damn, these moves could stomp me flat—and you're telling me it's a girl?!"

The discussion under the big screen quickly veered off-topic. Shock at the pro-level gameplay turned into intense curiosity about the mysterious "girl" behind the controller. Soon, most of the crowd had moved to the arcade's exit, eager to catch a glimpse of her.

Just then, Hou Tong—on break from school—was walking past the arcade. She wasn't particularly fond of the place, having once tried a horror game on Bai Liu's recommendation and being terrified out of her mind within three minutes. She still held a grudge.

"Eh!" A girl next to Hou Tong suddenly grabbed her arm, shaking it with excitement. "Hou Tong, wait! Look at the name on the screen—is that Bai Liu?"

Hou Tong turned reluctantly—and froze.

Sure enough, on the left side of the screen, the nimble player at the top of the leaderboard was tagged: [Bai Liu].

"Wait… isn't this couple mode?" her friend whispered, glancing sideways at Hou Tong with growing horror. She mentally screamed at herself for pointing it out.

Bai Liu is playing couple mode… with another girl?!

Hou Tong's eyes snapped toward the other player's name—[[Spades]].

?????

What kind of girl has that name?

The hour mark hit. The two characters on screen froze in place. The game was over.

In an instant, the crowd surged toward the game booth's exit, mostly teenage boys, hyped up and shouting over one another as they squeezed in for a look.

"They're coming out! I bet five bucks she's a beauty!"

"Nah, she's a dinosaur!"

"No way, she's gotta be hot!"

Under the arcade's colorful lights, the black-out curtain lifted just slightly. A pale, slender hand slipped through the gap, letting streaks of light and wind filter inside. They caught on strands of soft black hair, lifting them gently.

The crowd held their breath. One boy gulped audibly.

The figure emerged. His damp hair and collar clung slightly to his skin from the sweat of an intense hour-long session. His open collar revealed a delicate, sharply defined collarbone. His skin was so pale it almost glowed; his lips were strikingly red.

Bai Liu looked up. "Boss, it's been an hour."

The crowd froze. A few boys sucked in sharp breaths. One of them leapt into the air, yelling, "I won the bet! I said it was a beauty!"

He looked so out of place here, it was surreal.

The arcade owner waved his hands, trying to disperse the growing commotion. "There's no pretty girl! He's a guy! He just played two-player mode alone, so scram already!"

"He played couple mode by himself?!" The crowd reeled in disbelief. All eyes turned to Bai Liu.

Only now did they realize—yes, the beautiful "girl" was actually a boy.

Bai Liu gave them a cool glance and walked over to the counter. “My full couple’s package.”

The owner, still in disbelief, reluctantly handed over the vouchers. “Didn’t see your girlfriend with you. You really used those vouchers solo?”

Bai Liu nodded. “Mm.”

As he turned to leave, the group of boys blocked his path.

One boy stumbled forward, eyes shining with admiration and awe. “Beauty—no! Handsome! Handsome boy!”

“Forget girls, just date yourself tonight! No—wait—come play another round with us!”

“No more games,” Bai Liu said, attempting to sidestep them.

They blocked him again, hands folded as if in prayer, faces full of pleading.

“C’mon, man, you were amazing just now! Just one more round—take us along!”

Seeing that they meant no harm, Bai Liu paused and casually made up an excuse. “The vouchers are only good for tonight. If I don’t use them, they’ll go to waste.”

“Then let’s use them!” they exclaimed, fists pumping. “We’ll pay for a date if that means you’ll game with us!”

“Pick one of us—anyone you like! We’ll go to the movies right now!”

“You think it’s your turn to date him?” A cold voice cut through the crowd. Hou Tong walked up, head held high, looking down at Bai Liu with an air of haughty pride—but her eyes were unmistakably hurt. “You came out to play without even inviting me?”

Another beauty. The boys were stunned again, eyes wide with disbelief. Their gazes turned back to Bai Liu in utter reverence.

Whoa… this guy ditched his girlfriend to game solo?!

“Your girlfriend?” one of the boys asked, tone caught between envy and disbelief. “She’s just as beautiful as you.”

Spades, expression unreadable, stared straight at Bai Liu. “Girlfriend?”

Bai Liu: “...”

Bai Liu turned everyone down.

Hou Tong felt wronged this time, genuinely confused. “Why? You don’t even have a girlfriend. Would you really rather eat alone than with someone else?”

“Being alone suits me better,” Bai Liu replied as he headed out the door. He paused briefly at the threshold. “When I’m alone, I have someone to keep me company.”

Hou Tong didn’t understand what he meant. She stood there watching his slim figure in the school uniform disappear into the neon lights of the crowded shopping street, her eyes brimming with tears.

“There’s no one there…” she sobbed. “Isn’t that still being alone?”

Bai Liu redeemed his voucher for two large buckets of soda and played every two-player game from one end of the shopping street to the other—with Spades. He cleared each level alone, yet always in two-player mode, leaving shopkeepers and onlookers staring in disbelief.

The prizes he won were sold to passing boys and girls, and the money he made was used to keep playing. Eventually, a shopkeeper, overwhelmed, handed Bai Liu a gift and begged him to stop.

By the time they reached the end of the street, night had fully set in. The 100 yuan Bai Liu started with had turned into over 200.

In a shadowed alley at the far end of the street, they stood side by side. Bai Liu sipped from his drink and turned to Spades. “Anything else you want to play?”

“You can stop only picking the stuff that’s on sale now.”

“That,” Spades said, raising his hand and pointing firmly toward something in the distance, “How much is that one?”

Bai Liu followed his gaze.

A towering Ferris wheel stood by the riverbank, ringed in glowing LED lights that flashed and changed to display various messages.

Right now, the message read: [Ren Qiang ♥ Yan Xue — Live and let live, together forever ✧]

Spades looked straight at Bai Liu. “I want that.”

Bai Liu: “……”

The Ferris wheel was the most popular attraction on the street. It offered a panoramic view of the riverside cityscape once you reached the top—ideal for couples, or for those looking to kill thirty minutes. Each cabin would pause at the top for two minutes, during which custom light messages could be displayed upon request.

Popular ones included: “Love you forever,” “Together always,” “Get rich overnight,” and more. Recently, with the college entrance exams approaching, some messages had shifted to more academic blessings like “Top of the class” or “Golden rankings.”

But it was expensive. No discounts—150 yuan per person.

Luckily, thanks to their earlier game spree and the prizes Bai Liu had sold, they had just enough.

Normally, Bai Liu would have scoffed at the idea of spending 150 yuan for a half-hour ride on a glorified light show—something he considered a commercialized, gaudy symbol of love.

But now…

Spades stood beside him, holding his hand tightly. The neon lights shimmered in his black eyes as he stared at the glowing line [Together Forever], focused and full of longing.

It was probably one of the few phrases Spades recognized.

And who he had learned it for was obvious.

Bai Liu looked away. “Let’s go.”

“To ride it.”

“You’re alone?” the Ferris wheel operator asked, eyeing Bai Liu with surprise. Boys rarely rode solo. It was mostly girls or couples who came alone for the symbolism.

“Is that a problem?” Bai Liu asked flatly.

“N-no, not at all!” The man hurriedly waved his hands and tapped the screen to bring up the available banners. “Pick the one you want to light up when you reach the top.”

Bai Liu raised his hand, about to tap on [Together Forever] when Spades suddenly reached out and picked something else.

“This one,” he said firmly. “Pick this.”

Bai Liu looked at the banner Spades had chosen—and froze.

[Bai Liu: Top of the Class, Smooth Sailing Ahead]

“Wait a second,” Bai Liu said, glancing sharply at Spades. “Let me think about it.”

“Sure, sure!” The operator gestured OK. “Just come back before the next ride.”

Bai Liu pulled Spades aside, arms crossed loosely, a faint smile playing on his lips. “Why did you pick that one? Do you even know what it means?”

“I know,” Spades replied. “Your school has it hanging everywhere.”

That was true. Qiao Mu Private High School plastered the slogan on walls and posters. Everyone around Bai Liu talked about it. It was hard for Spades not to notice.

“So, why choose that one for me?” Bai Liu asked.

Spades paused. “You’ve been studying hard for it. Everyone around you wants it.”

He looked Bai Liu dead in the eye. “If they have it, you should have it too.”

“We only have enough money for one ride,” Bai Liu said quietly. “Are you sure this is the one you want? If you choose this, your name won’t appear. You won’t be able to pick ‘Together Forever.’”

Bai Liu had expected Spades to choose that one. The guy usually did whatever he wanted, and Bai Liu was sure he wouldn’t pass up the chance to see those words glowing above the city.

“So,” Bai Liu asked again, “have you really thought about it? Which one do you want?”

Spades looked at him for a long moment. Then he slowly lowered his head, but his voice held no hesitation.

“The golden title.”

This time, it was Bai Liu who paused.

“You want me to go gold that badly?”

“No.” Spades looked at Bai Liu. “It’s just… all those people have someone who wishes they were golden. You should have that too.”

Bai Liu fell silent.

He understood. Spades didn’t care whether he was golden—he just wanted Bai Liu to have people who wanted him to be. Like he did.

“Got it,” Bai Liu said. He turned toward the Ferris wheel. “Let’s go for the golden ticket.” After a few steps, he paused and glanced back. “Do you want it... under my name?”

Spades didn’t hesitate. “Yes.”

And so the Ferris wheel owner received the strangest banner request of his life. As the pod reached the top, a custom light display flashed across the sky in bold letters:

[Spades Loves Bai Liu — Always Golden, Always Smooth Sailing]

The bewildered onlookers gawked. “What kind of slogan is that?! Did a schoolboy couple just go up?”

The Ferris wheel owner: “……”

The end of their tour was a movie—an obscure, icy horror flick. Aside from a couple who left halfway through, the only ones left in the theater were Bai Liu and Spades, sitting side by side in the best seats, a small bucket of popcorn resting between them.

They watched in silence.

The horror film flickered like a stuttering flame, its terror reflecting frame by frame in their equally dark eyes. On screen, the protagonists screamed and fled. Off screen, two hands—slowly, awkwardly—reached for each other beneath the seats and laced their fingers together.

Then Spades whispered, a touch of longing in his voice: “If only we were in this horror game.”

Bai Liu, still holding his hand: “……”

…What kind of alien romantic fantasy was this?

Spades kept staring at the screen, the grotesque images flickering in the depths of his pupils. His tone was sincere.

“There, I could give you everything.”

It was nearly nine when they stepped out of the cinema. The path outside was lined with movie-themed shops—gaudy, surreal, and filled with horror memorabilia.

Bai Liu couldn’t go two steps without checking to see if Spades had wandered off again.

Spades, naturally drawn to the creepier exhibits, kept drifting away, his curiosity outpacing his awareness of Bai Liu.

Once again, Bai Liu turned—and found Spades gone. He frowned, scanning the storefronts, until he spotted him standing outside a nearby shop window.

Spades had both hands pressed to the glass, eyes fixed on something inside, desire radiating off his body like heat.

Bai Liu: ……

That ominous feeling crept up his spine.

He followed Spades’ line of sight—and froze.

Inside, an assistant was arranging merchandise. One item in particular stood out: a tall, thin, hand-sewn ghost doll costume. It looked crude and half-finished—uneven stitching, hollowed eyes, a cheap, haunting presence.

The moment Bai Liu saw it, his heart slammed against his ribs. His vision blurred. One instinct roared through him:

—This is his.

—He wants it back.

The clerk gave the suit a pat, set it on a wooden hanger, and turned to lock the door.

Bai Liu didn't hesitate. He pushed through the door.

"Hello," he said quickly. "I want to ask about the price of that doll suit."

The clerk turned, surprised. "This one? It's probably expensive."

She paused. "Our boss picked it up from an orphanage after… something happened there. He said it was a collectible and wasn't for sale. But today—out of nowhere—he said he's getting into the perfume business and isn't collecting anymore. So he gave me the costume to display."

She looked him over. "Our boss is a foreigner. He sets high prices. You're a student, right? I'd really advise against jumping into this."

"Can you tell me the price?" Bai Liu asked, eyes steady.

She flipped through a small binder. "Twenty thousand."

Bai Liu's breath hitched. He steadied himself, thanked her, and walked out.

He reached for Spades' hand. Head lowered, expression unreadable, his grip tightened.

20,000… It's too much.

Spades suddenly said, "I want that."

Bai Liu tensed, ready to explain they couldn't afford it—

—only to see Spades pointing at a small freezer labeled [ON SALE].

"I want ice cream," Spades said simply. "Can I have the kind that's on sale?"

The desperate pull inside Bai Liu's chest softened. He exhaled. "Yes."

The vending-style freezer was stocked with various flavors of sorbet.

Spades leaned over to choose, then paused. "What's your favorite flavor?"

Bai Liu was silent for a while. Then: “Strawberry. The sweet kind.”

“Then I’ll get that.”

Bai Liu glanced around. “There’s none left. Only vanilla.”

Spades looked heartbroken. “No more……”

Bai Liu couldn’t help a small smirk. “Why does it have to be my favorite?”

Spades lowered his head, tone calm and sincere. “If I eat your favorite flavor… maybe I’ll become your favorite too. And maybe… you’ll like me a little more.”

He raised his eyes. “Your solo time is ending, Bai Liu. I’m leaving. So… before I go—can you tell me you like me?”

The light in the freezer flickered, then went dark. Silence fell between them.

The smile slowly faded from Bai Liu’s face.

When he spoke, his voice was cold.

“Don’t.”

“I hate you, Spades.”

On the way back, Spades trailed far behind Bai Liu, who walked quickly, head down, alone. Every time Spades tried to catch up, Bai Liu would say, flatly:

"Leave me alone. Don't come over."

So Spades kept his distance, just far enough to see Bai Liu's back.

The two of them moved through a bustling crowd, occasionally separated by invisible threads, as laughter and chatter swept between them like waves.

This silence, this distance, lasted until Bai Liu returned to school. He stopped suddenly beneath the darkened school building, his voice even:

"I need to grab something from class. You go back to the dorm first."

Spades stood still for a long moment before letting out a soft "Oh," turning slowly and walking back down the path they always took together, counting the steps—three at a time, then five—like trying to hold onto something already slipping away.

Bai Liu never once looked back.

The building's hallway lights were off, but not the classrooms. It was the holiday period, and Qiao Mu Private High School allowed students to study late, keeping classrooms open until midnight.

Bai Liu climbed the stairs alone, the corridor dim, quiet, and seemingly endless as he made his way to the last classroom.

He didn't turn on the lights when he entered. Instead, he walked to his seat, sat down slowly, rested his arms on the desk—and didn't move.

There was one final question left on the test paper in front of him. Beneath it, in his sketchbook, were rough doodles of Spades and himself—of Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan crowding around his desk, filling it with notebooks and snacks. In the bottom right corner of the drawer, Bai Liu could feel the card left behind by the man who had once offered him help.

His books, pens, and papers were all untouched, exactly as he'd left them. Since then, no one had dared sit in his seat again.

—Bai Liu was in the best shape he'd been in in eighteen years.

It was as if everyone was doing their best to create a warm, safe world around him—encouraging him to study, to grow up, to take the entrance exams and move toward a future he could believe in.

Bai Liu's eyes slowly dropped to the page in front of him, his hand tightening into a fist as he stared at the mess of tangled string he'd drawn—two puppies caught in a knot.

Then, suddenly, a piece of paper slipped from his drawer. Lu Yizhan's handwritten notes tumbled out, followed by a small charm for exam success that slid to the floor.

[Bai Liu, Sister Dian and I want to talk to you about something.]

Lu Yizhan scratched his head awkwardly but smiled, hopeful: [It's not anything urgent, really. The entrance exams are coming up, and things are finally calming down, so… I wanted to ask about your plans after the exams.]

[I just wanted to know… after you graduate and get a job—would you be willing to live with Sister Dian and me?]

Bai Liu blinked, giving Lu Yizhan a look that said, What nonsense are you on about this time? [Aren't you and Sister Dian getting married? Why would I live with you? Aren't you worried people will gossip?]

Lu Yizhan paused, then said softly: [Because I don't want you to live out there alone, with no one to rely on.]

[We're serious about this. Sister Dian and I plan to save up after graduation, renovate the house, and invite you to move in. We want it to be a place where you'll feel comfortable. You like horror games, right? Sister Dian's even designing a special room just for you to play in.]

Lu Yizhan smiled gently: [Once you're off work, you can game with her. When I get home, I'll make dinner. Simple stuff.]

[What do you think?]

[Sister Dian and I will be here for you—playing games, eating meals together, taking you to the hospital when you're sick… being your family.]

[When senior year ends, you won't have to be alone anymore.]

By the flickering freezer light, Spades looked at Bai Liu with an unreadable expression—strangely calm, strangely steady. He didn't take his eyes off Bai Liu as he spoke: [Your time alone is coming to an end.]

Lu Yizhan said: [Sister Dian and I will always be there for you.]

Spades said: [I'm leaving.]

Lu Yizhan said: [So you'll never have to be alone again.]

Spades said: [Before I go… can you tell me you like me?]

Memories swirled in Bai Liu's mind like the old vending machine's flashing lights—disjointed, cold, and relentless. Scenes overlapped and blurred, moments both real and imagined, warm and cutting.

Bai Liu leaned down, slumping over his desk. His eyes drifted to the empty space beside him—the chair Spades used to occupy. It seemed to hold every emotion and none at all, like a deep sea of nothingness.

He thought quietly.

Lu Yizhan, Fang Dian, and Spades each represented a very different path in life.

If he chose Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian, Spades would disappear. But in doing so, Bai Liu would have a normal, smooth, and comfortable life. There would be no doubt that Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan would take care of him, playing games and looking after him for the rest of his life.

The best things they owned, things they wouldn't use, would be given to Bai Liu. He would be able to live with them, as Lu Yizhan had said, in a conventional and happy life—having someone to care for him when he was sick, someone to play games with, someone to cook his meals, and someone who understood and empathized with all his joys and sorrows.

But if he chose Spades...

If he didn't choose Spades, the monster would disappear.

Bai Liu's calm mind faltered for a brief moment.

Spades, the monster, was like a massive disruption in Bai Liu's life, neither good nor ordinary. He pulled Bai Liu away from the life of "normal people" and dragged him into an unpredictable, endless future.

—Like a misplaced anchor.

If he chose Spades, Bai Liu had a vague feeling that his life would be completely different—a life filled with terror, instability, and desire.

And alone.

It was only in his mental isolation that Spades could exist, and perhaps, eventually, Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan wouldn't be able to exist around him anymore. Bai Liu might have to live alone, all the way until his death.

It was a terrible deal.

Choosing Spades meant sacrificing the peace he'd built over the first 18 years of his life in exchange for a monster.

How foolish would someone have to be to make such a choice?

Bai Liu gathered his things and stood up to leave for the dormitory. As he passed the corner by the stairs, he noticed someone following him. He turned, his voice cold. "I thought I told you to stay in the dorm and not follow me here..."

A red-eyed Hou Tong emerged from the shadows, looking confused. "What do you mean, stay in the dorm?"

Bai Liu stopped and calmly changed the subject. "What's the matter? Why are you following me?"

Hou Tong bit her lip, took a deep breath, and mustered the courage to speak. "I like you, Bai Liu!"

"I'd pay a million a year to talk to you about anything!" she continued, her eyes filling with determination. "I'd play horror games with you every day, give you the best things, and let you live in a big house with me! I'll make sure you never go back to class alone to get your things again. I'll be with you. When your exams are done, I'll take you to my parents. I've told them about you, and they love you! I want to spend sixty-two million dollars to be with you until I’m eighty."

Hou Tong’s red eyes looked at Bai Liu, full of hope. "Will you... do it?"

Bai Liu was silent for a long time, gazing into her expectant and anxious eyes. His breathing slowly steadied.

Given a choice between Lu Yizhan, Fang Dian, and Spades for 62 million, how foolish would someone have to be to choose Spades?

Bai Liu didn’t know.

"I'm sorry." Bai Liu's voice remained calm. "I have someone I want to be with forever."

—Maybe the kind of madman who would rather be alone until he dies than let go.

Hou Tong let out a long breath, as if a weight she'd already known was there had finally dropped from her chest. She lowered her head and wiped at her eyes.
"…I know," she said quietly.

She had known, deep down, that Bai Liu didn't like her. He had never wanted anything from her—not even something as small as an ice cream.

It had always been a distant, restrained rejection.

"So all those horror games I played at home were for nothing," Hou Tong joked, forcing a smile. "I thought I'd at least get to play one with you before graduating."

"Haven't you already been playing horror games with me?" Bai Liu asked calmly.

Hou Tong blinked in confusion. "When?"

Bai Liu looked at her. "Isn't our school already like a horror game? Another lake, another girl falling in. It's starting to feel like a serial murder case."

Hou Tong: "……"

Is Bai Liu making a cold horror joke?!

But it did send a chill down her spine. She rubbed her arms, shrunk her neck in unease, and slowly took a step back.
"…My mom's waiting for me outside. I should go," she said nervously.

"Bye," Bai Liu replied. "Be careful on your way. Don't let anything… dirty follow you."

Hou Tong: "!!!"

Bai Liu stood on the first-floor balcony and watched until she got into her car. Then he turned his head slightly, glancing toward the shadowed corner by the boys' restroom.

"Now that Hou Tong is gone," he said evenly, "how much longer are you going to hide in the bathroom and eavesdrop, Bao Kangle?"

From the shadows emerged a short figure—Bao Kangle. His eyes were bloodshot, his fists clenched by his thighs, and in his hand was a bouquet of crushed roses. His expression twisted into something grim.

Bai Liu's gaze briefly fell on the roses, and he raised an eyebrow in faint recognition.

Bao Kangle stared at him with fury. He had come here tonight to confess—to intercept Hou Tong before she could do it. But hiding in the restroom, he had heard it all. She had confessed first. To Bai Liu.

And Bai Liu… hadn't even accepted.

Rage boiled inside Bao Kangle. How could he, Bai Liu—just an orphan with nothing but a face—have people like Hou Tong, Fang Dian, and even Lu Yizhan chasing after him? People who wouldn't even look at Bao Kangle were throwing themselves at him.

They begged Bai Liu to make friends with them, to love them, to let them spend money on him. And what about Bao Kangle?

He was the son of a teacher at Qiao Mu Private High School. On paper, he had everything—status, academics, pedigree. He followed Xu Wei's advice to court the elite girls, buddy up with top students, curry favor with the powerful. And what had he gotten?

Cold glances. Dismissive smiles. Contempt both overt and veiled.

Even the influential students who bothered with him did so out of boredom—mocking him to feel superior. And the moment Bai Liu showed up, these same students would abandon Bao Kangle, swarming around the aloof orphan who refused to bow to anyone.

Bao Kangle's status was lower than a stray dog's. At least when a dog barked, people looked. No one looked at Bao Kangle.

He was too dull. Too shallow. So transparently snobbish it was repulsive.

The top students? Bai Liu's friends.
The top girls? Bai Liu's suitors.
Even the top bullies? Bai Liu's favorite targets.

Bao Kangle had worked so hard just to gain a fraction of the attention that Bai Liu, the indifferent, rule-breaking outcast, received effortlessly.

He couldn't understand it. His grades were better. His family was better. His record was spotless. Wasn't he supposed to be better?

Breathing like a bull about to charge, Bao Kangle hunched forward, eyes rolling up with a mixture of hate and bitter realization.

Two days ago, he had finally figured it out.

He had overheard Xu Wei talking to the headmaster. Certain words stood out—clues that Bai Liu had something around him. Something strange. Like a prop. Or a ghost. Some kind of magic. Bao Kangle didn't know exactly what it was yet, but he was sure of one thing:

That was why Bai Liu had everyone's attention.

"Bai Liu." Bao Kangle gave a shaky, hollow laugh. "Didn't you say this school's like a horror game? That the lake's like a scene from a serial murder case?"

His voice hardened. "How about we go have a little fun, then?"

He held up a key, shaking it with a sneer. "I stole the key to the hill gate from my mom just for this."

"I promise—this'll be the scariest game you've ever played in your eighteen years."

He licked his cracked lips and fixed Bai Liu with a wide-eyed, feverish look.
"Wanna play?"

Bai Liu didn't even hesitate. "No."

Bao Kangle: "……"

What the hell?! This wasn't how it was supposed to go. Bai Liu loved horror games. Why wasn't he playing along?!

Reading the disbelief on his face, Bai Liu gave him a long look, the corner of his mouth twitching subtly—as if he were mentally writing "how dumb do you have to be to fall for such an obvious trap" across Bao Kangle's forehead. But his voice remained calm:

"The college entrance exams are coming. I need to get back to the dorm and study."

"It's best not to break school rules so close to graduation, fellow student Bao Kangle."

When those law-abiding words left Bai Liu's mouth, Bao Kangle's expression cracked.

You?!
The student with the most infractions and the most toilet-cleaning duties in school?! Talking about rules?!

Without waiting for a reply, Bai Liu turned and started walking toward the dormitory.

He paused, glancing back just once, his tone dipping into real coldness.

"Like I said, Bao Kangle. I don't mind hanging around you sometimes. But not tonight. I'm going back."

That look made Bao Kangle's neck twitch, and despite himself, he flinched—his hand pulling back instinctively.

When Bai Liu really turned to leave, Bao Kangle finally panicked. In a flash, he remembered something his mother had once mentioned on the phone about Bai Liu—

"Yes, Bai Liu is obsessed with money. He likes to gamble, and some of his classmates said he's not exactly clean-handed."

"We'll bet!" Bao Kangle suddenly shouted, raising his voice. "Whoever makes it out of Gaucho Lake in one piece—wins."

"The winner gets a fortune!"

Bai Liu's footsteps faltered—just barely.

Bao Kangle's voice rose, shrill with desperation. "Twenty thousand! We bet twenty thousand—winner takes all!"

This time, Bai Liu came to a full stop, though he didn't turn around. His tone was mild, almost contemplative.
"Twenty thousand… not a bad offer."

A smug, sour grin twisted across Bao Kangle's face. "Twenty thousand is enough to get you to play, isn't it?"

Definitely just a money-grubbing bastard.

“Not interested,” Bai Liu said lightly, resuming his pace toward the stairs. “I already turned down a sixty-two million deal tonight. Another twenty thousand doesn’t move the needle.”

“I’m going back to the hostel.”

Bao Kangle froze, staring in disbelief as Bai Liu continued descending without a single backward glance.

“Wait!” Bao Kangle scrambled after him, panic mounting. Bai Liu was already at the turn in the staircase, disappearing fast. “If twenty thousand’s not enough—how much do you want?!”

Bai Liu didn’t even look at him.

Bao Kangle was unraveling. He’d promised Xu Wei and the headmaster that he could lure Bai Liu to the mountain tonight. If Bai Liu didn’t show, and the others waited in vain, everything would fall on him.

Besides money…
Bao Kangle forced a breath, struggling to calm the racing thoughts. Aside from money, what else does Bai Liu care about?

Something his mother said last night, during her call with the headmaster… there was something odd.

Xu Wei’s voice had been shaking: “There’s something strange following Bai Liu every day, like a ghost. He even drew it in his sketch—it looks like a ball of thread. Could it really be a ghost, Principal?”

The headmaster had replied sharply, clearly impatient: “It’s not a ghost.”

“But it’s important to Bai Liu—really important. It’s similar to what’s at the bottom of Gaucho Lake. I don’t know how many uses it has left, but once it runs out, it’ll disappear. So pay attention.”

“There’s something that looks like a ball of string around you,” Bao Kangle blurted suddenly, as if struck by divine inspiration. “That thing—it’s going to disappear soon!”

Bai Liu paused mid-step on the staircase, one hand resting lightly on the banister. He lifted his gaze slowly, eyes locking onto Bao Kangle at the top of the stairs.

“What did you say… about it disappearing?”

Bao Kangle visibly flinched but stood his ground, nerves fraying. He swallowed, voice trembling.

“I mean… that thread-like thing you use. It’s the same as what’s tied to the bottom of Gaucho Lake. It disappears after a while… or after a certain number of uses.”

Under Bai Liu’s cold, unreadable stare, Bao Kangle hesitated—then forced himself to go on in a near whisper, “If you don’t want it to disappear…”

He took a deep breath, straightening his spine. “Then come with me to Gaucho Lake. Retrieve the GCSE from the lake. You’ll find out what that thread really is—where it came from… and how to get it back.”

Qiao Mu Private High School

11:45 p.m., outside the heavy metal gate on the hill.

Bao Kangle's hand trembled as he fumbled with the key, despite knowing the headmaster had already dismissed the security guard. He couldn't help but glance anxiously left and right. It took several clumsy jabs before the key finally slid into the lock, and he pushed down the lever.

Clack.

The sound of the lock hitting the ground made Bao Kangle flinch. He turned shakily to look at Bai Liu, who stood calmly behind him. "It's open," he said, voice unsteady. "Let's go."

"Then go on." Bai Liu, unfazed, stepped forward, pushed open the iron gate, and began walking up the winding path.

Bao Kangle, who had never set foot here before, followed with visible unease, stumbling slightly as he kept close behind.

The hill was beautifully landscaped, with dense foliage casting eerie shadows in the moonlight. Every rustle sent a jolt through Bao Kangle, whose face had gone pale long before they reached Gaucho Lake.

Bai Liu ignored the nervous figure trailing him. After a while, the trees cleared, and the lake finally came into view.

The moonlight gleamed on the calm, glassy surface of the lake. A cool breeze rustled the dead leaves floating on top, sending soft ripples across the water. The moon's reflection shimmered and danced. It would've been a breathtaking sight—romantic, even—had it not been for the legend surrounding the lake. Instead of couples drawn to its beauty, it attracted obsessed seniors one after another.

Bao Kangle swallowed hard at the thought of something lurking in its depths. He shrank further behind Bai Liu, too afraid to look directly at the water.

Bai Liu's voice, like the lake's surface, was calm and undisturbed. "We're here."

"What's the bet you want to make?" he asked.

“The… the bet.” Bao Kangle stared at the lake’s seemingly bottomless darkness and stammered, “When the moon reaches the center of the lake at midnight, we’ll dive in and see who can spot and finish the high school exam paper at the bottom first.”

Bai Liu’s expression didn’t change. “Alright.”

Meanwhile, at the Special Merit Boys' Residence Building—

Lu Yizhan crept out of his dorm room, sticking close to the wall. He deftly avoided the corridor’s surveillance points, slipped out through the back kitchen, and scaled the wall.

Tonight, he was diving into Gaucho Lake again—to try and protect the exam paper prop.

Just as he landed on the ground, breath caught in relief, he froze.

In the moonlight, a man in a Heretic Bureau uniform stepped out slowly. One of his eyes was covered by a bandage. He looked at Lu Yizhan and gave a faint, mocking smile.

“Well, brother. Didn’t think you’d go back to your old tricks,” he said. “Climbing walls on a high school campus, really?”

Lu Yizhan’s expression hardened. “Cen Buming. Second team captain of the Heresy Bureau. You're here to investigate the Gaucho Lake heresy… Why is it you?”

“Why not me?” Cen Buming’s smirk deepened, almost fake with how sharp it became. “Oh right—how could it be me, when you tipped off third team captain Tang Erda instead?”

“But I intercepted your little letter halfway through. Brought in my second team instead—to stretch our legs a bit in the field.”

He crossed his arms and grinned. “After all, the biggest heretic in the world is right here—Bai Liu. As the field unit that specializes in hunting heretics, how could we not show up? Don’t you think so, brother?”

Lu Yizhan’s face darkened. “You’re not a hunter anymore. This has nothing to do with you. Bai Liu and I—we’re playing our own game. Stay out of it.”

“Not a hunter?” Cen Buming’s smile dropped, his tone turning icy. Hatred flashed in his lone yellow eye as he stared Lu Yizhan down. “Do you even realize what you’re doing?”

“You logged into this world line four years ago—without telling me, without telling Tang Erda, without alerting anyone in the Bureau. You met a Bai Liu who hadn’t even entered the game yet—”

“—and you didn’t kill him.”

“You spent four years with him. And you didn’t kill him!” Cen Buming’s expression twisted as he grabbed Lu Yizhan by the collar and slammed him against the wall of the back kitchen. “Do you know what you’ve done?!”

“You got Captain Dong and Captain Yu killed! You forced the entire Cross Judgement Army to reincarnate, one by one, selling their souls! You trapped Captain Fang in that place—he’s never getting out.”

“You—” his voice cracked with rage “—you’ve forced us into 658 world line reincarnations. You made me and Tang Erda raise lunatics!”

“And now you’re saying this?” Cen Buming’s voice dropped to a bitter sneer. “You say you’re not a hunter, that he has nothing to do with you. You’re trying to bring in the more ‘moderate’ second-gen hunter, Tang Erda, to help save Bai Liu from a heretical incident?”

“Lu Yizhan. Do you have shit in your head?”

“Maybe I do,” Lu Yizhan said quietly.

His grip tightened around Cen Buming’s wrist and, with a bruising force, he yanked the other man’s hand off his collar. He met Cen’s glare head-on, eyes blazing.

“But as long as I’m here, you won’t touch him.”

For a second, Cen Buming’s expression blanked. His temples twitched. Then he sighed, let go, and leaned against the wall beside Lu Yizhan.

He pulled out a cigarette pack, flicked it open, and bit down on one. Casually, he held the pack toward Lu Yizhan.

“You legal to smoke in this world line?”

Lu Yizhan hesitated, took one, but didn’t light it. “Trying to quit.”

Cen Buming snorted and lit his own.

They smoked in silence, side by side—only the glow of their cigarettes burning red in the dark.

“I hear you're training a third-generation hunter to monitor Bai Liu,” Cen Buming drawled, smoke curling around his face as he snorted. “What, Tang Erda—the second-generation hunter—is worn out already? Discarded him?”

“No.” Lu Yizhan rubbed his temples, already feeling a headache form from Cen Buming’s jabs. “He has other responsibilities.”

“Then I suppose I’m the only useless scrap left in the hunter squad,” Cen Buming said with a wry, bitter smile.

Lu Yizhan bit down so hard on his cigarette that the mouthpiece cracked, a sharp taste of tobacco flooding his mouth. He could almost hear what Cen Buming was about to say next.

“Then I might as well die—”

“That’s enough.” Lu Yizhan exhaled heavily, cutting him off. “According to the game rules between Bai Liu and me, a retired hunter can’t interfere. You know that. You can’t break the rules.”

“So that bastard wants me to be a spectator—watch everything and do nothing.” Cen Buming sneered, “You too, Lu Yizhan? You want me to just sit and watch?”

Lu Yizhan said nothing. Every word he could offer felt hollow next to the firestorm in Cen Buming’s chest. Silence settled over him like a weight.

Arguing with a colleague who fundamentally disagrees with you—it’s a kind of trauma you never quite forget.

Cen Buming crushed the cigarette between two fingers, letting the ashes fall as he turned to look at Lu Yizhan. His eyes were dark, glinting.

“I could accept being forced into the role of a spectator to keep the game going across the previous world lines,” he said quietly. “But not this last one.”

“Lu Yizhan, you’d better give me a damn good reason why you’ve raised this little monster Bai Liu to this point. Or I'll put a bullet in him tonight."

Lu Yizhan was silent for a long time.

"Bai Liu… isn't like the others," he finally said.

"He's not a bad kid. He doesn't want to enter the game."

"The last one who believed that," Cen Buming cut in coldly, "was Wu Ruishu. You were there collecting his body."

"That doesn't convince me."

He took a slow breath, eyes gleaming with bitter amusement.

"Besides, I've found something… interesting. I'm sure you have, too."

Cen Buming's smile stretched thin and cruel.

"There's a group of teachers in that school. They're players. The headmaster's one of them."

"Do you know what those idiots have done?"

His eyes flicked back to Lu Yizhan, sharp as a knife. "They've decided that selling out their students counts as playing too. And even after all your suspicious behavior, they ruled you out—because of how innocent you look."

"So instead, they started filtering through the student list."

"Guess who came out on top of their suspect list?"

Lu Yizhan didn't answer. His face said everything.

Cen Buming smiled, voice quiet with venom. "—It's Bai Liu."

He stepped closer.

"Lu Yizhan, people aren't judged by how they behave in a peaceful world. They're judged by what they do when the world turns cruel."

"And you think I'm supposed to believe that this Bai Liu, who grew up wrapped in the safety you created, is a good person by nature?"

"If you really believe that—then prove it."

“Let him into the game. Let him claw his way to the top of a world ruled by desire and blood and power—then tell me he won’t break.”

“But you won’t.”

Cen Buming’s voice dropped, turning cold as stone. “Because we both know that’s not possible.”

“You’ve sealed off every shortcut for him—no status, no money, no way to fight back, not even against school bullies. He’s a blank slate. Weak. Fragile. He hasn’t grown into anything yet, which is the only reason he hasn’t done anything wrong.”

He leaned in slightly.

“But you’re afraid to let him become anything at all, aren’t you?”

Lu Yizhan’s hands clenched at his sides, knuckles bone-white.

Cen Buming paused, then said quietly, “I had the second team tail Bai Liu. Just now, they reported back—he and another student were heading toward Gaucho Lake.”

“If he comes into contact with any heretics, and shows even a hint of game behavior…”

He looked straight at Lu Yizhan.

“I’ll shoot.”

Lu Yizhan’s head snapped up, alarm rising in his eyes.

Qiao Mu Private High School

“You can’t do this!” Lu Yizhan snapped, his voice trembling. He took a deep breath, trying to steady both his words and his breath.

“He’s only eighteen. For the first time in his life, he’s taken a single step toward something normal—toward a real life. And now he’s being handed a copy of Bai Six, shoved into the same nightmare all over again. Everyone around him is being used to torment him, to drag him back into the hell he just escaped.”

“But he’s done nothing wrong. Not yet. And you have no right to sentence him before he even takes his first real step forward.”

Cen Buming looked at Lu Yizhan with a calm, unblinking gaze. His voice was steady, without a trace of hesitation.

“He’ll crack soon enough.”

11:55 p.m.

In the jungle, a mercury-bright lake mirrored the yellow moon above—a clear, cold eye watching from the sky. It gleamed like Cen Buming’s last remaining eye, peering into the shadows. Like the soft glow of an old television screen warming as it flickers to life, its light blurred and diffused—long strands of moonlight seemed to grow from beneath the water’s surface like hair.

“It’s almost midnight,” Bao Kangle said nervously, eyeing Bai Liu who stood silently by the lake.

“I... I think we should start walking.”

According to the legend of the lake, students must step onto its edge and circle around it to see the examination papers resting at the bottom, beneath the moonlight.

A narrow castellated platform ran along the edge of Gaucho Lake. It rose about sixty centimeters above the water and was barely fifteen centimeters wide—just enough space for one foot at a time.

As Bai Liu stepped onto the ledge, the jungle leaves rustled behind him. A blackened gun barrel slid out from the foliage, aimed squarely at his head and heart.

Crackles of static electricity coursed through the jungle, and cold voices cut through the air:

“Team 2, this is Team 1. We have eyes on the heretically contaminated subject. Nine o’clock. The subject is currently at the lake. Per captain’s orders, be prepared to fire at once if he displays any aggressive behavior upon submerging in a mentally altered state.”

“Six o’clock, in position. Over.”
“Three o’clock, standing by...”
“Twelve o’clock—ready.”

A cold pair of eyes watched Bai Liu through the scope. In the moonlight, his thin white shirt clung transparently to his skin. The fine hairs on his neck and the downy strands on his face caught the light like silver threads.

Bai Liu stretched out his arms for balance, eyes lowered, and began walking—one deliberate step at a time.

Half of his shadow rippled within the lake, shifting and shivering with the water. The other half followed him outside the lake, cast in absolute darkness.

The world inside the lake shimmered with eerie brilliance. Outside, everything was silent, still, and black. And Bai Liu walked along the sliver of space in between, staggering forward on a ledge meant for no one to stay on.

Bao Kangle trailed behind, walking forward and back, his eyes fixed on Bai Liu. He was determined to supervise the full circuit.

The sniper's muzzle tracked Bai Liu’s movements as he crept forward. The moon reflected soundlessly at the lake’s center. Bao Kangle followed closely, muttering soft, frantic prayers:

“God, God, please let me score well on my college entrance exam.”
“God, God, please let us see the GCSE papers...”

As they neared the end of their circle and the lake remained still, Bai Liu silent, Bao Kangle grew anxious. He tugged at Bai Liu’s sleeve.

“Say something!”

Bai Liu paused and glanced sideways. “What should I say?”

“What I just said!” Bao Kangle urged, flustered.

“This is a wishing lake, okay? Haven’t you ever done one of those ‘Pensieve’ games? You’re supposed to make a wish. This lake asks for a god!”

Bai Liu lowered his gaze. The moon’s light fell like a halo across his lashes as he looked into the reflection of himself and the moon.

“I don’t like asking gods for anything,” he said softly, almost carelessly. “Because gods don’t exist.”

A breath. A beat.

“But if there’s a god in this lake,” Bai Liu continued, “Then let me see what it looks like.”

Bao Kangle turned to ask what he meant—but at that moment, Bai Liu stepped firmly onto the final stone. His step matched Bao Kangle’s exactly.

The wind roared to life.

The moon shattered across the lake like glass, bursting into blinding light. Waves spread outward, revealing the lake’s bottom—clear, radiant.

A set of student desks and examination papers emerged beneath the surface. And beside them, a warped silver-blue valve appeared—a gateway through which endless small televisions flickered, each one showing different players battling through horrific games, fighting, dying, surviving.

Team 2’s weapons were blown askew by the sudden wind. But as they realigned and looked down into the water, their eyes widened in shock.

“That’s the game lobby’s login!”
“This student’s entering the game!”
“He’s really a player!”
“Second Team, fire immediately!”

One soldier gritted his teeth, steadied his aim, and pointed his rifle at Bai Liu’s head.

And pulled the trigger.

“NO!!!”

Lu Yizhan burst into the clearing, heart racing. His voice cracked in panic. He surged forward, instinct taking over, grabbing the rifle just in time and shoving the barrel aside. His gaze snapped toward the lake.

Bai Liu stood with his back to him, hair tousled in the wind, arms still outstretched. He leaned forward slightly, eyes fixed on the glowing scene beneath the water’s surface.

Lu Yizhan’s pupils contracted sharply.

He watched, helpless, as Bai Liu opened his arms—then leaned forward——and fell.

“BAI LIU!!!”

Bao Kangle was also swept up by the lake, but when the group quickly gathered, the lake had returned to its calm state as if nothing had happened.

There was nothing at the bottom of the lake, and the two living people who had just jumped in seemed like sugar cubes dissolving in water, leaving no trace behind.

Lu Yizhan slumped at the edge of the lake, gasping for breath, his heart pounding wildly, unable to regain his composure.

The second team member beside him fought the urge to angrily scold the student who had suddenly appeared and caused all this trouble but finally refrained. "Take him back to the Heresy Authority and erase his memory. He should have seen everything just now."

"Damn it, I'll have to go back to Captain Cen and take the blame for missing that little brat!"

"Where is Captain Cen? Why isn't he here? He's supposed to be overseeing our operation!"

As he was speaking, Cen Buming emerged from the woods at a brisk pace, his uniform disheveled and his face nearly drenched in water.

"Lu Yizhan, you put sleeping pills in your cigarettes to mess with me..."

"He jumped in," Lu Yizhan, who was still by the lake, replied abruptly, without turning around.

Cen Buming's expression darkened as he swatted Lu Yizhan away. His gaze flickered to the bottom of the lake two or three times, his face growing grimmer. He turned to his team and snapped, "Did you shoot him?!"

The players fell silent, shaking their heads.

One of the bolder members shrugged and quickly spoke up, pointing to Lu Yizhan crouched by the lake. "That student came out to stop us, so we didn't dare shoot recklessly to avoid hitting an ordinary person."

Cen Buming almost laughed in exasperation. "An ordinary person, my ass!"

Lu Yizhan, the beast, had disappeared after arriving in this world line ten years ago, hiding away with Bai Liu. Now, none of the players knew that the famous leader of the prophet detachment had been second in his year at this mediocre high school, all while secretly raising his old rival.

Lu Yizhan slowly stood up from the edge of the lake, turning his head to look at Cen Buming. His face had smoothed into calmness. "Cen Buming, since you're so sure that Bai Liu will definitely enter the game and do bad things, how about I make a bet with you?"

"I'm sure you know the relationship between Bai Liu and Bao Kangle. If Bai Liu enters the game later, the first person he'll kill when he comes out will be Bao Kangle."

"But if Bai Liu doesn't enter the game and doesn't kill Bao Kangle, you will stop spying on him, stop attacking him, and treat him like a normal person. You'll let him grow up without interference."

Cen Buming narrowed his eyes. "What if he gets into the game and kills someone?"

Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, then glanced at the second team members. "I know these players around you are in the game, and I know you've been building your own team to eventually kill Bai Liu in the game."

"If Bai Liu does enter the game and kills Bao Kangle, I will join your team, become your tactician, and help you develop your team."

Lu Yizhan looked up, meeting Cen Buming's gaze directly. "But if I let him into the game, I will kill Bai Liu myself in the game."

"Is that alright?"

Cen Buming was quiet for a moment. "Deal."

A member of the team, who hadn't heard the conversation, raised his hand and asked, "So, can't we just go down and catch Bai Liu now? We can have this student go around and open the Gaucho Lake too, right?"

"The condition for opening this Gaucho Lake is that it requires a student who has failed the GCSE," Cen Buming sneered, sweeping Lu Yizhan aside. "Someone who has never failed an entrance exam in all the world lines could never be worthy of being a captain of excellence in entrance exams."

"If he could open it himself, we wouldn't be here every day, lying in ambush, waiting for other students to open it so we can clear out the heretics."

Lu Yizhan sighed. "…That's the downside of having a brother who knows you too well and has a sharp tongue."

At the bottom of the Lake.

Bai Liu fell through the lake into the center of a bubble-like transparent boundary, about three or four meters in size. It was no longer filled with water but air. In the middle of this boundary was a set of desks and chairs with language exam papers, a stationery box, an answer sheet, and a timer placed directly in front of the desk. The timer was counting down from 150 minutes to 149 minutes.

This was clearly a replica of the GCSE language exam scene.

In another enclosed space not far away, there was also a desk.

Seated at it was Bao Kangle, nervously fumbling with the exam paper that had appeared before him. His heart pounded in his chest, and his hands trembled violently.

He hadn't expected to get dragged into this too!

What now? What now? He hadn't even finished reviewing yet!

Across from him, Bai Liu had already sat down. He calmly scanned both sides of the paper, picked up his pen, and began writing without hesitation.

As the minutes ticked by, the bubbles surrounding them slowly began to shrink with every breath they took—like a countdown rewinding in real time.

A cold, metallic system beep echoed from the depths of the lake:

[Fifteen minutes remain before the exam ends. Please complete your answers promptly...]

[Next: Mathematics exam. Duration—150 minutes. Type—]

This guy doesn't even give them a break?!

Bao Kangle felt dizzy. His fingers were beginning to cramp, and a tightness in his chest made it hard to breathe.

At some point, the bubble around him had already shrunk to half its original size. It wasn't matching the exam's time limit—at this rate…

They wouldn't even make it to the English section. They'd drown halfway through.

Bai Liu began writing faster. He abandoned the final extended-response question in the math section, handed in his paper early, and moved on to the next subject—Science.

From the front, Bao Kangle heard the rustling sound of someone handing in a paper early. He turned in disbelief and saw Bai Liu already working on the science paper, calm as ever.

Impossible!

Bai Liu's grades were supposed to be worse than his—how was he faster?!

Bao Kangle's breathing became more ragged, feeding into the shrinking of the bubble as it responded to his panicked gasps. The lack of oxygen rushed to his brain, slowing his thoughts and movements as he tried to work through the problems.

Cold sweat dripped down his chin and splattered onto the test sheet, forming dark, ink-soaked clouds under his pen. His eyes began to flush red with strain.

Bai Liu gave up the last big question in Physics, quickly solved half of the biology and chemistry sections, and turned in his paper early again—switching to the final subject, English.

Bao Kangle was already unraveling. Hearing that Bai Liu had finished another subject, he felt the heat burst from his face. Blood trickled from his nose as he stared at his barely half-complete physics paper.

He was having a nosebleed.

Meanwhile, Bai Liu was carefully shading the answer sheet for the English section, even as the edges of his bubble pressed against his skin—it had shrunk that much. Yet, he still worked steadily.

Bao Kangle was in a much worse state. His lower body had already slipped out of the protective bubble and was now submerged in water. He stared at the English paper in front of him—he knew every word individually, but together, they made no sense. His panic had overwhelmed him completely. He couldn't even comprehend the questions—and he hadn't even started!

Then came a final, cold beep from behind him:

[Candidate Bai Liu has completed all the GCSE papers. The game is over.]

Their protective bubbles burst at once, and both candidates were plunged into the lake. Arms and legs floated, desks drifted upwards, and their hair swayed in the water.

Bao Kangle's eyes were bloodshot. Holding his breath, he reached out desperately for the English paper still hovering near his desk—his name the only thing written on it. He tried to keep writing, but Bai

Liu's eyes had drifted downward.

He'd noticed something earlier—something strange beneath the desk. When he first dove into the lake, he saw a silver-blue vortex swirling below, but it had vanished once he was submerged. Now, it was back.

An old test paper was sealed inside a ziplock bag, half-buried beneath a cracked tile at the lake's bottom. Bai Liu adjusted his position, sank to one knee, and wedged his fingers beneath the tile, yanking it upward.

Click.

The tile split with a brittle sound, and the paper floated free. Bai Liu seized it—just as a strange, mechanical voice echoed in his mind:

[Congratulations to Candidate Bai Liu for obtaining the prop: (The GCSE Paper That Never Gets It Right)]

[This paper mirrors the current year's GCSE exam. Only candidates who consistently fail will be able to see and interact with it. Each time a candidate completes it, they will only remember the questions they answered correctly. The others—they will never get right.]

[Congratulations to Candidate Bai Liu for completing the paper in record time.]

[As a reward, the candidate may make one wish on the paper—Initiating Wish Protocol—Unfortunately, the item is not powerful enough to grant the requested wish. Please try again next time...]

[–Zillah– Error Detected in Wish Request – Top-Level Game Authority Intervention – Candidate's wish is approved]

Suddenly, a violent gust erupted from the vortex, displacing the water around the lake's floor.

From within the gate-shaped vortex, the wind fell still—and a long black boot stepped forward. Just as the lake water began to collapse inward again, threatening to drown Bai Liu, the figure raised a gloved hand… and snapped his fingers with calm elegance.

Snap.

The water exploded into droplets—suspended midair, forming a curtain of scattered crystals around Bai Liu.

The figure stepped fully out of the silver-blue vortex. Through the curtain of droplets, Bai Liu could barely make out his appearance: taller than him, clad in a sharp, well-fitted suit. His boots echoed rhythmically with each step as he laughed softly.

"No thanks for saving you? I recall you hated water."

Bai Liu's back was pressed against the edge of the lakebed. He didn't respond—he simply stared at the man approaching him.

The stranger moved slowly, brushing aside the floating beads of water like strands of a curtain. He stopped a few meters in front of Bai Liu and smiled.

"This is your preferred safe distance, isn't it? Can we talk from here?"

"Don't worry about what's happening above—I've frozen time and space. No one can find us here, not while we're at the bottom of the lake."

Still, Bai Liu said nothing.

"Ah, right. While I know you well, this must be your first time meeting me. Allow me to introduce myself."

The man gave a polite, theatrical bow.

"You may call me Bai Six—a name similar to your own. I hope it brings you some comfort."

He straightened up with a pleasant smile.

"I'm the nonexistent god you invoked when you made your wish above the lake… and I've come to meet you."

“What do you want to talk to me about?” Bai Liu asks, calm and rhetorical.

“I thought you'd be the first one of us to ask a question.” Bai Six spreads his hands slightly, smiling with a face identical to Bai Liu’s. “After all, you must have plenty to ask after seeing what I look like.”

“Like why I, a god, look like you.”

“I don’t feel the same,” Bai Liu replies coldly. “You look twice as old as I do.”

Bai Six: “……”

“If you don’t like me as an adult…” Bai Six doesn't appear offended. Instead, he smiles, amused. Raising his hand, he snaps his fingers, voice tinged with indulgence: “Then how about this?”

“Would this make you more willing to accept me? To speak with me calmly?”

Before Bai Liu’s eyes, Bai Six rapidly transforms into a perfect replica of his eighteen-year-old self—a high school student in a white shirt and school uniform, indistinguishable from Bai Liu except for the black leather gloves and the easy smile on his face.

Bai Liu watches the transformation, his back slowly tensing.

…If he isn't currently suffering from some kind of mental break, then this being—this thing that can stop time and change its form at will—must be the so-called god.

“Let’s talk in a way we can both accept,” Bai Six says kindly. “Do you want to know where Spades came from?”

Bai Liu's gaze locks onto Bai Six, holding for a moment—before realization hits. “He’s related to you?”

“You could say that. But you also couldn’t.” Bai Six cradles his left elbow with one hand, his right resting under his chin. He smiles. “Everything in this world is connected to me—including you.”

“But the only thing whose birth had nothing to do with me… is him.”

“He was born because of you. He exists for you.”

Bai Liu’s breath catches, but he quickly regains composure. His eyes narrow. “Then if he exists for me, why is he gone?”

“Sometimes, a short separation is for the sake of a better reunion,” Bai Six replies with a smile. “And your reunion is already fated.”

“You’ll meet again in a grand horror game.”

“Horror game?” Bai Liu echoes, voice calm.

“Exactly. A horror game—one you and he will both enjoy.” Bai Six stretches out a hand, his smile deepening. “A game that lies just beyond this door.”

The moment he reaches forward, a silver-blue vortex in the shape of a door materializes before Bai Liu. Inside, he sees what he had glimpsed earlier—countless tiny screens filled with scenes of people fleeing, fighting, killing monsters.

“That’s where Spades came from,” Bai Six says, smiling. “If you want to find the one who left you, step into the game.”

Bai Liu’s gaze shifts past the swirling vortex and settles coldly on Bai Six. “So… is Gao Kao Lake tonight one of the horror games you arranged?”

Bai Six lets out a soft, admiring sigh. “What a quick deduction. As expected of my smartest derivative.”

“You want me to enter the game?” Bai Liu’s eyes narrow. “Spades is a product of the game. So you deliberately placed him near me to lure me in?”

“That’s a fair guess—and close to the truth, though not quite there,” Bai Six says gently, not offended by the accusation. “But yes, he is your anchor. It’s natural you’d be affected by him.”

“I expected you to leap into the game once you got your answer. But it seems…”

He raises an amused eyebrow. “You weren’t as shaken as I thought you’d be?”

“Perhaps I should offer you a bit more incentive… something more exciting to push you toward accepting this terrifying game.”

He arches his eyes with a subtle smile. “I can’t wait to see you enter the game, Bai Liu.”

“Let me think what might appeal to you…” Bai Six taps his lower lip twice in thought. Then his expression lights up. “Before that, let me show you what you’ve lost—thanks to this tedious, ordinary life.”

Snapping his fingers, the silver-blue vortex widens into a black screen. It flickers, revealing a fourteen-year-old Bai Liu at the orphanage, blank-faced as he eats with a spoon.

“Originally, your life was meant to start here… and lead into the game. But you deviated. You went to high school.”

“You could have reached eighteen with tens of millions in liquid assets, a guild, two major underground networks in the real world, three to five smuggling channels, and a loyal team working under you.”

“But all of that is gone now.” Bai Six sighs with regret.

“Because of Lu Yizhan, you got to enjoy the most wonderful of human desires. You suppressed them. Controlled yourself. Clung to safety. And now you live like a stray dog in a high school that has no true safe zone, not even—”

Bai Six extends a finger, from which a translucent thread flings out, piercing the back of Bao Kangle’s neck.

Bao Kangle flinched as though stung, snapping to his senses with a jolt. But fear contorted his face as he was manipulated like a puppet by the silken threads of Bai Six’s control.

“—Even minor characters like Bao Kangle and Xu Wei, whose names I can’t even recall from other worlds, can subject you to three years of school violence,” Bai Six said, his voice laced with a dry laugh.

“—Punishments like standing outside, scrubbing toilets, getting kicked out of the dorms... Xu Wei yanking your chair from the classroom, forcing you to sit alone on the ping pong table in the rain, bored out of your mind, flipping through an English textbook while Bao Kangle’s handwriting mocks you for being an orphan.”

Bai Six smiled, amused.

“I’m curious, Bai Liu—what were you thinking back then?”

Bao Kangle was suspended between Bai Liu and Bai Six, trembling so violently that he couldn't force a word past his throat—only a few broken, breathy "oohs" of air escaped.

Bai Liu leaned against the wall, his head bowed. His school uniform clung to him, soaked as though still caught in that rain-soaked memory. Time clung to him too—the ends of his hair and the hem of his jacket dripped water that hung motionless in mid-air, caught in the suspended flow of time.

Condensation curled slowly around him. He raised his head, his eyes devoid of emotion as they locked with Bai Six's.

"You seem to know me so well," he said tonelessly. "Why don't you guess what I was thinking at that moment?"

The smile on Bai Six's face widened.

"Is there a reward if I guess correctly?"

Bai Liu replied evenly: "Then I'll do what you think I'm about to do. Sound fair?"

"Hmm…" Bai Six considered, then chuckled. "A sly reward. Risky, but interesting. I like it. Deal."

With a twitch of Bai Six's finger, the puppet strings jerked Bao Kangle down. He tumbled to the ground in front of Bai Liu, his fear practically tangible.

"I guess," Bai Six said softly, "that you wanted to kill Bao Kangle."

"You had a plan—one that would let you kill him and his mother without anyone ever knowing. But you weren't sure if Lu Yizhan would catch on. He's smart, and he knows you."

"So you waited. Waited for the perfect chance, one even Lu Yizhan could accept. A chance where Bao Kangle's death would seem... reasonable."

Bai Six looked up, his smile sharp.

"And then came GCSE Lake."

"Senior year. Pressure's at its peak. A student jumps into the lake after being suspected of cheating—people say it's a superstition, a stress response. So, when another student jumps? It's just more of the same."

“You and Bao Kangle were known to clash. To others, you both seemed like the type to snap under exam pressure. It made sense that he’d provoke you to meet him at the lake. And you’d go.”

“There’s surveillance footage showing Bao Kangle provoking you at the school. But there’s none at Gaucho Lake.”

“So if you both jumped into the lake… and Bao Kangle just happened to ‘drown’ while you ‘tried’ to save him but couldn’t—well, who could blame you?”

“You’re afraid of water. Everyone knows that. It would be completely believable.”

Bai Six’s smile deepened with meaning.

“And Lu Yizhan would believe you. He trusts you. He’d never suspect it was a perfectly executed murder by his good friend—who just happened to have a passing urge to kill.”

“Am I right, Bai Liu?”

On the ground, Bao Kangle was stunned. He stopped struggling and stared blankly up at Bai Liu.

Bai Liu’s expression remained unchanged as he looked down at him. The water droplets still hovered in the air, frozen. But something in Bai Liu’s stillness made Bao Kangle shudder. His spine prickled with cold, and his face went pale.

From start to finish, Bao Kangle had always seen himself as the one in control. He thought Bai Liu might retaliate—but he’d never imagined this.

He just wanted to bully Bai Liu to vent. But Bai Liu had really thought about killing him.

This Bai Liu… he’s not normal. He’s a psycho!

Bai Six’s voice broke through, smooth and coaxing.

“You’ve already thought it all out—why not finish the perfect crime now?” He smiled, gentle and false. “No one in the world would ever know… except me.”

Bai Six flicked his finger. Bao Kangle’s body jerked upward, forced to his knees, neck bared, hands restrained behind him in a pitiful pose of execution.

“Don’t kill me…!” Bao Kangle cried out, nearly wetting himself, sobbing. “I was wrong—I was really wrong! I won’t do it again! Bai Liu, please—don’t kill me!”

Bai Liu placed his wrist gently on Bao Kangle’s exposed throat, lowering his eyelashes.

“Lift your head, my child,” he whispered. “Let me see your first kill—it should be memorable.”

He looked up slowly, his grip tightening.

“You were right,” Bai Liu murmured. “I did think of all kinds of ways to kill this bastard and walk away clean.”

“But…”

His expression shifted—hair clinging to his face, skin pale and delicate. A strange, haunting smile bloomed across his lips, fragile and beautiful in its cruelty.

“God, I wasn’t just thinking about killing this stupid bastard.”

“I was thinking about Spades.”

Bai Liu smiled.

“So the reward’s off the table. I’m not killing anyone the way you want me to.”

“So, you're not going to kill Bao Kangle?” Bai Six smiled, a hint of surprise in his expression. “You've imagined killing him countless times. And now, you finally have the chance.”

“Why stop now?”

“My game with him doesn’t involve killing.” Bai Liu looked up, his tone flat. “I’ve seen you now. If you have nothing more to say to me as a god, you can leave.”

Bai Six stared at Bai Liu for a long moment. Then he stepped half a pace back and bowed in farewell. “Since it was you who made the wish, I’ll honor it.”

Behind Bai Liu, a silver-blue door shimmered into existence. Bai Six’s figure was gradually consumed by it. He smiled at Bai Liu, his tone laced with curiosity and amusement.

“You care so much about Spades, yet you chose not to enter the game.”

“You hate Bao Kangle so deeply, yet you chose not to kill him.”

“Bai Liu, do you know that people like you—bad at heart but trying to act good—are the ones who attract the worst kind of karma?”

The door closed, swallowing Bai Six’s smiling face. In the same instant, the stagnant lake surged violently, crashing over Bai Liu and Bao Kangle and carrying them to shore.

Bai Liu emerged clutching a pair of castanets, dragging himself out of the water. His face was pale as he dropped to his knees, coughing up a mouthful of lake water.

Hidden in the jungle, the members of Heretic Authority Team Two instantly raised their weapons, aiming at the kneeling figure.

“He’s out!” one of them whispered.

“Is he inside the game?”

“Not sure—wait! Look at his hands! He’s holding test papers! That’s a game prop!”

Cen Buming and Lu Yizhan crouched in the underbrush, eyes locked on Bai Liu. Cen's fingers brushed unconsciously over his death ring. Beside him, Lu Yizhan's breath hitched as he clenched his fists into the earth.

"Bai Liu…" A weak cry came from behind him.

"Help… help me!" Bao Kangle gasped.

Bai Liu turned. Bao Kangle was clutching the edge of the lake with one hand, a translucent puppet string still tied around his neck, connecting him to the fading silver-blue door beneath the water's surface. He was trapped, unable to rise, slowly being dragged under.

As soon as the door vanished, so would the string—erasing the only trace of evidence. Bao Kangle would drown seamlessly.

His face had turned blue from lack of air. In a panic, he cried out, tears streaming. "Bai Liu, help me! I won't bully you anymore! I'm sorry—really sorry!"

His grip weakened, fingers slipping.

Bai Liu stood motionless at the lake's edge, watching the scene unfold with eerie calm. Droplets of lake water ran down his lashes and soaked into his trousers.

His mind quieted.

What Bai Six had said was true—he had thought about killing Bao Kangle.

And not just Bao Kangle. Bai Liu had fantasized about killing many people: classmates, Xu Wei, the headmaster, even the shopkeeper in the alley behind the film store.

He had wanted a doll suit, and the money was coming in too slowly to be worth the wait. He had considered killing someone to get it faster.

Bai Liu knew he wasn't normal. In every environment, he had been the one cast out. Maybe, he thought, it was some instinctive human defense mechanism—a sense that warned others he was dangerous, a natural killer.

Not killing was already restraint.

But saving someone he'd killed a hundred times in his head?

Bai Liu looked at Bao Kangle, his eyes void of emotion.

Why?

Why did Bao Kangle expect to be saved, even knowing what kind of person Bai Liu was?

“Don’t kill me!” Bao Kangle screamed, voice raw. “Don’t just watch me die!”

“You abandoned me, didn’t you?! Bai Liu, I know you’re a good person! Please, give me your hand! Save me!”

Lu Yizhan's chest rose and fell sharply. “Ten more seconds. In ten seconds we can reach him,” he whispered hoarsely.

Cen Buming silently began the countdown.

“Ten… three…”

Suddenly, Bai Liu moved.

He stepped onto the casting platform, seized Bao Kangle by the shoulders, and hauled him out of the water like a sodden rag doll, flinging him to the ground.

Bao Kangle landed hard, choking and vomiting, his limbs convulsing as he gasped for air. Eyes wide and unfocused, he stared up at Bai Liu.

“Thank you,” he mumbled, voice trembling. “Thank you…”

Lu Yizhan sat heavily on the ground, breath coming in ragged bursts, his uniform already soaked through with cold sweat. Cen Buming’s piercing gaze lingered on Bai Liu’s pale, waterlogged face for a long, weighty moment before he finally raised a hand, signaling for the entire team to lower their weapons.

Bai Liu stared indifferently at Bao Kangle, who was convulsing on the ground. “Twenty thousand yuan. Bring it to me when school starts in a week. One cent less, and I will kill you.”

Bao Kangle flinched and nodded quickly, his voice trembling. “...I got it.”

“Get lost.” Bai Liu kicked him without expression. “Don’t let me see you again before school starts.”

Once Bao Kangle had stumbled away, Bai Liu slowly sank to the ground, leaning back against the lake's edge. He closed his eyes, breathing deep and heavy, his pale, wrinkled fingertips still trembling.

Water was disgusting.

Drowning in it was, without question, the worst experience of his life.

Lu Yizhan bowed several times to Cen Buming, murmuring polite words and mentally praying to the gods to take the grim-faced officer and his second team away. Then, he turned to Bai Liu—who was still slumped by the edge of the Gaucho Lake, his face drained of color.

Another rescue. Another near-drowning. It looked like Bai Liu would be out of commission for a while.

If you hate water so much... stop being such a damn hero, Lu Yizhan thought grimly.

His expression was complicated as he let out a long, quiet sigh. Then he stepped out of the shadows, crouched beside Bai Liu, and gently looped one of Bai Liu's limp arms over his shoulder to lift him up.

Bai Liu stirred, his foggy mind briefly clearing. The moment he realized who it was, his body loosened again. "Lu Yizhan?" he rasped.

"It's me." Lu Yizhan's voice was steady as he patted Bai Liu's back. "Come on, let's get you down the mountain."

There was a brief pause. "...Don't tell Fang Dian I came to Gaucho Lake," Bai Liu said quietly.

Lu Yizhan nearly burst into tears. "How am I supposed to hide it from her?! She's way too smart—she'll know with just one look!"

"Just help me lie a little," Bai Liu mumbled.

"I can't even lie to her about myself, and you want me to—ugh…"

Neither of them said what they were really thinking.

Like why Bai Liu had come to Gaucho Lake in the first place.

Or why Lu Yizhan, who had already returned to the orphanage, had come back.

Instead, they talked about trivial things. And as they chatted, Lu

Yizhan quietly supported Bai Liu, step by steady step, carrying the fragile eighteen-year-old boy—the one he'd watched grow up—safely down the mountain. Down from the place where so many guns had just been pointed at him.

When they reached the large iron gates, Lu Yizhan gave Bai Liu's shoulder a gentle pat and smiled. "Don't worry about what's in Gaucho Lake."

"I'll take care of it. You just focus on passing your exams."

With that, he waved and turned back toward the hill.

Bai Liu took the glucose and the random snacks Lu Yizhan had pressed into his hands and made his way alone back to the dormitory. With some food in his stomach, he had just enough strength to shove open the door and knock back the large man on the other side—but just barely. He staggered two steps and managed not to fall.

Spades immediately latched onto him, resting his head against Bai Liu's chest and hugging him tightly. His voice was muffled. "What took you so long to get back?"

Bai Liu pushed him away with a tired grunt. "Let me shower and change first."

By the time he returned from a hot shower, dressed in fresh clothes, Spades was already lying stiffly on the bed, his wide eyes locked onto Bai Liu like a guilty dog begging for forgiveness. He'd even scooted over to leave space for him.

Bai Liu, still towel-drying his hair: "..."

That's the exact look of a dog that's decided you've made up after it got in trouble…

And yet, he lay down anyway. Rather than throwing Spades off the bed, he dropped into the open space and collapsed right into Spades' arms.

Spades froze, too stunned to move. His body stiffened immediately.

It was rare—so rare—to see Bai Liu initiate contact like this.

Bai Liu lifted a hand and gave him a light slap, his voice muffled as he buried his face in Spades' chest. "You're too tense. It hurts. Loosen up.”

He hesitated after saying it, realizing the weird phrasing—but Spades didn’t react to the double meaning. He simply nodded and relaxed slightly, wrapping his arms tighter around Bai Liu.

They stayed like that in silence for a while.

Then Bai Liu spoke, his voice unusually fragile. “You have to leave again, don’t you?”

Spades hummed. “I’ll probably still be around—”

“Don’t tell me when you’re going,” Bai Liu cut in sharply.

He curled further into Spades’ arms, hiding his face in the crook of his shoulder. His fingers gently clutched at Spades’ side as he murmured, almost to himself:

“Don’t leave me waiting alone for a date that’s already passed.”

“It makes me feel like a criminal waiting for my own execution. And I hate that.”

Spades was quiet for a moment. Then: “So what do you want me to say?”

Bai Liu lowered his eyes. “Tell me you’ll really be part of my future.”

“I can make a deal with you.”

“I promise I can wait alone until you come back.”

“But in return… you can’t leave again after that.”

Qiao Mu Private High School

Seven days later, school resumed. The students returned in disarray, only to be met with the chaos of a senior pep rally that same afternoon.

After class, Bao Kangle suddenly approached Bai Liu's desk and said stiffly, "Bai Liu… can you come with me for a moment?"

Bai Liu glanced up at the bulging 'brick' tucked under Bao Kangle's arm. "Going somewhere?"

"The bathroom near the teachers' office…" Bao Kangle replied, his voice shaky. "All the teachers are out for a meeting, so no one's around. No surveillance either."

Bai Liu stood with a neutral expression. "Alright. Let's go."

The teachers' office was indeed deserted. A frequent visitor to the staff restrooms, Bao Kangle led Bai Liu to the last cubicle, took a deep breath, and handed him the bundle he'd been cradling.

"Twenty thousand yuan," Bao Kangle said, his hand trembling. "It's the money my mom got from the headmaster. It should all be here. You can count it."

Bai Liu gave a small nod. "That's the right amount."

He turned to leave, but Bao Kangle hesitated and called out, "Bai Liu!"

Bai Liu paused. "Something else?"

"I… I stole this money… for you," Bao Kangle stammered, his eyes red and his whole body shaking. "If my mom finds out…"

He swallowed hard and looked up at Bai Liu with a pleading expression. "I won't turn you in, and you won't say anything either… okay?"

Meanwhile, back at the teachers' office—

Xu Wei had gone down to help prepare the rally grounds, but a sudden pounding in her right eye left her dizzy and distracted. Leaning on the handrail, she made her way back to her desk. No sooner had she sat down than her phone rang.

Xu Wei's heart skipped a beat as she answered automatically. "Hello?"

A slow, displeased male voice came through. "Mrs. Xu, I'm not satisfied with how you've handled things."

—It was the headmaster.

Xu Wei's breathing hitched. "What seems to be the problem, Principal?"

"I gave you a 100,000 yuan deposit to investigate Bai Liu, didn't I?" the headmaster said coldly. "And after all that, your son couldn't dig up a single thing. Not one clue, not even an excuse to get this troublemaker expelled."

"Then this is where our cooperation ends."

Xu Wei shot up, her voice raised. "But that's not what you said before!"

"You clearly told me I'd get the full 2.5 million if I forced Bai Liu out of Gaucho Lake!"

"Did I?" the headmaster replied, almost lazily. "Strange—I don't remember that."

Xu Wei stood frozen, her mind blank.

"You're still young, Mrs. Xu. You'll have other chances to make money," the headmaster continued coolly. "I won't pursue the 100,000—it's a loss. But do your job properly from now on. What happened stays between us."

Click. The line went dead.

Xu Wei slumped to the ground in shock.

Last weekend, she had withdrawn the entire 100,000. Leaving only a few thousand at home, she'd spent the rest. Clothes, bags, skincare, designer heels—everything she'd been coveting since her income had dropped. Everyone around her had them, even the broke biology teacher next door. She used to be the fastest to get new things.

And she'd thought, I'm about to get 2.5 million. What's 100,000? So she'd splurged without restraint.

Now, with a tight chest and real regret sinking in for the first time, Xu Wei called her husband in panic.

“Hello… are you home? That paper bag on my bedside table—how much is left?”

“10,000?! How is there only 10,000 left?!”

Her husband grumbled, “You bought 90,000 worth of junk?”

“That’s not true! I only spent 70,000!” Xu Wei screamed, hysterical. “What about the other 20,000?! Did you take it?!”

“I didn’t touch your money!” he snapped. “You’re the one obsessed with every cent!”

His tone suddenly shifted, realization dawning. “Wait. Bao Kangle came in earlier this morning. He left all hunched over, like he was hiding something.”

“Kangle?” Xu Wei slowly stood up, her eyes drifting toward the still-lit teachers’ restroom.

Most of the staff were still out. The restroom would be…

She hung up the phone and staggered toward it.

Outside the men’s room, she stopped. A quivering male voice echoed from inside.

“Don’t let my mom find out I lost a bet and gave you her 20,000 yuan. She watches money like a hawk—she’ll go crazy.”

Xu Wei’s eyes reddened. She pushed open the door and saw Bao Kangle handing a paper bag to Bai Liu.

Bai Liu accepted it without hesitation. “Hmm.”

“You two…” Xu Wei’s voice cracked into a scream, her face twitching with rage. “What the hell is going on?!”

Bao Kangle turned pale. “Mom?! What are you doing here?!”

Fifteen minutes later.

Students gathered curiously around the office, drawn by the sound of furious screaming. Teachers passing in the corridor exchanged whispers.

“What’s going on? Why isn’t anyone at the meeting?”

“I heard it’s delayed—someone said a student stole tens of thousands from a teacher.”

“That sounds like Xu from Class 17, doesn’t it?”

“Someone stole from her?! Who’d dare?!”

Inside the teachers’ restroom, paper wrappings lay in shreds, red 100-yuan bills scattered across the floor. The stall door had been kicked open, heel marks embedded in the wood.

Xu Wei, red-eyed and furious, was being held back by two male teachers. Still, she pointed furiously at Bai Liu at the far end.

“Bai Liu! How much did you extort from my Bao Kangle?! Have you been bullying him? Forcing him to pay you?! Are you deaf?! Say something! Give it back!”

Bao Kangle stood anxiously between them. “Mom, it’s not like that. It was just a bet—I only gave him the twenty thousand…”

“It was mine to begin with,” Bai Liu said calmly. “He lost a bet, and the stakes were twenty thousand yuan.”

Xu Wei froze briefly. But as soon as she remembered the headmaster’s conditions, her eyes lit with a cunning glint.

“Bai Liu made you, didn’t he? He forced you to bet? Forced you to steal my money for him?”

Bao Kangle looked up, stunned. “No, Mom, it was you—”

Xu Wei cut him off, her eyes wild with desperation. “If we can prove Bai Liu coerced you into this—into gambling and stealing a large sum—that’s enough to get him expelled. Maybe even arrested.”

Expelling Bai Liu would win back the headmaster’s favor—and maybe the full 2.5 million.

Her chest heaving, she grabbed her son’s arms. “Isn’t that right?!”

Everyone turned to Bao Kangle, whose eyes darted frantically between Bai Liu and Xu Wei.

He realized, in that moment, what was about to happen if he didn't speak carefully...

If he didn't admit that Bai Liu had made him do it, it would just be a big fuss, then a small one—he might get beaten by his mother, and that would be the end of it.

But if he admitted now that Bai Liu had forced him into everything, he could walk away clean… and Bai Liu would have to take the fall.

Bao Kangle looked at Bai Liu instinctively.

Bai Liu was looking back at him, just like he had that night—when Bao Kangle was drowning. Calm, unblinking, unreadable. Not a flicker of emotion in his face.

Back then, Bao Kangle had reached for Bai Liu's hand and been pulled out of the water. Now, in this moment of panic, would he be the one to reach out and push Bai Liu under instead?

"Mom…" Bao Kangle's voice trembled as he looked at Bai Liu. "It was me. It really wasn't Bai Liu who—"

His words were cut off by a sharp, stabbing pain at the back of his neck. Bao Kangle's eyes went blank mid-sentence.

A pinprick of blood appeared at the base of his neck, and from that spot, the end of a transparent puppet string—no longer than half a finger—twitched faintly, as if being controlled from afar.

—The puppet thread Bai Six had pierced into Bao Kangle's neck remained hidden beneath the skin.

In a daze, Bao Kangle seemed to hear that god again—the one from that night—laughing lowly, whispering beside his ear, as he stared longingly at Bai Liu's retreating figure in the Northern Courtyard:

[Bai Liu, people like you—who choose to be good, who choose not to kill—will be rewarded.]

The puppet thread quivered. Bao Kangle's mind emptied. He raised his hand, pointed at Bai Liu with dull eyes, and said lazily, "Yes, that's right. Bai Liu forced me to steal the money to gamble!"

“He threatened to kill me if I didn’t pay up! He even forced me to jump into Gaucho Lake—I almost drowned!”

“He’s a murderer!”

3:00 PM. The pep rally on the playground, delayed by more than half an hour, finally began without further incident.

But this time, the opening speech wasn’t given by one of the school’s star students.

From the crowd, students had sensed something was off. A group of teachers, including the principal himself, were surrounding a student beneath the flag stand. The boy’s face was hidden from view by the crowd, but the reprimands were loud and cutting. Some teachers had even stepped aside to call the police.

Among the assembled students, Fang Dian watched with a rising sense of dread. She turned to a student coming from under the flag stand and grabbed his arm. “Who’s that student under the flag stand?”

“Sister Dian,” the boy replied. He hadn’t heard her clearly and thought she meant Lu Yizhan. “It’s not Lu Yizhan.”

“I know that.” Fang Dian raised her chin. “I was supposed to be one of the speakers. They haven’t called me up yet. I’m asking—what’s going on with that student?”

“Oh, him?” The boy wrinkled his nose with visible disdain. “He’s from an ordinary class. Rumor has it he got a classmate to gamble and then forced him to steal over twenty thousand yuan. And the victim turns out to be a teacher’s kid. The police are involved. They’re saying he’ll be disciplined and possibly expelled.”

Fang Dian’s heart raced. “What’s his name?”

“Bai Liu.”

Without another word, Fang Dian bolted toward the flag stand.

Bai Liu stood stiffly as a group of teachers pushed him into place. He held a freshly printed self-criticism letter. The principal gripped his shoulder tightly and stood by with a microphone, trying to look solemn.

“Students and teachers,” the principal began, “before we proceed with the pep rally, we have a serious disciplinary matter to announce.”

“Bai Liu, a student in Senior Class 37, lost his motivation and chose the wrong path—forcing a classmate to gamble away ten thousand yuan!”

“That such a student could come from a place like Qiao Mu High School, a place committed to learning and teaching excellence, is simply disgraceful!”

The principal took a breath. “As a disciplinary action, we will be expelling Bai Liu from the school.”

“—This decision will remain on Bai Liu’s permanent record. Every school he applies to will know exactly what kind of student he was!”

The crowd erupted. Shocked murmurs rippled through the student body as everyone began to talk at once.

"Wow, shit—doesn't that mean no school will take him? How’s he supposed to get into high school now?"

"I don’t know. I think he’s that kid from the orphanage. They probably couldn’t afford the fees."

"All through senior year, huh? That’s rough…"

"What’s so tragic? If you force someone to gamble, they deserve what they get!"

The headmaster exhaled heavily and glanced at Bai Liu beside him. "Now, Bai Liu, please read your written review."

"Read it? Hell no!" Fang Dian burst onto the stage, knocking the review out of the headmaster’s hand before he could pass it to Bai Liu. Without even looking at the man, she grabbed Bai Liu’s arm and pulled him away. "We’re leaving."

The teachers at the flag platform stared in shock and rushed to stop her.

"Fang Dian! You're not up yet—why are you going on stage?"

"I know," Fang Dian said calmly, looking up. "I’m not giving a speech. I’m taking Bai Liu with me."

The teachers blinked, confused. "Taking him? What do you mean? There's still class this afternoon!"

"I'm not going to class." Her voice was low and steady, her eyes fierce like an animal defending its own. "Didn't you tell Bai Liu to drop out? Well, I'm leaving with him."

"Are you crazy, Fang Dian?" Her homeroom teacher stepped forward in disbelief. "You're top of the class! The entrance exams are right around the corner—why are you throwing everything away for some delinquent with a record?"

"You two aren't even on the same path. Come on, step back over here!" The teacher gestured urgently for her to return.

Fang Dian looked at the teacher—one of the few genuinely concerned for her. Her tone softened. "Teacher, being first in my year, taking the exams—I can do that anytime. If I have to repeat the year, I'll still be top of the city."

"But Bai Liu is my friend. And I want to walk this road with him."

Her gaze was firm. A slight smile tugged at her lips. "If we don't go together now, we might never walk the same path again."

"I'm sorry."

She tugged Bai Liu along, brushing past the stunned teachers without a second glance.

Fang Dian remained calm. She brought Bai Liu back to the dormitory and began packing a bag for him. "This whole situation's suspicious. Don't panic. I'll stay behind to figure out what's going on."

"But you can't stay at school right now. I'll take you to my place first. You can study for the entrance exams there. I'll get you notes and ask my classmates if they know anyone who can help sort this out."

Bai Liu sat on the edge of the bed, a towel over his head as he wiped away the water someone had splashed on him. He watched her quietly before asking in a low voice: "Didn't you say you didn't want to get involved with those kinds of people?"

"The situation was different then. This is urgent now," Fang Dian replied matter-of-factly.

"Like how you just threatened the teachers over dropping out?" Bai Liu's voice was flat.

Fang Dian chuckled. "Something like that. At least it made them think twice about kicking out the city's top student right before the exams."

Bai Liu fell quiet again. "I really did place a bet."

"I know." She nodded. "You're good at gambling—but not with things like this."

"I bet 20,000." After a pause, he added, "It makes sense that they'd expel me."

"If you really want to drop out, I won't stop you." Fang Dian jumped up and sat on the desk across from him, resting her chin in her palm, smiling gently. "But you can't quit like this."

"Because I know you care."

"You worked too hard this year for it to end like this. I want you to do well on the exam."

She reached out to ruffle his hair. "Forget it for now. Go home and rest."

Bai Liu was silent for a long time. When he finally looked up, his damp bangs clung to his pale face. His voice was soft. "Sister Dian, I want a popsicle."

Fang Dian fell still.

Bai Liu rarely called her "Sister Dian," and almost never asked her for anything—not unless he was joking.

At that moment, hearing it for real, Fang Dian almost wished she hadn't.

She took a deep breath. "Alright. Sister Dian will go get it for you right now. Just wait here."

When Fang Dian returned with a bag of popsicles, the dormitory was empty.

Bai Liu was gone. The small suitcase she'd packed for him had disappeared. On the desk, under a cup, was a single hundred-yuan bill and a note:

[Borrowed earlier. Returning it now, Sister Dian.]

[Don’t drop out. I’m not worth it.]

Fang Dian stared at the note. Her breathing grew heavy. Slowly, she lowered the bag of popsicles.

Qiao Mu Private High School

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Lu Yizhan had just handed the exam paper prop to Cen Buming to be sealed and was preparing to find the prop to unlock it from the game, planning to enter the game in the next two days, when he returned and heard about Bai Liu's situation.

"Bai Liu ran away?" Lu Yizhan sat in a daze on the sofa at Fang Dian's house, across from her. "How did Bai Liu run away?"

"I went to the orphanage and asked. He didn't go back." Fang Dian lowered her head, her hand pressing down on the coffee table. Her voice was hoarse. "I looked around the school, but there was nothing."

"Bai Liu didn't return to the orphanage, didn't go back to school, and didn't come here," Lu Yizhan muttered, his expression almost blank. He looked at Fang Dian and asked softly, almost to himself, "Is there anywhere else he could have gone?"

"Where else could he have gone?"

Lu Yizhan suddenly realized that, due to his interference, there were only three places in the world that could accommodate Bai Liu. Now, with the school and the orphanage out of the picture, the only place left was here.

But here... were the two people who had pushed him to this point.

Where else... could Bai Liu go?

He needed money for food, shelter, transport, and rest. Where would he get it?

Lu Yizhan slowly lowered his head, burying his face in his hands, and exhaled deeply.

Summer rains were frequent. When thunder struck, it usually rumbled just twice before the downpour began.

The owner of the arcade on Commercial Street saw the heavy rain and the reduced foot traffic as people took shelter. He sighed, considering closing early for the day.

He had just switched off the large display screen on the street when a hand, drenched and white with rain, gripped the descending shutter.

The owner froze, raising the shutter again.

The rain created a dense mist, blurring the busy streets. Bai Liu, soaked in his school uniform, stood quietly in front of this backdrop, looking almost out of place, as though he didn't belong to this world.

Bai Liu raised his eyes, calmly meeting the owner's gaze. "Are you still open today?"

"Uh… yes, we're open," the owner stammered. He was about to say it wasn't open, but upon seeing Bai Liu's drenched school uniform, he changed his mind. "Come in to get out of the rain."

Bai Liu walked in and glanced at the Old Xiang board. "That shooting game earlier... can the first-place prize be redeemed for money?"

"Yes, you can exchange it for five hundred," the owner replied, looking at Bai Liu's school uniform. "I remember you're in your senior year, right? There's no need to skip classes to come play. The entrance exams are important."

Bai Liu was silent for a moment before responding lightly, "I can't study anymore. I've been withdrawn."

The owner was shocked. "How did you get dropped from school? You're in your senior year! Won't your parents make a fuss at this point?"

"I don't have parents," Bai Liu said blandly. "Can you turn on the machine now?"

The owner, stunned, wanted to ask more but couldn't bring himself to. He sighed and turned on the machine for Bai Liu.

"You play," he said.

Bai Liu nodded politely. "Thank you, Old Xie board."

He lifted the curtain and went inside. Soon, the sound of gunfire echoed from the game in double mode. The owner sighed, his hands tucked outside.

He had seen the boy's golden banner on the Ferris wheel before. How could things have changed so quickly in just a few days...?

And what a lot of energy this kid had—dropping out of school, getting drenched, and still playing in duo mode.

The owner glanced at the two player names logged into the machine: one was Spades, and the other was Bai Liu. He chuckled to himself. The kid was just a teenager, yet had given himself a symmetrical game alias.

Bai Liu focused intently on the game, watching the two characters jumping across the screen, Spades following behind him, escorting him along the way.

Then, from beyond the curtain, a soft voice called out.

"Hello, have you seen this student?"

Bai Liu's pupils fluttered at the sound of the voice. The Spades character on the screen froze. Bai Liu jerked his head to look at Spades, but the monster he had just been playing with was gone.

Beyond the curtain, the soft female voice continued, full of sincerity and urgency: "I'm Fang Dian, the sister of the student in the photo. He's away from home right now, and if you've seen him, could you tell me? We would be very grateful."

The owner hesitated for a moment before responding, "I... haven't seen him."

"Here's our phone number. If you see him, please call us," Fang Dian said as she wrote down her number. "Thank you in advance."

"He loves playing horror games, so he might come here."

Bai Liu leaned silently against the gaming machine, his head tilted back, his hair hiding his eyes. All that could be heard was his shallow breathing and the sound of water dripping from his clothes.

The characters in the horror game crashed and were quickly gnawed to death by zombies.

When Fang Dian left, Bai Liu lifted the curtain and emerged. The owner immediately scolded him. "How can you say you don't have parents? Your sister came looking for you in the pouring rain!"

Bai Liu responded calmly, "Thank you for not telling on me."

The owner paused for a moment before sighing again. "I've had many parents come looking for their kids, and it's basic professional ethics not to give them away. But your sister... she doesn't seem like the kind of parent, and she's really worried about you."

"Her eyes were red. It looked like she'd been crying."

Bai Liu hesitated before saying, "I didn't get a first prize."

"Let's see..." The owner lifted the curtain and walked in. "Second prize, not bad. Want to cash in? Two hundred dollars."

Bai Liu nodded. "Yes."

The owner handed him the money, then paused, sighing with relief. "You're a student... it's tough out there. You should head home soon."

Bai Liu took the money and turned to leave. As he heard the owner's words, he stopped for a moment and replied, "I'm not alone."

"Someone's keeping me company."

The owner asked, "Who is it?"

Bai Liu replied calmly, "Spades."

Bai Liu was already far away in the mist and rain.

The boss turned back, confusion clouding his mind. He glanced at the name Spades at the top of the fallen game character on the console's screen, and wondered aloud, "But Spades..."

"Isn't he just an NPC player who exists only in the game?"

"It's been four days," Lu Yizhan said, his voice strained, his dark circles so thick they seemed to fall to his cheeks. "Where the hell is Bai Liu?"

At this point, Lu Yizhan began regretting that he hadn't asked Cen Buming, the person who'd first gone to find Bai Liu, to send a few people to keep an eye on him.

Now, Lu Yizhan spent a third of his time worrying about Bai Liu getting into trouble, another third worrying about Bai Liu dragging others into trouble, and the remaining third dealing with exam papers, games, the orphanage, and school—feeling as though he might break from the stress.

Had Cen Buming's men tracked down Bai Liu, and if Bai Liu had been doing anything, Cen Buming would have dealt with it swiftly.

The game's properties also didn't mobilize heretics or props to track Bai Liu. Each of them was tied to Bai Liu, and if they were, Bai Liu could surely influence them through the heretics.

Bai Liu was the most unique child in the world. Yet, even with countless resources at his disposal, Lu Yizhan found himself resorting to the most common and time-consuming method of searching—just like he had when he and Fang Dian had searched tirelessly for him.

But despite all their efforts, they still hadn't found him.

Bai Liu was smart enough to know that if he truly didn't want to be found, no matter what resources Lu Yizhan used, it would be nearly impossible to track him down.

After days of exhausting search efforts, Fang Dian finally brought both good and bad news.

"I found Bai Liu in an internet café in the next district," Fang Dian said. "But... he doesn't want to come back."

Lu Yizhan's heart sank, and he collapsed onto the sofa, almost on the verge of tears. "Why?"

"We've worked so hard to clear his name!" Fang Dian exclaimed.

They had gone to great lengths to uncover the truth. The concealed surveillance footage revealed that Bao Kangle had forced Bai Liu into gambling. With Hou Tong's testimony, Bai Liu had been cleared of any wrongdoing.

When Bao Kangle was questioned about attacking Bai Liu, he stammered and couldn't explain. However, when Xu Wei was interrogated, he couldn't hold back and confessed to shady actions involving the headmaster.

The school underwent a harsh investigation, leading to the headmaster and Xu Wei being immediately arrested. Bao Kangle was expelled and given a demerit.

Meanwhile, Cen Buming helped to fix the issues with the exam paper from the game, sealing it as a heresy. Lu Yizhan had already undone its effects on the girl, using a prop to erase her memories of the event, leaving her to believe that what she saw was just an illusion.

Lu Yizhan also wanted to eliminate Bao Kangle's influence, but the man was in such a poor mental state that Lu Yizhan wasn't sure if that would be effective.

Qiao Mu Private High School had been thoroughly cleaned out. The high school's lake on the hill had been filled in, and the area reserved for exceptional students had been disbanded. The new headmaster came to Lu Yizhan immediately after taking office, asking about Bai Liu and helping search for him for several days.

Everything was improving.

Many others, including Hou Tong, the Fang Dian volleyball team, and the new English teacher, were also eagerly awaiting Bai Liu's return.

But Bai Liu had no intention of coming back.

"I had a chat with Bai Liu," Fang Dian said, resting her chin on her hand, as though lost in thought. Her gaze was distant. "He told me he wants to live alone."

"He doesn't see anything wrong with dropping out and living by himself after this," she continued. "He has no expectations of high school or college, nor does he care much about what ordinary people do. But if the future keeps him isolated, he's used to that kind of life—and that's what he's expecting."

Fang Dian's eyes glazed over. "I think he meant it, but I don't think he really wants anyone."

"What do you mean?" Lu Yizhan asked, frowning.

Fang Dian took a deep breath. "It feels like... there's something I can't see."

"Stay with him when he's alone," she added.

In the silence of the rented house, Bai Liu lay alone on a wooden bed.

He had been living in an internet café before, but when Fang Dian arrived, Bai Liu had already left. Fang Dian had rented him this small house and helped him settle in.

Bai Liu lay on the bed, staring at a set of keys on the small table across from him—the same keys Fang Dian had left when she found him in the internet café.

Next to the keys, Spades was also lying there, his black eyes staring back at Bai Liu.

The room was so quiet and dark that Bai Liu could see Spades' eyes glowing a strange silvery-blue, and he could clearly make out Spades' form, which was growing more translucent by the second.

"I'm leaving," Spades said.

"Why?" Bai Liu asked. "I'm still alone. Why can you go?"

Spades blinked slowly. "But you won't be alone for much longer."

Bai Liu's tone was cold. "You don't get to decide what I'm like."

Spades' voice softened. "Because I don't want you to be alone, Bai Liu."

He stood up slowly, approached Bai Liu, and gently scooped him up from the plank bed. With a soft and low voice, he added, "There will be many, many people around you in the future. I know you'll be happy that way, and I hope that happy you comes soon."

"I don't want you to be alone for too long," Spades murmured, tightening his hug around Bai Liu.

"We made a deal," he continued. "I promise you that, in the future, I'll find you, see you at first sight, follow you forever, and never disappear again."

Bai Liu gripped Spades' shoulders, but his gaze seemed distant.

His eyes wandered to the set of keys on the table, and after a long silence, Bai Liu closed his eyes. He wrapped his arms around Spades' shoulders and let out a soft, muffled cry.

Bai Liu is back.

The return of the man of the hour caused a stir at Qiao Mu Private High School, but Bai Liu's own life remained uneventful—or rather, he became the center of attention.

After the cancellation of the buildings on the hill, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian started studying at the foot of the hill. The two often ran to Class 17 to drag Bai Liu along for meals, classes, games, and homework, much to his annoyance.

The new teacher in class was attentive and friendly, though never overbearing. She marked Bai Liu's papers in ways she thought were best.

The orphanage gave Bai Liu eight dollars a night for a bowl of beef noodles. Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian sometimes added extra for an egg, and over the last 50 days, Bai Liu had noticed he'd gained a little weight.

He was no longer alone—or rather, he had no chance to be. Surrounded by so many people, moments of solitude were rare.

Sometimes, Bai Liu would sit alone in the flowerbed downstairs, holding two popsicles, though he rarely ate both. He never knew who ate the second one. Such moments alone had become infrequent.

Then came the day of the GCSEs.

It was a gloriously sunny day, the summer heat sweltering.

Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan woke up early to have breakfast with Bai Liu. Lu Yizhan, nervous, kept reminding him, "Make sure you remember your answer key! Check it twice!"

After giving Bai Liu a final round of instructions, Lu Yizhan walked outside to the parents' area, waiting for Bai Liu's exam to end.

Fang Dian, in tears, stopped Lu Yizhan, who was so nervous he was walking in the wrong direction. "Stop!" she exclaimed. "It's not just Bai Liu's exam today; you have one too! Why are you waiting in the parents' area?"

"Oh!" Lu Yizhan slapped his head in realization. "I forgot I have my own exam today. I just remembered it's also Bai Liu's exam day."

Bai Liu sighed.

In the end, it was Bai Liu who sent Lu Yizhan into the exam room, saying, "Don't forget your answer card, Little Lu."

"You too!" Lu Yizhan grabbed Bai Liu's hand, tears in his eyes. "I'm sure you'll do great!"

Fang Dian also held their hands and smiled brightly. "Of course, Bai Liu will do well!"

Bai Liu watched them wave goodbye and head into the exam hall. Instead of turning away immediately, he paused for a moment, watching their backs as they faded from view.

Just then, a black figure appeared beside him.

Spades took Bai Liu's hand, and Bai Liu slowly returned the gesture.

In the bustling exam hall, Bai Liu stood still, his hand grasping something in vain as people passed by, smiling and greeting him.

"Bai Liu, go for it!"
"Bai Liu, charge!"
"Steady, Bai Liu, you can do it!"

Each time someone greeted him, Spades would briefly disappear, only to return and resume holding his hand once the well-wisher left.

Among the crowd, Bai Liu and Spades seemed like flickering images from an old film, their silhouettes blurring in the sunlight—appearing and disappearing like a monster's silhouette beside the hero of a fairy tale.

Spades held Bai Liu's hand tightly when he was alone, then released it silently when surrounded by others.

When Bai Liu entered the final English exam room, the "monster" stood by the window, watching him write without looking away for a second.

When the bell rang signaling the end of the exam, Bai Liu instinctively turned toward the window to look for Spades.

He was gone.

Bai Liu stood frozen for a moment, then remembered he'd told Spades to wait by the ping pong table after the exam. "He must have gone there," Bai Liu thought.

Later, Fang Dian approached him, asking how the exam went. Bai Liu said it went well, and Fang Dian cheered, suggesting they go shopping afterward to celebrate.

Soon, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian were swept away by classmates, leaving Bai Liu some time to himself. He returned to his seat, paused for a moment, then pulled a roll of sticks from beneath his desk.

Ten sticks—just enough for two "cuteness" rewards.

The classroom buzzed with activity, with many students hiding in corners to confess their love. Bai Liu, expressionless, walked past them without a second glance, heading toward the flowerbed.

At the kiosk, he exchanged ten sticks for two strawberry-flavored treats and waited by the ping pong table in the hot sun.

The ping pong table was a secluded corner, popular among couples avoiding the watchful eye of the head teacher. Now, with no teachers or parents around, it was deserted.

The playground was full of boys and girls running and laughing. In the shade under the ping pong table, Bai Liu, with two ice creams in hand, waited for Spades, just as he had waited in the rain, plotting and hiding from the distant flashlight.

Now, he waited calmly, holding the strawberry-flavored treats, hoping Spades would join him, eat together, and finally hear those words: "I like you."

"I've said what I like and brought what you like to eat. Can you walk a little slower because I'm still alone?"

Bai Liu waited from sunset to dusk, but the monster never came. The ice cream melted completely in his hand. Had Spades really just walked away, without a word?

When they meet again, Bai Liu thinks he won't forgive him so easily.

Bai Liu slowly lowered his hand, still holding the ice cream, and with a calm expression, looked away and whispered:

"I like you, Spades."

Chapter End Notes

Bai Liu 🍙🍙🍙

Qiao Mu Private High School

In the Classroom

Mu Sicheng is still asleep in the back row as Bai Liu turns to the last page of his sketchbook.

The final page depicts a small figure sitting alone by a flower bed, holding two ice creams. The little man gazes down at the spot where the puppy string first appeared, as though waiting for it to reappear and request the ice cream in his hand.

This time, he’s ready to give it.

Bai Liu closes his sketchbook, his expression unchanged, calm as ever.

He has no memory of the past—nothing about Spades remains, erased as if it never existed, much like his memories of Xie Ta before.

It’s not hard to guess that this memory, too, has been folded away.

As always, Bai Liu has scattered [Anchor] around him, drawing Spades into the game—although, in the end, he did get in.

And... he made it as far as the challenge.

"Squeak—"

The classroom door suddenly bursts open, and Mu Sicheng, startled from his sleep, jolts awake.

"Wait." Bai Liu’s voice is steady. "The man who brought us up the mountain is here."

A figure steps forward, a red-eyed Bao Kangle, who glares at Bai Liu with a sinister look. "Don’t you like horror games? Then do you dare to bet with me?"

Bai Liu accepts calmly, "What’s the bet?"

"Jump in Gaucho Lake, answer all the questions, and come back up," Bao Kangle says. "Whoever finishes first wins."

He pauses, clearly searching for a reward, when he notices Bai Liu standing up, poised and ready. "Okay, let’s go."

Bao Kangle freezes. "You agree?"

"I've agreed before," Bai Liu smiles. "There's no point in wasting time. Let's go."

The hill overlooks Gaucho Lake.

Lu Yizhan stands quietly by the lake, a heavy sword in one hand, staring down at his reflection.

His face, distorted by the ripples of the water, is marked with bruises, but he remains still, as if deep in thought—or perhaps, lost in the absence of thought.

His mind drifts back six years, to the time when Bai Liu disappeared in his senior year.

During that period, Lu Yizhan visited Cen Buming once.

"Lu Yizhan," Cen Buming sneered, "What do you think I am? The most I can do for Bai Liu's regression is leave him alone in reality. You want me to help him with Qiao Mu Private High School? You want me to use my power to convince the school to let him stay?"

His words were laced with cold sarcasm. "I'm not as magnanimous as you are, and I'm not so eager to deal with Bai Liu's... derivatives."

Cen Buming's words swirled, but he caught sight of Lu Yizhan's bowed head, as though admitting fault. He swallowed back his curses, opting instead to cool down. "I can't help you. You can go."

Lu Yizhan, who had been silent, spoke up. "I couldn't do it."

He looked up, a faint, bitter smile tugging at his lips. "I couldn't help but doubt him."

Cen Buming turned, eyes narrowing. "What do you mean?"

"I know, rationally, that he's an innocent man," Lu Yizhan sighed, "But emotionally, I couldn't help but prioritize him..."

He paused, taking a deep breath. "I've been over-controlling his actions, inhibiting his development to keep him from hurting others. But in doing so, I'm denying him freedom, and I can't help but wonder —was that the right choice? Is it fair?"

Lu Yizhan leaned against the Heretics Authority corridor wall, gazing at the ceiling with vacant eyes.

"If he's innocent, I'm sacrificing him by doing this," he said softly.

"If he's not... I'm raising a tiger."

"Sometimes, I wonder what the right choice is."

Cen Buming frowned, ready to scold him. But Lu Yizhan raised his hands in mock surrender. "Okay, okay. I know what you're going to say—indecisive, falling into Bai Liu's game. But I've been thinking for a long time, trying to figure out a way to do both. I finally came up with something."

"I'm ready to let go, to let Bai Liu develop on his own."

Cen Buming was stunned, his brow furrowing. "What do you mean?"

"After high school, I won't interfere too much in his life. He can live how he wants." Lu Yizhan looked directly at Cen Buming. "If he ever crosses the line, I'll be the first to stop him."

"But as long as he doesn't, he'll be free to live as a normal person."

"To that end, I'll relax my supervision of him," Lu Yizhan's face hardened. "But I'll still be prepared with backups."

"If Bai Liu ever chooses to enter the game on his own, I need a presence there to stop him from crossing the line."

Lu Yizhan looked at Cen Buming. "I'm joining your guild."

"I'll bet my life that Bai Liu stays within the safety line, never stepping into the temple."

"At least, for now." Lu Yizhan added nervously, scratching his head. "To help Bai Liu graduate, senior brother, can you talk to Qiao Mu Private High School? Have them fill in the lake and cancel the hill under the guise of taking in heretics. Check the headmaster and the player teachers while you're at it."

Cen Buming was speechless.

It had all come back to this.

In the end, Cen Buming agreed, which explained why the issue with Qiao Mu Private High School had been so easily resolved—and why the Gaucho lake was filled.

After that, Lu Yizhan never thought he would see Gaucho Lake again.

He never expected to meet Bai Liu here, by the lake, for a second time.

Lu Yizhan heard footsteps behind him and turned to see Bai Liu standing a few meters away. A clear, familiar smile spread across his face. "There you are."

Bai Liu remained expressionless, his gaze fixed on him. "You should've guessed I'd come."

Lu Yizhan glanced behind Bai Liu. "Where's Bao Kangle? He brought you up here, didn't he? Where is he?"

"He was knocked out by Mu Sicheng and left at the gate after opening the door." Bai Liu's tone was light. "That's all he's good for. After all, it's me and you who are in charge today, isn't it?"

No sooner had he finished speaking than Mu Sicheng emerged from behind Bai Liu, his claws raised high. He darted toward Lu Yizhan, aiming straight for his throat.

Lu Yizhan quickly raised his heavy sword to block, retreating. The next moment, Bai Liu appeared behind him, a dagger in hand.

Bai Liu placed one foot on Lu Yizhan's shoulder and yanked him backward by the back of his neck with his left hand. At the same time, his right hand slashed the dagger diagonally upward across Lu Yizhan's neck, drawing a thin line of blood.

In the game pool:

The host immediately shouted excitedly, "This is a classic thief and assassin match-up! The thief draws attention, while the assassin strikes from the shadows!"

"What a good match! The Reverse God has dropped three points of health, leaving him with only twelve!"

"Another hit! And now, with just ten points left in the Reverse God's health, things are looking pretty bad for the killer sequence!"

Liu Jiayi watched Bai Liu on the big screen, her eyes momentarily flickering. This was how Mu Sicheng and Liu Huai worked best together back then... she thought.

"Now let's see how the Reverse God strikes back. The Reverse God is retaliating! He raises his heavy sword and swings it left, aiming at Mu Sicheng—but it misses. Could his injury be affecting his gameplay?" The host stared at the big screen, his lips forming an astonished "O". "Wait, everyone, look! What skill is that?!"

"The space below Mu Sicheng's left foot has distorted, creating a gap in space! Isn't that the kind of gap only Spades' whip can tear open? But how did the Reverse God's heavy sword do that?!" >

In-game:

Lu Yizhan remained stoic, ignoring the constant attacks on him. He pulled his heavy sword toward the gap, tearing it wider, the opening expanding like paper being ripped apart, the space folding and breaking.

[System Alert: Player Reverse God uses personal skill (World Line Overlap)]

[Note: This skill can only be used once per game, so please choose your timing carefully.]

Lu Yizhan slashed to the left, and the gap widened instantly. Mu Sicheng inadvertently stepped into it. In a swift motion, Lu Yizhan flipped and pressed down on his sword, folding the twisted space above him like dough, trapping the stunned Mu Sicheng within it. He swung his heavy sword twice, sealing the space into place.

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng has been actively migrated out of the game map due to spatial folding. He is considered to have quit the game and will be treated as playing negatively.]

Mu Sicheng, now inexplicably in the audience, stood there, baffled. "????" What the hell just happened? Why did he quit the game?

After a brief moment of confusion, the crowd erupted in applause, startling Mu Sicheng as he stood outside the game.

The host, excited, added, "It's a rule skill! In addition to the Prophecy skill, the Reverse God has a Space-level Rule skill hidden in his repertoire!"

"Two rule skills!"

"I've never seen the Reverse God use this skill in any of his matches since joining the league! It's likely that this skill wasn't originally his but was passed on to him by someone before he died. However, we know nothing about the player who transferred it to him!"

"This is bizarre!"

The host grew more animated as he spoke, "This skill must've been available to the Reverse God before this season. From mid-season play until now, the Reverse God has faced off against thirty-one strong teams, and Bai Liu is the only player who's forced him to use this skill."

"This showdown is getting interesting!"

On the big screen, Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan stood on opposite casting platforms, facing each other across the lake. The wind blew silently between them, a single leaf drifting across the water, haloed by the moonlight. The ground around them was littered with heavy swords, knives, and deep slash marks.

"So that's why you tried to protect Mu Sicheng from the game, even though you were fighting to the death earlier," Lu Yizhan observed, his neck still dripping with blood. Yet his face wore a helpless smile. "I saved you last time, and now you've figured out that I had this little trick left—sending people out of the game randomly."

"Leave a team member who can use that team member to consume this skill of mine," Lu Yizhan continued. "You've been setting up against me quite a lot, haven't you?"

Bai Liu replied lightly, "Pretty much the same as the setup you did against me."

The moon hung high in the dark blue sky, its light now casting down onto the lake. Lu Yizhan and Bai Liu looked up at each other at the same moment.

Lu Yizhan, battered and bruised at eighteen, and Bai Liu, equally hurt, stood on opposite sides of Gao Kao Lake. Their ragged school uniforms were torn from the fight, the hems fluttering in the night wind. They faced each other with calm determination.

The bright moon tilted down, casting a dark, silvery blue glow on the lake, as though one of the eyes of a god was watching them with a knowing smile.

Bai Liu looked at Lu Yizhan impassively.

Lu Yizhan was silent for a moment, then he smiled with relief, his eyebrows arching. "Bai Liu, did I ever mention that you're quite different from when you were eighteen?"

—Even though it was the same appearance, the same attire, and the same stance by the lake.

But Bai Liu was no longer the same. His gaze, though calm, was filled with the weight of experience. He stood alone, yet there seemed to be many people standing behind him, his aggression unwavering.

"You've grown up," Lu Yizhan murmured, taking a deep breath as he held his heavy sword against his side. He lowered his eyes to the reflection of his still-young self in the lake. "…I'm old."

—There was no one left behind me.

People grow up because they have something to fall back on, and they grow old because they have nothing.

The deep yellow moon cascaded away, and a set of tables and chairs appeared in the lake as the final map of Gao Kao Lake opened up.

Lu Yizhan and Bai Liu jumped at the same time.

The moment they hit the water, they raised their heavy swords and whips in unison, charging toward each other without hesitation.

Shrine.

Bai Six looked at Lu Yizhan with amusement as the stone encasing him slowly solidified, leaving only his right hand and half of his face visible. "Are you really going to do this?"

"Do that," Bai Six continued, "and there will be no turning back."

Lu Yizhan slowly raised his head, and as he did, fragments of stone continued to fall from his body. He met Bai Liu's gaze and, with a hoarse voice, replied, "I'm going to do that."

Bai Six lowered his eyes, his fingers brushing across the stone table as a scene materialized before them. Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan were locked in a fierce underwater struggle. Bai Six smirked, amused. "It doesn't look like he's planning on holding back on you."

"Are you really going to bet against me this time?" Lu Yizhan asked.

Bai Six looked up, a smile curling at his lips. "Are you sure you want to bet your last God card—the Prophet, which is your own—on Bai Liu?"

Lu Yizhan, his petrified hand still, slowly pushed the Prophet card onto the table. "I'm sure."

"Good then," Bai Six folded his hands beneath his chin, his smile widening. "Let's clarify the terms of the bet."

"You said no matter how much Bai Liu desires victory, he will never be manipulated into doing something illegal in this copy—"

"In other words," Bai Six interrupted, "no matter how much Bai Liu wants to win, he will never kill you in this copy without a 'get-out-of-jail-free' card, right?"

Lu Yizhan stared intently at Bai Six. "Yes."

"Then let's rewind to before your copy begins."

Lu Yizhan pulled Zhou Gong aside and removed his death-free gold medal from around his neck, placing it on Zhou Gong. "I give you my death-free gold medal."

Zhou Gong's pupils dilated as he held the medal in his hands. "Captain?!"

"Why are you handing over your immunity from death?!" he demanded.

A normal death warrant cannot be transferred, borrowed, or handed over, it can only be used by the person who received it.

"Because I made a bet with the evil god." Lu Yizhan spoke calmly. "I told him that Bai Liu wouldn't kill me without my death-free gold medal. He didn't believe it, so he changed the rules for me and allowed me to hand over the medal for this one tournament."

"Listen carefully, Zhou Gong: when you go on the field, go straight for Bai Liu. He won't kill you at first, because he doesn't kill innocent people in the game. But he will find many ways to eliminate you—like getting your soul note."

Zhou Gong shuddered, his face falling. "I can't protect myself from him, Captain. He's too clever, and he's already bought Captain Tang. What if he buys my soul note too?"

Lu Yizhan leaned in closer, his voice lowering. "That's what I want to talk to you about. When the time comes, show him your 'get-out-of-jail-free' card right away. Bai Liu will eliminate you quickly instead of wasting time on your soul note."

"Your soul notes aren't valuable to him."

Zhou Gong stared blankly, replying with a soft, defeated, "Oh QAQ."

It seemed like a good plan, but the tone of it didn't sound reassuring.

"But Captain, if you give me the gold medal, you won't have any immunity from death yourself," Zhou Gong said, clearly worried.

"Don't tell anyone," Lu Yizhan paused, "And don't let Bai Liu figure out that your medal came from Spades, who withdrew."

Zhou Gong's worry deepened. "Captain, what are you going to do?"

"Bai Liu will kill you if you step out there like that!" he protested.

[Lu Yizhan, Bai Liu will kill you!]

Lu Yizhan was momentarily lost in thought as he remembered a time when Cen Buming had said the same thing, with red eyes and harsh curses, after leaving the Deer Hunter's Guild a year ago.

"Lu Yizhan, what are you doing?!" Cen Buming's fury was palpable as he pinned Lu Yizhan to the ground, the Death Ring leaving scratches on his face. His eyes were bloodshot, and his voice came out like a growl, "Do you even realize what you've just said?!"

Lu Yizhan, blood trickling from his mouth, calmly turned his head, wiped his lip, and repeated, "I said, I will devolve my God sign to Bai

Liu."

"I will sell my soul to him."

"I want him to take my place and become the next Prophet."

Cen Buming's chest heaved as he glared at Lu Yizhan, murder in his eyes. "So, you've gone mad, haven't you?"

"What about everything we trained for? The years we spent in the game preparing to kill Bai Liu?"

"What about every loyal second-tier team member of the Deer Hunters, who fought for you?!"

"I'm sorry," Lu Yizhan replied calmly. "The Prophet's power goes to Bai Liu. He's the only one with a chance of winning."

Cen Buming's eyes darkened. "You're saying the only chance of winning is through a werewolf?" His voice was icy.

Lu Yizhan spoke matter-of-factly. "We can't beat Bai Six. He's too strong. But Bai Liu? He's possible. As long as he's on our side, playing against Bai Six as our Prophet, the game will never end. It'll never be a win or a loss."

"This world line will continue," he added, "and that's a win."

"Is that a win?" Cen Buming sneered.

"No," Lu Yizhan admitted softly, "but it's not a loss either."

"It's the only option I can think of."

"Bai Liu's been mentally stable for years. He grew up in a peaceful environment. His pursuit isn't so extreme. Apart from a few moments of strong desire, I don't see him falling into the game unless Bai Six has his anchor."

"I'm sure Bai Liu wouldn't have joined the game if Bai Six hadn't had that hold on him."

Cen Buming slowly released his grip on Lu Yizhan's collar. With a quiet groan, Lu Yizhan propped himself up and limped toward the door.

As he passed Cen Buming, he paused, bowed his head, and muttered an apology before walking outside.

"Brother," Cen Buming called out behind him. "Have you ever thought about how badly Bai Liu would die if he really was a werewolf and sold his soul to a werewolf Prophet?"

"He’s my last friend," Lu Yizhan said quietly, leaning against the wall. "I know he won’t kill me."

"Where does this belief come from?" Cen Buming asked through gritted teeth.

Lu Yizhan paused before responding, his voice firm. "A long time ago, I asked Fang Dian how to win all the time in the game."

"Fang Dian and I said, 'Cheating.'"

"I said, 'The other guy is someone I can’t beat, no matter what. Someone who can’t be beaten, even by cheating. How can I win?'"

"Fang Dian and I said, 'Then just cheat off the field so he has no way of beating you.'"

"I asked her what that meant, and she smiled and said, 'I cheat off the field with you and Bai Liu, and Bai Liu cheats off the field with you too.'"

"Because you couldn’t let us lose, you made sure we won every time. You kept this up for ten years, and if you wanted to win, you just made sure no one else could beat us. It’s a kind of emotional trust-based cheating."

"I said Bai Liu wouldn’t let me win—he’s too competitive. And Fang Dian smiled and said, 'No. The day he grows up, he’ll know how to let you win.'"

Lu Yizhan turned back to Cen Buming with a small smile. "I think that day will come."

In the viewing pool, on the large splash screen, Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan are locked in a fierce battle, their whips and heavy swords swinging at each other in a blur. Their movements are barely visible, but the life levels of both players are steadily dropping.

The host, sweating nervously, exclaims, "The Reverse God only has five life points left! There's a good chance he'll be taken out with one more strike!"

"Is this where the playoffs for the killer sequence are going to end? Are we really going to have to start all over again next year?!" one of the commentators adds, his voice tinged with anxiety.

Zhou Gong's face pales—this isn't just about stopping here. The captain has no immunity, and death is final. There's no 'next year' for him.

At the Shrine, Bai Six smiles, watching the scene unfold on the screen. "If Bai Liu realizes you don't have a death warrant with so little life left, he'll strike quickly. Are you really sure you want to bet against me?"

"You've never won a bet against me, oh prophet," Bai Six adds with a grin.

Lu Yizhan remains silent. His hand presses down on the God Zhang card beneath him as he watches Bai Liu, his eyes unwavering, attack on the screen. His breathing grows faster, his mind racing.

What are you thinking, Bai Liu? What kind of person are you, Bai Liu?

Are you going to kill me... or not?

Bai Liu.

Lu Yizhan closes his eyes, his eyelids heavy, like stone. On the screen, Bai Liu transforms his whip into a knife and drives it into Lu Yizhan's virtual heart.

[System Alert: Player Reverse God's life value reduced to 1!]

[Warning! Warning! No exemptions! Player is about to die!]

[Player Reverse God is about to quit the game.]

In the game, Bai Liu hears the system's beep. His pupils flicker, and he immediately reacts—Lu Yizhan has set him up!

That guy broke the rules and moved the death-exemption medal! The Spades-marked medallion of Zhou Gong isn't Spades', it's Lu Yizhan's.

The Lu Yizhan in the water jerks his head up, teeth gritted, eyes red with a mixture of despair, grim determination, and sorrow. With a mighty effort, he raises his heavy sword and drives it toward Bai Liu's heart, catching him off guard.

[System Alert: Player Reverse God uses the monster book identity "Reverse God's Judge"—using the highest-level Judgement skill.]

[- Judgement of the Evil One.]

The heavy sword erupts in a blinding white light, and Bai Liu's life drops rapidly.

Lu Yizhan forces the sword deeper into Bai Liu's heart, pinning him to the water. The two men are so close they can almost see each other's eyes. Bai Liu still clutches his dagger, enough for another attack.

One more strike, and Lu Yizhan's life will reach zero. He'll die, and the game will end.

Bai Liu's gaze is vacant as he looks at Lu Yizhan, his mind wandering uncontrollably.

It feels like the same lake bottom where Lu Yizhan once rescued the fourteen-year-old trying to grab Xie Ta's hand.

The same place he helped the eighteen-year-old down the side of Gaucho Lake.

Where he pulled the twenty-four-year-old from the watery dungeon of the Heretic Authority.

But this time, it's Lu Yizhan pushing him into the water.

Do I kill him?

Bai Liu's expression remains impassive as he looks at Lu Yizhan's bloodless face. Blood suddenly bursts from Bai Liu's heart, flooding the lake.

He never understood why Lu Yizhan wanted to save him.

Now, he still doesn't understand why Lu Yizhan stopped him.

Lu Yizhan has always done things Bai Liu couldn't comprehend—teaching him things he didn't get, letting him live like a normal person in a world he doesn't understand, stopping him from hurting others and preventing others from hurting him.

But why?

Why do you do this?

Why, when you’re clearly the one trying to kill me, does your hand tremble so violently holding the sword, and why are your eyes so red —as if you’re killing the one person you least want to kill?

Bai Liu loosens his grip on the dagger.

Lu Yizhan opens his eyes, pushing the God card down onto the table beside the Werewolf card. He looks up at Bai Six across the table. "I bet."

"I bet he’ll become the next generation of prophets and defeat you!"

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has zero life. Exiting the game.]

The Challenge

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

After a brief handover to the other members, Bai Liu calmly logged out of the game.

The circus members understood the situation and didn't place any blame on Bai Liu.

To be honest, they had no right to blame him. In fact, the few members who had been cleared out early in the game by Lu Yizhan were more to blame, as Bai Liu was the only one who had made it to the end.

"Don't stress about it," Tang Erda said, patting Bai Liu's shoulder with a somber expression. "Get some rest. We have a tough battle ahead."

Bai Liu let out a slight sigh of relief as he logged out of the game and lay down on the bed in his rented room. He stared at the ceiling, his breathing soft and steady.

He hadn't carried over his injuries this time; he had been awake from start to finish.

Including the final blow.

"Lingling—" his phone suddenly rang. Bai Liu picked it up without checking the screen, and when he did, there was no sound on the other end, only uneven breathing. So Bai Liu remained silent.

After a long pause, a bitter laugh echoed from the other side. "Shall we talk?"

"Where do you want to talk?" Bai Liu replied smoothly. "My place or yours?"

"Come on over," Lu Yizhan said, rubbing his face. "I'll cook for you. Is there anything you want to eat?"

Bai Liu paused for a moment. "Anything."

"Alright, I'll wait for you at the grocery store. Since you just got out of the game, don't ride your bike—take a taxi. I'll reimburse you."

Bai Liu opted for the most expensive express taxi.

When Bai Liu arrived, he asked Lu Yizhan to come down and pay the driver. Lu Yizhan, wearing an apron, wiped his hands in shock while pulling out his phone. "Why did you take a detour for over a hundred?" he asked.

The taxi driver responded truthfully, "The boy said he was going to a shopping street near Qiao Mu private high school, so I took a long detour. He went down to buy something and came back for the same price."

Lu Yizhan realized he'd been pranked. "....."

He turned to Bai Liu. "What did you buy?"

Bai Liu glanced at him, deadpan. "A body. Do you want to report it now?"

"..... No need." Lu Yizhan quickly lowered his head, wiping his hands vigorously on his apron. Then he muttered, "I'm sorry."

Bai Liu paused for a moment but didn't respond. He simply continued on his way.

When he reached Lu Yizhan's door on the third floor, Bai Liu stopped and raised his hand to knock. But Lu Yizhan whispered, "You have the key."

"Fang Dian gave it to you last time."

Bai Liu's hand stopped mid-air. He paused for a second, then found the key and inserted it into the lock, turning it with a slightly rusty motion.

The door didn't open.

Lu Yizhan whispered again, "You're turning the wrong way."

Bai Liu: "....."

Bai Liu glanced at him briefly. "Why don't you open it?"

"No, no, no!" Lu Yizhan smiled awkwardly. "You haven't been here in a while; it's normal. A few more visits, and it won't happen again."

Bai Liu shifted his gaze back to the door, lingering for a moment on the lock and key, before turning it twice more in the opposite direction.

Finally, the door opened.

A wave of heat and the smell of soup filled the room, accompanied by the sound of bubbling in the kitchen. The freshly painted wallpaper in the living room had a few watermarks, likely from an accident with the hostess. The TV was playing loud entertainment, and three or four large dishes sat on the dining table, steam rising from them.

It was a lively, almost festive atmosphere.

Bai Liu stepped inside.

"Bang..."

A firework cone went off with a loud pop, and Fang Dian jumped out from behind the shoe cupboard, grinning widely. She held a firework cone in one hand and a cake in the other, shouting, "Happy 25th birthday, Bai Liu!"

Bai Liu froze mid-step. His eyes shifted slowly from the bustling room to Fang Dian’s face, adorned with a birthday hat and lit candles on the cake, and finally to the cake itself, with the number [25] displayed in candles.

Oh. So it’s my birthday.

He had forgotten about it in the rush of everything.

Bai Liu had celebrated nearly all his birthdays since high school with Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan. But on his 22nd birthday, something happened to Fang Dian, and afterward, Bai Liu never went back to her house for his birthday.

No matter how much Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian invited him, he always declined. The invites slowly turned into a text message with birthday wishes and a takeaway cake. Bai Liu would eat the cake like beef noodles for breakfast, scan the message, and that was the end of his birthday.

Now, suddenly, he remembered—oh, right, it's my birthday.

He also realized that, like the Mad Lamb tactician, he had lost to Lu Yizhan in the past: first against the Deer Hunter and now against the Killer Sequence.

"Come in, come in!" Fang Dian noticed Bai Liu hadn't reacted, so she grabbed his shoulders and ushered him in. She stopped and looked at him with some surprise. "You're wearing a white shirt. Aren't you cold?"

"It's September, almost October, and it's rainy today!" Fang Dian shook her head, disapproving of Bai Liu's thin attire. "Is that all you're wearing? Will your little body be okay?"

"I'll go get you something to wear!" she added.

As soon as Fang Dian set the cake down, she disappeared into the other room, rummaging for clothes.

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan sat on the couch in silence, watching a cartoon on the TV.

Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, clutching his apron, and spoke first. "...What do you want to ask?"

Bai Liu's tone was light but pointed. "What's your game with Bai Six, aside from Werewolf? What's your next plan?"

Lu Yizhan gave a bitter smile. "I'm prepared to give you the prophet status."

Bai Liu paused, turning his head to look at Lu Yizhan, his eyes narrowing. "You're going to sell your soul to me? Won't that kill you?"

"It would have," Lu Yizhan sighed, extending his hand. "First, you find the paper money and trade it for my soul. After that, you'll understand what's going on."

Bai Liu stared expressionlessly for a moment, then fished a ten-cent coin out of the corner of his wallet, holding it up right in front of Lu Yizhan's stunned face. "Ten cents for your soul."

Lu Yizhan's entire body stiffened. "At least one bill! Ten cents is too little!"

"No, forget it." Bai Liu calmly withdrew the coin. "Lu Yizhan, you know what? It's a buyer's market. You're the one selling your soul, not me, so I don't want it."

Lu Yizhan was silent for a moment. Then, with a touch of humiliation, he extended his hand, eyes glistening with the threat of tears. "At least fifty cents! Ten cents is too little!"

"I can buy it for fifty cents." Bai Liu clasped his hands over his chest, his tone cold. "But later, you'll need to transfer me forty cents. The real price is still ten cents, so consider this me helping you 'bump up' the price."

Lu Yizhan: "..."

"I only have one soul note and don't plan to open a wholesale shop, so no need to fake the price," Lu Yizhan muttered in resignation.

"A penny's a penny," Bai Liu replied, almost dryly. "Here." He dropped a dime into Lu Yizhan's palm, and almost instantly, a new soul note appeared in his wallet. He pulled it out, his brow furrowing quickly.

The note wasn't as new or straight as Bai Liu's usual ones. It was old and slightly wrinkled, with a hole the size of a baby's fist in the top right corner, surrounded by a black ring, as though it had been burned.

Bai Liu's gaze snapped up as he glanced over Lu Yizhan's right shoulder, where the Soul Crusher had struck him. His tone dropped. "Your soul was damaged when you were hit by the gun?"

"Yes." Lu Yizhan spread his hands helplessly. "My soul was incomplete after my last injury. So, even though I sold my soul to you, it's not fully 'sold' to you. It's in a kind of Schrödinger's sold soul state."

"It's kind of a cheating violation," Lu Yizhan added with a rueful chuckle.

Bai Liu stared at him intently before suddenly asking, "When did you start planning to make me a prophet?"

"-It was before you took a bullet for me, wasn't it?"

Bai Liu's voice was calm as he continued, "So, at that time, you deliberately stood in my way and got shot so you could sell your broken soul to me? And then give me the prophet status you couldn't afford, so I'd take on the so-called responsibility of saving the world?"

“Is that why you raised me, Lu Yizhan?” Bai Liu’s voice was colder now, tinged with a hint of bitterness. “Either to kill me as a criminal, or treat me like an heir... a tool?”

Lu Yizhan raised his head slowly. Rather than evade Bai Liu’s question, he answered smoothly, “Fifty percent.”

Bai Liu immediately understood.

What Lu Yizhan was saying was that he raised him fifty percent because of what Bai Liu had just said.

“Then there’s fifty percent.” Bai Liu lifted his eyes, meeting Lu Yizhan’s gaze. “What’s the other half?”

Lu Yizhan locked eyes with him for a long moment, then closed his eyes, exhaling slowly.

What’s the other half?

This was the guy who stayed up late studying at fifteen because he said so, who refrained from touching his classmates at sixteen because he stopped him, who managed to show off his four hundred grades at seventeen in the most subtle way, and who hid popsicles under Fang Dian’s bed to buy Cutie Dots.

At eighteen, he jumped off Gaucho Lake but controlled himself and didn’t get into the game. At twenty-two, he broke down outside Fang Dian’s surgery, his hands shaking as he folded his memories.

Now, at twenty-five, closing in on him with only one life point in the game.

Because he is human, and I am human, and we can’t avoid, or sever, those emotional ties that arise.

“The other fifty percent...” Lu Yizhan’s voice trembled slightly, a forced smile crossing his face. “...is because you’re my friend.”

“I know it may sound ridiculous, but it’s true.”

“I’m sorry you had to find this out on your birthday.”

Bai Liu took a deep breath, averting his gaze as silence stretched between them for a long moment.

"You gave me fifty percent of the reason," Bai Liu said quietly, "and I received fifty percent of your soul."

"We're even," he added, putting away the half-burned soul note.

Lu Yizhan looked up in shock. Before he could speak, Fang Dian poked her head out of the room and, noticing them, asked curiously, "Bai Liu, I'm looking for your coat and jacket. How tall are you now?"

Bai Liu responded, "177 cm."

"Wow, you've grown a bit," Fang Dian mused, "But Mr. Lu's clothes still won't fit you. He's 6'5", and you're a bit shorter."

She paused thoughtfully. "Then you can wear mine first. I'm 5'8", and the jacket should fit you just right."

Bai Liu nodded, "Oh."

Fang Dian found a camel-colored coat and draped it over Bai Liu's shoulders. As she did, she frowned and said, "What's wrong with you? Have you been eating properly?"

"No, you really need to eat more," she insisted, pushing Lu Yizhan, who hesitated, toward the kitchen. "Go bring out the pig's feet soup to nourish Bai Liu."

After some reluctant prodding from Fang Dian, Bai Liu ate two large pieces of pig's feet and a bowl and a half of rice. Finally, he set the bowl down and repeated, "I'm really full."

"Nonsense," Fang Dian retorted, giving him a pointed look. "Your stomach isn't even bulging—there's plenty of room for more."

Bai Liu sighed inwardly, "..."

It felt like he might explode at any moment.

Lu Yizhan, nearly in tears, intervened. "You should let him save some stomach space for the cake."

After dinner, Fang Dian mysteriously pulled Bai Liu onto the sofa. "Sit here," she said. "I'll go get your birthday present."

Within minutes, she returned with three large, dusty boxes and a brand-new one. Bai Liu's gaze immediately froze on the old boxes.

Fang Dian grinned as she opened the first box. "This was your birthday present when you turned twenty-two."

Inside, there was an old console and a collection of game cards for horror games.

"Lu Yizhan and I went to a flea market to get them," she laughed, proud of herself. "They're all out-of-print games. You've never played them!"

Fang Dian moved on to the next box. "This was for your twenty-third birthday."

Inside was a set of formal wear that looked very expensive at first glance.

"I thought you might need it now that you're working," she said wistfully. "Mr. Lu and I saved up for it—it cost a few thousand dollars."

When she opened the third box, Bai Liu's eyes twitched. It was filled with amulets and prayer charms of various kinds, all from different temples.

"These are from temples Mr. Lu and I visited, and some I had my friends bring back from overseas," Fang Dian explained, her voice softening. "You always had bad luck in those days. Though I don't believe in this stuff, sometimes you just think, 'What if?'"

She smiled at Bai Liu. "If there really are immortals in heaven who can bless us, it's okay for Mr. Lu and I to ask for a little help."

Bai Liu was silent for a long time before murmuring, "Thank you."

"You don't need to thank us," Fang Dian said, waving away his gratitude. Her tone turned a little melancholy. "I was going to give this to you every year, but you never came, and I didn't want to push it. I didn't know what you'd think. If I gave it to you and you didn't want it, it might cause you trouble. I didn't want you to feel obligated."

She sighed, looking down. "So, I ended up not giving it to you every year. But I'm glad you're here this year."

She smiled again, though it was faint. "At least you're here now. Everything's ready for you."

She paused, rummaging through the box and pulling out something new. "Oh, and this!" She proudly placed it in front of Bai Liu. "This will keep you warm. You can wear it later."

Bai Liu's eyes widened in disbelief as he saw what Fang Dian had pulled out—a full set of red autumn clothes, including trousers and even red underwear. He quickly and calmly tried to refuse. "Isn't this unnecessary?"

Fang Dian didn't seem to hear him. "You didn't wear these on your birthday, and I think that's why you're unlucky!"

Bai Liu frowned. "..."

He didn't quite agree with that assessment.

Fang Dian pressed on, holding up the clothes. "These are padded and warm. You need to put them on while it's still your birthday!"

Bai Liu turned his gaze slowly toward Lu Yizhan, who was standing behind Fang Dian, shrugging helplessly.

Fang Dian cut through their silent exchange. "Lu Yizhan wore a red autumn coat and trousers for the whole year he was born. It's useless to ask him for help."

Bai Liu: "..."

Lu Yizhan: "..."

And that, it seemed, was that.

Chapter End Notes

> The red autumn coat and trousers are likely a playful or traditional gift meant to bring good luck, particularly for a birthday. In some cultures, the color red is believed to symbolize good fortune, prosperity, and protection against bad luck. Fang Dian's insistence on Bai Liu wearing them could be rooted in a belief that the red clothing would "ward off" misfortune or "bring better luck".

The Challenge

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

After Bai Liu's calm but firm refusal, Fang Dian reluctantly abandoned the idea of having him wear the red trousers in front of her.

She helped Bai Liu pack the leftover food into a stainless-steel lunch box. "You can store it in the fridge for a couple more days," she said. "No need to cook again—saves time."

Lu Yizhan helped Bai Liu gather his birthday presents. "There's a lot of stuff, and it'll be hard to carry. I'll call a taxi for you to take it all back."

"What kind of car?" Fang Dian gave Lu Yizhan a strange look before her gaze returned to Bai Liu. "Are you heading straight home?"

Bai Liu paused. "I don't have any clothes with me. I can't stay here overnight."

Fang Dian raised an eyebrow. "What about your friends? It's your birthday—aren't you going to go out with them and have some fun?"

Bai Liu was quiet for a moment.

To be honest, he had forgotten about his birthday, and since he had never mentioned it to his teammates, he doubted they knew either.

"They don't know," Bai Liu replied.

Fang Dian was increasingly confused. "How could they not know? Muke even came to me to check if your birthday matched the one on your CV."

"Jiayi asked, too."

Bai Liu froze. Slowly, he turned back to Fang Dian. "Did they ask you?"

Fang Dian didn't think much of it. "Yeah, I just called to confirm that you were eating at my place."

Bai Liu remained silent, his mind racing. A sudden memory of the subtle sounds of recent renovations on both floors of his house hit him. An unsettling sense of foreboding washed over him.

On the other side, outside Bai Liu's rental house, Du Sanying found himself squeezed in the middle, feeling as if he were being held hostage. He watched in horror as Muke scanned the room indifferently, before turning to the butler—who was dressed in a sharp suit—and asked, "Do you have the title deed the landlord gave you for this property?"

"Yes," the butler replied respectfully. "We offered a price slightly higher than the market rate, and the seller agreed quickly. The formalities were completed yesterday. The house is now in Mr. Bai Liu's name. We just need to wait until he has time to visit the title department to complete the transfer."

"In addition, we've bought the upper and lower floors, as well as the next door, to facilitate your planned modifications."

Muke nodded. "You're almost done with the renovations upstairs and downstairs, right?"

"Almost," the butler confirmed. "As for the old block you mentioned, we've also purchased all the units on the third floor, as well as the second and fourth floors. They're under renovation as we speak, so by the time Mr. Bai Liu returns, he'll be able to live wherever he prefers."

Muke waved his hand dismissively. "No need to pretend for now."

He had purchased the house in Lu Yizhan's neighborhood because Bai Liu seemed to get along well with both Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian when he visited for dinner, suggesting he might want to live near his friends. But now, with the chaos of the killer sequence, Muke was filled with resentment.

Lu Yizhan had betrayed Bai Liu, and Muke had only worsened things by sending Bai Liu to Lu Yizhan's place himself.

Those two better stay as far apart as possible.

"Good," the butler said with a polite nod. "So, are we just decorating this room for Mr. Bai Liu's return on his birthday?"

Muke snapped back to attention and gave a reserved nod. "A simple renovation will do."

"I've already contacted Sister Dian to stall for us. Bai Liu just left and won't be back for about three or four hours. You have time to clean the entire house, replace the stove and water heater, install wallpaper, put in isolation doors, and move in the appliances that have already been delivered. They should be ready for use right away. Just make sure to avoid using solid colors for the wallpaper—Bai Liu doesn't like that..."

Muke continued giving instructions in an organized manner, and soon the entire house was buzzing with workers.

Mu Sicheng, who was nearby, watched in disbelief.

"Is this a simple renovation?" he muttered. "This place is already being finely decorated!"

Du Sanying weakly raised his hand, watching tearfully as Muke oversaw the major transformation of Bai Liu's old, rundown rental house. "So... when Mr. Bai Liu comes back and finds all this, and I give him the key, he won't kick me out, right?"

Liu Jiayi, watching from the side with her arms crossed, clicked her tongue. "The power of money."

Tang Erda, frowning, interjected, "Won't Bai Liu be angry if we move his things like this? Should we call him first and let him know?"

Before he could lift his phone, Liu Jiayi quickly stopped him, looking up at Tang Erda with a disapproving expression. "Do you know what a surprise is?"

"We've been working on this for Bai Liu for the entire month, hiding it from him, and you're about to ruin it before he even sees it?"

Tang Erda still seemed uncertain. "What if he doesn't like it?"

Liu Jiayi shrugged nonchalantly. "A surprise is a surprise—part of the deal."

Tang Erda sighed. "I suppose you're right."

"Don't worry," Liu Jiayi muttered softly, "Bai Liu wouldn't dislike a place that looks like it's getting richer."

Tang Erda reluctantly agreed. "That's true."

Muke suddenly spoke up again. "What about the cake? Is everything ready for the birthday party?"

Muke's quick thinking and constant orders had the butler struggling to keep up. Wiping the cold sweat from his forehead, he managed a strained smile. "On my way, young master."

"Didn't I ask you to bring the ingredients straight to the fridge?" Muke's brow furrowed as he stepped forward and opened the fridge door. "It looks too empty."

The butler lowered his voice. "A lot of the ingredients just arrived and didn't make it in time. Should I buy some more to fill it up?"

Muke jotted down a list of items. "Go get these things for me. Bai Liu's not working well right now—get him something better."

The butler glanced at the list, his eyes widening as he stammered, "Y-Young master, do you really need five sets of towels, toothbrushes, and slippers?!"

Muke replied calmly, "Well, except for Jiayi, the rest of us are moving in with Bai Liu."

"We don't want to be too far from him."

The butler blinked in surprise, his gaze darting to the various handsome men around Muke of all shapes and sizes. He lowered his head, his voice trembling as he asked, "Do they all plan to live with Bai Liu? Do you mind, Master Muke?"

Muke frowned slightly. "As long as Bai Liu doesn't mind, I don't mind... What, no?"

The butler shuddered and silently retrieved the list. "I-I'll get right on it."

Muke's presence was overpowering—he radiated an undeniable authority.

Liu Jiayi suddenly spoke up, her tone slightly sulking. "How about... getting six sets? There's another guy who's probably going to sleep with Bai Liu, too."

"You should probably buy him a set as well. He probably doesn't have anything."

The butler's face turned pale. "!!!"

All this, and one more to come!

Can Bai Liu handle it?

The housekeeper couldn't help but wonder if he had misjudged Master Muke and the nature of his relationship with Bai Liu.

Although Young Master Muke insists that his soul belongs to Bai Liu and refuses to stray too far from him—because only Bai Liu can make his heart beat again—what if… what if they aren't actually in that kind of relationship?

Just in case, these four men with vastly different personalities are all moving in with Bai Liu to run a studio together. It'll make things easier for everyone, right...?

Just as the butler was about to convince himself, Muke's expression darkened slightly at Liu Jiayi's words. His jaw tensed, and he nearly gritted his teeth as he muttered, "...That's right. Bai Liu already gave Spades the coordinates. He'll come looking for him sooner or later..."

"Then let's prepare six sets," Muke said after a pause, steadying himself. His tone carried an unusual trace of gloom and helplessness. "If he's coming to live with Bai Liu, there are a few other things that need to be handled."

With a tight-lipped expression and a faint flush on his face, Muke swiped to add two more items to the shopping list. "...Make sure to buy these too. Get the best ones—something comfortable to use."

The butler glanced at Muke's additions. His pupils dilated. His eyes widened.

Condoms.

Lubricant.

Holy shit.

Was it really what he thought it was?!

The butler left in a daze, clutching the list like it contained the secrets of the universe.

Fortunately, the house Bai Liu had acquired was relatively clean, having undergone little renovation. It was tidy enough when he moved in.

As Muke looked around the newly furnished home, he let out a sigh of relief. Even Tang Erda, who had been tense all day, finally seemed to relax.

The house wasn't extravagant, but it was practical and homey. Once everything was set up, the entire space was bathed in warm hues of yellow, exuding a comforting, lived-in feel—like a place where one could sit down for a cozy meal or doze off on the couch in the afternoon.

Just as the decorators left, Muke received a call from the butler. "Young Master, Mr. Bai Liu is coming up the stairs. Get ready to bring out the cake."

"Got it."

Muke shot a look at Mu Sicheng, who immediately grabbed the cake and carefully wheeled it toward the door.

Tang Erda stood beside the entrance, his posture stiff, his expression grave, and a firecracker in hand. He looked less like he was celebrating Bai Liu's birthday and more like an undercover agent poised to assassinate a target.

Muke: "..."

He mouthed a silent command to Tang Erda: Smile.

Tang Erda forced a stiff, cold twitch at the corner of his lips.

Now he looked even more like an agent feigning amusement to cover up murderous intent.

Muke gave up just as the door lock turned.

Bang! Bang!

"Bai Liu, happy 25th birthday!"

Bai Liu stood at the entrance of what was now an entirely different rental house. Though he had already pieced together most of the situation, he still raised an eyebrow and smiled.

"Did I walk into the wrong apartment?"

The circus group partied until midnight. A drunken Mu Sicheng clung to Bai Liu's back, howling about what a legendary night it had been.

Muke, somehow still sober, called taxis one by one to get everyone home.

Du Sanying, also completely wasted, ran laps around the house, mimicking the beeping sound of a go-kart. Muke, with the help of the butler, managed to wrangle him into a furnished room on the lower floor to prevent him from drunkenly running out and causing trouble elsewhere.

Then, on his way back upstairs, the butler tripped, broke his foot, and had to be rushed to the hospital in tears.

Muke: "..."

He had completely forgotten that Du Sanying's luck affected everyone.

By the time Muke finally left, Bai Liu had already called for the Mu family's driver to come pick him up.

Drunk and emotional, Muke sat in the car, his eyes shining with a thin layer of tears. He looked up at Bai Liu, reached out for his shoulder, and choked out through his tears,

"We won't lose again."

"We'll never let you lose again."

Bai Liu gently placed a hand on Muke's shoulder, his voice steady and calm. "Me too."

—I won't let you lose again.

By the time Bai Liu finished tidying up his room, it was nearly 1 AM. He opened the fridge to store the leftovers, only to find it already packed full.

Bai Liu: "..."

He understood that they meant well, but their grasp on basic household logistics was… lacking.

With no other choice, he began reorganizing the fridge, removing unnecessary items to make space. But when he reached the freezer, his hands suddenly stilled.

To stock the freezer, Muke had the butler buy an assortment of ice creams—most of them expensive brands, each tub costing upwards of ten, even dozens of dollars. Yet among them, there was a single, cheap Lovato.

Strawberry-flavored.

Bai Liu slowly picked up the familiar ice cream, his thoughts drifting back to that afternoon.

The afternoon he had waited so long for Spades to show up—only for Spades to never come.

Outside the window, the streetlamp flickered twice.

As if drawn by an invisible thread, Bai Liu instinctively turned his gaze toward the dimly lit street below.

Spades was standing there.

Bai Liu froze at the window.

—It was like a spell transcending time and space. Seven years later, Bai Liu once again held a strawberry-flavored Lovato in his hand.

And the person he had waited for, the one who never appeared back then—

—Had finally arrived.

Chapter End Notes

Awwwwwww!!!!!!

The Challenge

Bai Liu stared at Spades through the window for a moment. Just as he was about to turn around and go downstairs to fetch him, he saw Spades scale the streetlamp in two or three swift movements. With a powerful leap, he launched himself from the pole, braced a foot against the wall, and caught hold of the security bars outside Bai Liu's window, lifting himself up effortlessly. He landed right in front of Bai Liu, staring straight at him.

Bai Liu: "……"

His gaze flickered to the streetlamp, now bent from Spades' impact. His eyes lingered on it for a beat.

…By all logic, when players return to reality, their in-game physical stats shouldn't carry over. They're supposed to revert to normal human standards.

And yet, Spades' strength was still so—

Unreasonable.

Was this after being nerfed?

For the first time, Bai Liu felt a genuine sense of unease under Spades' direct, aggressive gaze. He parted his lips to say, "Go down, I'll come get you," but before the words left his mouth, Spades had already snapped through the security bars Muke had installed just this afternoon. Without hesitation, he slipped between them, pushed open the locked window (yes, another lock broken), and climbed in. The moment he had one foot inside, he lunged forward and wrapped Bai Liu in a crushing embrace.

The sheer force knocked Bai Liu back several steps until they both tumbled onto the couch together.

Bai Liu, still a little lightheaded from the drinks earlier, felt the world spin as Spades pressed against him, leaving him momentarily breathless.

"Get up first." Bai Liu attempted to push Spades off, only to feel the other bury his head in the crook of his neck, nuzzling against his skin. Bai Liu's eyelids twitched, and his tone turned sharp. "No kissing."

Spades' movements paused. Then, he slowly rubbed downward.

Bai Liu's temples throbbed violently. He inhaled deeply. "No biting either."

"But I missed you." Spades' grip tightened. His legs pinned Bai Liu in place, making it impossible for him to move. "I can come to you, so why can't I kiss you?"

Bai Liu: "……"

Who the hell taught Spades that human social etiquette involved breaking into someone's home and kissing them?

"Get up first," Bai Liu ordered, his voice turning cold. When that didn't work and Spades remained firmly latched onto him, Bai Liu paused, adjusted his approach, and said, "If you get up, I'll reward you."

Spades sat up immediately, staring at Bai Liu expectantly.

Bai Liu: "……"

Lowering his gaze, Bai Liu knelt up and pressed a featherlight kiss to Spades' eyelid.

"Okay." Bai Liu leaned back against the couch. When Spades instinctively tried to move closer again, Bai Liu pressed a hand to his chest to stop him. Then, for some reason, he gave a soft, almost amused smile. "Why do you want to kiss me?"

Spades looked at him seriously. "I passed. That means I can kiss you now."

—Last time Bai Liu had said, "You passed," before kissing him. So, in Spades' mind, the logic had evolved: as long as he passed, he could keep kissing Bai Liu.

Bai Liu sighed, the corners of his lips quirking up slightly. "It's not that passing qualifies you to kiss me."

He released his hold on Spades, tucking his legs up onto the couch. Resting his chin on his knees, his dark eyes—slightly hazy from alcohol—held an emotion Spades couldn't quite decipher. His voice was soft, but the warmth in it was undeniable.

"It's because I like you, so I allow you to kiss me."

Spades froze. Then, after a beat, he asked, "Like? What is that?"

Bai Liu's gaze dropped as he explained in an even tone, "'Like' is an emotion without cost-effectiveness. Usually, it happens between people and is accompanied by a rush of dopamine and hormones, making them temporarily lose their rationality—forget how to weigh benefits and losses."

"All in all, not a good thing."

Spades immediately responded, "Then you're not allowed to like me."

A pause. Then, with an expressionless face, he added, "And you're not allowed to like anyone else either."

Bai Liu was silent for a moment. Then, with the smallest hint of a smirk, he said, "I don't do things that aren't profitable. So if I like you, it must be worth it."

Spades asked, "So what do you want me to do?"

Bai Liu slowly lifted his eyes to look at Spades before suddenly smiling. "I was hoping you could help me eat my soon-to-expire Cutie Pie."

Spades, slowly: "?"

Bai Liu stood up, picked up the Cutie Pie, and handed it to him. "This one."

It seemed that Muke's housekeeper had been in a hurry while stocking Bai Liu's freezer, tossing in a Kourtney after buying all the expensive ice creams nearby. Unfortunately, it was about to expire.

Bai Liu had long accepted his luck—he always ended up buying nearly expired treats—so he wasn't surprised to find it was only a day away from going bad.

Spades took the Cutie Pie from Bai Liu's hand, looked at him seriously, and asked, "As long as I eat your expired Cuties every time, you'll always like me, right?"

Bai Liu met Spades' gaze, silent for a long, long time, before replying, "Every time, yes."

Spades' eyes snapped open, and he immediately went to bite down—only for Bai Liu to calmly reach out and stop him by pressing against his teeth. “You haven’t taken off the wrapper yet.”

Eventually, with Bai Liu’s assistance, Spades devoured the expiring Kauai in two or three swift, vicious bites, with all the enthusiasm of a Kauai killer.

Somehow, it got all over himself—and Bai Liu.

Before heading to shower, Bai Liu took a moment to give Spades a crash course in basic household safety. This included: do not touch electrical sockets, do not eat things with hard textures (like coffee tables), and—just in case—do not attempt to chew on anything that might actually hurt him.

After all, Bai Liu had a responsibility to take care of his lizard.

Then, Bai Liu prepared to call Lu Yizhan to ask about Spades’ situation in reality. But before he could dial, he turned around—only to find that, in the time it took for him to whip back around, Spades had already gnawed off all four corners of the coffee table out of sheer curiosity.

Not to mention, he had done it in a strangely precise and artistic manner.

With a blank expression, Bai Liu pried the chewed-up corners out of Spades’ mouth. Then, deciding he really needed that shower, he made the call.

The moment the line connected, Bai Liu stated, “I have Spades.”

Lu Yizhan sounded confused and alarmed. “……? How many points do I have to pay as ransom before you let him back?”

Bai Liu: “……”

Lu Yizhan quickly backtracked. “Just kidding! I already know where you are with Spades.”

“He’s in a bit of a strange state,” Bai Liu said, pausing. “His physical condition in reality seems to be the same as it is in the game.”

“Yeah,” Lu Yizhan replied, unsurprised. “Spades is a monster. In reality or in the game, he’s basically a living stat panel.”

“This guy has always lacked a sense of restraint. We didn’t dare release him into reality before, afraid he’d get out of control and flip the sky upside down. During testing, his grip strength alone measured over a ton. He doesn't regulate his strength—he could easily crush someone's wrist by accident. But now that he listens to you, I figured it was safe enough to let him in."

Lu Yizhan sighed. "Spades' eye condition has stabilized for now. So… is he well-behaved now that he's with you?"

Bai Liu lifted the phone and slowly glanced at Spades, who was currently lying on the floor, sniffing at the remnants of the Cutie Pie he had dropped. Bai Liu quickly covered the receiver.

"Spades," he warned calmly, "no licking the ground. And if you lick the ground, you are not allowed to lick me."

Spades let out an "oh" and then asked, "But there's still a lot of Cutie left on the floor."

"Forget about it," Bai Liu said coldly. "It has been slaughtered once and for all and will never come back to life."

(At some point, Bai Liu had explained to Spades that expired Cuties were bad for him. Somehow, Spades had interpreted this as Cuties being some kind of monster, leading him to begin a full-scale hunt for them throughout the house, hellbent on eradicating the entire species.)

Bai Liu uncovered the receiver.

On the other end, Lu Yizhan sounded confused. "Why did you suddenly go silent?"

"Bad signal," Bai Liu replied smoothly. "What were you saying?"

"I was asking if Spades is behaving himself."

Bai Liu, indifferent: "It's… okay."

Lu Yizhan let out a relieved sigh. "That's good. He doesn't have much common sense, so I was worried he'd get into trouble."

"I'm going to take a shower now."

"Alright—wait, no!" Lu Yizhan suddenly shouted in panic. "I still have something important to tell you!"

Bai Liu paused. "What is it?"

Lu Yizhan hesitated, stammering, “Ah, this… this is…”

Bai Liu cut in, tone cold. “If you don’t spit it out, I’m hanging up.”

Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, bracing himself. Then he shut his eyes and blurted out, “—It’s about you and Spades!!!”

Bai Liu fell silent for two long seconds. “…What are you trying to say?”

Lu Yizhan spoke at a breakneck pace, clearly flustered. “It’s just—listen—you have a normal human physique in real life. You’re not operating on a game panel. But Spades is. He’s still at his inhuman game-level stats in reality because, well, he’s a monster.”

“…Okay?”

“He’s—uh—he’s a mermaid-type creature. The strongest parts of his body are his waist and legs.” Lu Yizhan’s voice dropped to an embarrassed mutter. “So, if you two ever—uh—do anything, just… make sure he’s careful. Or he could actually break your bones.”

Bai Liu: “……”

Lu Yizhan sighed, utterly mortified. “Also… I made a mistake. When Spades was younger, he didn’t understand human biology. He kept thinking he was a lizard. So I, uh, gave him a lizard-based sex-ed lesson.”

“…Excuse me?” Bai Liu’s voice was dangerously level.

“I know, I know! I was lazy, and I was wrong!” Lu Yizhan wailed. “But, um, the problem is that the lizard mating process is kind of… barbaric.”

Bai Liu’s grip on the phone tightened.

Lu Yizhan hesitated before forcing himself to continue. “So, in the wild, male lizards bite their mates’ necks, wrap their tails around their legs to pin them down, and, uh… yeah.”

Lu Yizhan groaned. “Just… maybe don’t let it happen in reality.”

Bai Liu abruptly hung up, his expression still calm—

—but his breathing had become just slightly uneven.

We can't do it in reality, then. Bai Liu had been rational and calm—so calm—when he made his decision.

To steady himself, he opted for a cold shower, instructing Spades to find a large pajama top to change into while he washed. His clothes were dirty, and Bai Liu had already tossed them into the washing machine.

Spades obediently changed.

Unfortunately for Bai Liu, the pajamas he thought would fit—clothes that were oversized on him—were still too small for Spades.

The fabric stretched awkwardly over Spades' frame, his ankles and navel exposed. Even with his lack of common sense, Spades knew it didn't fit. So he took it off. (And, in the process, ripped it apart.)

With nothing else to wear, Spades searched for another option. He tried on several of Bai Liu's shirts—none of them fit. One by one, they died tragic deaths, their seams giving way beneath the strain of Spades' shoulders and back.

Then, finally, Spades found something: a large doll costume wrapped in a storage bag.

The moment he laid eyes on it, something shifted. His black irises turned silvery-blue.

He put it on. It fit perfectly.

It wasn't supposed to be clothing—it was a mascot costume, designed to be worn over regular clothes—but on Spades, it looked just like pajamas.

The moment the fabric touched his skin, an unconscious instinct took hold. His body moved before his mind caught up, drawn toward the bathroom where Bai Liu was showering.

—He vaguely remembered this feeling. He had to show Bai Liu. Bai Liu would be happy if he saw.

Despite Bai Liu's repeated warnings not to enter while he was in the shower, Spades pushed open the door.

Bai Liu, his lips pale from the cold water, had only just shaken off a strange sense of unease when he turned and saw Spades standing there—doll suit on, silver-blue eyes staring at him.

His expression went cold. “I thought I told you not to come in—”

The words died in his throat.

Spades, completely unbothered, looked at him and said, “I like you, Bai Liu.”

Bai Liu exhaled sharply, reached out, and cupped Spades’ face before pulling him into the bathroom. He pushed Spades against the door, closed his eyes, and kissed him.

Spades shuddered under the cold water, but his hold on Bai Liu was possessive, overwhelming. His arms wrapped around him tightly, his head lowering, teeth scraping against the back of Bai Liu’s neck before biting down—not too hard, but firm enough to make Bai Liu inhale sharply.

A gasp. Two hands pressing against the frosted glass, leaving smudged prints as Spades’ grip refused to loosen.

The water was freezing. Spades should have been cold too.

But the heat against Bai Liu’s back told him otherwise.

So, lizards—creatures known for their cold blood—could heat up like this when they got intense?

Bai Liu bit his lip, his breath coming fast. His mind, usually so sharp, had blurred into a haze.

And as the bite at his neck pulsed with a dull ache, Bai Liu lifted his head slightly, eyes lazy, gaze unfocused.

His thoughts drifted to the showerhead still pouring water over them.

Love—this thing.

Really terrible value for money.

Feelings this out of control—so absurdly reckless—had no return on investment at all.

The Challenge

After an utterly chaotic night, Bai Liu's alarm clock went off at 7 a.m. sharp.

A deep, indescribable soreness weighed on his body, as if he had been thrown to the ground and trampled all night. His back ached, his joints protested with every slight movement, and a dull, numbing pain spread through his limbs. The unhealed wound on the back of his neck pulsed faintly.

…It shouldn't have been like this.

At the start of last night, Bai Liu had maintained control, issuing Spades a single command at a time, dictating every move with calculated precision. But the moment Spades stripped off his shirt and loosely tied it around his waist—when Bai Liu, breathless and collected, was lifted by Spades and ordered him to enter—

The second half spiraled completely out of control.

When Bai Liu had finally exhausted every ounce of strength and stomped down on Spades' waist in an attempt to push him away, Spades simply pressed him against the cool mirror of the bathroom, lowering his head to whisper hoarsely in his ear:

"I like you, Bai Liu."

At that moment, Bai Liu's mind went blank, severing all connection to reality.

When he woke again, his eyelids felt heavy and crumpled with exhaustion. He sluggishly reached toward the bedside table, aiming for his phone to silence the alarm, only for a large hand to press against his back—beating him to it. A second later, the alarm clock was sent flying, crashing to the ground. Then, that same arm tugged Bai Liu into a firm embrace.

Spades, still half-asleep, mumbled in a groggy, dazed voice, "…Sleep more."

Bai Liu, fully engulfed in Spades' arms, let his eyes drift over to the bedside table, where his phone now lay face-down, its screen shattered beyond repair.

Great. Another phone destroyed.

He made two weak attempts to sit up, but with an 85kg lizard sprawled on top of him and his limbs still drained of strength, even moving his fingers proved difficult. After another futile push, Bai Liu finally relented, speaking in a muffled voice against Spades' chest:

"Let go. I need to get up."

Spades' eyelids twitched, but he made no move to release him. Instead, he wordlessly tightened his legs around Bai Liu, locking him in place.

Bai Liu, immediately sensing something was off: "…"

Without hesitation, he shoved Spades' face away and firmly rejected, "No."

If they did it again, he was genuinely going to die.

At last, Spades cracked his eyes open, revealing dark irises, half-lidded and hazy—not as sharp and detached as before, but carrying a strange depth of emotion. Somewhere between human and monster.

From Bai Liu's angle, the morning light streaming through the window cast Spades' features in an almost gentle glow, the edges of his eyes reflecting a faint silvery-blue halo.

Spades lowered his gaze, moving instinctively. His hand traced up Bai Liu's spine, pulling him closer before leaning in to press a soft kiss against his lips, exhaling warmth against his skin.

"Why not?" Spades' voice was thick with sleep, rough yet subdued—not hoarse from overuse like Bai Liu's, but carrying a low, unfamiliar tenderness. "I like you so much."

—From an ignorant lizard to a dangerously grown man overnight.

Bai Liu's lashes trembled as he caught Spades' wandering hand just before it crossed into dangerous territory. His grip was firm, unwavering.

"If I say no, then no."

Spades exhaled through his nose, and then—"Then don't go."

Now clearly understanding the distinction between leaving and staying, Spades rolled over, pressing Bai Liu further into the bed. He reached up, brushing wet strands of hair from Bai Liu's forehead before resting his own against it, their noses nearly touching. His dark eyes bore into Bai Liu's, unblinking.

"Can I kiss you?"

Bai Liu's chest rose and fell slightly, his breathing a touch uneven. But his expression remained as composed as ever.

"A kiss is fine."

At those words, Spades wasted no time. He leaned down, scooped Bai Liu up, and pressed him against the wall, deepening the kiss with unwavering intensity.

As their lips met, a warning bell went off in Bai Liu's mind. This is bad.

The way Spades kissed him—pressing so close, lips insistent, hands steady as they framed Bai Liu's face—was making his thoughts slip dangerously out of focus. Bai Liu started to push him away, intending to call for a stop.

But Spades, still catching his breath, buried his head in Bai Liu's shoulder, his voice coming in a quiet, urgent whisper against Bai Liu's ear:

"I'm not going in."

"Just let me kiss you a little longer."

"I like you so much, Bai Liu."

.....

Finally, Bai Liu got into the game.

By the time he emerged again, in reality, it was almost ten o'clock.

As soon as Bai Liu stepped out, he kicked away the lizard still clinging to him. With the Little Witch's antidote, he had mostly recovered, but when he first entered the game, the system had informed him that he only had sixty-seven life points left.

The lizard, which had cost him thirty-three life points, trailed after him into the bathroom. Bai Liu turned his head, and it finally stopped.

The mirror in the washroom was shattered.

Spades followed Bai Liu's line of sight. He seemed to pick up on Bai Liu's unspoken question and answered naturally, "Last night, when I penetrated you here, I pushed too hard, and your back shattered the mirror—"

"All right." Bai Liu interrupted him calmly. "Shut up."

His gaze swept across the bathroom, and his brow lifted slightly when he spotted two tiles on the toilet, visibly cracked from a punch.

Spades, dutifully and without hesitation, explained, "I had so much fun doing it here yesterday that I wanted to hit something to let off steam. So I did."

He tilted his head. "You saw it too. Don't you remember?"

Bai Liu: "……"

Right. He had been high for the second half of last night. Too lost in the moment to remember.

The bathroom, which Muke had just renovated yesterday, now looked like a battlefield after a single night.

Suppressing the dull ache building in his temples, Bai Liu maintained his composure, washing his face and brushing his teeth while leaving Spades to do the same.

The two men stood before the fragmented mirror—one coldly indifferent, the other expressionlessly brushing his teeth with such efficiency that it almost looked like he was taking out some deep-seated resentment on the broken glass.

After finishing up, Bai Liu turned to change out of his pajamas, intending to find clothes for both himself and Spades—only to encounter a new problem.

First, he had nothing in his wardrobe that Spades could fit into.

Second, Bai Liu wasn't the kind of person who enjoyed shopping for clothes. His wardrobe mostly consisted of a few sets of white shirts and blazers. The only new addition was a formal suit gifted by Sister Dian and Lu Yizhan just yesterday.

Meanwhile, Spades had already worn through two of his outfits. The remaining three or four sets weren't unwearable, but they were old—some had loose threads, missing buttons, or just didn't look quite right anymore.

Bai Liu's gaze drifted to Spades, who was currently folding a quilt with clumsy, naked dedication. Then to the smashed phone on the bedside table. Back to the nearly empty wardrobe.

A thought, one that had never crossed his mind when he lived alone, surfaced.

Shopping.

This room feels a little too small for two people.

A Milk Tea Shop in a Commercial Center
"What did you just say?!" Mu Sicheng nearly spat out his soda in Muke's face. "You're telling me Bai Liu called you? Bai Liu—the same Bai Liu who wouldn't even change his underwear unless it completely fell apart—just asked you for recommendations on clothes and daily necessities?"

Muke disdainfully sidestepped the near soda spray and then heard Mu Sicheng continue incredulously, "This is Bai Liu we're talking about! Bai Liu, who once said he wouldn't replace his shoelaces unless they snapped in half!"

"That's just an exaggeration," Muke said flatly.

Mu Sicheng, still stunned, propped his chin on his palm. "This is the same stingy Bai Liu who only spent two dollars and thirty-one cents on our dog tags. And now he's actually letting you recommend clothes?"

"And you suggested one of the most expensive shopping districts in the city—and he agreed?"

Mu Sicheng, still baffled, gestured around at their surroundings—the interior of one of the priciest commercial centers in town. "Has he been possessed or something?"

Muke shook his head with mild disapproval. "Honestly, he should have been wearing clothes of this quality all along. His old ones were never that great."

Mu Sicheng chewed on his straw, nodding in agreement. "Yeah, rag quality. It's a miracle they haven't disintegrated after everything he's been through in the game. I've told him to change them before, but he refused, saying it wasn't cost-effective."

Sitting next to them, Tang Erda—who had no shopping expertise and whose own clothes had been picked out by Bai Liu—frowned in thought. "Bai Liu's clothes… are that bad?"

Muke and Mu Sicheng turned to him in perfect unison.

"Very bad," they answered together.

Tang Erda, wearing the expensive clothes Bai Liu had chosen for him, suddenly felt guilty. "I… I'll help buy him some new ones next time."

"No need," Muke interjected, his expression momentarily unreadable before he gave a mild smile. "I have memberships at all the custom clothiers. It's easier if I handle it."

Mu Sicheng sneered. "You always pay, Muke. Not fair. This time, it's on me—I've been waiting forever to make Bai Liu try something on."

Tang Erda, watching the sudden shift in atmosphere: "???"

What the hell? Why did this just turn into some kind of territorial dispute?

Meanwhile, Liu Jiayi, sipping her milk tea, swung her legs idly and glanced away, a knowing look in her eyes.

…Those two had long been dissatisfied with Bai Liu's wardrobe. They'd been scheming to dress him up for ages. There was no way they'd let Tang Erda, a straight man, beat them to it.

Just then, Liu Jiayi's gaze sharpened.

"Bai Liu's here." She spotted him in the crowd, glancing at his watch as he approached. But then her eyes narrowed further. "Wait… someone's with him…"

Both Mu Sicheng and Muke's faces darkened instantly.

Tang Erda, cautious, stated the obvious. "It's Spades."

The milk tea shop door swung open. Bai Liu stepped inside, his expression calm. Without preamble, he introduced the man beside him:

“Spades. My boyfriend.”

His gaze flicked between them. “Where’s the best shop for him to pick out clothes?”

The Challenge

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Muke brushed past Spades, his polite smile barely masking his unease. “Not exactly the best place to take Spades’ on a shopping spree.”

“What kind of clothes are you even buying here? These prices are ridiculous,” Mu Sicheng scoffed openly. “Just go to the wholesale market and grab a couple of burlap sacks—same thing.”

Bai Liu looked up. “I want to buy something. Any recommendations?”

Mu Sicheng opened his mouth to retort, but quickly backtracked. “Uh… of course! Expensive clothes are always better!”

Muke’s smile widened. “I do have some suggestions. There are bespoke shops nearby that might suit you. Any particular style? Shirts, suits, maybe?”

Bai Liu thought for a moment before shrugging. “I need something durable, easy to move in, and resistant to wear and tear. I’m not too picky about style, so I’ll leave it to you two.”

Mu Sicheng’s hand shot up. “Me first! I know just the place.”

Bai Liu nodded. “Fine, let’s start with your suggestion.”

Muke, a step behind, pursed his lips, but Mu Sicheng gave him a triumphant look and took Bai Liu by the shoulders. “Go, go, go, go, go __”

Mu Sicheng froze mid-step, sensing something was off. Glancing back, he saw that Spades had already claimed Bai Liu’s shoulder—and, more surprisingly, Bai Liu was holding Spades’ hand.

Spades met Mu Sicheng’s gaze with his usual blank expression. “What’s trending?”

Mu Sicheng yanked his hand back, shaking out his fingers, still tingling from Spades’ grip. He clicked his tongue in irritation. “Like you’d know! You don’t have a clue about fashion!”

Ironically, Spades really didn’t—but somehow, he pulled it off effortlessly.

Mu Sicheng sat gloomily on the sofa, legs shaking as he watched Spades step out in a black and red tracksuit. A four or five-centimeter-wide athletic headband rested across his forehead, and loose five-part track pants revealed his strong, toned calves.

Damn lizard was too tall for his own good—nearly 6"3. He took two casual strides, and it was like watching a professional athlete in motion. His short hair had been pulled back, revealing his sharply defined features. Yet, with that overly refined face and complete lack of expression, every glance he threw carried an oppressive aura—like he was ready to attack at any moment.

Mu Sicheng locked eyes with Spades for thirty seconds before he was the first to look away, gritting his teeth in frustration. He slammed his fist against the sofa in defeat.

Damn it. Lost again.

Same tracksuit, yet Spades looked effortlessly cool while Mu Sicheng looked like a damn jumping monkey.

“This outfit…” Bai Liu’s hesitant voice drifted from the fitting room. He lifted the curtain with one hand, glancing at the group. “Who picked this out for me?”

Everyone’s gazes snapped to him—and then collectively froze.

Mu Sicheng shot to his feet, punching the air in triumph. “Holy shit! I told you it’d be perfect!”

Bai Liu was clad in a form-fitting red, black, and gold racing suit, accentuated by a cropped jacket with padded shoulders.

The suit hugged his waist seamlessly, the fabric stretching smoothly over his legs. He stood with impeccable posture, the curtain held open with casual ease. His matching helmet rested under his right arm, while his half-length hair, slightly tousled from changing, framed his face.

He blinked at their staring and spoke in a flat tone. “Doesn’t seem to suit me.”

“It absolutely does!!!” Mu Sicheng objected vehemently.

Seeing Bai Liu remain unmoved, Mu Sicheng switched tactics. “Look, you’re always borrowing my motorbike. Isn’t it only logical for you to have a racing suit?”

“This even comes with a helmet—it’ll keep you safer when you ride! Plus, it’s exactly what you asked for: durable, athletic, and tough.”

Mu Sicheng gestured emphatically from Bai Liu’s head to his toes. “And it looks cool as hell!”

“But it’s not practical for everyday wear,” Bai Liu countered calmly. “What am I supposed to do with this? Race? I don’t race.”

Mu Sicheng had no comeback for that.

But as Bai Liu turned to step back into the fitting room, Mu Sicheng quickly followed, pressing his case. “I race! You can wear it while cheering me on!”

He was getting desperate now—this was his chance to get Bai Liu to play one of his other favorite games with him. After all, he didn’t have many friends to hang out with in real life.

Bai Liu shot him an unreadable glance. “And what would that make me? A racing girl?”

Mu Sicheng eyed Bai Liu’s half-length hair, then his waist, rubbing his chin in mock contemplation. “You could probably pull it off… Stuff in some fake boobs, give me a boost… Honestly, quite a few guys on our team would probably wanna chase you—”

Before he could finish, Bai Liu yanked the curtain shut in his face.

Silence.

Then, after a moment, Bai Liu’s voice came through the fabric. “Let Spades in.”

Mu Sicheng flinched. “Why?”

“To help me with the zipper.” Bai Liu’s voice remained unbothered. “I can’t reach it.”

Mu Sicheng: “……”

Expression dark, he trudged over to Spades. “Hey. Bai Liu wants you.”

Spades glanced at him, and his tone suddenly turned ice-cold. “Bai Liu won’t be cheering for you in this outfit.”

“And no one on your team is allowed to chase him.”

Mu Sicheng bristled. “What the hell does that have to do with you?”

Spades peeled off his headband, turning to face him. His silvery-blue irises gleamed under the store lights, and he blinked slowly.

Calmly, he said, “Bai Liu and I are playing a game called ‘love.’”

“And in this game, we can only have each other.”

"If they break the rules of Bai Liu and my game, I will kill them, turn them into monsters, and bring Bai Liu back into the game to play with me alone."

Spades finished speaking and brushed past Mu Sicheng's shoulder with a deliberate, almost provocative force. Mu Sicheng flinched slightly from the impact, but Spades' face remained impassive.

A shiver ran down Mu Sicheng’s spine. His scalp prickled, and he took a moment to grimace and rub his shoulder, still sore from the hit. Cold sweat dampened his back—a delayed reaction to the confrontation.

Spades was serious.

That monster still hadn't developed a proper sense of social norms. He felt nothing for ordinary people in this world.

And he really would kill someone for Bai Liu.

"Fuck."

Mu Sicheng stared at Spades' retreating figure as he lifted the curtain and stepped into Bai Liu's fitting room, head slightly bowed. A chill crept up Mu Sicheng’s spine.

There was no telling what this monster would do if Bai Liu ever stopped wanting him.

Spades entered the fitting room. Before Bai Liu could say anything, Spades wrapped his arms around him from behind and, in a rare moment of vulnerability, mumbled in a lowered tone, "Don’t encourage him."

Bai Liu quickly pieced together what Spades had overheard. Lowering his gaze, he let out a soft laugh and patted Spades' head, which was buried against his shoulder. "Mu Sicheng is just looking for someone to play with."

"How about we go watch him race?"

Spades hesitated for a moment. "Wearing this?"

"Do you think it looks good?" Bai Liu asked.

"It looks good." Spades' voice was cold as ever. "But if you go out in it, you'll be chased."

Bai Liu hummed in agreement. "I don't really like this outfit either. Not practical for daily wear—bad cost-performance ratio. I won't buy it—"

"Buy it." Spades interrupted abruptly.

Bai Liu: "....."

A strange sense of foreboding crept up on him.

Spades stared at him intently. "It looks good. Don't wear it out. Buy it."

Bai Liu: "....."

This was an extremely inefficient use of funds for a racing suit.

Yet in the end, it was purchased.

When Mu Sicheng reached the checkout counter, he noticed Bai Liu about to swipe his card. His eyes widened at the sight of two dozen racing suits stacked on the table.

He pointed at them, stunned. "Did Bai Liu buy all of these?"

"No." The receptionist checked the bill and replied respectfully, "The total was charged to a Mr. Lu Yizhan's card."

Mu Sicheng was full of questions. "Lu Yizhan paid for this?"

Meanwhile, at the other end of the store, Spades was reaching for yet another racing suit—a blue and white uniform-style one—when Bai Liu's eyes twitched, and he quickly stopped him. "No. No more. I already bought enough clothes for myself."

"Okay." Spades regretfully put it down. Then, almost immediately, his eyes shifted to another item. "There are other clothes."

Bai Liu sighed, expertly blocking Spades' next impulse buy. "I've already bought enough. There are other stores to visit. Do you only want me in sportswear?"

Pausing, Bai Liu's gaze dropped to the card in Spades' hand. "Did Lu Yizhan give you that card?"

"Yeah." Spades answered honestly. "He said I could always use the money when I'm outside. He told me to just cash in my own points if I needed more."

Bai Liu stroked his chin thoughtfully. Spades didn't have an ID, so the card had to be under Lu Yizhan's name. "How many points did you redeem?"

"One point."

Bai Liu extended his hand. "Give me your card. I need to check your balance."

Across town, Lu Yizhan was buried in paperwork when his phone buzzed with a new text message.

[XX Bank: Hello, your account (ending in XXXX) has been charged ¥78,011.30 at 11:17 on September 22. Your remaining balance is ¥679,202……]

Lu Yizhan stared at the long string of zeros in his balance.

?????

Didn't he specifically tell Spades to only spend what was necessary and not to redeem too many points?!

There was no limit on the amount Spades could exchange, no waiting period—and he was last year's champion, the league's most popular player for two consecutive years, with the largest gambling pool in the game.

If Spades started cashing in all his points and spending them freely, he could single-handedly trigger a financial crisis.

For a moment, Lu Yizhan simply gripped his phone and stared at it in stunned horror, feeling a wave of dizziness wash over him.

Chapter End Notes

How many points did he cash out!??????

The Challenge

After quickly calling Liao Ke to handle the account, Lu Yizhan was on the verge of collapse when he received a call from Bai Liu.

As soon as the call connected, Bai Liu said, "Wipe out the account you set up for Spades—there's too much money in it, and something's bound to happen."

"I've asked Liao Ke to take care of it," Lu Yizhan replied, rubbing his face. He laughed bitterly, "I've got the money in your account now. Keep an eye on it and don't let him cash it out again—it should be enough to last him a thousand years."

"What are you guys buying, and why is he suddenly cashing out so much?"

Bai Liu paused before responding, "Clothes."

"..." Lu Yizhan was speechless. "What kind of clothes could cost so much?"

"But you've worn out those clothes, it's time to replace them. Buying new ones is a good idea," Bai Liu said casually. "Keep an eye on Spades. I'm off to work."

"Happy birthday, Bai Liu," Lu Yizhan added, his tone light, before hanging up.

Bai Liu turned around and slightly opened his hands for the tailor to begin fitting him. He placed the phone he had just used on the glass table beside him, then, with two fingers, took a bank card from the shirt and trousers he had just removed. He handed it to Spades, who was waiting next to him, his eyes raised. "From now on, you can use my card for anything you want to buy. Not someone else's."

Spades took the card with a soft "oh."

Liu Jiayi, who had been nearby, let out a subtle tsk. Bai Liu is really playing the role of the bully here.

Those who didn't know might think they were swiping his money.

The shirt shop was one Muke had recommended. He had noticed that Bai Liu had been wearing shirts for a while and thought this shop had excellent fabric and craftsmanship.

The seamstress, a highly skilled professional, was now adjusting her glasses and positioning her arms to measure Bai Liu's bust and shoulder width.

After a few words, Muke translated for the tailor: "Shoulder width, 44 cm; bust, 88 cm. Everything looks normal and standard."

The seamstress then slid a soft measuring tape around Bai Liu's waist, patted him gently on the back, and gestured for him to take a deep breath. Bai Liu obediently complied.

The seamstress paused for a moment after the measurement, her expression slightly surprised.

"You're quite skinny," Muke remarked, his tone suddenly serious. "Your waist is only 68 cm—just under two feet."

The seamstress nodded and added, "But it looks good in clothes like this."

"No," Muke quickly disagreed, "You can't be this skinny, even if the clothes look good on you."

The seamstress shrugged helplessly and went off to pick out a dress for Bai Liu. As she did, Bai Liu lowered his hand and pointed at Spades. "Measure him, too."

Muke replied calmly, "He's too big for his height. The shop doesn't have anything for him."

Bai Liu stared at Muke for a moment in silence, then said quietly, "There are other shops that suit him. I'll take you there later."

"Thank you," Bai Liu smiled and said politely.

"No need to thank me," Muke sighed.

A moment later, the seamstress returned with a full set of clothes. She had selected a satin folded collar shirt and a pair of high-waisted dark suit trousers, both made from the most comfortable fabric, as Muke had ordered.

Bai Liu took the clothes and changed into them. After a few moments, he lifted the curtain and paused before stepping out.

All eyes shifted toward him, and Mu Sicheng, who had been sipping his tea, choked and spat out a mouthful in surprise.

The top of Bai Liu's shirt was a deep V-neck, which extended all the way down to his waist and stomach, tucked neatly into the high-waisted suit trousers.

The shirt, carefully chosen by the tailor, featured a subtle satin ripple on either side of the collar. As Bai Liu walked, the fabric seemed to ripple like waves, revealing the faint scar of a reverse cross in the center of his chest.

The shirt was half tucked into the belt of his trousers, the rest hanging loosely. The semi-transparent hem swayed lazily as Bai Liu moved.

His hair had been roughly styled by the tailor into a slightly messy wet look, with only a few strands falling irregularly by his eyes. The tailor also gave him a pair of small round-rimmed glasses with gold rims. As Bai Liu adjusted his cuffs, he looked up, his eyes meeting theirs with a soft, questioning tone. "Doesn't this look good on me?"

Even Tang Erda couldn't help but take a step back in rigidity.

... This is giving off such a tacky vibe.

"This set is too..." Mu Sicheng walked up, comparing the current Bai Liu to the man before him. His brows were furrowed. "It's not bad, it's just... too..."

Liu Jiayi succinctly summed up the situation: "Playboy."

"I don't think it's an everyday look. It's a bit too revealing," Bai Liu said, casually lifting the curtain. "I'll go change again."

"Wait." Muke's voice interrupted.

"No need to change." Spades' voice followed firmly.

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow and asked, "What's wrong?"

Muke's eyes lit up, clearly excited. "What's revealing about it? Don't you think you look amazing in that? The whole world will go crazy for you when you walk out like this!"

Spades gazed at Bai Liu and said seriously, "Very nice. Buy it."

Bai Liu: "..."

It seemed like he was starting to understand Muke's taste.

Spades was reluctantly controlled by Bai Liu after trying on eight outfits, eventually leading him to the same shop where Tang Erda had previously gotten his clothes.

This time, it was a more conventional men's tailor—nothing too extravagant. Bai Liu bought four or five identical sets of white shirts and trousers, in a kind of replenishment mode. He was used to wearing them and didn't feel the need for anything else.

At the tailor's suggestion, Bai Liu also picked up two suits that were more formal and practical.

However, Spades' fitting process was a bit more unusual. He had to stare at the tailor for what felt like forever during his first fitting, sweating under the scrutiny.

Muke stood by, eyes fixed on the tailor as he waited for Spades' measurements. Mu Sicheng, walking casually past the fitting area, exchanged a brief glance with Muke. Both men clenched their fists, holding their breath.

We can't let Spades win this one!

After all, despite his lean physique, Spades' chest certainly wasn't as big as theirs!

"Height: 190.6 cm," the tailor announced.

"Bust: 113 cm," she continued.

There was a brief flurry of measurements, followed by the usual exclamatory, "PERFECT!"

Muke: "....."

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Why does Spades have such a large chest? This doesn't make sense!

Mu Sicheng, still in disbelief, dragged a dazed Tang Erda to the curtain and, with a grin, said, "It's okay, you're still two centimeters taller than him."

"Our team didn't lose!"

Tang Erda: ????

Spades emerged from the fitting room and locked eyes with Mu Sicheng.

— Damn, we lost!

Spades had dressed in a black suit and a plain white shirt, the cuffs only peeking out by about three or four centimeters. The suit was well-fitted, but it could easily have been mistaken for something a security guard or insurance salesman would wear—nothing remarkable, except it was on Spades.

Yet, in his eyes, there was a stark emptiness. Unlike Tang Erda, whose fierceness suited the uniform, Spades' disconnection made the formal suit feel out of place. There was no adherence to the rules of proper attire in his gaze, only a pure sense of disorder and indifference.

In contrast, while Tang Erda looked like a person, Spades seemed like a monster in human skin. The wildness in him clashed with the formality of the suit, making him even more imposing.

Spades briefly glanced at Mu Sicheng before his eyes moved to Bai Liu, who was sitting on the sofa. Bai Liu put down the magazine he'd been flipping through and looked Spades over from head to toe, then smiled and said, "Nice."

Mu Sicheng was stunned as he saw Spades, who had looked out of place just moments ago, suddenly appear to fit into the suit. It was as if Bai Liu's casual compliment had made Spades drop the uncomfortable struggle with the clothes, allowing him to settle into the suit like it was meant for him.

In that moment, Spades seemed almost human—a man in a suit with a controlled, yet dangerous energy.

Spades walked toward Bai Liu, who instinctively opened his arms for a hug. "Don't you like the suit?" Bai Liu asked.

"It's not comfortable," Spades replied.

Bai Liu nodded in understanding. "So, should we try another one?"

Spades, who had rarely worn formal attire, was clearly uncomfortable —wearing formal clothes for the first time is difficult for anyone, let alone someone like Spades. But after a brief pause, he said, "No, this one looks good. Buy it."

Bai Liu smiled warmly. "Alright, we'll get it if you like it."

He then lowered his gaze to gently caress Spades' face, speaking softly, "But that's how the real world works. Beautiful things come with their own set of rules. If you want to enjoy them, you have to endure some discomfort."

"Beautiful things are delicate," Bai Liu said softly. "If we press too hard, they shatter."

Spades met his gaze, his face serious as he inquired, "Will I shatter you as well?"

Bai Liu gave him a reassuring smile. "Of course not."

He paused for a moment, then added with a slight smirk, "I'm not nice enough for that—I'm much worse."

The Challenge

Apart from shopping for clothes, Bai Liu had a long list of things to buy during his rare trip to the shops, and by the time he finished, it was almost 4 p.m.

The men were still in good shape, their spirits high as they carried their bags without a trace of fatigue. Eventually, Muke called a car to take them all back to Bai Liu's house.

"Anything else you want to buy?" Muke glanced sideways at Bai Liu. "Phones, daily necessities, clothes, shoes—we've got it all. What about a watch or some accessories?"

"No," Bai Liu declined calmly. "I already have a watch, and accessories just get in the way when I move or work."

Muke turned to look at Spades. "What about him? Do we need to get him a beauty treatment or something?"

At the mention of "beauty treatment," a chill ran down Tang Erda's spine. He instinctively took two steps back, but Muke caught the movement and, with a cool expression, grabbed him by the arm before he could escape. "You too. You're getting one later."

To Muke, Tang Erda and Spades were both men who had been in the game world far too long—rough around the edges and hopeless at taking care of themselves. Someone had to intervene.

Spades was at least tolerable. His body ran cold, like ice, and despite his complete lack of self-care, he was somehow always inexplicably clean—like he had some kind of self-cleaning function built into his physiology.

Tang Erda, on the other hand, was a different story. Although he kept himself neat in a purely functional way, his appearance was more about presenting a serious face than actual grooming. He simply didn't meet Muke's standards for "team image" and "visual traffic appeal."

"But Bai Liu and Mu Sicheng haven't had treatments either," Tang Erda protested, dragging them into it with a deadpan expression. "They should get one too!"

Muke gave them both a once-over and replied without hesitation, "They don't need it."

Tang Erda was stunned. “Why not?!”

“Because they actually take care of themselves,” Muke said flatly.

Though Bai Liu was always seen in a simple white shirt and suit trousers, he was never caught looking disheveled. Even on low-resolution screens, his grooming was impeccable—every strand of hair perfectly in place.

And Mu Sicheng? That man was practically obsessed with appearances. His wardrobe was probably larger than everyone else's combined. He never wore the same outfit or shoes twice when going out, and he always smelled like some high-end athletic body wash.

Then Spades, clueless about modern human indulgences, tilted his head and asked, “What is a beauty treatment?”

Bai Liu answered crisply, “A process humans use to enhance their appearance—usually to attract others, sometimes just for self-satisfaction. Given your current face and body... I don’t think you need one.”

Spades blinked in understanding. Then, with sudden determination, he said, “I’m going.”

“…” Bai Liu sighed. “Suit yourself.”

After three months away, they returned to this familiar place.

Tang Erda was practically dragged in by Mu Sicheng and Muke and pinned to the sofa. The moment the barber’s cloth was draped over him, he stiffened as if someone had sealed him in place. With his back straight and expression frozen, he sat unmoving, fully resigned to his fate.

Spades, however, was less cooperative. He tugged off his “cloak” when the barber wasn’t looking and turned to Bai Liu with a frown. “What is this?”

The barber began dry shampooing his hair, pouring liquid over his head and lathering it up. Spades, utterly confused, asked again, “What is this?”

When the hairdryer came out and began blowing, Spades reached up, pinched the barrel, and asked, “Is this attacking me?”

The barrel crumpled slightly under his casual grip. The barber stared in disbelief at the stainless steel mouth of the dryer, now visibly dented.

Muke rushed over, quickly pulling the barber to his feet with an apologetic smile. Pointing at Spades, he explained, “Sorry—he’s a bit... strong. And new to this. It’s the first time we’ve taken him out.”

“Any damages, I’ll cover them, no problem. Please just... keep going.”

The barber, still in a daze, nodded slowly. Then he turned to fetch a higher-quality hairdryer, stumbling slightly as he walked off, his face a mixture of shock and confusion.

When the barber returned, his hands were trembling as he resumed blow-drying Spades’ hair. The moment he noticed that Spades seemed ready to stir up trouble again, Bai Liu—who had been quietly flipping through a newspaper beside him—finally moved.

“Hurry up and finish the cut. Let’s go home,” Bai Liu said calmly.

Muke, sitting nearby, raised his hand and naturally poured a glass of water for Bai Liu, placing it gently on the small glass table beside him. Bai Liu murmured a quiet thank you in return.

Standing at the back of the room, the barber flinched. He cautiously glanced at the young man who had been silently reading the newspaper with his head down, and suddenly felt as though he had just identified the true authority among them.

At first, he had assumed the leader of the group was someone from the Mu family—perhaps because the young man had been so low-profile. Upon entering, he had simply nodded politely, taken a seat, and begun reading, without issuing a single order.

But when he spoke, that subtle air of command and effortless superiority was unmistakable. His presence naturally demanded control.

Even the way Mr. Mu poured him water—it was instinctive, like a respectful junior serving an elder.

People like Mr. Mu, from elite families, are always sharply aware of who’s important in any room. If this young man were truly someone of that caliber, how was it possible the barber had never heard of him in all his years in the business?

Who the hell was this guy?

Bai Liu picked up the glass Muke had poured and was about to take a sip when his gaze met the barber's in the mirror. Catching the man watching him, he smiled faintly. "Something wrong?"

"No, no, not at all!" The barber shook his head frantically, blow-drying Spades' hair with increasing care. His tone softened as he addressed Bai Liu. "Is this your first time here? I don't think I've seen you before."

Emboldened by Bai Liu's approachable manner, the barber ventured to keep the conversation going.

"I've been here once before," Bai Liu replied, smiling. He nodded toward Tang Erda, seated on the other side of the room. "I brought a colleague over there."

The barber followed his gesture and spotted Tang Erda—then stiffened in shock. "You were the one who brought him here last time?"

That visit had caused quite a stir in the shop. Tang Erda's appearance and charisma were so striking that even in their salon, which regularly worked with celebrity studios, he had stood out. They'd all joked that if he ever joined the entertainment industry, they'd line up to style him.

But three months had passed, and Tang Erda had yet to debut. The gossip had died down, and the junior stylist who'd been obsessed with him had pouted for weeks.

Now, while blow-drying Spades' hair, the barber couldn't help but steal glances at the group Bai Liu had brought.

Muke was known in certain circles for his looks, though he clearly wasn't destined for entertainment. But the others—these three men—each looked like future stars.

The man with deep blue eyes—what a presence. The kind of looks and build that radiated righteous fury, like a weapon forged into human form. Even as a straight man, the barber's knees felt weak just looking at him.

Then there was the younger guy with headphones, probably a college student. A sporty type with excellent taste, sharp features, and a strange, charming blend of awkward handsomeness and subtle danger.

Definitely the kind of guy who'd set hearts on fire from ages 18 to 32.

And then… the one he was styling now.

At first, he hadn't thought much of this one. Spades' hair had clearly gone untouched for months, unkempt and completely covering his face. His style was practically nonexistent.

But his build—broad shoulders, narrow waist, ideal proportions—was on another level. Possibly even better than the blue-eyed guy's. The only question was whether his face could match it.

Already, the barber had convinced himself: Bai Liu must be some kind of low-key giant in the entertainment industry. After all, top-tier beauties like this were rare—and no other industry gathered such a collection of eye-catching people.

And wasn't the Mu family rumored to be stepping into the entertainment world? Maybe this Bai Liu was their future collaborator.

The barber's tone grew more respectful. "Your artists are all incredibly good-looking. We'll definitely support them when they debut."

"I'm not from a media company," Bai Liu said evenly.

The barber paused, blinking. "Ah… may I ask what line of work you're in?"

Bai Liu smiled. "Just a laid-off worker."

"???" The barber was stunned.

Was this some kind of powerful man's joke?

Unable to stop himself, he blurted, "And… what's your relationship with them?" He winced immediately, knowing he had overstepped. Still, curiosity burned in him. "I mean, especially… with this one?"

Bai Liu glanced at Spades, who was resting his chin on his hand, and gave a lazy smile. "The others are friends. He's my boyfriend."

Barber: "..."

For a second, he wanted to protest: You sure picked a rough one for your boyfriend.

Then, while snipping the hair from Spades' forehead, he brushed it aside—

And froze.

His breath caught. His mind went blank. One single thought echoed:

Take it back. Take all of it back.

What level of beauty makes someone gasp out loud? In the entertainment industry, they rank faces: pretty, handsome, stunning, once-in-a-decade, once-in-a-century, once-in-a-millennium...

No matter how much fans hype up their favorite celebrities, stylists tend to place them into one of four categories: average, average-but-makes-you-feel-things, exceptionally good-looking with a few weak knees, and finally, so stunning it kills all attraction—unbeatable and untouchable beauty.

As for those rare celestial-level faces—what the stylists call "gods and goddesses"—well, the studio might listen to them once in a thousand years.

This was only the second time in the barber's life that he'd seen a face that transcended those four categories. The first had been Zhao Muchi, currently the most popular actor in the country—someone described as a "once-in-a-million-years" face.

It truly felt like witnessing a sculpture shaped by divine mercy, every detail sculpted with love and reverence.

The barber fought back the urge to scream for his coworkers and simply swept the hair gently from Spades' eyelids with a brush, afraid to use too much force and somehow disturb the perfection of the face before him.

But as the haircut continued, the entire studio slowly came to a halt. Everyone drifted over and gathered around. After securing Bai Liu's permission not to take any photos, they stared into the mirror, watching Spades' features emerge with reverence, whispering in awe.

"...Holy shit. That's a real face."

"The last time I was this dumbfounded by someone in person was Zhao Muchi. He looks amazing on camera, but somehow, even better off-camera."

"So, who looks better—him or Zhao Muchi?"

"...Hard to say. Not the same type. Zhao Muchi has that kind of face that makes me scream and want to climb him like a tree—just raw lust. But this guy... honestly, the longer I look, the worse I feel. Like, I'm not even worthy to look."

"Wait, isn't Zhao Muchi supposed to come in today too? Are the two legendary faces about to meet?"

"What are you talking about? Didn't you hear? Zhao Muchi's studio called earlier—said something came up, so he canceled."

"Come in, come in!" A voice called eagerly from down the hall. "No, no, we're totally free this afternoon! We'd be thrilled to have you!"

At that, the gossipers quickly scattered.

"Boss' voice. Run! Stop slacking off before he sees you!"

"Who's coming that's got the boss acting like this?"

Muke frowned and turned to the person in charge. "Didn't I reserve the entire studio for us this afternoon?"

The manager broke into a cold sweat, silently cursing his boss for dropping the ball. He stammered, "I-I'll contact the boss right away! I'll ask him to reschedule the new guest. We'll make sure you go first!"

He spun on his heel and ran off.

A moment later, the department head's anxious voice echoed through the studio: "You're already here? Why didn't anyone tell me?! Who's using the space? No worries—we'll sort it out. Your time is precious. Everything will be prioritized for you! Please, come in!"

Muke's face had completely darkened. He was about to lash out when Mu Sicheng, visibly annoyed, stepped forward to back him up.

Just then, the studio's glass door swung open. A tall figure stepped inside, leather riding boots clicking against the floor. He chuckled, pushing the door fully open, then leaned casually against the frame, arms folded across his chest. With a smirk, he swept his gaze across the room and said, "This doesn't look like a negotiation, boss."

The boss nodded quickly. "Negotiating now, Mr. Zhao!"

Muke and Mu Sicheng froze, and even Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi paused for a beat.

The newcomer had shoulder-length red hair, silky and fluffy, loosely braided over his right shoulder. His eyes were narrow and expressive, his nose upturned, and just beneath his left eye was a teardrop beauty mark that twitched when he smiled—an expression radiating sensual, teasing charm.

He was undeniably dazzling—the kind of man who seemed destined for the screen. But that wasn't why Muke and Mu Sicheng couldn't take their eyes off him.

No, they were staring because Zhao Muchi was wearing a satin white V-neck shirt tucked into high-waisted black blazers. Written in chalk along the edge of those blazers—faint but unmistakable—was the name "Bai Liu."

It was the outfit Bai Liu had tried on earlier. The one still in the shop, waiting for alterations. He was supposed to pick it up after this.

But here was Zhao Muchi—wearing it. Wearing Bai Liu's clothes.

Muke stood up, face cold, and immediately called the boutique. His voice was sharp. "Why is someone else wearing Bai Liu's outfit?"

A long silence. Then, "We're very sorry."

"I don't need an apology," Muke replied icily. "I need you to take that outfit off the thief and return it to us."

"He's not a thief," the voice on the other end snapped. "Mega wears it better. The outfit chose him."

Muke's chest rose and fell with restrained fury. Then he went still. "If you can choose the person who fits the clothes best, I can choose a better tenant for the shop you currently rent."

Sensing the threat, the caller immediately softened. "I'm sorry! I'll find Mr. Bai Liu a different outfit that suits him better! I only gave this one to Mega because… I thought he was your friend."

"Friend?" Muke's eyes narrowed. "Why would you think that?"

The voice hesitated. "Because he bought a lot of clothes for Mr. Bai Liu too. You can pick them up later."

“Fine. I’ll come by.” Muke hung up before the person could say anything else. As he turned, he found Zhao Muchi still standing there, smiling faintly, one hand raised as if he’d been waiting for him to finish the call.

“All done yelling?” Zhao Muchi asked with a smirk.

Muke: “……”

The self-consciousness was irritating, but Bai Liu had to admit the tailor had been right—this ostentatious outfit did suit that wannabe aristocrat.

Bai Liu disliked revealing clothing and always buttoned his shirts to the collar. In contrast, this man had undone his shirt all the way down past his belt, showing off his firm waist and abs. Paired with tall riding boots, the look radiated a kind of arrogant aristocratic sensuality—so brazen it almost felt indecent to look at.

Completely unfazed by the hostile atmosphere, Zhao Muchi sauntered up to Bai Liu, spun a swivel chair around, and sat down across from him, lazily crossing his legs with a smile.

"Hello, Mr. Bai Liu—or should I call you Head of the Wandering Circus?"

The moment the words left his mouth, the entire room tensed. Tang Erda immediately rose and moved behind Bai Liu, Mu Sicheng glared daggers, and Muke silently gestured for the others to clear out.

"Relax." Zhao Muchi shrugged, still smiling. "I’m not here with bad intentions. On the contrary—I’ve spent a lot of points on Spades this year."

Bai Liu looked up. "You’re the top investor in Spades this year?"

Zhao Muchi snapped his fingers and propped his chin up lazily, casting a dreamy glance at Spades. "Yep. I like him a lot."

Wang Shun had given Bai Liu some insight into Spades’ backers—namely, the top two investors over the past two years. He had his own ways of analyzing them, but rumors helped fill in the blanks. Last year, it was said Hearts was the top gambler on Spades, followed by someone nicknamed Whiplash—a mysterious investor said to be relentlessly pursuing Spades, just like Hearts had.

This year, with Hearts pulling back, Whiplash had claimed the top spot.

Unlike Hearts, who had employed underhanded tactics, this man's pursuit was blatantly direct.

Zhao Muchi glanced at Spades with open admiration, clicked his tongue twice, and looked smugly pleased by Spades' current appearance. Then he shifted his gaze to Bai Liu and grinned. "Didn't know you liked this type. You should've told me—I could've dressed the part."

And then, almost casually, he asked, "So… have you done it with Spades yet?"

Mu Sicheng exploded, "That's none of your damn business!"

Zhao Muchi leaned back on the sofa with exaggerated disappointment. "Damn. So no first blood for me, huh? I've been drooling over him for ages."

He sat up again, eyeing Bai Liu and Spades with amusement. "So Spades is yours now? Your boyfriend? He does seem to listen to you."

Bai Liu met Zhao Muchi's gaze evenly. "What is it that you want?"

Zhao Muchi leaned forward, his eyes gleaming with innuendo. "Here's a thought—let Spades sleep with me, just once, and I'll throw all my points at you."

Mu Sicheng gawked in disbelief, pointing at Spades, then at Bai Liu. "They're boyfriends! What the hell are you even saying! Spades wouldn't sleep with you, okay?! He only—ahem—in Bai Liu's bed—"

Tang Erda stepped in, covering Mu Sicheng's mouth and offering Zhao Muchi a cold look. "That's enough. Please leave."

Unbothered, Zhao Muchi folded his hands and scanned Bai Liu again, this time more intently. Then he smirked. "You're easy on the eyes too."

"If Spades can have you, I wouldn't mind having a go either."

He grinned wider. "If it's with you, I don't mind being on top or bottom—your choice. And I'll match my previous offer, point for point. You're worth the price."

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Tang Erda: "....."

Muke: "....."

Bai Liu smiled coolly. "How generous. I'm flattered."

Zhao Muchi's gaze turned predatory, lingering on Bai Liu's long, elegant fingers wrapped around a newspaper. His eyes narrowed with interest. "Your in-game look appeals to me more though. The gloves. The whip. Very stylish."

"Still, no," Bai Liu replied politely. "I already have investors."

"Shame." Zhao Muchi sighed, feigning disappointment, and handed Bai Liu a card. "Here's my contact info. If you change your mind, call me anytime."

Bai Liu turned to Muke. "Let the others back in. We're done here. Give the room to Mr. Zhao."

Muke nodded stiffly and summoned the rest of the staff. Zhao Muchi simply sat there smiling.

As they were leaving, Zhao Muchi stood up suddenly and turned to Spades, his eyes gleaming. "Hey—do I look good in this?"

Spades stared at him blankly. He said nothing. Bai Liu glanced at Zhao Muchi, equally silent.

Apparently expecting no answer, Zhao Muchi just shrugged and sat back down, untying his braid with satisfaction. He began listing his preferences for a new look:

"Dye all the hair black. Cut it medium length—just long enough for a ponytail..."

"Trim the nails like this—it fits leather gloves better."

"How about a white dress shirt with trousers? Think it suits me?"

"No more leather boots—just regular leather shoes and white socks. Something office-appropriate."

Mu Sicheng's temple throbbed. But since Bai Liu wasn't reacting, he held himself back—until they left. Then he let out an outraged groan.

"He’s copying you!"

Muke's expression was just as dark. "Exactly the same."

Bai Liu stayed calm. "Let’s go pick up the clothes."

On the way there, Mu Sicheng fumed louder and louder until he finally socked Spades in the chest. "This is all your fault! You’ve caused Bai Liu nothing but trouble! That guy literally asked you if he looked good—why didn’t you say something?! Just tell him he’s ugly!"

Spades gave Mu Sicheng a puzzled look. "Was he talking to me? I don’t know him."

Mu Sicheng: "....."

God, this is even more infuriating!

When they arrived at the shop, the staff apologized profusely, offering to make all of Bai Liu’s future orders free for life. But Muke still looked grim. One assistant tailor hesitated before stepping forward.

"We really didn’t mean any harm. We thought Mr. Zhao was your friend… He knew your measurements and said he was buying a gift as a joke."

"He bought me clothes?" Bai Liu raised a brow. "What kind?"

The assistant hesitated again, then gestured behind a curtain. "They’re over here."

Bai Liu approached the curtain, Muke trying to stop him. "That guy’s trouble—just ignore whatever he bought—"

"Open it," Bai Liu said blandly.

Mu Sicheng kept ranting: "Even if you don’t know him, when he talks to you and asks if he looks good, you should just curse him out!"

Spades interrupted, gaze fixed on Bai Liu’s back. "He wasn’t talking to me. That guy—when he asked if he looked good—he was asking Bai Liu."

Mu Sicheng froze. "Huh?"

The curtain opened, revealing a scandalously designed women’s suit—tight black straps, long gloves, brown stockings, and a whip.

The assistant handed Bai Liu a note. "He left this with the outfit."

Bai Liu unfolded it. The handwriting was as flamboyant and teasing as Zhao Muchi himself:

— [With this cut, you'll look even better in women's clothes than men's, baby.]

City in the Sky

Chapter Notes

> Content Warning: This arc will subject you to scenes so harrowing they may induce nausea, cause your stomach to churn violently, and trigger an overwhelming impulse to gouge your own eyes out to escape the horror. Reader discretion is strongly advised.

In three days, the next challenge would begin.

Bai Liu had sent Spades back to the Killer Sequence just two days ago. He had since returned to the Wandering Circus to begin preparing for what came next.

Wandering Circus – Meeting Room

Wang Shun stood at the front of the room. His nerves were evident—he was speaking faster than usual, and his explanations lacked their typical ease.

"Tomorrow is our second challenge," he announced.

"This will be our final meeting before the tournament." He paused, then added with a bitter smile, "As much as I hate to add pressure, this is our last shot at making it into the league this year."

He tapped the system panel, and a projection flickered to life behind him.

"Let’s go over the guilds again. We can eliminate the Killer Sequence—they already won a challenge and are locked into the playoffs. That leaves seven teams in the card pool."

"There are three main teams we need to worry about. They're currently ranked second to fourth: the King’s Guild, the Deer Hunters, and Golden Dawn. All three are strong. Each has at least one popular team member, meaning they’ve already secured their exemption cards. In other words, they have no need to maintain popularity points anymore."

Wang Shun’s voice dropped slightly. "That means, when they go up against us, they’ll likely forfeit the first two matches and force a showdown in the third—"

He looked around the room, then exhaled deeply. "—which happens to be our weak point: the team match."

Tang Erda frowned. "But all three of those teams added new players this year. Based on the replays, their teamwork isn't great. Could we target the newcomers in the team match as a possible weak link?"

It was standard thinking—new players often struggled to mesh with the rest of the team and could be a liability. But Wang Shun let out a bitter laugh.

"I wish it were that simple."

"Yes, these teams' newcomers lack coordination at times, but their weaknesses are completely masked by the strategies built around them —and their individual strength."

He tapped the screen again.

"Let's start with the King's Crown's newcomers. First up, Phoebe."

The video projected on the panel showed a girl with long blond hair and green eyes. She stood with her hands clasped at her chest, three pairs of pristine white wings fanned out behind her. Her expression was ethereal, pure as the first snowfall. With her long lashes lowered, she murmured a prayer over a kneeling player, whose eyes were empty of all hope.

"May the Lord bless you to hell."

"Come, let me share the gospel with you."

As she finished the chant, her white feathers snapped shut, wrapping around herself and the other player. A moment later, the feathers turned black and leathery, like bat wings. When they unfurled again, the player was gone—nothing left but a pile of bones. Blood stained the corners of Phoebe's lips. She licked it away with an innocent smile, eyes now a deep, glowing red. Two curled goat horns had sprouted from her forehead.

The video froze at the moment she licked the blood from her mouth.

Mu Sicheng shuddered. "Isn't her title 'Nun'? Why does she look like a vampire?"

Wang Shun sighed, staring at the screen. "According to what I've managed to dig up from contacts in the King's Guild… Phoebe's skill set is similar to the Witch's. It's extremely rare—a dual-phase skill that allows her to switch identities from the Monster Book."

"She has two forms: Nun and Witch. In her Nun form, she can enchant her captain and teammates through prayer, reducing the damage they take. Essentially, it weakens enemy attacks. She also has a skill called [Gospel], which compels enemies to feel goodwill toward her—lowers their guard and makes them confess things to her."

"And once that happens..." Wang Shun's tone turned grim. "That's when she switches to her Witch form. She attacks, drains their blood, and devours their flesh. Her damage output is brutal. A player like Mu Sicheng would be drained dry in about ten seconds."

He tapped the image of the white bones on the screen. "The end result is this."

Mu Sicheng recoiled. "Don't use me as a damage benchmark!"

"But she has a clear weakness." Bai Liu leaned forward, eyes fixed on the screen. "She can't take close-range attacks, can she?"

Wang Shun nodded. "That's my assumption as well. Her defense seems low. She's usually positioned as a control player. Hearts often places her behind the Titan [Shield] for protection. But Phoebe doesn't always stay there—she roams the field a lot, so she becomes a common target."

"However, because her damage output is so high, players who go after her often end up dead themselves. So far, she's made it through every team match without needing to withdraw."

Bai Liu's eyes narrowed thoughtfully. "She's a decoy—part of a roaming strategy."

"A what?" Mu Sicheng looked confused.

"She's bait," Liu Jiayi answered coldly. "Hearts sends her roaming on purpose, drawing in enemy attackers. She's like a spider spinning a web, then pouncing when her prey gets stuck. Roaming players usually do this, but since Liu Ji and Qi Yifang aren't good at roaming, Hearts gave that role to Phoebe."

Liu Jiayi studied the frozen image. "And she plays it beautifully."

"She might not coordinate well with most teammates, but she works closely with Hearts." Bai Liu rested his chin on one hand, eyes thoughtful. "She's skilled enough to sync with a tactician. That's not easy."

"She can't be used as a weak point."

Bai Liu made a quick judgment and turned the conversation sharply:
"What about Liu Ji and Qi Yifang?"

Wang Shun sighed, clearly at a loss.
"What can I say about those two..." He rubbed his temples. "They're not particularly strong, but Hearts has taken them under her wing. They're extremely obedient, and their skills are quite unique. I haven't found a clear weakness yet."

"Qi Yifang, whom you met at the Rose Factory, plays a roaming position. His skill is tied to the identity of a weather announcer—very unpredictable. He lacks control over it himself, but if used strategically, the effect can be unexpectedly powerful. His basic attacks, though, are stable and don't deal much damage."

"Then there's Liu Ji. His intelligence stat isn't high, but his obedience is off the charts. The moment Hearts gives an order, he executes it with zero delay—it's like Hearts is his brain. His skill is called [Flaming Bone Hammer]."

Wang Shun pointed solemnly at the image of Liu Ji, whose body blazed with flames and exposed glowing bones.
"That's his berserk state. When his spirit level drops below 40, he ignites. A single hit from him is comparable to taking a bullet from Tang Erda's gun."

After the meeting ended, Bai Liu stayed behind to discuss match details with Wang Shun.

Wang Shun looked anxious.
"You'll still be the one drawing the opponent team. And with your luck, you'll probably pull the current strongest in the pool—the King's Crown."

"Facing your old boss already?" Bai Liu quipped, smiling. "How do you feel about that?"

Wang Shun let out a laugh, half exasperated. "The moment you go on stage, Hearts will know I used my last connections in the guild to dig up Phoebe's skill profile. She'll be out for my head before we even get to talk about me being a former team leader."

He paused, then added, more seriously: "It's Jiayi I'm more worried about. I don't know what she's thinking."

"Hearts treated her... very well."

"Why?" Bai Liu's voice was calm, almost flat. "You've been around Hearts long enough—do you know?"

Wang Shun hesitated before answering. "It seems the Queen treats Jiayi well because they share something in common—an intense dislike of men."

He glanced cautiously at Bai Liu, then added, carefully: "Especially the kind of selfish men who exploit others for profit... or lure in little girls. Anyone like that who crosses paths with the Queen tends to meet a very bad end."

Bai Liu: "..."

He changed the subject without responding: "I've lost two games in a row. Has Charles contacted me yet?"

Wang Shun looked puzzled. "No. Which surprised me, honestly. I even approached him myself. He just told me to tell you not to worry—there'll be no shortage of investment."

"Because apparently," he continued, "someone else has their eyes on you."

Bai Liu narrowed his eyes. "Who?"

Wang Shun's expression turned a bit strange. "I don't know. Charles only left you a gift box. I saw it just today. He said no one else was allowed to open it except you. It's from another investor. Apparently, once you open it, you'll know who it is."

"Give it to me," Bai Liu said.

When he saw the box, Bai Liu immediately understood Wang Shun's odd expression.

The box was pink and black lace, edged in rings of crystal. It looked luxurious... and vaguely obscene.

Bai Liu opened it without a blink.

Wang Shun froze as he peeked at the contents, then jerked his head up, eyes wide. “What the hell is this?”

Inside lay an elaborate set of lace lingerie—corset, panties, garter belt, and leg rings—all feminine. A small card was tucked beside them.

Bai Liu plucked up the card and read the playful, flirtatious handwriting:

“To match the outfit you got last time. It fits you well. Wear it in the next game—just for me.”

Gamblers' Union Guild

Charles lounged behind his desk, watching someone across from him with an amused expression. “Do you really have a thing for Bai Liu?” he asked, his tone light but probing. “He’s a dark horse I’ve invested in. I’d prefer if you didn’t swoop in and disrupt that.”

He smiled faintly. “Men who fall into your hands usually don’t end up very well.”

Zhao Muchi sat across the table, his eyes half-lidded, lazily avoiding Charles’ gaze. “Not really. Didn’t Spades come out of it just fine?”

“That’s only because he didn’t sleep with you,” Charles said, spreading his hands with a wry smile. “It’s not you he likes—it’s Bai Liu.”

“I hold no hostility toward him,” Zhao Muchi replied lightly. His tone had lost the teasing, flirtatious air he wore around Bai Liu and Spades. Now he sat upright, his expression composed and aristocratic. “I’m just reminding Bai Liu.”

“Reminding him of what?” Charles’ eye twitched.

Zhao Muchi’s lips curved into a mischievous, lazy smile. “Reminding him that he’ll be wearing women’s clothes for me soon—whether he wants to or not.”

Charles paused, his smirk fading. He tapped his fingers twice on the table, steadying himself. “What do you know? Did he come to the island to see you again?”

“Who are you talking about?” Zhao Muchi lifted his eyes. “Bai Liu… or Bai Six?”

“Maybe both. Maybe neither. You’ve only just found out, haven’t you?” Charles chuckled, playing along. “And now you’re asking me the same thing? Let’s not pretend, Muchi. We both know you were placed in this world as a pawn—for Bai Liu.”

“What did you think of all those years you spent on that island, wrapped in love and lust, waiting for that man in the City in the Sky… ever since ten years ago?”

“Do you still want to be his pawn?”

“No,” Zhao Muchi murmured. He rested his hands under his chin and smiled—a hazy smile, like a man immersed in a dream he refused to wake from. “It wasn’t one-sided. He came to see me on my eighteenth birthday. On Bai Liu’s eighteenth birthday. On that island, too.”

With that, Zhao Muchi stood and turned to leave. Charles watched him go, his expression unreadable, before calling after him, “This time… will you press Bai Liu?”

Zhao Muchi’s steps faltered slightly. He let out a soft laugh. “Do you really think I like Bai Liu? I don’t like him.”

“I’m pressing his opponent.”

The Next Day — The Game Pool

The cheers had been deafening from the moment Bai Liu stepped into the arena. Ever since his victory over Spades in the last challenge—shattering the myth of Spades' undefeated streak—Bai Liu’s popularity had surged. Though he'd lost slightly to the Reverse God, he now stood firmly in ninth place among the top ten players.

He was a star.

Everything felt familiar—so much so that the host didn’t even bother with a proper introduction. Instead, he cracked a joke:

“This must be the first time you’ve seen a team play a challenge twice, right? How novel—getting a second shot by taking over another guild!”

—An obviously sarcastic jab, clearly implying that Bai Liu was shameless, bending the rules to get a second challenge.

But the truth was, Bai Liu hadn't broken any rules. He had earned this challenge.

As soon as the host began taunting, the crowd fell silent—not for Bai Liu, but against the host. Shouts rang out: "Get off commentary if you're that bad!" The host broke out in a cold sweat and wisely shut his mouth.

He'd forgotten something important—Bai Liu might be a newcomer, but he was also a top ten player now. Mocking him wasn't just risky—it was dangerous.

Bai Liu stepped forward to draw a lot. His expression was unreadable as he handed it to the staff. They opened it and held it up for all to see —

[King's Crown]

The host's excitement returned instantly. He raised his mic, yelling, "It's the guild of our second most popular player—Queen of Hearts! The King's Crown!"

"Will the Wandering Circus succeed in their challenge? We'll find out!"

"Personally, I don't think it's likely. I mean, look at the Queen—not only gorgeous, but powerful!"

Wang Shun opened his system panel and saw the support rate plummeting again. He clenched his fists. A bead of cold sweat slid down his temple.

He knew the support would drop once the matchups were revealed. But this… this drop still startled him.

"Will both tacticians please come forward and shake hands?" the host joked. "Shaking hands with the Queen is the dream of every male player in the game—except maybe Spades. Bai Liu is one lucky guy."

Hearts approached in a sharp outfit—tailored trousers, hair tied back in a ponytail, a beret perched at an angle.

"I've been looking forward to this match for a long time," she said, curling her red lips into a smile as she extended her hand. “At last, the day has come, Bai Liu.”

Bai Liu met her gaze and returned the smile. “I hope it’s a good game.”

“Yes!” the host shouted. “The match officially begins!”

[System Alert: The King’s Crown guild forfeits the single and double events.]

[System Alert: Proceeding directly to the regatta.]

[Loading the game…]

[System Alert: Both teams logged into the game “City in the Sky.”]

[(King’s Crown) vs (Wandering Circus) — five-player team match begins.]

Inside the Game

Bai Liu opened his eyes.

He was in a dim, swaying container. It was pitch dark. He quickly opened his system panel, using the glow to assess his surroundings and read the mission briefing.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu gains status — (Prepared Witch)]
[Main Quest activated]
[Game Background: A small coastal nation is under siege by an invasive eel species. These eels reproduce rapidly and infest everything. Now, even turning on a faucet results in eels pouring out.]

[Scientists have tried to eliminate them—burning, chemicals, acid—but nothing works. Then they discovered one strange fact: female human saliva can dissolve the eels.]

[A new biological plan was proposed: have women eat the eels alive. But soon, those women began to change. They grew scales, became monstrous—witches. Some could fly, teleport, or even devour others.]

[The Holy Inquisition declared: the eel transformations only happened to evil-hearted people. The eels revealed their true nature. Kill them all, and peace will return.]

[But now, the country is out of women. They've begun trafficking women from abroad.]

[You are one such "woman," smuggled from another land.]

[Main Quest: Obtain the Witch's Heart and place it on the tower in the City in the Sky to end the Witch Trials.]

[Side Quest: Do not reveal that you are male. If the witches find out, they will kill you.]

[System Note: Witches kill all men on sight.]

Bai Liu lowered the panel slowly, his eyes drifting down to examine his clothes.

They were dirty.

But unmistakably women's clothes.

City in the Sky

Bai Liu wasn't alone in the container. In the other three corners huddled three young girls, no older than sixteen or seventeen. Each had a different face, but all looked equally terrified—hugging their knees and whimpering.

Bai Liu glanced around, then quietly retreated into his own corner, calmly observing the surroundings.

There shouldn't be any witches in this container—at least not in the traditional sense. These girls were too miserable, too frightened to seem capable of murder, let alone witchcraft.

He brought up the system panel and confirmed that both the appearance modification and voice modulation features were locked. As expected, the system didn't allow players to use privileges to disguise themselves or deceive NPCs in this witch-themed copy.

Still, with the dim lighting and the loud noises outside, it was hard to tell his gender. Bai Liu deliberately lowered his voice and asked, "Do you know where we're going?"

The question only made the girls cry harder, their fear intensifying.

"We're being sent to the Land of Witches," one of them answered in a trembling voice. "It's a terrible place."

Bai Liu repeated softly, almost rhetorically, "The Land of Witches?"

"You don't know?" Another girl looked toward him in surprise, then let out a bitter laugh. "You must be from that country. Only a girl from there wouldn't know about the Land of Witches."

"That country?" Bai Liu quickly followed up. "You all speak Chinese?"

The girls' faces suggested they came from all over the world, but they all spoke fluent Chinese. For Bai Liu—who had always struggled with English—it was a rare relief to be able to communicate so easily with NPCs in a copy.

"It's because the mutated Seven-Star Eels from the Land of Witches have spread through the oceans and contaminated the world. Now, in every country, women who ingest the eels become witches," the girl explained, her voice trembling. "The Inquisition's power has expanded globally. They hunt witches everywhere."

"Everywhere... except your country."

The girl looked at Bai Liu with envy in her eyes. "Your country doesn't label witches as evil. It doesn't permit the Inquisition to act there, forbids private witch trials, and strictly bans the use of raw eel consumption to 'purge' witches. It's the safest place in the world for girls."

Another girl added in a whisper, "That's why we learn Chinese from birth. If we're lucky enough to escape there, we won't be arrested or burned."

The first girl looked at Bai Liu sympathetically. "It's tragic—you were trafficked out of there."

"The Land of Witches is the worst place in the world to be a woman."

As they spoke, the container jolted twice—they were being moved off the ship. The girls panicked, clustering around Bai Liu, their bodies shaking with fear as the door began to creak open.

Blinding light flooded in. A fat, broad-shouldered man appeared in the doorway, sweeping his gaze over the girls with a disgusting mixture of contempt and hunger, like a butcher examining meat.

"Come on out," he sneered. "Let's see the pretty little witches who want to swallow eels."

Terrified, the girls huddled closer to Bai Liu before stepping out. The last girl in line had her rear pinched by the man. She screamed in horror and covered herself, tears streaming down her face.

"What are you doing?!"

The man sneered at her chest. "Just a little touch. What are you screaming for? Scream again, and I'll report you to the trial court as a witch. See if you're still so loud after a round of torture."

The girl froze, her face going pale. She held back her tears and followed the others, no longer daring to speak.

Bai Liu cast a glance back at the man, who was still leering at the girl's body with visible greed.

Her trousers, soaked from seawater, had become translucent. Yet she didn't even dare to cover herself, her fists clenched in humiliation as she walked forward in silence, tears slipping down her cheeks.

Bai Liu slowed his pace, silently moving behind her to block the man's gaze.

The girl glanced back at him, wide-eyed, then quietly wiped her tears and whispered a small "thank you."

The man's leering eyes shifted to Bai Liu's waist. Rubbing his hands together, he grinned. "Not bad either."

Bai Liu: "……"

Truly, not a man with high standards.

Soon, they were led into a massive, empty warehouse. A large screen stood at the front, framed by a banner that read [Preparatory Witch Training Coven] in three different languages.

Bai Liu briefly scanned the space. Around a thousand young women, their ages seemingly between fifteen and thirty, stood packed tightly together. Every face was young.

"Preparatory witches."
A man in black priestly robes, around thirty or forty years old, stood at the front. Three interpreters stood beside him, translating his words in unison across multiple languages.
"I am your interpreter for tonight. My name is Quan Zhendong. You may call me Mr. Quan."

Quan Zhendong smiled warmly.
"You may be wondering—why do we call you witches, when witches are evil beings the Inquisition works so hard to eliminate?"

He gestured broadly, his face radiating false compassion.
"Because you are about to make the ultimate sacrifice. A group of great women offering themselves for the redemption of our sins—for the preparation of witches."

"This title is a warning!" Quan Zhendong suddenly snapped, voice rising as his gaze swept the girls like a burning torch.
"'Preparatory Witch' means that every time you suffer—when you devour eels alive to save us—the demon inside you stirs. It will tempt you. Whisper lies. Tell you that we are persecuting you."

“But that is wrong. That is the devil trying to make you betray us!”

“Everyone is born with sin. Your suffering is atonement. God sent down the seven-star eels and revealed that only you can devour them. This was predestined. Why else would men be unable to digest the seven-star eels?”

“Only the Inquisitorial Court can forgive your sins and guide you in resisting the demons within,” Quan said solemnly. “The title of 'Reserve Witch' is a reminder: as you suffer for redemption, you are always a hair’s breadth from becoming a witch.”

“Each of you is a witch in waiting.”

He raised his arm high, voice thundering:
“Whenever you see this title—be vigilant. Be strict with yourselves. Do not be swayed by temptation—”

“—Kneel, and devour with gratitude the eels God has bestowed upon you.”

Silence followed. The crowd stared blankly at Quan Zhendong’s impassioned sermon. Some clasped their hands in prayer, lips moving fervently. But most stared ahead with dead eyes.

“Now,” Quan said briskly, “we will explain how to destroy eels quickly—and your future job options.”

He drew a teaching stick and tapped the screen. It lit up immediately.

“Let’s begin with the swallowing procedure.”

“The most effective agent against the eel is your digestive tract. The fluids secreted by your esophagus and mouth dissolve the eel’s shell and lining, reducing it to a pool of blood in seconds.”

“The human esophagus measures around 40 cm. A mutant seven-star eel is about the same length. You must swallow the eel whole. Let it slide down into your throat. It will still be alive. It will wriggle and struggle in your esophagus. Do not bite. Do not vomit. Do not let it escape.”

“In about ten seconds, it will be completely dissolved inside your body.”

“I understand this might be hard to picture,” Quan continued. “So now, we'll watch a demonstration video."

He tapped the screen again. A young woman's face appeared. The footage was grainy, old—but clear enough.

The girl was strikingly beautiful. Her face, saintly. She wore a full knight's uniform. Her eyes were a faint violet, her thick, curly brown hair tied in a neat bun. She sat straight-backed, composed. No older than twenty.

"Hello, everyone," she greeted in stiff, serious English.
"I am Knight #1 of the Saintly Patrol. My name is Quan Baola. I'm nineteen. I will now demonstrate how to properly devour a seven-star eel. This one is approximately 41 cm long and weighs 450g."

The scene shifted. A plastic tub of writhing seven-star eels was placed before her, unceremoniously.

"This is the mutant seven-star eel—a highly dangerous marine creature."
One of the eels tried to bite her, its fanged mouth gaping. Without hesitation, Quan Baola snapped its head in place.

"It secretes mucus that corrodes everything it touches."

She looked up at the camera. Her violet eyes burned with resolve.
"As long as there are saintly patrols, no girl will ever be forced to swallow an eel and risk becoming a witch."

"Please, trust us."

The camera wobbled, clearly urging her to hurry. Quan Baola hesitated. Her steady hand trembled slightly, but she opened her mouth and began to swallow the eel.

"Wait."
A male voice interrupted mid-swallow.
"Baola, we're going to take X-rays for cross-sectional imaging. Hold that position."

The footage changed to a scan. The eel could be seen writhing inside her esophagus—dissolving slowly into blood. Her throat moved with the eel's struggle.

Off-camera, men watching burst into murmured laughter and commentary.

“Damn, she swallowed deep.”

“The holy maiden, huh? Can’t touch a man, but sure gulps down eels. Bet she enjoyed that.”

“Too bad she’s a saint. I’ve got some eels for her too—hehehe.”

“Saint? Nah. Not anymore.”

When the scan ended, the camera cut back to a pale, visibly shaken Quan Baola. She held the remaining half of the eel in trembling hands.

The cameraman teased:
“Come on, Baola. Don’t you want to eliminate all the eels? Swallow the rest.”

She was quiet for a long time. Then, eyes fixed on the lens, she slowly swallowed the rest.

“I will,” she said firmly.

Back in the warehouse, Quan Zhendong’s voice dropped.
“Do you see a brave, faithful knight of the Holy Maiden on that screen?”

He paused. “It grieves me to inform you—Baola has fallen. She has become a witch.”

He folded his hands.
“Let her story be a warning.”

“When the seven-star eels first emerged, Baola proposed the Saintly Patrol—a volunteer force of women trained to devour the eels so that others wouldn’t have to.”

“These women were holy. They swore before God to remain celibate. It is known that women corrupted by lust fall more easily into witchcraft.”

“Baola was their leader.”

He pointed accusingly at her image on screen.
“But she fell. A priest accused her of seducing him during a late night in the church—after he had consumed many eels. He claimed she used witchcraft to force herself upon him.”

“Her soul has been corrupted by the devil.”

He clenched his fists, momentarily lost in his own fury.
Laughter broke out among the guards. One man whistled.
“Yeah! I’m the poor priest!”

City in the Sky

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Quan Zhendong nodded toward Quan Baola on the screen and sighed regretfully. "It is a very sad story—one that everyone entering our kingdom should hear, even if only sideways."

"When Baola was first accused of being a witch by the priest, the tribunal had already ordered a trial and execution. Yet many people throughout the kingdom refused to believe it and questioned the tribunal's decision."

"They held procession after procession for Baola—large gatherings of men, women, and children, all of whom had been favored by Baola's patrols. They demanded that the tribunal reopen the trial, unwilling to accept that Baola could be a witch."

"But the facts proved otherwise," Quan Zhendong stated solemnly. "The tribunal's rulings are never wrong."

"Now, let us review Baola's trial in its entirety."

He pressed a button, and the screen shifted to reveal a vast and solemn courtroom.

In the center, Baola was bound to a stake, hands tied behind her back. Despite her predicament, her expression was not wretched. Her purple eyes looked steadily at the judge on the bench as she firmly declared, "I am not a witch. I did not seduce him. I am innocent."

The priest who had testified against her stood at the plaintiff's table, head bowed, eyes averted, unwilling to meet Baola's gaze.

The crowd behind Baola—her supporters—were fierce in their defense. Some wept, others cursed the priest vehemently.

"You slander Baola!"

"Don't you dare look her in the eye and claim she seduced you!"

Quan Zhendong explained matter-of-factly, "This was early on, before the court had fully established its authority. People questioned its decisions, and today, such outbursts in court are considered serious offenses. Keep that in mind."

The bishop, seated high above the judge's bench in the video, tapped the table and commanded in a deep voice, "Silence."

"Plaintiff, state the circumstances under which the witch seduced you."

"That night, in the church..." the priest's voice grew faint as all eyes fixed on him. "She took off her clothes, lay before the idol, smiled demurely, and beckoned me, saying, 'Come here, let me come to you.'"

"Her back was so white, her waist so soft. Her eyes glowed purple like a chimera in the moonlight, and two shining ram's horns grew on her head. I was unaware for a moment..."

The priest bowed his head in apparent shame; a dark expression flickered in his eyes.

"It was my weakness that I could not resist and was bewitched by the witch. I repent before God and accept all punishment for my sin. Even if I am publicly judged, I will denounce Baola as a witch so no one else will be deceived by her false virtue and be bewitched as I was!"

"How can that be!" The crowd erupted again with vehement emotion. "Baola would never do such a thing!"

"Silence!" The bishop struck the table once more, his gaze coldly fixed on Baola. "The accused, state your case."

Baola was silent for a moment. "I did take my clothes off then, but I didn't know anyone was there—I was only there to change."

The bishop asked, very coldly, "Did you have relations with this priest?"

Baola's fingers clenched briefly before she quickly regained composure. "Yes, but not as he described..."

"You have disqualified yourself as a holy woman by having sex with a priest," the bishop interrupted coldly. "You stand just a hair's breadth from being a witch after all the lies you have spun. If you cannot keep your heart pure and instead strip and seduce others at will, then you are no different from a witch."

—An understatement that effectively pronounced Baola guilty.

Just as the verdict was about to be delivered, two middle-aged men and women from the crowd—both looking old with gray hair and wrinkled faces—burst out sobbing at the fence, reaching desperately to touch Baola, still tied to the stake.

"Baola! My child!" The two tried to climb over the fence, cursing furiously. "You damned inquisitors! You are the evil ones! Let go of my Baola!"

"I told you not to be a fool trying to be good. We should never have taught you so well! We should have sent you away when you were born!"

"Oh, my dear Baola!"

Baola's calm eyes twitched; she bit her lower lip as she looked toward the grieving couple. Her eyes reddened slightly, but she obeyed the courtroom's rules, making no sound nor daring to speak.

Despite their grief, these visitors were her parents.

The jury began to clamor again when a priest hurried up to the bishop, whispering urgently into his ear.

"There's another procession for Baola outside the court, my lord."

"We held this trial publicly, and with Baola's parents present, many people are demanding the trial of the priest, accusing him of lying."

"Though we must assert our authority and cleanse the inner circle, given the current situation, it would be unwise to move Baola prematurely. It would provoke the wrath of the people, my Lord Bishop."

The bishop's eyes darkened as he glanced at Baola, then he nodded slightly, gesturing for the priest to relay the message. He spoke solemnly: "Despite the heavy accusations from the priest, Baola is known to all of us as a holy woman. Throughout all the time she has swallowed eels, she has never harbored a corrupt heart and has remained pure. To accuse her so lightly cannot easily convince us, nor can it destroy the jewel of our church."

In just two or three sentences, the bishop shifted his stance, casting a casual glance at the flustered priest across the room. "Father, do you have any evidence that Baola is a witch beyond these accusations?"

Of course, the priest had no proof. He had only caught wind—through whispers within the Holy See—of a grand purge intended to bring Baola down and bolster the church's prestige. Emboldened by this rumor, he dared to claim that the saintly woman of national renown had changed her clothes, allowed himself to lust after her, and forced himself upon her at her weakest moment.

Baola's reputation was so untarnished that no one disliked her; the Holy See had long looked the other way. The priest thought he could follow the current and that nothing would go wrong.

But he never expected that Baola, the Virgin, would have so many supporters even now—turning the tables completely.

The priest finally panicked and stammered, "No, Your Grace, I have no other charges."

"Are you lying, then?" the bishop asked solemnly. "Are you slandering our greatest Virgin, Baola?"

The priest saw the coldness in the bishop's eyes and realized his fate was sealed. His lips pale, he looked toward Baola on the judgment pillar, hoping—absurdly—that the ever-merciful and great Virgin might speak for him and save him.

But Baola never glanced at him once, even though this man had forced her to endure what she hated most. She remained strong, holy, and just swept past him without a second thought. Her eyes held neither love nor hate—only a calm, distant light as she moved away.

It was as if he were nothing more than an ant, unworthy of touching the coat of her flying knight, no matter how much he struggled.

"He does lie," Baola said.

For a moment, a violent hatred surged through the priest. Since this woman would never look at him again, and since he could not harm her any other way, he resolved to drag her down to hell with him.

It mattered little to him if the most beautiful Virgin in the world was condemned alongside him.

Fueled by this dark resolve, a sudden, brilliant idea struck him.

"I did not lie!" the priest shouted, chest heaving, tears streaking his face. "I was indeed seduced by a witch! But I was wrong in my accusation—that witch is not Baola!"

“Oh?” The bishop’s interest was piqued. “Was there another woman that night?”

Baola shot back swiftly, her rare icy directness fixing on the priest: “It was only you and me that night. Don’t drag other women into this and bite off more than you can chew.”

“It is true there were only two of us,” the priest said, eyes glazed with bitter penitence, as if condemning a real witch. “But, Baola, do you know that witch spawn can use their mothers to seduce men they desire, so they may be born into the world? The mother becomes the cradle in which they are conceived.”

“What an evil monster.” The priest’s eyes dropped to Baola’s belly, lips trembling as he licked them. “It is not you who tempts me—it is the child in your womb.”

“You are a victim, too, Baola.”

Baola’s expression blanked as she slowly lowered her gaze to her stomach, confused.

Almost immediately, every eye in the room followed.

The bishop’s glance lingered meaningfully on Baola’s belly. “Order Baola to be examined.”

“No! Never!” The priest snapped, voice sharp with urgency. “Any examination would alert the witch in Baola’s womb and allow her to escape. The witch is cunning. We can only wait until she is born and fully attached before we can put her to death.”

This would delay things for at least ten months—time in which the Papacy might clear Baola’s name.

The bishop considered briefly and then nodded. “You have a point.”

“Then we wait ten months…”

Baola’s father suddenly interrupted, his voice sharp and eyes blazing with hatred as he faced the priest and bishop. “What if Baola isn’t carrying a child? Does that mean the priest lied and should be executed? Burn him!”

The bishop paused. “That would be just.”

“If Baola is carrying a boy,” Baola’s father took a trembling breath, eyes tearful as he looked at his daughter, “then she is innocent, and this priest deserves to die.”

“We in the Holy See are always fair,” the bishop declared with displeasure, “and will execute any lying priest. But if Baola is carrying a girl, that girl must be put to death.”

“We will monitor Baola carefully during this time, to ensure she does nothing to let the witch escape.”

Baola’s father tried to argue further, but the bishop rose and said coldly, “This trial is over. The meeting is adjourned.”

The video paused, and Quan Zhendong looked around at everyone. “This was Baola’s trial.”

“Of course, what followed is well known in our country: Baola did become pregnant, and by the time she gave birth in October for another trial, she was deemed a witch and defected—this was the infamous [Witch’s Heart] trial.”

Quan Zhendong smiled arrogantly. “That case proved the priest’s accusations were true: Baola was a witch.”

“Here is the video from that time.”

He pressed play again. The footage returned to the courtroom.

The priest waited anxiously in the plaintiff’s chair, cold sweat dripping down his face like a father waiting outside a maternity ward—which, in a way, he was. Baola had just been admitted to the hospital.

But his wait was not hopeful—it was filled with fear and bitterness. He was not awaiting a newborn child related by blood, but the guillotine descending.

His face pale, he whispered prayers, clutching the cross on his chest. “It must be a girl… it must be a girl…”

Outside the delivery room, Baola’s father trembled, unable to speak fully, clutching his wife and shedding tears as he prayed, “If there is a God, please give Baola a boy!”

“I will offer you everything in the future!”

The delivery room doors burst open. A nurse, tears in her eyes, exclaimed, “It’s a boy!”

“Baola, it’s okay!”

Baola’s father made a three-pointed prayer gesture, his eyes rolling back as he collapsed weakly, a tearful smile spreading across his face. “Good Baola, doing good still pays off…”

The nurse urged, “Quickly take Baola and the child to the Holy See. They won’t condemn the priest until they see for themselves!”

Baola’s father nodded shakily. “We will go together.”

The priest fell to his knees as the news reached him, eyes vacant as he looked up at the bishop, who ignored him, tapping his fingers on the table with annoyance and staring grimly at the pillar of judgment where Baola was to be tied.

Such a chance to destroy Baola, the church’s spiritual pillar, had slipped away.

The courtroom doors flew open, and someone pushed in a pale, wheelchair-bound Baola, her purple eyes still clear despite everything, holding up the newborn baby.

“The priest is lying,” Baola said. “Please execute him, Bishop.”

The bishop cast her an inscrutable glance. “Bring the child forward and show him to me and the priest.”

Baola looked tensely at the infant. “Please be careful—he’s only just born.”

The bishop lifted the swaddling cloth, peered inside, then dropped it in disgust, waving for the child to be taken away. “A boy indeed.”

Again, the boy was presented to the priest, swaddled uncomfortably under the tribunal’s harsh lights. The infant opened his eyes—a striking pair of violet eyes.

The baby’s soft face and purple eyes so closely resembled Baola’s that at first glance, he looked more like a girl than a boy.

…More like a girl.

The priest gave a sudden jolt. He stood up abruptly and pointed at the infant with righteous indignation.
“Bishop, this is the child—the very eye! It is the witch who seduced me that day!”

The bishop paused for a moment, seemingly considering the priest's words, though he appeared to doubt his sanity. He emphasized firmly, "It's a boy."

"Yes, yes, it does look like a boy," the priest replied, holding the child in his arms. He traced the child's face slowly from forehead to chin and spoke with conviction,
"But look closely, my lord bishop—look at his face, his eyes. Don't you think they are too delicate, too beautiful to belong to a boy?"

"Especially those purple eyes," the priest added. "The exact same eyes I saw the night I was bewitched!"

The bishop stopped tapping his fingers, narrowing his eyes as realization dawned.
"You mean...?"

"This witch is fresh from the mother, and powerfully witchy. We all know what witches are capable of," the priest said, his tone dripping with insinuation. "What if, for example, this witch can conceal her true gender?"

"It only looks like a boy, but what if it harbors a [witch's heart]?"

The bishop nodded slowly, approving the thought.
"You've thought it through. There is indeed a possibility the child is a witch."

The priest wiped the sweat from his forehead, took a deep breath, and bowed his head humbly.
"I am a priest. This is my duty."

Baola stared at the child in the priest's arms with a strained expression.
"It's a boy," she said incredulously. "How can he be a witch?"

Her father hissed angrily,
"You beasts! You even want the children..."

"Silence above the tribunal!" the bishop ordered coldly, waving his hand dismissively. "Cover his mouth and drag him away."

A security guard immediately appeared, covering Baola's father's mouth and dragging him off.

The bishop turned his gaze away with satisfaction and looked at Baola with seeming benevolence.

“The Holy See has always been fair. The concept of male witches is new, and we do not judge lightly.”

Baola stared at her child, voice trembling.
“How will you judge him?”

The bishop paused in thought.

The priest grew impatient and quickly suggested,
“My lord bishop, there is only one way to tell if the child is a witch.”

“In what way?” the bishop asked.

A cold chill crept up Baola’s spine. She looked at Father God Xiang, her expression frozen, as if she had guessed what was coming.

“That’s a Seven-Star Eel!” the priest said with a wry smile. “Witches must have eaten the eel and be able to digest it. Just put the boy with the eel and see if he can digest it—then you’ll know.”

—Of course, when children and eels are put together, the child is the one who dies.

Once the child dies, the trial is over. Witch or not, the trial’s outcome is the same: the child is a witch.

The bishop nodded without hesitation.
“You have a point.”

“Bring the Seven-Star Eel Pond here.”

A large transparent tank filled with writhing seven-star eels was brought into the ecclesia. The priest, expression solemn, lifted the struggling child toward the tank.

“Wait!” Baola tried to stand from her wheelchair, but failed. Her voice cracked with desperation, tears welling in her eyes.
“He’s still a boy! He can’t be a witch!”

“Please, don’t judge him like that!”

“Judging witches by their gender is a superficial view,” the priest retorted, turning toward her with a twisted, triumphant smile. His cold gaze was almost enough to make her scalp tingle, but his tone remained compassionate.
“He is my child too, but for the greater good, I am willing to sacrifice him."

"Baola, you are a holy woman—you understand this, don't you?"

With that, the priest moved forward, gripping the child in one hand, kissed his cross, whispered a reverent Amen, and prepared to throw the child into the tank.

Behind him, Baola's pale purple eyes darkened to a deep violet. Her breathing quickened. Scales sprouted across her face, her body stretched, and tears streamed from her eyes.
"Let him go."

The priest turned, horror flickering across his face as he stepped back.

Baola fixed the priest and bishop with a hoarse voice:
"I confess. I confess my sins."

"I seduced the priest that night. I am the witch. I stripped to lure him."

"I am the witch! I have the [witch's heart]!" she cried, voice cracking. "But this child is innocent. You must let him go!"

The bishop nearly screamed his command,
"Seize this wicked witch!"

The video abruptly ends here.

Quan Zhendong glanced around at everyone present.
"This is a disgrace to the Saints Patrol. I hope you all learn from this and do not follow Baola's path."

"Baola has now defected to the corrupted witches of the East. If you encounter her, make it your priority to kill her. The Order will reward you handsomely."

He then shifted to a more instructive tone.
"Now, let me introduce you to the ways out."

Quan Zhendong smiled faintly.
"Despite what happened with Baola, your best chance for advancement remains the Virgin Patrol. However, the Virgin Patrol is the most dangerous—closest to the devil, the most demanding, and extremely difficult to enter."

"But the Holy See stands at the very top. If you join the Holy Virgin Patrol, you will receive the best treatment possible."

"Besides that, there are two other options: fixed affiliation or entry into the company witch post. You can learn more about those later."

He paused briefly, lowering his voice.
"There is a fourth way—a secret channel, not publicly known."

"That is the Island of the Holy Virgin, also called the City in the Sky."

At the mention of the City in the Sky, the burly Holy See security guards exchanged vague, knowing smiles, while others frowned and hesitated.

"The City in the Sky is an island suspended high above the kingdom, blessed with beautiful scenery and tranquility. Women sent there don't have to do any work involving absorbing eels. They live and work normally—like a Noah's Ark, a pure land created by the Holy See for the purest women."

Quan Zhendong's expression softened as he continued slowly.
"Sooner or later, the witch's plague must end. The [Witch's Heart] trial has shown that children born to women who have swallowed eels are no longer safe, regardless of gender. They may possess the [Witch's Heart], perpetuating this terrible curse."

"For humanity's survival, we've created the Sky City—an island, or perhaps an airship—suspended high in the air where no eel can reach. Pure women, untainted by eels, are sent there to live and reproduce with pure men. This way, they bear normal children, ensuring the world's continuation."

A woman cautiously raised her hand.
"Excuse me—on the City in the Sky, these pure men are...?"

"Men of the Order, of course," Quan Zhendong answered immediately. "All men of pure faith who belong to the Holy See may set foot on the Island of the Sky to find their Eve."

The woman bit her lip nervously.
"And if a man is not a member of the Order—if, hypothetically, I have a husband who isn't in the Order—is he eligible to go to the island?"

Quan Zhendong's eyes briefly darkened before softening into a kind smile.
"Those men could be sons of witches, very impure."

He gently stroked her head.
“Break it off with him. Only by uniting with a man of the Order will you remain holy and be safe from the hidden witch’s heart that corrupts others.”

The woman asked softly, a cross resting on her chest.
“What does it take to get to the island?”

“Ah, I’m sure you’re all curious,” Quan Zhendong said warmly, looking at the group.
“The Island in the Sky is truly a Noah’s Ark, created by the Holy See for anyone seeking escape. But our power to create such a refuge is limited.”

He sighed regretfully.
“We want to save the world and rescue everyone from this witch-polluted land—but even Noah’s Ark, built by God, couldn’t save everyone. Only a limited number may go to the Sky City.”

“To protect this pure land from contamination, strict criteria are in place for women who are sent there. We hope you understand—women are more susceptible to eel corruption, and this pure land is far too important to risk.”

“But this isn’t discrimination. Quite the opposite—we treat women favorably. Only women may reside permanently in the Sky City. Men can visit, but only for one week before they must return.”

Quan Zhendong looked upward, then back to the group.
“Women who qualify for the Sky City must meet three conditions:”

“First, be under 25 years old.”

“Second, have no male or female relatives with a history of prosecution as witches or witch offspring.”

“Third, never have swallowed an eel.”

He smirked slightly.
“Of course, there’s a fourth, unofficial condition. It’s not required, but if met, it increases your chance of being recognized as pure.”

“We know the devil often corrupts through evil sexual relationships. Women without such relationships are less likely to be contaminated.”

“So, the fourth condition is: women who remain celibate are given priority."

"Now, let us all begin choosing our futures."

After a brief pause, the women in the warehouse began moving in all directions, Bai Liu hidden among them. The Order's guards chatted casually in a mix of English and Chinese.

"Why aren't there any resident men on Sky Island anymore? Wasn't there one? The prettiest, most… whorish one?"
"Heh heh heh."

"You've been whoring?"
"How dare you! He's noble—purple eyes, son of the Virgin, top rank on Sky City. Only the biggest shots, bishops, and those who can 'serve' him get a chance. Not us lowly minions."

"I heard his father forced him to be classified as female because he was the son of a witch. They put him on the Sky City roster, made him start receiving guests at twelve years old, and every night there's a queue. I don't know how he endures it."

Bai Liu hesitated as he approached, then looked up and asked, "What's his name?"

The two clerical guards tried to ignore him but stopped, uncertain, upon seeing his face.
"What? You want to go to the island too?"

"I do," Bai Liu smiled, repeating, "What's the name of this son of the Virgin?"

"No one gave him a real name," the guards answered, exchanging looks. "On Sky City, no one uses their real face or name. Everyone gets a code name—usually a playing card."

"This son of the Virgin is known as Hearts. Everyone calls him Queen Hearts."

Chapter End Notes

If every man died, I think the world would be a better place.

City in the Sky

Meanwhile, in Sky City.

[System Alert: Player Hearts has logged into the game.]

[Player Hearts gains in-game status: Sons of the Virgin]

Hearts, sleeping on the couch, logged into the game and slowly opened his eyes. His pupils contracted for a moment as he took in the sight of the familiar burgundy flannel tent draped before him—almost like an irritated animal, instinctively drawing a weapon. In his case, a playing card, which he swiftly slashed through the tent.

The sharp edges of the card tore the fabric into pieces, scattering like a shower of blood. Across the table lay a pair of playing cards, intertwined ambiguously. The lower card was the Queen of Hearts—the symbol for Hearts himself.

The card on top usually represented the person who had stayed the night.

After reading the instructions, Hearts relaxed, rose, and slowly ran two fingers over the Queen of Hearts card before lowering his gaze and letting out a lazy chuckle.

“So, this is the game map.”

Reality, Heresy Authority — Third Bureau, 2 PM

A helicopter touched down quietly on the roof of the Third Bureau. A group of men dressed in black bodyguard uniforms stepped out, carrying briefcases. No sooner had they landed on the third floor than members of the Heresy Authority surrounded them, guns raised.

Originally, the Three Bureaus were built on a small island in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. But when the island sank, Georgia—the current head of the Three Bureaus—used her own funds to rebuild and expand them on a different coast, closer to the original site.

Now, the Three Bureaus are heavily guarded and house a large number of dangerous heretics. Their primary role is to secure these captured heretics and lease some of the safer ones to countries that have agreed to accept them.

The men in black raised their hands in a gesture of surrender to show they posed no threat. One carefully produced a reservation ticket and said cautiously in English, “Hello, we have a prior reservation to lease a heretic and have already paid a deposit.”

A Heresy Authority officer glanced at the ticket, slowly lowered his gun, and gestured for them to follow.

The group exhaled deeply and trailed behind the officers, descending to the reception area on the ground floor.

One member of the Heresy Authority knocked on the captain’s office door. A serious, dignified male voice replied softly but politely, “Come in.”

The man holding the reservation ticket pushed open the door and stepped inside.

He took a deep breath at the sight of Georgia seated behind the desk. No matter how many times he had seen him, Georgia’s striking presence still caught him off guard—especially here, where the somber institutional atmosphere seemed at odds with the commanding figure before him.

“Greetings, Captain Georgia.” The man bowed respectfully and sat across from him, sliding the reservation ticket forward. “We’re here to collect the previously reserved low-risk heretic—the Seven Star Eel.”

Georgia’s eyes scanned the ticket but made no move. Instead, he folded his hands calmly in front of him. “I need to re-examine your rental qualifications.”

Instantly anxious, the man replied with an accent, “Why another inspection? We’ve already passed three rounds of checks!”

Georgia’s impassive expression calmed him. He realized a hasty attitude would not sway the discreet head of the Third Bureau.

“Captain Georgia, the water in our country is severely polluted. Even after multiple purification processes, boiling it for consumption still harms everyone.”

The man pulled out his phone and played a news clip for Georgia.

"...Water pollution is worsening. This year alone, twenty-three infants and children have died from drinking unpurified water. People protest daily, demanding government solutions."

"Hospitals and food services have nearly halted due to the crisis. Suicide and mortality rates rise daily, as this invisible epidemic spreads. With no recourse, people have turned to major sects and rising ecclesiastical powers."

"Many pray to God for relief, but we all know that's impossible..."

Suddenly, amid the broadcast, a voice hissed wildly in the background: "Who says it's impossible?! God must fix this!"

"Won't God help us?"

The presenter was soon dragged offstage amid chaos, and the video cut out.

Georgia's eyes twitched slightly but he remained silent.

The man pressed on bitterly, "Captain Georgia, I'm sure you've read the reports. The spread of an orange-level medium-risk heresy is increasing mortality. According to Joint International Regulations, if a heresy exists that can resolve this crisis, it must be leased to us!"

"This is to save the innocent people of our country!"

Finally speaking, Georgia glanced coolly at the ecclesiastical insignia on the man's sleeve. "We generally lease only to government departments, not to the Holy See."

"But you see the situation now." The man sighed. "The people distrust the government and trust only the Holy See. The government is keen to bring the Holy See under its control."

He smiled haughtily. "The Holy See wouldn't have the Authority's appointment tickets without government backing. You can consider the Holy See as a government department now, given its popular support."

Georgia remained unmoved.

The man's patience thinned but he held back. Slowly, he slid a hefty cheque across the table. "If this is about the deposit, we can renegotiate."

—That was blatant bribery.

Georgia lifted his gaze, cold as ice. “You think I’m short of money?”

The man immediately retracted the cheque, smiling awkwardly. “Of course not. I know your status—you’re the heir to the Kingdom of Gold.”

He had clearly made a grave error trying to bribe someone who literally owned uncountable wealth.

Georgia, the Grand Prince of the Land of Gold, had never asked the General Administration for a single penny to rebuild the Third Bureau—larger than a sea island and still expanding. How could he accept a bribe smaller than a fingernail cap?

“Don’t mention that title. I’m just a civilian now,” Georgia said in an unusual tone. “My kingdom is dead.”

The man nodded, “Yes, yes.”

Indeed, the kingdom had fallen, but the gold was still Georgia’s.

“Is it true you can’t lease the heretic to us?” The man’s eagerness spilled out despite the silence. “We’ll return the water once the contamination is cleared. I can sit here all day expressing sincerity to pass your test—I could spend ten years. But every hour children in my kingdom die from polluted water!”

“You wouldn’t want those children to suffer as you once did—watching your people perish and your country die, right?”

Finally, Georgia moved. He looked up, stood, and said, “Show me the lease application again.”

The man exhaled deeply and handed over the document. After a careful review, Georgia nodded. “It meets the requirements.”

“Come with me.”

Georgia led the way, walking briskly but calmly. “The Seven Star Eel is a low-risk heretic recently captured. It’s not very dangerous and easy to contain. We’ve discovered it dissolves many pollutants in water and has a unique purifying effect.”

“When this report arrived, I sent notices to regions where water pollution exceeded low-risk heresy danger levels, suggesting heretics could be leased to address pollution."

Glancing back, Georgia said, "This is the Seven Star Eel."

Before the man, two eels coiled in separate tanks. He struggled to mask his greedy excitement. "This low-risk heretic will solve our water pollution, right?"

"Yes." Georgia nodded, his tone turning serious. "But even low-risk heretics are still heretics."

"The only hazard of the Seven Star Eel is reproduction. It breeds exceptionally fast. If males and females share a tank, by morning it will be filled with offspring."

"That's why we lease only male eels separately, to prevent complications."

The man's eager eyes dimmed. After a pause, he cautiously asked, "Can't you lease the female?"

"No." Georgia refused firmly. "The eel dissolves only inside a human body. While the resulting liquid isn't overly harmful, it causes mutations."

"Interestingly, dissolution depends on gender: male eels dissolve only in male internal cavities; female eels only in female internal cavities."

The man looked shocked, "The internal male cavity?!"

Georgia glanced over him lightly. "Saliva dissolves females better; intestinal fluids dissolve males better."

The man chuckled nervously and clutched his hips. "Captain Georgia, don't you find this conversation embarrassing?"

"Embarrassing?" Georgia's gaze returned to the eels. "If it takes this much to save my hometown, what's so embarrassing about it?"

Regaining composure, Georgia added, "Male Seven Star Eels can't reproduce alone, so leasing them is safe. No need to worry."

"But one eel isn't enough to purify quickly." The man stared at the female eel. "Can't you lend us the female as well?"

"No." Georgia's tone was cold. "The female is unstable. We've observed its breeding—it recently produced almost exclusively females and is poised to expand rapidly."

The man's eyes lit up. "All female offspring?"

—Wouldn't that be enough to solve the problem by itself?

"So, the mothership is not leased," Georgia stated simply, then glanced over at the men. "Come over for the leasing process."

"Oh—yes, of course." The man reluctantly tore his fond gaze away from the female eel. "Captain Georgia, you asked me to make a call to inform my country and explain that only one eel was borrowed, so we can prioritize the region for use."

It was a perfectly reasonable request. Georgia nodded. "Go ahead."

She returned to her office, while the man headed to the helicopter landing pad on the top floor of the Heretic Bureau to make the call.

Inside the office, Georgia sat frozen in thought, jaw clenched, eyes fixed on the water contamination report the man had just handed him. A team member beside him noticed his expression.

"Captain, are you still unsure? There's nothing wrong with the procedures he followed."

"And it's only a low-risk heretic, right?" someone else added.

Georgia frowned. "I know."

He hesitated, then said, "I just thought…"

The team member pressed, "Thought what?"

Georgia narrowed his eyes and glanced at the man's profile. "It feels like too much of a coincidence." He lowered his voice. "One minute, the country has a serious water pollution outbreak, and the next, they're leasing a low-risk heretic to solve the problem?"

"It's like…"

Something unseen was setting them up.

On the top floor, inside the helicopter and away from the Heretic Bureau staff, the man's face twisted in barely-contained excitement the moment the call connected.

“Hey, I saw the Seven-Star Eel.”

“Is it really like you said? That once dissolved, its bones can be refined like mineral ore and used to forge weapons?”

“The Holy See needs weapons. The sacred minerals are dwindling, but if we can get our hands on the Seven-Star Eel, it’s an endless resource —we could arm the entire Holy See.”

“…Money isn’t a problem. We’ve got backing from the major plutocrats…”

“But there’s one issue,” he said, suddenly lowering his voice as he cast a dark glance toward the Third Council building. “The head of the Third Council only lets me borrow male specimens. Without a female, there’s no way to reproduce.”

The bishop’s hoarse laughter crackled over the line.

“Father Quan Zhendong, don’t worry. God will bless you.”

“What do I need to do?” Quan Zhendong asked eagerly.

“We’ve been blessed by the gods. The divine relics in our possession rival the heretics in power,” the bishop said with a rasping chuckle. “They’ve helped us pull off more than one theft.”

Quan frowned. “But the Third Bureau has tight security. If the Matrix goes missing, I’ll be shot down before I even get airborne.”

“No need to steal the Matrix,” the bishop said coolly. “Don’t you remember what the director said? The females reproduce quickly— and the next generation are all female.”

“All we need to do is speed up the breeding, then steal the female offspring. Pair her with the male we leased and—”

The bishop let out a satisfied sigh. “God loves the world. The Holy See is glorious.”

Quan Zhendong laughed, eyes gleaming as he looked down at the Bureau for the Treatment of Heretics.

“God loves the world. The Holy See is glorious.”

3:00 a.m.

Quan Zhendong practically ran up to the helicopter, breathless, frenzied, as he stared at the two eels now entwined in the tank.

“Got it, Bishop!”

“Well done,” the bishop laughed, clearly intoxicated—glasses clinked faintly over the line. “Send the eels back and come relax on the sub-island.”

“You’re on the sub-island?!” Quan’s excitement instantly gave way to panic. “Are you insane? Have you forgotten what happened to the people on the main island?”

“Sky City’s original island was taken over by the Empress. Everyone there is her slave or pawn now.”

“She’ll find out about your little hideout behind her back eventually. When she does, she’ll torture you. How could you go there?”

There was a long pause. The bishop's breathing grew heavy.

“…You’re right,” he muttered. “I was too caught up in the success. The Queen has been busy lately, hasn’t toured the islands… I’ll get off the island right away.”

“Don’t ever go back to the Sky City sub-island,” Quan warned harshly. “If you don’t want our great ecclesiastical cause destroyed by that lunatic—that Queen—once she finds out.”

After hanging up, all of Quan Zhendong’s earlier euphoria had drained away. He slumped back in his seat, drenched in cold sweat. It took a long while before he dared unlock his phone and swipe through the photo albums.

He hesitated at one.

“Queen’s Album.”

His finger hovered above it, trembling, before he tapped.

The first image was of a breathtakingly beautiful boy, no older than 13 or 14, with glowing purple eyes. He stared lazily, coldly at the photographer, regal and untouchable.

Quan's breath hitched. Unconsciously, he clutched the phone to his chest and murmured, almost entranced:

"…Queen."

Every man who had ever met the Queen reacted the same way.

Twenty-five years ago, a dancer rose to fame in their country. She was renowned for her interpretation of Salome—at just nineteen, she mesmerized audiences with her performances. Her home life had been idyllic: loving parents, a kind upbringing. She soon opened her own dance studio, and during the height of her fame, her first national tour was a charity effort—all proceeds donated to those in need.

A devout believer, she was soon called the Holy Virgin.

Said to be of foreign descent, she had radiant violet eyes and an angelic smile. Though she played eerie, witch-like roles on stage, in real life, she was a gentle, bashful girl who accepted flowers with shy smiles. The contrast made people adore her all the more.

But during one charity tour, disaster struck.

A priest forced himself on her, then claimed it was she who had seduced him. He offered "proof"—photos of her smiling on stage, her hand in his after a show. Pictures where she merely looked at him like she did everyone.

But in a nation that revered priests, the public took his word. He claimed he left the priesthood for her, declaring his love and faithless devotion.

Public opinion erupted: Why won't you marry him? He gave up everything for you. You're having his child.

She refused.

Even as a believer, she wouldn't marry the man who violated her. The pressure grew unbearable, especially once she was discovered to be pregnant.

In their country, life is sacred from conception. The Virgin gave birth to the child.

The nation turned harsher: Why won't you marry him now? Girls of faith urged her: If it were me, I'd marry him. He loves you. He sacrificed for you. Isn't that enough?

But she stood firm—until a bishop appeared.

A man of higher standing, purer status. He too claimed to love her. He boldly declared his feelings, confessing:

"I first saw you at 14, performing Salome. I was captivated, but restrained myself—we were both meant for God. But now… may I ask you to stay with me?"

The nation rejoiced. The Virgin relented. She married the bishop and left the country, finally finding peace abroad.

The Bishop seemed to have truly loved the Virgin.
His home was filled with portraits of her as a teenage girl, taken when she first appeared on stage. Every one of her early performances had been recorded and replayed endlessly—he would watch them with something close to reverence, even obsession.

"You were so beautiful," the Bishop once exclaimed. "I'm sorry I didn't meet you when you were fourteen. I would have courted you like a madman."
He smiled, wistful. "It's a shame you were already eighteen when I first saw you on tour."

The Virgin felt a strange unease, staring at her too-young self frozen in one of the Bishop's photographs. But the tenderness in his voice made her lower her guard.

"Would you like my child?" she asked softly.

"Of course," he said, almost playfully. "She'll be as beautiful as you. Why wouldn't I?"

Later, as she gazed at the infant's room—lined wall to wall with pink clothes, dolls, and glittering accessories—she hesitated. "You seem to really like girls?"

"Yes," the Bishop replied, smiling gently. "Especially girls as beautiful as you were at fourteen."

"And if the child..." She looked up at him, her voice tentative, "is a boy?"

He fell silent. The light faded from his eyes briefly, but then he forced a smile. "No. It will be a girl. I expect it to be."

"You could have the gender checked," she suggested.

"No." He gently rested his hand on her belly. "I won't disturb her descent with instruments. Have you forgotten? In our doctrine, it's considered disrespectful to test a child before birth. It disrupts their arrival."
His voice softened into a murmur. "They'll fly away from our hands like angels."

Time passed. The baby was born.

It was a boy.

The Virgin would never forget the look on the Bishop's face. Disappointment hung over him like a shroud—as if the long-awaited gift, so lovingly anticipated, had revealed itself to be a mistake.
It was like biting into a fruit you'd waited forever to taste, only to find it was made of plastic.

"I'll take the child," he said coldly. "You will stay here."

"Where are you taking him?!" the Virgin cried out.

"The Island in the Sky," he answered with indifference. "A Holy Land constructed by the Holy See. Perfect for a newborn. He'll be raised in the teachings of the Lord. There are priests up there who prefer boys. They'll educate him properly."

The Virgin stared at him, stunned. "What is that place?"

The Bishop's eyes roamed her disheveled hair, her no-longer-youthful face, the hardened expression in her eyes. He sighed, regretful.

"You're no longer the maiden I loved. I can let go. If you wish, you can come to the island too."

He smiled again. "You've given me your best years. Now, you can return to the island, rededicate your body to God. The Order will still welcome you."
"There are still many who like you."

The City in the Sky.

No one could have imagined such filth could float above the clouds.

When the Virgin first arrived, the Bishop—once again in full regalia—greeted her with a strange, theatrical tone.

"Amazing, isn't it?" he said. "There are floating islands in this world. We bought this one from a mysterious gentleman. He had all kinds of magical artifacts, though the price was... excessive."

"You can't scout this island easily. It requires an invitation to even land here."

He continued, "The Sky City runs on a membership system. Without a referral from a senior member of the Order, you cannot enter."

"Those who come here either have devout faith—or something valuable to offer in support of it."

The Virgin recognized faces from television—powerful people from across nations, walking past her, each surrounded by ecclesiastical attendants, conversing quietly.

"They don't have enough status to access the inner perimeter," the Bishop noted. "Only the truly important enter there."

"Inner circle?" she asked.

"To reach the inner circle, a simple referral isn't enough. You need a different kind of card."

She tensed. "What kind of card?"

The Bishop's smile widened, and then—slowly, deliberately—he spat out the word:

"A person."

He stroked her hair with an almost fatherly affection.

"Those entering the inner circle must be closely bound—otherwise, betrayal is inevitable."

"So we exchange our most cherished person... our business card, if you will. We let others experience what we've experienced, so we are united. Loyal. Unbreakable."

He laughed softly, gazing at her vacant expression. "I once loved you too much to use you that way."

"But now, you're perfect for it."

"Of course, you can refuse. The Lord is merciful."
"Then I'll just change cards. The boy is close enough to me. I don't prefer boys, but others do. There are already several boys on the island."

He leaned in.

"None are as beautiful as your son. I doubt anyone would turn him down."

He studied her expression, amused. "Thinking of rebelling? Don't. The Inquisition reaches everywhere."
"If you disappear here, no one will ever find out. The boy will still be mine—and still be my card."

"Of course," he added, almost cheerfully, "his biological father is also on this island, with his own business card."

The Virgin said nothing. She gazed out at the floating island, then closed her eyes.

Years passed. The boy grew up.

He lived alone in a vast villa on the island, forbidden to leave.
By birth, he should have been a devout child—his father a Bishop, his mother a sanctified Virgin.

Instead, he hated the Church with a visceral disgust.

His father was distant, even cruel. The boy often feared the man might one day kill him—for something as small as cutting a favored rose.

But his mother...
His mother was the kindest, most beautiful person in the world.

She wasn't always home, but when she was, she hugged him tightly, told him stories about distant lands and magic, and smiled so warmly that he forgave her absences without hesitation.

She never told him stories from the Church.

"Why not?" he once asked.

She paused. "Because I want you to believe in what you choose, not what others do."

"And what should I believe in?"

She smiled at him, eyes soft. "Love. Respect. Kindness."

"What good is it to believe in those?" he asked, skeptical.

Her gaze turned distant. "Believing in them brought me pain. I suffered for them. Most people only use such words to justify hurting others."
Then she looked at him, radiant. "But faith in them also brought me you."

"You are the best thing my beliefs have ever given me."

His mother was a dancer—her Dance of the Sevenfold Veil was the most beautiful thing he'd ever seen. She still performed it, often.

Before leaving, she would dress beautifully, then turn to wave at him from a field of flowers, her violet eyes sparkling.

"I'm going dancing!" she'd call.

And from the balcony, he would shout back, "I'll wait for you!"

She always returned late—sometimes with his father—her clothes torn, her eyes distant.
She would bathe, dress again, and come to hug him.

"The dance is over for today," she'd whisper.

Sometimes, he saw bruises on her skin.
"Dancing is too hard," he once whispered. "Can you stop dancing?"

She was quiet for a long time. Then she smiled. "Mummy has to work too. If I don't dance, how will I earn money?"

He declared, "Then I'll dance."

"I've watched your tapes so many times—I know how. I'll go instead!"

She laughed softly. "You're too young. I was twelve when I first went on stage. How old are you?"

Twelve.

He remembered that age.

When he turned twelve, he thought, he would dance for her.
So she wouldn't have to anymore.

As the days passed, he began to sneak around when she was out dancing. He would slip into her dresses, carefully recreate the makeup she wore, then mimic her movements and expressions to the rhythm of the music playing from her old tape.

He was growing up—slowly, surely—and becoming more and more beautiful.

She started to look at him differently, her gaze growing confused, almost panicked. Often, she'd bark at him in a flurry of nerves:

"Go outside! Roll in the flower field!"

"Wipe that makeup off!"

"Stop playing with flowers! You're a boy! You shouldn't play with those things!"

But when he was eleven, he placed a flower playfully behind his ear, twirled around in front of her, tilted his head, and asked, "Does it look good?"—for the first time, she looked at him with something like fear.

She broke into hysterics.

"Didn't I tell you? No girly stuff!"

"You're a boy, not a girl!!!"

The yell stunned him into stillness. The flower slipped from his head, falling and scattering into broken petals at his feet.

"I'm sorry..." she whispered, slowly crouching down. She covered her tear-filled eyes, voice trembling. "I shouldn't have yelled at you. I just… I just don't understand. I've told you so many times, why do you still like those girly things?"

"You're obviously a boy..." she added, lowering her hands and looking up at him through teary eyes.

He pressed his lips together and said stubbornly, "But I don't like being a boy. I hate them—all those boys. They treat you so badly."

He was thinking of the way her male visitors—the bishop, the men from the church—looked at her with that smug, knowing smile. Their eyes roved over her like she was something less.

He hated the way they looked at her.

She was the best person in the world, danced more beautifully than anyone he had ever seen. They were trash—unworthy of even being near her.

“I want to be like you,” he said. “Not like them.”

Tears slid down her cheeks. She gave a shaky smile, sniffled, then raised a pinky finger toward him.

“It’s my fault,” she said gently. “I shouldn’t have thought you could just do whatever you wanted. But… make one promise to me.”

“What is it?” he asked.

She leaned in and said quietly, “Don’t pretend to be a girl when your father’s home.”

He nodded without hesitation.

On his twelfth birthday, after confirming that his ridiculous bishop of a father had gone off to some place called Sky City and wouldn’t be returning that day, he turned to her excitedly and asked:

“Can I dance for you?”

“I’ve learned it all! I’ll dance for you!”

“Oh?” she laughed, clapping her hands. “That good? Alright, I’ll be the judge.”

He changed into the same costume she had worn in her youth. He applied makeup with solemn care, layered on a sevenfold sarong, and began to dance—perfectly mirroring her movements from the old tape.

“Do I look good?” he asked as he twirled, beaming, his violet eyes shining with excitement. “Did I do it right?”

“You look beautiful,” she said softly. Her eyes were glassy with tears, but she smiled. “Even more beautiful than I was back then.”

“I thought so,” said a voice.

A deep, male voice. Quiet, and burning just beneath the surface.

At the doorway stood his bishop father—who wasn’t supposed to be there. He stared with a slow, sick smile.

“It’s quite beautiful,” the man said. “Twelve years old and just as perfect as I imagined.”

And in that moment, for the first time in his life, he saw a look of absolute despair on her face.

He gave his bishop-father a sour look—one that would normally earn a sharp reprimand. But today, the bishop was in a particularly good mood. He crouched down to look him in the eye, smiling warmly and kindly.

“You look lovely in that dress today. Your mother was right—you dance even better than she did.”

“Twelve years old...” the Bishop sighed, voice clipped. “What a wonderful age. Just right for dancing.”

He smiled and asked, “Would you like to dance at Sky City? It's the perfect place for someone like you.”

Sky City was where she used to go to dance. He had always wanted to help her so she wouldn't have to work so hard. His eyes lit up. He nodded without hesitation.

“I’ll go!”

“No!!!”

Her scream came at the same time as his reply, shrill and frantic.

Tears welled in her eyes as she stared at the Bishop. Her voice trembled.

“You promised me. You said you’d never take him to the island as long as I was still the card!”

The Bishop gave her a cursory glance, his gaze sliding over her body with thinly veiled distaste. Still, his tone remained polite, even apologetic.

“Let me see... how long have you held that position?”
He tilted his head, feigning thought.
“I did keep my word, as agreed.”

“But,” he added smoothly, “you’re getting too old to be a business card, even if you're still beautiful.”

His calm smile didn’t waver.

“You know how it is. People don’t like old cards. Your beauty’s carried you far, but after all—"

"You're thirty-three."

The bishop's gaze slid to the boy, still veiled in gauze, and his voice turned soft with satisfaction.

"It's time for a new card."
"Will you dance for me on the island tonight? For your mother's sake?"

He agreed.

So the Bishop took him to the island, just like in the story of Salome. Only this time, he played Salome—dancing for his so-called father before returning home.

So this was dancing, he thought later, soaking in the bath. No wonder her clothes were always torn when she came back.
He didn't understand it—there didn't seem to be anything special about it. Still, once he was done, he ran to find her with the same joy she used to have after dancing.

The bastard bishop had told him she'd never have to dance again if he went to the island in her place, dancing for different people in the evenings.

He agreed without hesitation.

After all, it was hard work, he thought with a small, grown-up sigh. But now he could do it. He could dance for her.

She wouldn't have to suffer anymore.

Smiling at the thought, he knocked on her door like he always did, ready to hear her stories.

But when she opened the door, he froze.

She was lying in bed, more haggard than ever. Her gaze flicked to his pajamas, to the bruises hidden underneath. She took two sharp, shaking breaths.

She tried to smile at him as she always did—pretending everything was fine—but this time she couldn't.

She covered her face and sobbed.

“I’m sorry!!!”

She threw her arms around him, clinging tightly to his back, sobbing as if it would tear her apart.

“I’m so sorry!!! I never should’ve brought you into this world!”

“It’s all my fault!!!”

He stood there, stunned, as her tears soaked through his shoulders.

There were many things he couldn’t understand. Like why she seemed even more broken now, even though he had taken her place.

Every time he came down from the island, no matter how clean he was, she always knew. And little by little, she withered.

“I’m not working hard,” he said awkwardly. “Don’t worry about me. It’s just dancing. Everyone says I’m the best dancer on the island.”

She looked at him with a complicated expression, like he was a child who understood nothing. But she still smiled and whispered:

“You’re the most beautiful.”

“You’re the most precious.”

No matter how much he tried to comfort her, how hard he worked, she faded with each passing day—like she was slowly dying of something incurable.

Eventually, when he was fourteen, she became truly ill.

In just two years, her brightness had dimmed into a shadow.

He stayed at her bedside, forcing a cold, composed expression so she wouldn’t see his fear.

She was pale on the hospital bed, but her grip on his hand was gentle.

“I never knew what I was supposed to do,” she said, smiling faintly.
“I didn’t want to be a burden, but I think... I think I’ve always been your faith, right?”

“Like you were mine.”

“I’m afraid if I leave, you’ll be lost. But if I stay, you’ll keep going in the wrong direction."

Her eyes welled with tears, but her smile was free.

"But God's freed me. He made the choice for me."
"Leave Sky City. Go. You dance so beautifully—there's a world beyond this place waiting to be your stage."

"There are people out there who will see your dance and treasure it. Not just monsters. Real people. I've seen them."

She passed away.

One quiet afternoon, he sorted through her things and found a photo: she was sitting on the Bishop's knee, smiling brightly in the sunlight.

She looked so happy—so unaware of what awaited her.

He hated the photo. But it was one of the few where she smiled like that. He nearly tore it in two but held back. He couldn't destroy the only smile she left behind.

So he kept it—disgusted.

He buried her in a field of flowers.

Then he stood there, in the daylight, for a long, long time.

And then, suddenly, he ran.

Tears poured down his face as he fled.

She told him to go far away—so he would.

But he failed.

The Bishop quickly caught him. Papal ships surrounded the island—there was no escape.

He had always lived on the floating island above the sea, and now that she was gone, he had nowhere to run. No one to hold on to.

On his sixty-seventh failed escape attempt, after another brutal beating, he was thrown back onto the island and forced to "receive guests."

As they dragged him to the stage, he looked at the Bishop's back and, for the first time, truly wanted to kill him—to pick up the silver fork of a nearby candelabra and stab him until he stopped moving.

But he knew it was impossible. The Bishop was always surrounded by three or four armed Papists.

Just then, the Bishop's usual arrogance cracked.

"What? That gentleman is here?"

He barked orders in a rush:
"He doesn't like outsiders. Clear the inner circle. Empty it completely. I'll receive him alone!"

The Inner Circle—those were the highest guests. Each one powerful beyond belief.

Now they were being dismissed like dogs, all for one unknown man.

Even he, hands and feet bound, was tossed aside and forgotten.

In over two years on the island, he had never seen such treatment.

The Bishop, head bowed, welcomed the visitor with deference.

He turned his head, straining to see.

The man wore a dark cloak and boots, a long black whip trailing the ground in one hand, and a ghostly mask on his face.

Guests of the Inner Circle always wore masks and voice changers, to hide their identities—and their shame.

But the regulars always recognized each other. And this man was not a regular.

"I haven't been on this island in a long time."
The man's voice was soft, threaded with a quiet laughter. It buzzed faintly through the voice modulator in his mask, not quite audible.
"You've turned it into a stage, haven't you?"

Before him, the bishop didn't dare lift his head. Cold sweat clung to his skin.
"We're grateful to you for selling the island to us."

"No need to be nervous," the man said lightly. "I'm not here to trouble the buyer. Since I sold this hover island to you, you're the owner, and I'm just a guest."

He smiled beneath the mask.
"I only came up today because I stumbled into something sad. I thought… maybe I could find someone to keep me company awhile."

"I heard you work on a membership basis," he added. "But I don't have a business card. No one referred me either. So forgive me for just walking in."

The bishop shook his head frantically, eyes shining.
"You don't need any of that!"
"What kind of companion are you looking for? We have everything here."

The man chuckled softly.
"Someone good at imitation."

The bishop and the man crumpled on the floor both froze—shocked.

—There was no better mimic on this island than him.

He'd been steeped in roleplay for two years, trained to replicate a person's essence on sight. Given a photo, he could instantly channel the feeling they carried.

So, though still aching from a recent beating, the bishop dragged him up again, had him washed, and—at the strange guest's request—sent him to the room.

The bishop warned him harshly:
"Behave yourself. If you displease this gentleman… I'll dig up her bones from under the flower field and crush them."

So he sat there, suppressing the restless heat pulsing through his body, praying the night would pass quickly.

But the guest didn't move fast. Instead of rushing him, he calmly removed his cloak, laid a poker card on the table, then took a seat on the wide sofa opposite him.

The room was dim, veiled in burgundy flannel. Thick red candles flickered faintly in the sconces. By their haze, he could just barely make out the markings on the card—

—A spade. He couldn't make out the number.

The guest remained shadowed—only a silhouette, cross-legged, visible through the drapery and candlelight. Black leather gloves. A black bone whip resting carelessly on one knee. Both were wet from the rain outside.

He wasn't surprised. Some guests brought their own "tools." He steeled himself for what would come.

But then the man asked something unexpected.

"Do you like water?" the guest asked softly.

He hesitated.
"…I guess I do."

The man smiled.
"Me too."

"But the child I'm closest to… hates water. Even though he was born in it."
"I gave him life, but he couldn't form a soul—couldn't take my place like I'd hoped."
"And the moment he finally grew a soul… he left me."

"I watched him grow, but he never looked back at me."

"It's a sad thing to watch," the guest said, handing him a set of clothes gently.
"Tonight, he'll betray me for good, to offer his soul to someone else."
"Would you… play his part, and keep me company?"

He stood, confused. He had no idea what role this man wanted him to perform. Still, he stepped behind the curtain and changed.

The outfit was a shabby orphanage uniform, clearly meant for a teenager. A bandage crossed one eye.

The more he looked, the more baffled he felt. As he dressed and stepped out, he wondered—was this guy into some strange kink?

"Is this how I wear it?" he asked.

The guest smiled.
"Yes. You look perfect."

He pursed his lips, then moved toward the man's knees out of habit—but the guest's voice stopped him.

“Don’t come closer.”
The tone was flat, almost lazy.
“Just sit. And don’t turn around.”

Still confused, he asked,
“…So what should I look at?”

The man handed him a book.
“Read this.”

It was styled like a fairytale, but the pages were filled with gruesome murders. It had been torn apart and stitched back together. On the cover, in faded letters:
The Long, Thin, Ghostly Book of Murder.

So he sat half-curled, reading under the dim candlelight while the guest silently watched.

After a while, he couldn’t hold back.
“I’m just… supposed to read?”

“Don’t look at me,” the guest replied flatly.
“He never looked at me. You’re playing him—so don’t look at me either.”

“Just read the book.”

Rain pattered outside.
Inside, he sat reading a fragmented book of horrors, the candlelight wavering. The burgundy drapes swayed gently between them.

For a moment, the room felt like a dream.

It was as if he were back in a little courtyard, lounging on a recliner while she watched him read from a storybook. Not a hired performer in a crumbling room.

Time passed—he didn’t know how much. Long enough to grow drowsy.

“You’re sleepy, aren’t you?” the man asked, smiling.

He jolted.
“No!” he insisted, embarrassed.

“Do you have any other requests, guest?” he asked, suppressing a yawn.

The guest chuckled. Hearing it made him blush. He quickly sat up straight.
“Do you… have any other requests?”

—It’s time to dance, isn’t it?

But the guest only said,
“No. The night is over. You’ve made it quite pleasant for me.”

He blinked—wasn’t that line too soon?

“Why pleasant?” he asked, too curious to resist.
“All I did was read.”

The guest smiled faintly.
“Because, through you… I remembered a soul I could never have. One that left me.”

“He was never quiet with me. But you were.”
The guest rose, picked up his whip, and looked back one last time at him, half-kneeling, dazed on the floor.
“Thank you for your company tonight.”

He stammered.
“N-no… You’re welcome.”

—For the first time on this island, someone had thanked him.

“You improved my mood tonight,” the man said gently.
“Is there something you’d like in return?”

What kind of sentence was that? He’d never heard anything like it.

He fumbled for an answer.
“Is… is this part of the payment, guest? You already paid when you entered the island.”
If the bishop found out he accepted tips, he’d destroy her garden.

“Not payment,” the guest said.
“A deal.”
He knelt down, tilting his masked face, smiling gently.
“You put me in a better mood. My mood’s valuable. You’ve earned a more expensive request.”

His fingers curled slowly.
“I—I don’t want to dance this month.”

“Done,” the guest said simply.

He grew braver.
“I want to take someone’s bones and bury them in a real, hidden grave.”

“Done.”

He hesitated again, then asked one last thing:
“I… want to leave the island. Just for one night. Is that okay? I want to see the outside world.”

The guest paused. For a second, his expression darkened—maybe he’d gone too far.

Then the man reached out his hand and smiled.
“Yes.”

He stared, stunned.

“You don’t hate water, do you?” the guest asked kindly.
“Would you like to go under the sea?”

He slowly placed his hand in the man’s.
“…I think I would.”

What was with this guy?

Who even was he?

As schools of glowing fish and drifting whales passed overhead, he stared blankly at the guest standing beside him.

The guest smiled.
“Beautiful, isn’t it?”

He lifted a gloved hand to his chin, as if musing.
“How can anyone hate the water?”
“It’s so beautiful beneath the sea.”

And his mind went blank. Only one thought echoed—

—Had he just met a god?

From that night on, the strange guest—who claimed to be a "god"—began visiting every evening.

On the second night, he arrived in the same clothes, carrying the same books. The only difference was a small, curious one: this time, he was wearing contact lenses—or were they called contacts?

Hesitantly, he opened the small box the guest handed him with a smile. Inside lay a pair of silver-blue lenses.

"I left in a bit of a hurry last night," the guest said politely. "I forgot to bring these. They're unused, the safest kind. Would you mind wearing them?"

Of course, he didn't mind.

He changed behind the curtain, slipping into the tattered orphanage clothes and placing the silver-blue lenses into his eyes. Then he sat down and flipped open his book. As he felt the guest's gaze fall upon him, a subtle shiver prickled across his scalp.

—Those weren't the same eyes as last night. Not after he'd put in the lenses.

The guest watched him with intense focus—or was it nostalgia? As if he had spent countless lifetimes in this quiet haze, watching a silver-blue-eyed statue who never spoke, never looked back, only turned pages and read in silence—for a million, billion years.

Perhaps sensing his unease, the guest spoke, his voice soft and smiling: "Does my gaze make you uncomfortable?"

After a moment's pause, he shook his head truthfully. "No."

—Because the way this guest looked at him was different from how the others did.

There was no hunger in that gaze, no desire. Just a calm, distant focus—like someone watching a character on a screen, or an NPC in a game.

The other guests never saw him as a person.

But somehow, he felt more human in this guest's eyes than he ever had in anyone else's.

After a few moments of shared silence, he spoke up tentatively. "Are you... fond of the child I'm playing?"

The guest considered the question, his expression thoughtful. Then he gave a quiet laugh. "I don't really understand what you people mean by 'fondness.'"

"I've just grown used to His company—even though He never answered me."

"Is the boy your heir?" he asked without thinking. "Then you have every right to keep him from leaving, if that's what you want."

—That's how every man in the inner circle treated their children: as something they could claim, control, and never release.

Name cards, inheritance, jobs—everything was predetermined.

Children like him, born into those inner-circle families, could never escape the grip of the circle or the Holy See. Their fates were etched in stone from the moment they were born. There was no deviating from the path laid out for them.

So he was confused. A man powerful enough to clear the entire field of inner-circle men... was grieving the idea of a child leaving him?

It was absurd.

"It's true," the guest said, smiling gently, "I could have kept Him with me, back when He had no soul—when He was just a statue."

"But not anymore. Not now that He has a soul."

"He would endlessly resist my hold, fighting to break free—for the sake of his own aspirations, for those he wants to protect. The moment he gained a soul, that struggle became inevitable."

The guest looked at him with wistful eyes, something deep and unreadable swimming in their depths. "He understood love. And because of that... he gained a soul."

"He's no longer one of us. And we can no longer sit together under the stars in peace."

“But couldn’t you bring me to the sea?” he asked awkwardly. “Aren’t you supposed to be like... a god? Even then, you still can’t keep the child?”

The guest smiled again. “Even a god cannot keep a man who possesses a soul.”

He slowly straightened his back, repeating the words softly—confused, but filled with an aching kind of longing: “A man... with a soul?”

Then her voice echoed in his mind:

[Get out of here. Get out of the City in the Sky.]

[A wider stage awaits you.]

"Thank you for your company tonight." The guest rose, drawing on his cloak, and smiled at him with a nod. "Is there anything you'd like?"

His thoughts were a whirlwind, and he blurted out a string of requests —none of them particularly coherent—yet the guest accepted them all without complaint.

"Will you... will you take me off the island tonight too?" he asked finally, more cautiously this time. "Just down to the sea, like last night?"

"Down to the sea...?" The guest let out a soft laugh. "If that’s all, do you really like the sky that much, just off the edge of the island?"

He froze, caught off guard.

The guest extended a gloved hand toward him with a gentle smile. "I’ll show you the universe—the place where I was born. Want to come?"

His eyes lit up. Without hesitation, he reached out and grasped the hand. "Let’s go!"

That night, when the guest brought him back to the island, his mind was still reeling with the silver-blue vastness of the stars. He collapsed onto the thick fleece blanket, dazed, before suddenly springing up, vibrating with barely contained excitement. He punched the air, humming nonsense, then flopped back down and rolled over, kicking his legs in the blanket, hugging the pillows.

It was beautiful.

This world—so vast, just like she said.

He slowly, tenderly pulled the photograph from his inner pocket. With practiced ease, he covered up the dog-man in the picture, staring only at her sunlit face. Then, he gently pressed the photo to his chest, curled up under the fleece blanket, and fell asleep smiling.

The starry sky beyond the island was brilliant.

In the days that followed, the guest came almost every night, taking him to the furthest reaches of the world and fulfilling his every wish.

They sat on the ocean and watched mermaids swim past. They gazed at ancient beasts frozen beneath the Antarctic ice. They squeezed into crowded trains and rode them back and forth.

Sometimes, the guest would joke, "That passenger mirror is going to explode one day."

He'd blink, puzzled. "Why?"

The guest would laugh. "Just because I thought it would be funny, so I designed it that way."

He never really understood these strange remarks, but it didn't stop him from enjoying himself.

No one had ever taught him how to play before. But now, he felt like he had finally found the friend she had spoken of.

Still, deep down, he knew—this guest would leave one day. He didn't know why, only that the thought filled him with dread, so he ran from it, avoided it.

Until one night, the guest brought it up himself.

As he sat quietly flipping through a book, the guest said suddenly, "I won't be coming tomorrow night."

"Where do you want to go tonight?"

The guest said it so lightly, as if bidding farewell to a TV show after dinner, completely unaware of how cruel those words were.

His fingers trembled as he turned the page. He looked up, stunned, then forced himself to steady his voice and asked, "Just tomorrow night?"

"No," the guest said with a smile. "Not just tomorrow. I won't be coming back at all."

He sat frozen, holding back his expression, trying to look cold, unreadable. But then something struck him. He suddenly leapt up and ran, shouting, "Wait for me!"

"Just wait for me for a moment!"

Tears fell as he hurriedly wiped them away and pulled a hidden sarong—the same one from the Salome dance—from beneath his fleece-lined bed.

[There will be people in this world who truly see you dance—who appreciate your beauty. They exist. I've seen them.]

He took a deep breath, slipped into the sarong, and emerged with trembling shoulders.

"May I... may I dance for you?" he asked, voice shaking.

The guest answered gently, "Yes."

He had danced this dance countless times before, in candlelight and behind flannel curtains, while being watched with eyes full of hatred and lust—eyes that once stared at her the same way.

But not this time. Not tonight.

The guest simply sat and watched. He didn't interrupt. He didn't rush forward. He didn't sprawl on the floor to grope his feet. He didn't whisper any of the words that he now understood—and despised.

When the dance ended, he turned with tear-filled violet eyes, clutched the hem of his skirt, and asked softly, "Was it good?"

"It was beautiful." The guest smiled. "Your soul is as beautiful as your dance."

At last, he smiled through his tears. He stepped back, lifted his skirt, and gave a slight bow—just like she did at the end of every performance in the video.

"Thank you for watching."

City in the Sky

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

After the dance, instead of making the usual requests, he simply talked with the guest.

"What is it that you do?" he asked carefully.

The guest paused for a moment, then chuckled. "I thought it was a rule on this island not to pry into a guest's business?"

He tensed immediately, about to apologize, but the guest laughed again and added, "I'm not doing anything important—just a drifter who enjoys playing games."

Noticing the guest didn't mind the question, he relaxed and asked more tentatively, "Then why are you leaving so suddenly?"

"Ah, that..." The guest considered for a moment before answering. "I can't actually exist in this world. I can only come through prayers and invocations. This time, I was able to stay longer because He kept calling me, wishing for me."

"But now He's stopped calling. So, I have to go."

"Can't I pray for you to return?" he asked.

"No," the guest said calmly, with a small laugh. "You don't believe in me. I can see it in your soul—your faith lies elsewhere, in something stronger."

He blinked, stunned. "A stronger faith...?"

The guest smiled. "She's beautiful too, isn't she? Your faith is beautiful too."

He fell silent for a long time. Then, with a faint, hoarse laugh, he nodded. "Yes. I think so too."

"So, where would you like to go tonight?" the guest asked, as he always did. "Is there anything else you want?"

Head bowed, fingers curling tightly into his sarong, he looked up with reddened eyes—but his voice was clear:

"I want to leave this island. For good."

"I want to kill every man on this island."

"That's my only wish tonight. Is that okay?"

The guest paused for a heartbeat—then suddenly smiled. "What's this? A wish to God Xiang?"

"Wishes to God Xiang always come at a price. Do you accept?"

Something in the guest's voice chilled him. This was different. The way he looked at him made his skin crawl—but still, he nodded.

"If you can make it happen, I'll pay any price!"

"So young," the guest mused. "Only the young say such impulsive things."

"He said the same thing to me, not so long ago."

"But I," the guest added with a wicked glint, "as an evil god, have no reason to refuse a sacrificial offering."

He reached out, tapping a gloved finger to the center of the young man's forehead, and whispered:

"Then… as you wish."

A flash of silvery-blue light engulfed him, and he passed out.

When he woke the next evening, his mind was foggy. Dazed, he sat up too quickly and accidentally knocked a stack of playing cards off the table. One had fallen face-up.

It was a Spades card. And on it, words were written:

[The price of a wish is pain.]

[This pain includes yours—and the pain of those you wish to destroy. I accept both the pain you cause and the pain you endure.]

[A friendly suggestion: sometimes, it's more satisfying to let those you hate live. Their suffering might be worth more than their death.]

His fingers curled slowly around the Spades card, his purple eyes darkening. His breath hitched—just as the door behind him slammed open.

His “bishop” father strode in, grabbed him by the hair, and dragged him out.

"That one’s gone," the bishop said coldly. "Time to serve the others."

"You’ll be hosting two tonight." His eyes flicked to the sarong he was still wearing. "No—make that three."

"It’s been a while since I’ve seen you dance."

He clutched the Spades card tighter, breath coming in short bursts. Before he could even stand, the bishop shoved him into another room—where two men, dressed in ecclesiastical robes, were already waiting.

The bishop yanked him upright by the shoulders and sneered, "These two priests have been waiting. You may begin your dance."

He had barely taken a step when one of the men lunged forward with a lecherous grin. Reflexively, he snatched up a nearby candlestick and struck the priest hard across the head.

A scream rang out.

He laughed, quick and sharp—but the bishop tackled him to the ground, furious.

His right wrist was stomped underfoot. The Spades card slipped from his grip as the bishop twisted harder.

As the others circled him—grabbing at the sarong, sneering at his body—his gaze locked onto a playing card lying on the table:

Hearts Queen. His mark.

It lay between two other cards.

And in his eyes, something ignited—something darker than pain. A hatred beyond anything he had ever known.

Kill them!!!

I will kill these men!!!

[..... Violent desire detected .....]

[Player Hearts has logged into the game.]

Inside Sky City, Quan Zhendong — still youthful in appearance — sat restlessly on a chair in the middle of a corridor. He shifted uncomfortably, peering in from time to time with anxious, curious, and almost salivating eyes.

Behind the door at the end of the hall, a priest who had brought him tonight was inside, having ordered Hearts Q — said to be the most beautiful of them all in Sky City.

Quan Zhendong had only just received the priesthood of the Holy See. His superior, in cryptic tones, had told him that to celebrate his induction into the Order, he would be taken to a "supreme purgatory" — a place reserved for men of the cloth alone.

When he first arrived, Quan Zhendong had been stunned into silence for thirty minutes, then quickly adjusted. Still, out of a sense of modesty, he politely declined to "count his cards" — saying it was his first time and he felt unprepared.

"Next time," he had murmured.

That modesty lasted only until he saw a picture of Hearts Q. He had gone slack-jawed. The priest had laughed, clapped him heartily on the shoulder, and said, "I saved up two months of contribution points to order him for an hour. I even had to queue. If you want, I'll give you ten minutes."

Quan Zhendong feigned refusal twice before accepting.

But now an hour had passed. The priest who promised to spare ten minutes still hadn't emerged. Growing anxious, Quan Zhendong kept glancing down the corridor. After confirming no one was watching, he approached the door and knocked.

No response. He called the priest's name.

A faint, broken voice answered from within: "Help… help…"

It didn't sound like a man lost in pleasure. It sounded like a man dying.

Unease twisted in Quan Zhendong's gut. He slammed the door open.

The stench of blood hit him like a wall. What he saw froze him in place — a vision straight from hell.

The deep red velvet drapes had been soaked through, dark blood dripping from their folds. On the ground lay three or four bodyguards in twisted positions, limbs bent at unnatural angles, blood pooling beneath their slack bodies. Their eyes were wide, pupils dilated. If not for the subtle movements of shallow breath and pain-induced tremors, Quan Zhendong would have assumed they were already dead.

Further inside, the two priests who had ordered Hearts looked like they'd been disemboweled — their organs visible, their faces scorched. One priest's lower body had been completely crushed into an unrecognizable, sunken mess that made Quan Zhendong's skin crawl.

That thing's gone! Completely gone!

The bones that used to attach to it aren't even intact anymore!

Despite their catastrophic injuries, both priests were somehow still alive.

Quan Zhendong's mind went blank. Driven by a horrified curiosity, he stepped further inside.

"Help… help…" came the bishop's faint cry — the island's master himself. Once arrogant and patronizing, his voice now trembled like a broken poker chip.

"Leave me alone…"

Quan Zhendong parted the curtain — and stopped breathing.

The bishop's shrill, choked screams echoed through the room. Before him sat a man, slouched lazily in a wide sofa chair. In the dim candlelight, his eyes shimmered an eerie violet so dark they were almost black. Blood soaked him from head to toe — dripping from his hair, pooling at his feet, staining the floor beneath.

He held a deck of cards, shuffling them with unhurried ease, and asked in a light, almost playful tone:

"I'll ask again. What's his name?"

The bishop whimpered, voice cracked and hysterical, "I-I really don't know! People just call him King! He never leaves a name behind!”

“Is that so?” The man lowered his lashes — blood running down the length of them like tears. His voice dropped, heavy with judgment. “You know nothing, then.”

“Useless men.”

As the words fell from his lips, he flicked a card from the deck — held between two fingers — and sent it flying.

“Aaaahhh! AHHHH!!!” The bishop’s screams tore through the room.

The candlelight flickered.

Quan Zhendong turned, face pale, and finally caught sight of the bishop’s body by the shifting glow. Blood drenched him, but unlike Hearts — who was clearly covered in someone else’s — the bishop was unmistakably soaked in his own.

He lay sprawled on the ground, limbs splayed grotesquely. Playing cards had been embedded into every joint of his body — one per socket. His muscles spasmed in uncontrollable agony, but the cards pinned him in place, denying him even the mercy of thrashing.

Hearts’ latest card had landed squarely in the bishop’s groin. Blood erupted from the impact.

Quan Zhendong stood frozen in horror, watching the bishop twitch in agony. How could this not hurt?

Panic surged. He turned to flee — but his foot landed on a crumpled scrap of paper, loud in the stillness.

Hearts looked up.

Blood trickled down his once-alluring face, now ghastly. He leaned back in the chair, elbows draped lazily over the armrests, bones loose like he had none.

Then, through the wavering candlelight, he raised his head. Violet eyes glinting. Lips curling into a slow, dangerous smile.

“You’re my next guest, aren’t you?”

Chapter End Notes

Fuck yes!!! Kill them all

City in the Sky

Hearts drenched the City of the Skies in blood, and on a rainy night, he turned that place—hailed by the Holy See as a pure land—into a hell on earth for its inhabitants.

It rained heavily for three days straight, yet the blood on the island could not be washed away.

But Hearts did not kill the men outright; instead, he inflicted upon them a far colder punishment —

— He transformed the City of the Skies into a Court of Judgment, a court for men alone, where every man fixed at specific coordinates on the island could accuse others who had been there. Those accused were summoned back to the island to stand trial, face sanctions, and endure the penalties demanded by their peers.

And if they refused? Something far worse awaited them—Hearts had the means to torture them mercilessly.

Over the next four years, the City of the Skies became Hearts' Island of Judgment, completely under his control. Men who endured the brutal trials were forced to leave the island and start new lives, broken and reshaped by the ordeal.

In the end, the city reverted to an island — inhabited only by Hearts himself and the dying men left after their trials.

Hearts still refused to let them go, harboring an endless, simmering hatred that could have fueled endless trials, summoning men back one by one to torment them anew.

No man dared disobey him. In private, they called him the Empress—a terrible figure who tortured and tormented them, like a Dacromos sword hanging high above their heads, forcing them to live in constant fear. They were afraid to act rashly, afraid to return, afraid even to remember what they had done.

During those four years, with the aid of men condemned to the island, Hearts extended his reach from Sky City to the Holy See itself. He began to control the growth of the Order, forbidding any man who entered it from touching a woman — or else they would be summoned to the Sky City Inquisition and judged by him.

The Holy See found itself caught in the crossfire of Hearts' oppression. Outwardly, no one dared speak against him, but privately, resentment simmered.

"A man in a woman's skin," the bishop muttered, taking a hard sip of wine.

Since Hearts had mutilated him four years ago, the bishop had aged badly; his face was deeply lined, making him look even more sinister as he grimly said, "And yet he tries to control the Church."

"God will punish him severely!"

"But not today, at least." Quan Zhendong glanced at the bishop with sympathy, who whispered in fear, "He's got you summoned to the island again tonight."

The bishop began trembling at the thought, barely able to keep composed. "What other cruel tricks could he have planned?"

Quan Zhendong whispered with a wry smile, "Like shoving fireworks up your ass again? You were in the hospital for two months last time."

The bishop fell silent. Suddenly, he sprang to his feet in the tavern: "I don't want to go to the island! Kill me! I don't want to see him!"

— Four years ago, he could never have imagined that going to the island would become such a terrifying ordeal.

"Suicide is a sin," Quan Zhendong advised. "He won't always go that far."

But Quan was wrong. Not long after, the bishop lay dying in the hospital, tears in his eyes, choking on his words as he gripped Quan's hand: "He… he put me with the horse in heat…"

"That thing has…?"

The female doctor nearby adjusted her glasses and spoke clinically, "We had to amputate about 40 centimeters of his intestines. He can't eat heavily anymore, and he's prone to prolapse and excessive gas, so please take care of him."

"Yes, yes," Quan Zhendong replied blankly, staring at the emaciated bishop curled on the hospital bed, covering his face and crying in pain like the women who had once cried after being violated. His mind went blank except for one thought —

— Hearts must be stopped. He can't be allowed to continue like this.

They will all be tortured to death by him otherwise.

The Holy See quietly established a secondary island, holding secret meetings there.

"This can't go on!" one priest said in horror. "We've all been summoned—I'll be next on the island!"

"It can't go on!" another cried out in pain. "He torments me every time he appears in women's clothing. I can't even bear to be near women anymore—I'm terrified!"

"Me too!"

"Me too. A woman came to me for prayer, and I screamed when she touched my hand. I'm still scared."

"These sinful women!" One priest slammed his fist on the table, his voice vicious. He had been accused by seventeen women on the island and tried seventeen times at their behest. He could barely sit now, and his hatred for women was deep. "They're all horrible, witches who mutilate us. They deserve to go to hell!"

"But…" another priest hesitated, fearful of Hearts, "Maybe they're just returning the favor. Perhaps once the trial ends, we'll be free."

"What do you mean, 'an eye for an eye'?" the first priest snapped bitterly. "We only did what had to be done! Who are they to return it to us?"

The other priest said nothing for a moment. "What had to be done?"

"Exactly." The standing priest's voice dropped low as he recited their daily prayer, "Have you forgotten what our catechism says about women?"

"They are to serve us, pray for us, lie by our bedsides, contribute to humanity's creation and continuation, and relieve our desires. Otherwise, why create women at all?"

He stressed, "The Catechism states women were made by men, created to help us, and therefore it's right that we do whatever we please to them."

“Of course, I know all that.” The other priest nodded, but with hesitation added, “But Hearts…”

“He’s a man.”

“Shouldn’t he be doing this for us, as doctrine demands? Isn’t it normal for him to return the favor?”

Silence fell. The great banner of sacred doctrine they had just raised seemed pierced in an instant.

“He grew up stealing his mother’s clothes, wearing them, imitating her, and going daily to those dances meant only for women.” The bishop, newly tried and dying, spoke from a corner in a sombre tone. “He looks like a woman, speaks like a woman, and aids those arrogant women in punishing us. Though he has a man’s body, his heart belongs to a woman.”

“He even volunteered to come to the island and dance for us — and enjoyed it.”

The bishop said without irony, “How is this different from the wicked witches in the catechism who actively seduce men?”

“So what if he’s a man? He has degraded himself into a woman, a lesser breed created by God to assist us.” The bishop struck his wheelchair violently. “Then we cannot blame ourselves for treating him as we treat women.”

“What right does he have to call a spade a spade? He deserves whatever he gets!”

Meanwhile, on the City in the Sky.

Hearts was not always alone on the island. Those who left it at first resisted returning, but over time, many found themselves drawn back to visit him.

Hearts was always open to those who came back.

Tonight, rain poured again beyond the island’s borders. Hearts opened the door to welcome those who had braved the weather, smiling at the once-familiar faces.
“I told you not to come if it was raining,” he said lightly.

“I have something important to tell you today!” a girl said excitedly, reaching out subconsciously to shake Hearts’ hand.

Hearts jerked his hand away as if shocked by an electric jolt. Then he paused, softening.
“... I’m sorry.”

Without another word, he turned and hurried to the bathroom.
“I’m going to wash my hands,” he muttered over his shoulder.

The girl watched, wide-eyed, as Hearts disappeared.

The woman beside me sighed quietly,
“... He still isn’t comfortable with normal female touch, is he?”

Inside the bathroom, Hearts practically ran. He unlocked the door quickly, grabbed a wire brush, and scrubbed his right hand—the one the girl had touched—so fiercely that it bled. He didn’t stop until his palm was raw and crimson.

Leaning on the sink, he slowly raised his eyes to meet his reflection.

Blood dripped from his fingertips into the basin, spreading in a circle, staining the water—and his purple eyes.

In the mirror, he was eighteen years old. Though he wore a wig and carefully applied makeup, his masculine features grew sharper with age: the knot in his throat, broad shoulders, prominent joints, a taller frame.

No matter how much he tried to stop it, a harsh man was slowly growing inside him—threatening to replace the female face he had crafted as his own.

An unbearable nausea welled up inside him, especially whenever he accidentally touched a girl.

He realized that no matter how hard he tried to hide it, whenever he came into contact with these girls, they saw him as a man—

Just like the brutes.

Hearts braced himself against the sink, dry heaving from the rising sickness.

He was growing older and beginning to understand everything that had happened before. He grasped the pain she endured, the cruel dance she performed for all those men watching—

And with that understanding, he grew to hate men.

He hated the way they stared at her, drooled over her, used her, and destroyed her.

But to his own surprise, he was becoming a man too.

He hated it, feared it, and desperately wanted to tear away that shell. More than once, he'd inquired about sex change surgery. He never presented himself as a man in the game, disguising himself by every means possible. Yet the moment a woman touched him, an overwhelming disgust for his own sex surged within him.

Every time he neared the edge of madness, her voice echoed softly in his mind:
"Even though you are a boy..."
"...But you're good looking too."
"You are most valuable."

That guest's gentle voice, accompanied by a smile, would add,
"You have a very beautiful soul and dance."

Hearts gasped violently, eyes red and breath caught. Then, unable to control himself, he smashed the mirror with his right hand.

Why must I be a man?

When Hearts finally emerged from the bathroom, he stood with his usual grace—his right hand carefully bandaged.

The girl's eyes lingered on his injured hand before she quietly said,
"I'm sorry."

"It's nothing." Hearts quickly changed the subject, leaning back on the sofa with a lazy smile.
"Is there some good news you want to share with this old man on an empty island?"

The girl, amused by his self-description, exchanged a look with the woman before speaking carefully,
"That's right."
"She's getting ready to get married."

The woman looked at Hearts with gentle hesitation.

“I wanted you to know.”

The smile on Hearts’ face vanished instantly. He stared at them, stunned, vacant, almost overwhelmed, and whispered,
“You... are getting married?”

He felt as if he might slip off the island and fall away.

“Is it you two?” His hands trembled, but he quickly composed himself and smiled, winking.
“Bless you, then.”

The girl and woman exchanged a brief silence, then looked up at him.

“No.”

Hearts asked hoarsely,
“Why?”

The woman smiled bitterly.
“I had a child while I was on the island—Phoebe. She was taken from her father at birth. Now his ex-wife has died, and he needs a beautiful woman to be his next wife. So he has approached me.”

Without hesitation, Hearts said,
“I can help you kill him.”

“He’s an arms dealer, more powerful than you can imagine,” the woman replied bitterly.
“I don’t want you to go through this for me. He’s especially harsh with his children—the ex-wife’s child Daniel was nearly trained to death. If I weren’t Phoebe’s nominal mother, Phoebe would be illegitimate, and her life would be even harder.”

“I don’t want her to become just another card, you understand?”

“I can raise her,” Hearts said firmly, almost urgently.
“I can bring her to the island.”

The woman’s voice softened.
“And then what? She’ll have to leave the island one day. Her father’s forces are everywhere—just like the Order. She can’t stay here forever.”

“You’re still fighting the Holy See. You don’t have the energy or resources to take on something that big anymore. You’d just draw fire.”

Hearts faltered.

“I won’t be able to come up to the island to see you,” she said, wistful and reluctant.
“Take care of yourself.”

She reached out to tap Hearts on the shoulder, then hesitated and turned away.

They left again.

Hearts remained still, sitting silently until a knock came at his door.

A man wearing a mask and cloak, carrying a black whip, stood outside.

“Hello,” the uninvited guest smiled on the rainy night.
“Seems the island has a new owner now?”

Hearts jerked his head up and stood.

Meanwhile, on the secondary island.

The priests spoke solemnly,
“No, the Queen has grown too powerful. She’s expanding her influence, even taking control of the minerals. We stand no chance of opposing her.”

“Not necessarily.” The bishop in the wheelchair grunted, struggling to prop himself up as he half-stood. “Everyone, look here!”

“It’s true that in this current peaceful state, we can’t gain any advantage over the Queen.”

“But!” The bishop’s eyes darkened with a sinister gleam, “When people suffer and lose all hope, they will inevitably seek refuge with us in their confusion!”

The priests shifted uneasily.
“You’re right, my lord bishop, but there’s no tribulation now…”

“If there’s no suffering, then create it.” The bishop smiled arrogantly, folding his gnarled hands behind his back. His gaze was as sharp and venomous as a viper's. "God sends tribulation to test the world—so why shouldn't we?"

"Send tribulation?" A priest asked, incredulous, eyes wide. "What kind of tribulation?"

The bishop's gaze drifted casually to the newspapers pinned to the nearby fence. His eyes locked on a headline: Water Pollution Widens Due to Industrial Development. His lips curled into a knowing smile.
"God sends floods to cleanse the world."

"Then let us unleash the water pollution."

On the City in the Sky.

"Why are you back again?" Hearts looked at the visitor with disbelief. "I thought you said you'd never return."

"I've been summoned once more." This time, the guest's voice carried a distinct pleasure—unlike last time, now he came willingly, even happily.
"I am very pleased."

"On my way back to my shrine, I noticed the island had changed. I came to see and found you had become its new master."

The guest praised him, "You've adorned this island beautifully, and I can smell pain everywhere."

There wasn't a single corner of the island unused for trials—courts for judging men were scattered throughout.

Hearts listened, lowering his trembling eyes slightly, and replied haughtily,
"Thank you for the compliment."

"You look…" The guest paused, sizing him up. "...like you've changed quite a bit since before."

Hearts' fingers clenched briefly, his voice tightening as he answered,
"More like a man, wouldn't you say?"

"That's not true. I see you struggle to read the surface. It's the soul that counts." The guest laughed softly. "Your soul bears more pain now than ever before."

“What pain do you suffer from?”

Hearts was silent for a long moment, then slowly lifted his head, inhaled deeply, and said,
“I’m suffering because I’m not strong enough.”

“I thought being master of this island would be enough. But no matter where I put them in this world—those men—”

His face twisted in pain, purple eyes flashing like deadly blades, his murderous intent blazing,
“—they remain trapped, imprisoned by islands forged from their own filthy desires!”

“Would you want to become stronger?” The guest’s interest piqued. He opened his hands slightly and asked,
“Thank you for your company tonight and for sharing this rare pleasure with me. I can tell you how to grow stronger.”

Hearts took a heavy breath, raising his eyes to meet the man’s.
“How?”

“No matter how strong you are, your power alone will always be limited.” The guest smiled knowingly. “Form guilds. Join leagues. Tame those members as the Holy See tamed you. Make them your followers and your instruments.”

“With God-level faith and power, there’s nothing you can’t do.”

Hearts asked softly,
“Even kill any man?”

“That includes killing any man.” The guest laughed, “Including killing me.”

The words hit Hearts like a thunderclap, and he stared incredulously, instinctively replying,
“I’m not going to kill you.”

“I am a man in this world too, and you’re perfectly capable of killing me.” The guest found amusement in his words, forming a fist on the armrest and resting his head lightly against it with a smile.
“I don’t hate your aggression—on the contrary, I appreciate it very much.”

“If you do kill me, I might just fall in love with you for a moment before I die."

The guest smiled and said,
"I suppose you like me, judging by your attitude. Aren't you impressed by my offer?"

Hearts' heart pounded wildly, his feigned calm shattered by the man's words. His head spun for a moment.

"I didn't…" His lips parted pale, almost breathless. "I just…"

"Didn't like me?" The guest chuckled. "Then why have you hated men so much, yet let me onto the island anyway?"

For a moment, Hearts was silent, his mind blank. He hadn't allowed a man on the island for four years—except during the trials.

"I won't force you to kill me," the guest said, "it's just that your soul is far too valuable… Sorry for bringing up something that upset you." He softened, but soon smiled again.
"No matter, the most likely person to kill me is about to enter the game."

"I will soon be dead by his hand."

The guest laughed heartily,
"I came today to share that good news with you."

"What?" Hearts' mind went blank, even his expression faltered. "Who will kill you?"

"Remember the child I asked you to play with four years ago?" The guest smiled.
"The child who gave Him a soul is now eighteen. He just summoned me at a lake."

"It's incredible to think that this kid, though not yet in the game, has a soul growing ever stronger. If he enters the game, he will quickly become powerful enough to kill me."

The guest sighed with rare emotion,
"Unfortunately, he declined my invitation to enter the game."

Hearts had little time to ponder, but he let out a sigh of relief and immediately asked,
"So, you're not going to be killed anytime soon?"

“Of course not.” The guest smiled slowly.
“He will come into the game one day to kill me.”

“It is his destiny, and we are fated enemies.”

The guest joked wryly,
“After all, I’m the ultimate villain in his story, and the day will come when he kills me.”

“Why…” Hearts asked, his voice trembling slightly, “why do you have to be killed?”

The guest looked at Hearts, watching him like a character on a screen, then smiled faintly.
“Because it’s funny, isn’t it?”

“You seem sad.” The guest inquired softly. “I’d like to ask you to play someone for me. If that’s inappropriate, I’ll be off for the night.”

“If I am killed, this will be the last time I see you.”

The guest stood and bowed slightly.
“It’s been a great pleasure seeing you this evening.”

Hearts jerked his head up, tears still threatening, and answered with conviction,
“I’m not sad. I’ll play.”

“That’s good.” The guest pulled out a school uniform and handed it to Hearts, along with a pair of contact lenses, whispering softly,
“He’s rather cold.”

Hearts took a deep breath, accepted the clothes, and went to change.

Approaching the guest in the uniform, he said admiringly,
“I can’t believe you haven’t met him. You do a great impression.”

“Except for the eyes.”

“Oh yes, I forgot to bring you black invisible eyes.”

Hearts blinked in surprise—black? Aren’t they silvery blue?

“But there’s something else different besides the color.” The guest regarded Hearts thoughtfully as he looked into his eyes.
“That boy wouldn’t look at me like that.”

“He hates me.”

“You like me.”

The guest smiled politely, as if addressing a game character, “Can you please change that look? It’s not how that kid looks.”

A shiver ran down Hearts’ spine. He clenched his fists, took a deep breath, and looked up again, fixing his gaze on the guest in the chair.

The guest finally smiled with satisfaction. “Yes, that’s the look.”

“That look that’s going to kill me.”

Hearts seemed to realize something and spoke slowly, his voice hoarse: “Isn’t the child I’m imitating... the same child I imitated last time?”

“Not the last one,” the guest chuckled. “This is the one that’s going to kill me this time.”

“Why...?” Hearts’ voice trembled with emotion as he struggled to keep his composure. “Why should I imitate the child who’s going to kill you?”

“Why?” The guest looked at Hearts with a mix of understanding and mild distress. “Because I want to die so badly, but the boy won’t kill me now.”

“I want you—who are good at impersonation—to play him first, to simulate killing me all over again.”

The guest looked up and smiled. “Do you mind?”

Hearts could no longer remember how he sent his guest away. Staring out at the heavy rain outside the island, he was lost in a trance, his mind endlessly replaying their last conversation.

[Will you be in the game?]

[I am everywhere; the game is my incarnation.]

[Can I find you in the game?]

[Sure.]

[What do I have to do to see you?]

[Be number one in the league. I only accept the most valuable players.]

[...Who is the player who killed you?]

[It is I who have a soul.]

[What is the name of your... ?]

The guest stood at the edge of the storm-battered island, his cloak rattling in the gale. His laugh was soft and indistinct: “Name?”

“You can’t call me by my real name. Just call me by my code name—call me Spades.”

Then he fell backward with open arms, plunging from the island in the sky and disappearing into the endless, choppy waters below.

Hearts stood at the island’s edge, silent and stoic. Then, turning back, he logged off with a determined gaze.

— He was going to win. He was going to be strong enough to beat everyone. He was going to take first place!

He was going to kill the man who... killed him!

Quan Zhendong, his face marked by years of wear, looked at the young queen in the photograph with a complicated expression. Shaking his head, he ended his memory and turned toward two eels swimming in a tank, his eyes darkening anew.

They had planned for six or seven years to endure the Queen’s oppression until the Papacy could rise again.

This was a rare opportunity that could not be missed.

— Game Prep, Witch Sorting Warehouse.

Bai Liu stared at the large screen, seemingly understanding, but remained still.

The Witch’s Heart—the key element in this game connected to the trial—was either in the possession of the Virgin or the Son of the Virgin, whose codename was Queen Hearts, likely the login identity of Hearts himself.

This meant the possibility that the game's key prop, the Witch's Heart, was already in the player's possession could not be ruled out.

After all, on their side, there was a little witch who also seemed to have a witch's heart—the game might as well be a tower-defense scramble, with both sides competing to seize the Witch's Heart from the opposing team.

The loudspeakers on either side of the warehouse repeated announcements in a continuous loop, in various languages:

"Be on the lookout for witches. Report them—they are the source of sinners!"

"If you find a witch invasion, report it to the Holy See immediately! Do not contact witches privately, or you will be treated as their accomplice! Trial with the witches!"

Nearby, two security guards from the Order sighed, hugging their chests as they chatted quietly.

"It's been rough in the east lately. Witches are attacking the edges of the contaminated area every day."

"They say witches have infiltrated the Order? What could they be up to?"

"The Holy See's fine, but apparently a number of witches have slipped into civilian areas. Some civilians are secretly smuggling witches from the eastern contaminated zones to the west safe zone. What are they thinking? The Holy See is protecting them! How dare they help the witches?"

"Yeah, the civilian areas have been patrolled more recently to stop witch smuggling. It's made our workload so much heavier."

"We'd better be careful."

The two men walked past Bai Liu, who twitched his ears and glanced away in the opposite direction.

"Bai Liu..." a small, hesitant voice called out.

Many of the taller women nearby looked like they came from distant countries.

The voice had come from that direction.

There seemed to be no one in men's clothing there, and since the local custom was to wear large, curvy dance dresses, Bai Liu paused briefly before heading that way.

Then...

Bai Liu looked up calmly and let out a soft laugh: "Pfft."

Mu Sicheng, already out of breath from his tight corset and wide skirt, was furious at Bai Liu's reaction. He grabbed Bai Liu's head and pulled him aside, squeaking, "What 'pfft'? You think I don't hear you laughing behind that expressionless face? Ha!"

"You're laughing your ass off! And you're the one wearing women's clothes!"

Bai Liu slowly averted his eyes from Mu Sicheng's foundation-covered, bloodied face and asked calmly, "Where's Tang Erda? He should have landed around the same time as you."

"I'm looking for him too." Mu Sicheng was about to scratch his head in frustration, but stopped as the corset tightened painfully. He gasped and retreated, "Fuck, this is way too tight!"

"How do they move in these things?"

Mu Sicheng couldn't help but admire the group of women, "Amazing."

"Tang Erda's taller than me. He should be in that group," Mu Sicheng pointed. "Are we going over?"

Bai Liu nodded, and they approached together. From afar, they heard the group of tall women gather around one of the tallest, gushing with admiration.

"Your breasts are huge! Can I touch them?"

"You've got such a fit body! It's all muscle!"

"You look so healthy and strong. Where do you work?"

Bai Liu could see Tang Erda's face straining to endure the girls' curious touches on his chest and waist, forcing calm gratitude while his ears and the back of his neck flushed red.

“Thank you for the compliments on my... large breasts, but no touching.”

“I work out regularly, so my muscles are more visible.”

“I haven’t decided where to go yet.”

Watching Tang Erda, surrounded and poked by the girls, desperately pleading for help, the two men gave another slow, thorough look at the white lace basket hat perched on his head, the flushed cheeks, the huge skirt support, and the corseted cleavage above.

Mu Sicheng: “Pfft.”

Bai Liu: “Pfft.”

City in the Sky

After coming out to meet up, Tang Erda glanced helplessly at Mu Sicheng, who was desperately trying to stifle a laugh. Bai Liu, meanwhile, turned his head away calmly, clearly embarrassed. “Is… it really that funny?” he asked.

“It’s fine.” Bai Liu lightly slapped Mu Sicheng on the head. “Stop laughing and get down to business.”

Mu Sicheng couldn’t hold it in any longer. Clutching his stomach, he laughed so hard tears streamed down his face. “You actually have an E cup! Hahahaha!”

Tang Erda: “……”

Bai Liu: “……” — as team leader, he bit back his laughter.

“Captain Tang has broad shoulders and a wide back, so this size is the only one that fits,” Bai Liu explained calmly, trying to ease Tang Erda’s face, which was turning bright red with embarrassment.

Mu Sicheng wasn’t done. Suddenly, he yanked open Tang Erda’s collar and peered inside, then pointed dramatically and said to Bai Liu, “But he definitely doesn’t have an empty cup — it’s practically full!”

Tang Erda: “……”

Bai Liu: “……” You know Mu Sicheng.

At this point, Tang Erda just wanted to disappear — he was an honest man and simply couldn’t handle it anymore.

“Go find Muke,” Bai Liu quickly changed the subject. “He should be over there.”

Soon, Muke joined them. He looked the least out of place in women’s clothing — a simple top and skirt suited him, and with his short hair, he looked very neat and clean.

“Have you searched for Jiayi?” Muke asked seriously. “If players can have a witch’s heart, then this game is probably a tower defense game. One of the two Team Fangwu members has the witch’s heart, and we’re fighting each other over it. Jiayi is likely the one on our team with the witch’s heart.”

— He had come to the same conclusion as Bai Liu.

“Jiayi’s login point shouldn’t be here,” Bai Liu said lightly. “She’s too young to meet the group’s criteria for screening as a reserve witch.”

“So where would she be?” Muke frowned.

Bai Liu looked up and smiled. “If I’m right, the game should have landed Jiayi in the Witch Zone.”

“Because she’s already a witch.”

Muke was momentarily stunned, then quickly replied, “Jiayi is in the eastern contaminated zone!”

Eastern Contaminated Area.

Liu Jiayi’s eyelids fluttered. Just as she was about to open her eyes, she became aware of a crowd around her, watching intently and holding their breath.

“She’s finally awake!”

“Who put her in the contaminated area?”

“Is she an eel-tainted child? My God, she’s so young! Didn’t those heartless ecclesiastical men make rules forbidding girls under fourteen from swallowing eels?”

“And you actually believe the rules they make? They’re just a bunch of animals!”

A majestic yet gentle female voice cut through the murmurs. “Bring her here. Carry her over for the doctor to examine.”

Liu Jiayi felt herself lifted gently. A man, presumably a doctor, checked her over. After a long breath, he reported to the imposing woman, “Baola, she’s fine. She just fainted. No visible signs of contamination.”

Baola paused thoughtfully. “Not tainted as a witch, then. When she wakes, if she doesn’t want to stay and wants to leave, then send her away.”

At this, the room fell silent. Then, in low, resigned whispers, the crowd responded, “Yes.”

A young woman’s voice broke the quiet, sharp with indignation and defiance. “Baola, why send her back? What good is there?”

“She was abandoned and sent back. Should she grow up there until fourteen, only to be forced into eating eels for those men of the Church?”

“Can’t we just let her stay? Let us raise her as a witch?”

Baola’s voice remained calm. “Not every girl wants to be a witch, You Zhen.”

Her words ignited a furious fire in You Zhen. “What’s wrong with being a witch? Why can’t I be one? Is being a witch some kind of disgrace? Everyone here is a witch!”

“After all the oppression we’ve endured, why do you still crave that filthy ‘safe haven’ and despise being a witch?”

Baola’s voice softened, almost like a stream, “Did you choose to become a witch? Did any of us choose this?”

You Zhen’s voice faltered, breaking into quiet sobs. “...No.”

No girl here would choose to become a witch unless driven to the brink of despair. Baola was the same, forced into this fate.

“We were all made witches by the Church,” Baola said softly. “So here, at least, when a child chooses her own path, we must not force her to become a witch.”

“I want to give them the freedom to choose who they want to be.”

“Whether she chooses to be a witch or not.”

You Zhen slowly sank to her knees, tears streaming down her face as she whispered, “Would any child really choose to be a witch? To yearn for us tainted ones, forever cut off from the safety of the monsters?”

“How could they want to be the dirty witches the world judges us to be, growing up in a safe zone? They would only dream of becoming holy nuns in the Order, controlled by those men! Instead of letting them be sent back and coerced into becoming nuns, we should force them to become witches — our fighting force!”

Her voice grew darker and filled with hate.

“ You Zhen,” Baola whispered, “What is the first rule of the witch code?”

You Zhen fell silent again, took a deep breath, and answered slowly and shakily:

“Witch Code #1: Witches never judge witches.”

“Whether she is already a witch or a reserve witch.”

Baola spoke softly, “With the contamination spreading, until it is stopped, any girl in the safe zone could become a witch. Whether she wants to or not, we see them all as reserve witches. There is no tribunal in the Witch Quarter — we never judge witches.”

“ You Zhen, what is the second rule?”

Her eyes closed, voice steadied: “The second rule of the witch code: all those who persecute me will die by my hand.”

“Our hatred, our desire to kill — it is focused on those who persecute us now. These emotions are precious; we cannot let them weaken.”

Baola stepped forward and patted You Zhen on the shoulder. Her tone was steady.

“Witches are not shameful.”

“Witches are our weapons.”

“In a chaotic world, powerful weapons are both desired and feared. Children in the safe zone dream of becoming nuns because they are afraid they won’t be able to wield a weapon — that it will harm them.”

“The Church teaches them from childhood: weapons are sinful, and those who hold them will be punished until they lay them down. Those who resist will lose everything, and only those who submit will gain more.”

Tears welled in You Zhen’s eyes again. Choking back sobs, she asked, “So what should we do? How do we make them yearn for witches, and choose to become one?”

Baola laughed softly. “We show them how to hold the weapon.”

“Let them see our strength — how sharp, how invincible we are when armed. We are unstoppable, unlike the men of the Church.”

At that moment, Liu Jiayi finally opened her eyes and saw Baola in the sunlight.

The woman was dressed in a witch’s robe over a sleek knight’s outfit, carrying a cowhide bow and a quiver full of feathers and arrows. Her purple eyes and strong bone structure marked her as a half-breed, taller than You Zhen beside her. Her tall witch’s peaked hat sat crookedly on her head, as if it might fall off any second — lending a slightly comical contrast to her solemnity as she tapped You Zhen’s shoulder.

You Zhen raised a hand, amused yet helpless. “Baola, your hat’s coming off.”

Baola blushed, fumbling to adjust it. “Ugh, this witch’s hat is so hard to wear. Why do witches have to wear this anyway?”

“Baola!” The doctor called out in surprise, “This child is awake!”

Baola turned her head sharply, the hat now even more askew. Her eyes lit up. “Awake?”

Liu Jiayi watched as this seemingly regal witch leader quickly and elegantly composed herself, approaching with a calm smile and extending her hand.

“Hello, I’m Baola, head of the Witch District.”

“Welcome to the Witch Quarter.”

Liu Jiayi sized up Baola: a stunningly beautiful woman, seemingly in her thirties, whose calm and composed demeanor radiated an unshakable strength — a natural leader.

Instead of softening her own expression, Liu Jiayi extended her hand firmly. “Hello.”

Baola laughed lightly. “Do you want to go back?”

Instead of asking how Liu Jiayi ended up here, Baola cut straight to the point. Liu Jiayi inwardly admired the directness — clever.

Wherever Liu Jiayi was from, being in the Witch Quarter likely meant she had been abandoned. So Baola’s question had an obvious answer:

no.

A normal girl might be overwhelmed with fear, but Liu Jiayi was not.

“But this side of the Witch District only accepts witches,” Baola said gently. “You’re staying here — do you want to become a witch?”

“A witch like me.”

All eyes turned expectantly to Liu Jiayi.

“No,” she replied.

For a moment, everyone’s eyes dimmed. Even Baola sighed — the Church’s brainwashing was too strong.

“I don’t have to become a witch,” Liu Jiayi smiled mischievously, “Because I’m already one.”

Baola was stunned. Then, before she could react, the witches around erupted in cheers.

You Zhen swept Liu Jiayi into a big, tearful hug. “The moment I saw you, I knew you were the one! I knew you’d choose the witch!”

“Baola!” A witch in costume hurried in, face anxious. “The Order is attacking the Eastern Contamination border! Many newborn witches are there — they’re still vulnerable!”

Baola’s lips tightened. She turned calmly and gave the order, “We’re moving to support the border now.”

“But there’s a raid on the trial courts today,” the witch reported nervously. “There are 352 witch trials in 82 tribunals in the safe zone. We planned to rob the courts!”

“If you go to reinforce the border, we won’t have enough witches to rob all the courts today.”

“Once accused in court, those girls will be burned alive.”

Baola’s fist clenched briefly; her face darkened. Then she composed herself.

“Split into two teams. I’ll take a small force to the border. The rest of you will rob the courts.”

“No, Baola!” The witch protested anxiously. “The Order is using heavy firepower on the frontier! It’s too dangerous for a small force!”

“I’m stronger than them. I’ll be fine.” Baola tapped the witch’s shoulder calmly. “Move out.”

Liu Jiayi slowly raised her hand, smiling. “Can I come with you to the border?”

You Zhen, holding her tightly, shrieked, “What foolishness! You’re not even tainted — you have no strength to fight the Papacy...”

“Zee...!!!”

Liu Jiayi pulled out a can of poison, tossed it lightly into the air, and flipped it to spray over the clearing.

Dark, asphalt-like corrosion appeared on the ground. The solid earth melted away completely.

You Zhen fell silent, dumbfounded.

Baola looked steadily at Liu Jiayi. Then her eyes curved into a smile. She extended her hand solemnly.

“You are officially welcome to the Witch District.”

“Come along!”

Liu Jiayi slipped from You Zhen’s arms and trotted after Baola. You Zhen stared at her empty arms, swallowing hard.

“Are all newborn witches this strong now?”

“What the hell!” A witch nearby slapped You Zhen’s back excitedly. “Good for us!”

“Go! Go rob the courts!”

“It’s not just robbing courts today,” You Zhen sighed with a smile. “The Order brought in another batch of reserve witches. We have to rob the warehouse too.”

In the meantime, prepare the witch picking warehouse.

Bai Liu and three others each received three messages from Liu Jiayi.

[Auxiliary to the Court of Robbery.]

[Don’t lie to the witch. Surrender.]

[Tactician access granted to me.]

Mu Sicheng, full of questions, looked at Bai Liu in confusion and asked, "Jiayi, what does this mean?"

Bai Liu calmly glanced over the messages, then looked up at everyone. "You all know that Jiayi has been the other tactician on our team, right? Her judgment matches mine. If I die or lose my judgment during the game, she takes over my tactician privileges and becomes your tactician."

—Bai Liu had explained this many times before, and everyone nodded slightly in acknowledgment.

"But there’s another situation: if she determines that her tactical ability in this instance should take precedence over mine, I will hand over tactician privileges directly to her."

"In this game copy, although I haven’t died or lost judgment, my assessment and access to information have been far superior to hers," Bai Liu said calmly. "However, she is the one truly suited to formulate tactics here, so I’ve decided to transfer the tactician position to her."

"From now on, Jiayi is our tactician, and I’m just a player who follows her orders. Got it?"

Everyone was silent for a moment, then quickly responded, "Yes!"

[System Alert: Does player Bai Liu confirm transfer of tactician privileges to player Liu Jiayi?]

[Once transferred, tactician privileges cannot be reclaimed in this game. Please consider carefully.]

[OK.]

———

Game pool.

The crowd erupted as the Tactician icon vanished from Bai Liu’s head and appeared above Liu Jiayi's, sparking whispers and discussions among the audience.

"What's going on? Letting a little girl take the tactician role?"

"Bai Liu, are you crazy? This is a guaranteed loss!"

"Good thing I didn't bet on him, or I'd be out money!"

"Tch, this is just a farce. Forget it. I'm waiting for the playoffs. The Kings Crown will dominate then."

The presenter exclaimed, "Oh my God, what am I seeing?!"

"The Roving Circus's tactician... well, no longer the tactician. The captain is really making a mess!"

"In all my time officiating, this is the first sudden transfer of tactician privileges mid-game... Does he understand how much damage this could do to his team?"

The host clicked his tongue twice. "It seems the Drill Hole challenge was too easily won and is now wasted by our circus captain."

"For the little witch? Haha, this is probably the youngest tactician in the entire league right now, isn't it?"

Wang Shun, sitting on the bench, broke into a cold sweat watching Bai Liu hand over the tactician authority without hesitation.

Though Bai Liu is right—Liu Jiayi is a very strong tactician, trained by Hearts as the successor and next generation of tacticians at King's Crown—this was her first league game. She's completely new to the league, let alone to the tactician role, and she inherited Hearts' style.

The odds of winning look slim from any angle.

This is their last chance at the challenge. If they lose, they're truly doomed. Bai Liu just gave away the most critical role in the match—the tactician privileges!

As soon as Liu Jiayi requested it, Bai Liu gave it up without a second thought. That was daring, even reckless.

Wang Shun's heart tightened watching the system panel display the plummeting support and betting rates. Wiping sweat from his forehead, he took two deep breaths to steady himself before daring to glance back at the giant screen showing the game.

He had no idea how this game would unfold.

None of the spectators could guess either—because no one understands the little witch's tactical style.

This is her first time as a league tactician.

Wang Shun stared at Liu Jiayi on the screen and slowly clenched his fist.

Come on, little witch.

———

The game took place on the borderline of the eastern contaminated area.

The Papists were armed with all sorts of weapons. The man leading the group stood atop an armored car, shouting into a microphone, "Everyone listen up! Witches are dangerous! Like the Seven Star Eels, when they become estranged, they're no less deadly than swords, spears, water, or fire!"

"They share some traits with the Seven Star Eels, and some have mutated with evil powers!"

"But they are human! Despite possessing powers granted by the Seven Star Eels, they have vulnerabilities just like humans. If we keep attacking, they will bleed, get hurt, and eventually perish!"

"Attack!"

With the command, the borderline was engulfed in intense cannon fire. Someone nervously approached the bishop standing on the highest point, telescope raised, commanding troops.

"My Lord Bishop, you said witches are powerful and our weapons might not kill them."

"No, our weapons will kill them," the Bishop replied with a wicked smile. "These weapons are forged from the bones of the Seven Star Eels."

"Bones of the Seven Star Eel?!" the man asked, surprised.

"No harm in telling you," the Bishop waved carelessly. "We've been preparing this plan for over ten years, and mass production is about to begin."

"The Seven Star Eel's bones are extremely strong material for weapons. Over the years, after dissolving the Seven Star Eels, the leftover bones have been collected and forged into weapons."

"One of those weapons was used in this attack on the Witch Quarter."

The Bishop looked sorrowfully across the polluted eastern area, a look of undisguised triumph on his face.

"As powerful as they are, witches are only on par with the Seven Star Eels. Their powers come from the Eels, but they can't match the hardness of the Eels' bones — the hardest part of their bodies, which even a witch cannot dissolve."

"Quan Baola..." the man said with reverence, "she's so tough. She broke through our lines multiple times, destroyed many inquisition courts. How can she fight these weapons?"

"No way out," the Bishop said arrogantly, looking up at Quan Baola stepping out of the contaminated area with a strange glint in his eyes. "Any witch stands no chance against these weapons."

"And Quan Baola is no exception."

As Quan Baola stepped out of battle range, the Bishop raised his hand to halt the attack, watching her with a tone shifting from venom to compassion as he folded his arms in prayer.

"Baola, for your past as our Holy Virgin, and for all witches who have contributed, God is merciful. He commands me to give you and all witches one last chance—"

"—submit to us, and we will judge you with mercy."

Quan Baola's purple eyes were icy cold as she asked rhetorically, "Like fire?"

"Though it's not gentle," the Bishop said softly, "if you wish, we will judge you as you desire."

Without hesitation, Quan Baola drew back her bow, aimed it at the Bishop—who stared at her but was not the one being addressed.

"The third rule of the Witch's Code—"

The Bishop's eyes instantly turned cold. "It seems you will not submit."

"You may not understand until the moment of your death that witches can never defeat the Papacy. What you've been doing is futile."

As he spoke, countless longbows rose behind him, lined with small, sharp arrows forged from the bones of the Seven Star Eels.

"It's still a rough weapon," the Bishop grimly smiled, "but enough to kill you eel-swallowing monsters!"

At the same time, behind Quan Baola, all the witches drew their bows, their eyes fierce, repeating her words solemnly as a call to war.

"The third rule of the Witch's Code—"

"Whatever judges me has not made me perish—"

"—shall be weaker than me!"

Both sides released their arrows simultaneously.

Arrows streaked through the air. The witches dodged skillfully, firing again and again, while the opponent's line of fire caused no harm—the witches' tough outer skin repelled bullets.

But the Bishop's forces suffered heavy casualties from the witches' uncanny accuracy, speed, and strength.

The Bishop's gaze darkened as he grabbed an archer by the collar, growling and pointing at Quan Baola on the high ground.

"Aim at Quan Baola! If she dies, this rabble will scatter!"

All the bows and arrows were instantly raised and aimed in unison at Quan Baola.

An arrow struck her right shoulder, bursting it open with a spray of blood, and her bow was violently knocked from her grasp.

Several witches nearby flinched and cried out together,
"Baola!"

"What is this?! How can it penetrate our protection?!"

Quan Baola gasped briefly, then, steadying herself, drew a bone arrow with one hand. Her purple eyes remained calm and focused as she said,
"Don't worry about me. It's good this weapon concentrated the damage; it won't spread the injury. Let's end this quickly."

"Baola!!!" a witch's voice rang out sharply beside her. "Watch out!"

Another volley of white Seven Star Eel bone arrows streaked toward Quan Baola.

Despite the pain in her wounded shoulder and blood staining her cheek, she swiftly reached behind her back and pulled out a cluster of arrows from her quiver. Her purple eyes flared fiercely as she fixed her gaze on the incoming barrage.
"Sorcery — Ten Thousand Arrows!"

In an instant, the single arrow in her hand blossomed into a million shimmering purple shafts. Without hesitation, Quan Baola drew and released them all.

The purple arrows surged forward, intercepting each of the Seven Star Eel bone arrows midair. They collided, shattering and falling to the ground.

But the bishop, trembling with fury, snatched a lone arrow and aimed it directly at Quan Baola's heart.
"Death to you!"

Her quiver was empty, and the arrow came too fast—nearly in the blink of an eye.

Without hesitation, a witch beside her sprang forward, throwing herself around Quan Baola, her spine trembling as she stood firmly in front of her.

She awaited the bone arrow from the Papacy, prepared to die in her place as if accepting a trial.

Suddenly, a black poisonous mist rose before Quan Baola, corrupting the arrow the moment it entered.

Beneath the feet of the Papal troops, swampy mud began to bubble and spread. One man screamed in terror as the corrosive muck consumed him, silencing him as his organs dissolved.

The bishop nearly lost control as he climbed down from the foremost chariot, stumbling back in horror. His eyes fixed on the corroded Seven Star Eel bone weapons sinking into the spreading swamp, he screamed hoarsely,
"What is this thing?!"

"It can actually corrode even Seven Star Eel bones?!"

As the poisonous mist cleared, Liu Jiayi stepped forward, a cold frown creasing her face. She raised her eyebrows in disdain before breaking into a sweet, mocking smile aimed at the festering clerics.
"Just a little witch's poison."

"Stupid bastards."

The bishop stared at Liu Jiayi, disbelief evident in his eyes.
"Who are you? Where did you come from, you filthy witch who's defected?"

"Defected?" Liu Jiayi clicked her tongue. The sweet smile vanished instantly, replaced by a sharp, unpleasant tone.
"I don't like that word."

Supported by Liu Jiayi's steadying shoulders, Quan Baola rose to her feet. She slowly raised her bow, aimed it squarely at the bishop's shaking head. Her smile turned serious as she said without hesitation,
"I don't like that word either."

"She's not a filthy witch who's defected."

"She's a precious witch we found by chance."

With blazing eyes, Quan Baola released the arrow. The rushing wind stirred her long hair as the shaft flew true—

Piercing straight through the bishop's skull.

At the same time, the witch is ready to pick the warehouse.

As Bai Liu and the others hid in the crowd, Mu Sicheng looked around warily before whispering into Bai Liu's ear, "But I still don't know what Jiayi's three messages mean, so explain them to me."

"No need to explain." Bai Liu gazed stoically into the crowd of a dozen women who were slowly poking their hands over the edge of their skirts, obviously reaching for their weapons, and raised an eyebrow slightly, smiling, "You'll see what that means in a minute."

There was a witch in the container they were in, no wonder there was a side quest.

Muke was instantly alert, he looked around and said very softly, "There are witches, aren't there?"

"Right." Bai Liu's tone was calm, but there was a hidden smile on his face, "It seems that this Pre-Witch Sorting Ceremony is not going to go as smoothly as those in the Order had hoped."

Almost immediately after Bai Liu's words, a girl about three metres in front of him raised her hand and brushed it through the loop of her right leg, where a pistol appeared to be concealed, and she wore a very small red stud in her right ear, staring deadpan at the Quan Baola video on the big screen, her breath catching and her chest heaving.

She was waiting with bated breath, and despite her overwhelming anger, she was still waiting with bated breath - waiting for an order to attack.

The red stud in her right ear flashed for a moment - a signal for some sort of attack, it seemed, and without hesitation she raised her arm, drew her pistol from the inside of the leg loop of her long skirt, and looked up into the stands.

With a look of unspoken hatred and determination, the girl raised her hand to the projector showing Quan Baola's teaching video, almost hoarsely shouting, "How dare you show the video of Baola's trial!"

"You don't deserve to see her more than once!"

The trigger was pulled, the bullet fired, the projector burst into flames, Quan Baola's projection on the big screen disappeared for a split second, and the whole warehouse was silent for a brief moment before everyone started crouching with their heads in their hands, screaming in shock.

Bai Liu quickly pulled the still unresponsive Mu Sicheng into a crouch, and he held his head very respectfully, pretending to be an ordinary civilian.

Tang Erda and Muke quickly followed suit and crouched down.

The dozen or so witches in the crowd moved quickly as they drew their guns and began to strafe the clerical guards on either side of them.

Quan Zhendong, hiding in panic behind the Papal Guardian in the stands, shouted, "Change to the witch's special seven-star eel bone bomb!"

"Catch these wicked witches!"

The ecclesiastical guards changed weapons instantly, and with fierce eyes they slung a strip across them and replaced it with a rapid-fire gun, loading the loaded strip and aiming it at the witches.

The bullets spewed out instantly, and these Papal escorts fired not at the witches at all, but loaded straight up and strafed the entire field indiscriminately - which meant they would also hit the innocent prep witches.

But they didn't care, what was a few dead prep witches if they could kill them.

But the attacking witches cared.

The witch in the lead, the one who fired the first shot that hit the projector, her face instantly sank as she raised her hand, made a grasping gesture, and said in a deep voice, "Witchcraft - Fishscale Tail."

Her legs instantly elongated into a long, immense snake tail that surrounded all the reserve witches in the entire field, and the bone bullets fired at her all penetrated and set into her snake tail, blood gushing out of it, and her upper body, which was crouched on its back, shuddered and stifled a grunt of pain.

" Leah!"

A witch next to her looked incredulously at Leah's wounded snake tail: "Why did that bullet go through your snake tail!"

"It doesn't matter." Leah looked up with a pale face, her gaze still calm and harsh, "Let the reserve witches go first, we'll break off!"

Tang Erda, circled by the snake's tail, looks on, gun out of his hand, and can't help but keep looking back, Mu Sicheng's monkey paws scratching the ground, his eyes whoring Bai Liu every now and then... -He could see that he was eager to help.

Bai Liu stopped him coldly, "No, we can't move easily without an order from the tactician."

Tang Erda gritted her teeth and held back; Mu Sicheng gave a grumble but was honest.

-- Bai Liu was right, in the league field, they could never act easily and interrupt the tactician's layout without Liu Jiayi's orders.

In a panic, the prep witches were swiftly evacuated under the protection of Leah's snake tail, the whole process taking less than thirty seconds, and by the look of it everyone knew their way around.

Leah's snake tail had been beaten to a bloody pulp and she finally couldn't hold on to her form, turning back into her human form, flipping and rolling and hiding in a nearby corner, her back pressed against the wall, she pulled a bottle of alcoholic disinfectant from her back and bit into it, pouring it over the dense wounds on her transformed back to normal legs.

She winced in pain, but gritted her teeth in ghastly pallor to hold back a cry of pain, her chest heaving violently, and then with a glance up -

-- and Bai Liu, who had purposely hidden in this spot and hadn't moved yet, the four of them went wide-eyed.

Leah: "....."

Bai Liu: "....."

The bullet grazed the wall by Leah's face, and she jerked back, turning sideways, her freshly decontaminated, bruised legs turning back into snake tails, coiled and stacked in front of Bai Liu and the four men she was protecting behind her, almost in a menacing tone, "Move!"

"Walk what?" Quan Zhendong came down smugly, he looked at Leah's bruised snake tail and tsked twice with what looked like regret, "Looking at the injuries, Leah, can you still walk? Or crawl?"

"You were a member of the Virgin Patrol, with a God-given name, but look at you now?"

"How wretched, how dirty, why did you want to defect with Baola so badly? You clearly weren't a witch when you were that one."

"Aren't you?" Leah's eyes turned into vertical pupils as her emotions rose and fell, and her voice was hoarse, like a snake swimming, "I think I always was."

Quan Zhendong's tone went cold: "Arrest her and take her to the trial court."

The escorts to the left and right loaded their guns and placed them against Leah's neck, and whistled playfully, "Come with us, snake woman."

Leah's jaw lifted slightly as the gun prodded her, and she gasped twice before saying calmly, "I can come with you."

"But you let go of the four reserve witches behind me."

As if he had heard something extremely funny, Quan Zhendong laughed out loud, "You actually think that you are in a position to negotiate with us who have the Seven Star Eel Bone Bomb?"

"We'd be kind to you if we didn't scrape your snakeskin alive right now."

Tang Erda's dark blue eyes sank as he slowly gripped his gun in his right hand, Mu Sicheng's monkey paws began to turn and move with bony knuckles and fangs bared, while Muke pursed his lips and looked at Bai Liu with a tense expression -

--And Bai Liu was unmoved, he remained calmly waiting where he was.

The moment the escort's hand was about to touch Leah, the receiver at Bai Liu's waist vibrated and the four men looked down at the same time to see a message from Liu Jiayi -

--[Help has arrived].

A motorbike with a loud roar crashed straight through the roll-up door of the warehouse, and the man driving it dipped to the floor and spun the whole thing around and spun it in, knocking the escort in front of Leah straight away, before sticking his heels out and braking on the floor.

After a huge heel scrape, the car came to a slim stop in front of Leah's snake's tail.

Mu Sicheng looked stunned as he leaned in with a whisper, "A master car player!"

The woman in the car stepped down, dressed in a tight black leather outfit with a short jacket on top, and casually removed her helmet, revealing her short, hot and damp black half-length hair inside. She casually tossed her hair, turned her head and tossed her helmet aside, then with a turn, she stood tall, her eyes disgusted, and stomped the heel of her polished shoe on the neck of Quan Zhendong, who had been knocked to the ground by the motorbike and was screaming, covering his broken leg. Quan Zhendong's neck.

Quan Zhendong screamed again at the heat, but the woman stepped on his neck with utmost contempt and crushed it twice: "Whose snakeskin did you just say you were going to skin alive?"

"How about I shave you alive first, you horny lot."

" You Zhen!" Leah let out a long breath as she deflated back into her original form, her tone delighted, "What are you doing here?"

The whole scene was quickly controlled by the witches You Zhen had brought with her, and all the Papal Guards were killed, leaving only Quan Zhendong at You Zhen's feet.

"There's a big player in the district, so we're free to back you up." You Zhen wiped the sweat from her head and looked at the wound on Leah's leg and frowned, "What happened? You're hurt too, why are so many witches hurt today?"

"The Order seems to have developed a weapon against us." Leah raised her chin indifferently, "Our God Quan father should know something on the inside."

You Zhen made an OK gesture and she nodded with a somewhat evil smile, "Got it, I'll take him back and have a nice chat with him."

"So what's with these four women?" You Zhen looked at the four 'women' behind Leah with some curiosity, then a light went on and she clapped her hands together, rubbing them together with a slight excitement, and said meaningfully, "They're the ones we rescued from the witch reserves who want to join the witch district, aren't they? !"

Leah looked into You Zhen's expectant eyes, and for a moment, she opened her mouth, unable to speak.

They did save many groups of witches in reserve, but only a few of each group they saved were willing to join them, and it would have been nice to have one in each group - mainly because in that chaotic situation, the Order would have attacked indiscriminately to kill them, and they would have let them simply run away to protect most of the witches in reserve. There really wasn't much chance of asking each other if they wanted to join.

Because they too, after all, had almost gotten themselves killed, it seemed a bit inappropriate to go after each other and ask them again.

But this time there are actually four left .....

Leah can fully understand You Zhen's anticipation, because even she can't help but look forward to it.

She turned around with a feigned composure, trying her best to put on her gentlest and friendliest face, and couldn't help but begin to regret that she was the one here and not Baola - if it had been Baola, surely these people could have been persuaded to join the Witch District.

"You guys ....." Leah had barely gotten halfway through her sentence when You Zhen rushed up to her, her eyes all bright and happy: "Are you guys staying because you like witches and aspire to be witches? You stayed because you like witches and aspire to be witches!"

"We welcome you to join us!"

You Zhen was so happy that she even tried to shake Tang Erda's hand, but stopped in mid-air for fear that she would hate witches and just looked at them with that bright look in her eyes, "Really?"

--the light in her eyes was so brilliant that it was as if a nod from them could turn into a spark to ignite the light in her eyes into a pyrotechnic eruption that would send her leaping up in place with joy.

Tang Erda opened his mouth in the face of that look, almost a little at a loss for words, he didn't know how to refuse - he was a man.

Mu Sicheng is also silent.

"I was told to be honest with you all and not to lie to you." Bai Liu calmly removed his wig, "As much as I'd like to just say I want to join you, before I do, I have to tell you-"

"- we're men."

Mu Sicheng also slowly removed his wig, followed by Tang Erda and then Muke, and as if in silence, without a word, they removed their inappropriate feminine attire - as if they did not wish to do so at the moment.

The light in You Zhen's eyes just slowly went out and then changed again - from a brilliant light to a teary one.

She shook her head incredulously and stepped back, seemingly unable to accept the reality, and laughed in a trance, pointing at them all: "You, all of you, are men?"

"How is that possible?"

"One ....." You Zhen stubbornly compared a one with her fingers as she questioned them with tears in her eyes, "Not a single girl?"

"Is there not a single girl among you who has stayed because she aspires to be a witch?"

Leah pats You Zhen's shoulder wordlessly as a gesture of comfort.

You Zhen tilted her head back to hold back her own tears, she took a deep breath and lowered her head back down to that extremely aggressive look again, she suddenly drew her gun and pointed it at Bai Liu's head and questioned him icily, "OK, you're a man, so let's move on to the usual witch to man interrogation session, a friendly suggestion, don't lie to the witch. Unless you have two lives-"

"- First question, have you ever done anything to harm a witch?"

Bai Liu held up his hands calmly, "No."

You Zhen continued to question coldly, "Have you ever watched any of the witch trials without making a sound?"

Bai Liu said, "No."

You Zhen asks, "Do you think that the existence of witches is sinful and wrong, and that the reason why eels are digested only by witches is because we are born sinful, and God is punishing us and we must atone for our sins?"

"Never." Bai Liu spoke in a calm tone, "The first child to cry for me and heal me was a witch."

"She is one of the most valuable friends I have in this world, she is someone I would trust with my life, my victory and my trust."

"If she is the one who is sinful in God's setting, the one who is wrong, the one who has to atone for her birth all the time--"

Bai Liu looked straight at You Zhen: "Then I will kill God for her."

You Zhen looked at Bai Liu steadily for a long time, she lowered her gun and then turned around, she raised her hand and wiped her eyes hard before choking back her insults, "Get lost, you stinking men, don't let me see you again!"

Bai Liu looked at You Zhen's back as he left and dropped the hands he had been holding up. He watched from afar as You Zhen walked halfway across the room, kicking the warehouse door several times in anger, crying and cursing at the same time.

"I'm so angry! I can't believe all the people we saved were dog men!"

"Not one, not one girl left for me!"

"Wooooooooo! Why!"

Leah pats You Zhen's shoulder in silent relief, You Zhen buries her head in Leah's shoulder, sobbing in silence, and walks away in harmony.

"..... eh, it feels like a wrong thing for me to be a guy." Mu Sicheng sighed from the bottom of his heart as he felt a little hard.

Tang Erda sat with a stony expression and nodded approvingly.

"What will Jiayi have us do next?" Mu Sicheng sat down on the floor of the warehouse and looked up at Bai Liu with some sadness, "Hurry up and let me do something! Otherwise, I feel so sorry for them!"

Tang Erda nodded solemnly once again.

"Why didn't you just let us do it?" Mu Sicheng thought for a moment and he asked Bai Liu, "That Leah witch is hurt so badly!"

Bai Liu gave Mu Sicheng a sidelong glance, "Because the other side doesn't need it."

"When Quan Zhendong was about to touch Leah, the hand behind Leah's back made a gesture that she should still have witchcraft at her disposal."

Bai Liu withdrew his gaze and spoke in a light tone, "They are perfectly capable of handling things on their own, so you're just adding to the trouble of interrupting their offensive rhythm."

Mu Sicheng scratched his head a little awkwardly, "Is that so?"

"So are we doing other things that will disrupt them doing things too? Is there anything we can do?"

"Of course I did." Bai Liu looked at You Zhen's departing back, " Jiayi gave orders for us to assist them in robbing the court."

"A court robbery?" Mu Sicheng was stunned, "What robbed the court?"

Muke explains, "The tribunal here tries many witch cases every day, and they are supposed to be there to rob these trials."

"But there should be a lot of these trials, right?" Tang Erda inquired, slightly puzzled, "How do we determine the time and place of the court robbery?"

Bai Liu's eyes strayed to the priest's clothes left in place by Quan Zhendong, who had been dragged away by Leah, and his eyes narrowed for a moment as he walked over, reached his hand in for a moment, and took out a paper letter with two fingers.

Almost simultaneously, the receiver on Bai Liu's waist vibrated.

[Father's Service, Court Robbery Schedule.]

City in the Sky

"Looks like this is it." Bai Liu smiled and turned his head to show everyone a dense page of paper letters, "Our next course of action."

Mu Sicheng immediately swooped in: "Where is the next trial?"

"Trial Court 2." Bai Liu's fingertips trace down the timetable as he sees the details of the trial, his eyes turning dark, "The trial is against a hotel proprietress, aged 41, accused by her guest of sneaking into his room to bathe and deliberately tempting him into depravity."

"Fuck!" Mu Sicheng's fists hardened, "This is exactly like the Quan Baola trial!"

"No, it's not exactly the same." Bai Liu nodded his correspondence, "This is the forty-second time this lady boss has been tried, and she has not pleaded guilty in any of her previous trials."

"She had already been tortured, or identified, by water baptism, fire, and bone identification, but she bit the bullet and did not confess, and she survived the torture without dying, so the tribunal could not declare her a witch, and she was acquitted."

"This is the forty-third witch trial this guest has brought up against her, and this one calls for the use of fire to identify whether she is a witch or not."

Mu Sicheng was dumbfounded: "Forty, forty-three trials? What's wrong with this man? Why doesn't he go and die?!"

"Her body can no longer withstand this torture." Muke's tone was strained, "If we don't succeed in robbing the court, she'll be burned to death in the courtroom."

Trial Court 2.

The boss had been tied to a pillar in the shelter directly below the courtroom for three nights, a process known as sedation, during which she was not allowed to eat or drink any water, the purpose of which the Holy See said was to remove the impurities from her body - a more plausible explanation, of course, being to prevent her from having the strength to struggle in court. to struggle.

There has been no shortage of witches who have defected after killing the trial judge in a straightforward outburst in court before.

She gazed vacantly at the glazed painting directly above the shelter, showing an image of a god with a baby in his arms, smiling in loving compassion, just as they had heard every day - [God loves the world, the Holy See is great].

God will have mercy on every good person, and God will watch over every good person - except the witch.

Immediately after dawn, she would be dragged up to the court of judgement with a stand of firewood at her feet that was said to be lit only when the witches were burned - but she knew from her last experience of being set on fire that it seemed to burn without the witches.

"Number one pending trial of the witch." A man in the escort pushed through the gloomy shelter and he looked at her tied to a post in disgust, "Get ready for court."

She was tied to a post and resisted to the courtroom, her head hanging morosely, having lost the strength to even look up.

"Silence! Silence!" The bishop above, who was acting as judge, hammered his gavel twice with cold hardness, "The court is solemn, please keep silence!" The courtroom gradually fell silent.

"Raise your head and look the judge squarely in the eye." The bishop said coldly, "Defendant."

She couldn't really lift it up, but well, this seemed to be a common enough situation for them to give her a long stick under her chin and stiffly lift her chin up to look squarely at the Bishop.

The Bishop withdrew his eyes in satisfaction, "The trial begins."

She slowly rolled her eyes and looked around the courtroom of the trial.

The witch trials consisted of four parts, the first part being the plaintiff's presentation of the reasons why the other side was a witch, the second part being the defendant's own defence, and the third part being the proof that you were not a witch - a proof process that involves testing you with various holy objects to see if you can withstand them.

If she can withstand the sacred test without dying or confessing her sins, she is not a witch.

But these holy trials are no different from torture.

The fourth and final part is the delivery of the verdict by the jury.

The first is called the Pontifical Jury and consists of four priests of the Holy See, while the second is called the Popular Jury and is selected by the Holy See from among the general public to judge her, and usually consists of about twenty men, basically all men who are interested in joining the Holy See - supposedly to avoid witches. All the members of the jury selected by the Holy See were men.

The existence of this tribunal was set up by the Holy See as a sign of fairness, representing that the public could also interfere with the outcome of the witch trials.

Both types of jury members were given two cards, one for guilty and one for not guilty, to pronounce on the outcome of her trial - it could be said that her fate was decided by these men.

Even if she passed the third part of the sacred test, as long as the final result given by the Inquisitorial Panel was guilty, she was not completely innocent and she still carried witch suspicions and could be indefinitely prosecuted - as she is now.

What she found very confusing was that it was quite simple to get a verdict of not guilty from the jury, which is what the Holy See has been promoting - only if one of all the jury members in the room raised the [not guilty] sign for you, then you are not guilty.

But she had been through forty-three trials, and not once had she seen the red sign representing [innocence], and every time she had endured the holy trial, and endured the severe pain, and turned back with joy and hope, expecting to see even one red sign.

All she saw when she turned around were dense, held up, cold, black [guilty] signs.

But what exactly is she guilty of?

"Plaintiff, state the defendant's crime of witchcraft." The bishop inquired icily.

The one who stood at the plaintiff's table, her former guest, accused her righteously: "She slipped into my room to bathe! She had demonic ram's horns on her head! I saw it all!"

"That's my room." No matter how many times she'd heard it, she couldn't help but want to argue weakly, "You're the one who's in the wrong room."

The man glared at her with an almost malevolent, mortified look, "That's what you seduced, too! You deliberately left the door open to shower while I was passing by! Don't you dare say you didn't do it on purpose!"

The whole court was in an uproar.

Several priests nodded rather approvingly, "Only a witch would bathe with the door open in order to lure men and kill them."

"I just forgot to close the outermost door." She said in a faint voice, "My bathroom door was closed."

The Bishop frowned, "But you do look suspicious, so why did you leave the outermost door open?"

With her last ounce of strength, she shouted out through her tears, "And I have proved myself, I have withstood the forty-two tests of the holy things! I am not a witch!"

"I am not guilty!"

There was a moment of silence in the room.

The bishop reluctantly turned his head to the plaintiff: "That is indeed also true, do you have any other evidence?"

The man who was the plaintiff's face tore up with a very grimace as he looked with a very sinister gaze at the lady boss strapped to the courtroom, his hands balled into fists and clenched.

Why is it that this woman just won't admit her guilt, just won't submit - she's obviously forty-one, an old woman, and not worth much money, wouldn't it have been over if he'd just screwed her in the bathroom? And to shout and scream and make people think he'd done something to disgrace him!

And when you're tried, too, fuck, you don't even plead guilty! How can she not plead guilty! Every time she pleads not guilty is a slap in the face and a trampling on his dignity!

He must screw this woman! Otherwise how can he meet people in the future?

The man took a deep breath as he put on an expression of horror and then said, very shakily, "I, I wasn't going to say this because I don't know if I was wrong about this, Your Grace, you know that we can't judge anyone who isn't a witch lightly."

"But I did see her that night, saw more than one witch in her bathroom! There was another witch next to her talking and laughing with her, and they were talking about attacking the Order!"

"It's likely that she's contacting and housing witches privately!"

"What?!" The bishop's face changed, "There's actually something like that, why didn't you say so earlier!"

The plaintiff bowed his head in shame: "Because I don't want to accuse people at random."

"You are a good and merciful boy." The bishop sighed tersely, "But this is too big a matter, you should have told us at the first trial, then we would have just condemned her as a witch."

She struggled hard, her eyes filling with tears, "I'm not a witch!!!"

"I didn't do those things!"

The bishop ignored her hiss and indifferently banged down his gavel, "And now, the jury passes sentence."

An almost shudder ran down her spine, then she turned slowly, slowly, the tears in her eyes finally falling.

The black [Guilty] sign is like a tombstone, neatly erected behind her, and the [Guilty] on it is her epitaph.

"Well, the sentence is now pronounced." The bishop's gavel was about to fall again, "You have-"

Hidden in the shadows, You Zhen's face was a cold mix of murderous intent, her gun already raised - but not yet.

The men of the Order had surrounded the entire courtroom so tightly that there was not a single woman from the judges to the escort, and it would be extremely difficult for them to blend in - and she was the only one of their party to do so at the moment - and firing now would only spook them and make it easy for them to jump the gun and simply kill the witch on trial.

At a time like this, even with her overwhelming disgust and hatred of men, You Zhen pondered the possibility of getting everyone to blend into the Inquisition together as men, which would make the rescue much easier - but the chances were too low, these people in the Order had too many ways of targeting witches, and she was able to blend in this time because many of the Order had been drawn out The security lines in the eastern part of the Chancery were loosely guarded.

But let her watch this trial unfold and listen to the wails of the judged without moving .....

You Zhen gritted her teeth and closed her eyes as she clenched the gun in her hand.

"Snap - click."

With a crisp, sharp twist of the bone, the black one held up by one of the men on the floor with [Guilty] written on it was violently flipped over to the eye-catching red [Not guilty], the bishop's falling gavel gave a lurch, and You Zhen's eyes snapped open, and he looked at the jury.

The witch on trial looked incredulously at the red sign that had appeared, and a little light slowly emerged in her eyes.

"This juror." The bishop narrowed his eyes as he searched for the man holding the not guilty sign in a sea of members dressed in black, "Why do you think she's not guilty?"

"Because the plaintiff is lying." It was an unhurried man's voice, which made the Bishop let his guard down, "The man I saw contacting the witch that night, it was him."

"He has been compelled by the witch and is a spy on the witch's side."

The whole room was in an uproar.

"How can that be?!"

The plaintiff also panicked, it was a big charge, and he retorted hoarsely, "You're lying!"

"I've never contacted a witch before!"

"Is that so?" The man asked calmly and rhetorically, "But you clearly said you saw two witches talking together, about attacking the Inquisition, and in that case you didn't think to come and report to the Inquisition, but instead you rushed into the bathroom uncontrollably, doesn't that already mean you were seduced, compelled and corrupted by the witches?"

There was a silence in the room.

Noticing that the bishop's gaze had changed, the plaintiff was utterly alarmed: "I was not tempted or bewitched! I resisted the temptation of the witch! And I judged her!"

"-but only to tell us at the forty-third trial that you saw another witch?" The man laughed softly, "It's hard for me not to believe that you fell in love with another witch."

The venue was filled with a cacophony of discussion and the whole atmosphere had become chaotic.

The man's face was covered in cold sweat as he looked to his left and right with a pale face, and after realizing that no one would be on his side, he defended himself, almost frightened and out of breath: "There is no other witch! I was wrong!"

"I just said I didn't always see it!"

"So it's you who's lying, is it?" The man questioned him in a calm tone.

The plaintiff gritted her teeth, "Not a lie, I admit I may have been mistaken! But this woman!"

He pointed fiercely at the lady boss tied to the post: "She's still guilty! She's still a witch! She is to be put to death!"

"What is the basis of the crime?" The other man inquired blandly, "The ram's horns you saw? You can't even be wrong about how many people are in the bathroom, a pair of ram's horns, are you sure you saw the right one?"

"Silence!" The Bishop angrily banged his gavel, "This juror, please be silent!"

"You do have some truth in what you say, but this plaintiff's testimony is not always empty." The Bishop nodded, "Then, as is customary, let us give this Witch of Judgement Number One a holy relic."

"Roast her with the holy fire, and if she does not scream in agony and die from the burning of the holy fire, then she is not a witch."

As the Bishop waved his hand, the firewood was quickly brought up, and the moment it was lit, a water arrow fell from the sky and struck the firewood, and the sacred fire was extinguished.

"An arrow that can extinguish the sacred fire?!" The bishop looked up in alarm as he looked at You Zhen who had suddenly appeared at the top, with a sinister gaze, "It's the witch!"

"Witchcraft - Rocket." You Zhen drew her bow full again and she aimed the blazing arrow at the plaintiff who was running around in fear and curled her icy mouth, "Your trial is over, how about we play a game of trial too?"

"The rules of the trial are - if you are not burned to scum by the fire of this arrow, then you are not scum."

The arrow was released and landed on the plaintiff's clothes, and he was violently set on fire, almost instantly being burnt to the bone, and he rolled miserably on the ground and was soon reduced to a pile of cinder-like ashes.

You Zhen jumped down from the highest point of the tribunal, his heel crushing over the pile of ashes, and sneered, "Looks like you're a real scumbag after all."

The witches kept pouring in through the window You Zhen had opened, and Leah's snake's tail pushed right through the door of the courtroom, where You Zhen, with one arm crossed, looked down at Bai Liu's group, holding up the not guilty sign, his eyes narrowing unkindly.

--What are these dogs doing following them?

Mu Sicheng held his sign in both hands and came up next to Bai Liu who had raised his hands in surrender to show he was harmless: "Why didn't we just break out of the trial court?"

"It's so hard to watch these idiots blazing away!"

"Because our tactician gave us the task of assisting in robbing the court, not robbing the court ourselves, we should distinguish the difference between assisting and main attacking, and do things when it's our turn to do things." Bai Liu looked at You Zhen with unblinking eyes, "If we make random moves, we will only interrupt their deployment and attacking rhythm."

"The real protagonists of this copy are the witches."

Bai Liu gives You Zhen a friendly smile while explaining to Mu Sicheng, "Get your bearings, we're just supporting characters."

You Zhen showed his teeth threateningly to Bai Liu, grunted and turned to walk away.

Trial Court 3.

"Witch on trial number 17." The Bishop questioned icily, "You were accused by your father of stealing the family's belongings at will and secretly buying magical materials to practise witchcraft, correct?"

The young girl tied to the post shouted back through her tears, "I earned that money myself! I didn't steal it! I didn't buy any magic! It was just some food!"

"It was my father who tried to take my money!"

"Those were all demons disguised as food, and it appears the charges are true." The bishop slammed down his gavel carelessly, "The jury passes sentence."

In the midst of a pile of black [guilty] raised signs, a red [not guilty] sign was held up.

"I have an objection Your Grace the Bishop." Bai Liu questioned calmly, "If what the defendant bought was a magical object disguised as food, did the plaintiff eat it?"

"And having eaten what the defendant bought, was the plaintiff also contaminated?"

The bishop looked to the plaintiff, "Have you ever eaten?"

The plaintiff's eyes dodged, "No, no! Of course not!"

"I'm not so sure about that." Bai Liu spoke with a smile, but his words were cruel, "If your daughter is a witch, then she certainly has enough power to tempt you to eat a demon disguised as food."

"This is an emergency trial, so it's not more than eight hours since you charged her, and you shouldn't have finished digesting by now if you ate a magical object at your last meal. "

Bai Liu raised his eyes and smiled, "Why don't you cut open your belly and see if there's a demon inside or not?"

"If there were no demons, wouldn't you be able to clear yourself?"

"Are you crazy?" The plaintiff looked incredulously at Bai Liu on the jury, "You're asking me, a living person, to cut open my stomach?!"

As his words fell, an immense snake's tail caught in the curtain of the door, its sharp tail plunging directly into the plaintiff's stomach, his pupils shuddering and spreading rapidly as he fell to the ground spasming and spitting blood - from the pain.

For the snake's tail that had plunged into his abdomen hadn't stopped churning as it flipped through his intestines, wrapping around and cutting out the stomach pouch - with food dripping out of it.

-- those are the very same magical creatures that have just been accused.

"It does look like it's eaten." Leah said coldly, retrieving the snake's tail and giving it a slightly disgusted shake, "Disgusting stuff, and the smell of alcohol."

When she finished, she gave a slight sideways glance at Bai Liu, who had his hands up in the jury box and was backing away self-consciously, and her eyes lingered for just a moment before she turned and left.

Trial Court 4.

The bishop lowered his gavel: "The jury pronounces its verdict."

Bai Liu holds up a sign: "I feel innocent ....."

The moment Bai Liu finished her statement, You Zhen opened the doors of the courtroom with a cannon fire blast and she sneered, "Let me pronounce my sentence before you do."

Trial Court Seven.

The bishop ordered icily, "If she does not confess, then go up to the sacred fire to be identified."

"Your Grace." Bai Liu held up the not guilty sign and raised his eyes calmly, "I think there are holes in the plaintiff's charge just now ....."

After a seventeen-minute defence, Leah's serpent's tail contracted, curling up all the members of the Synod who had listened to Bai Liu's arguments to the point of drowsiness at once.

A rocket from You Zhen set everyone on fire, and in the midst of the howling, Leah looked icily around at everyone and said, "Did you enjoy your appraisal of the sacred fire?"

.....

By the time the cleaning of the courtroom was nearing its end in Court No. 77, You Zhen finally turned her head, her face covered in various wounds - the new weapon invented by the Order had still done some damage to them, but this did not detract from the anger and energy in her eyes now, as she drew her gun and took a few quick strides. She drew her gun, took a few quick steps and quickly approached Bai Liu's group, who were not far behind them and had made no effort to cover their tracks.

"What the hell do you want?!" You Zhen angrily disliked Bai Liu's head with his gun, "You've been following us for almost the whole way!"

Bai Liu raised his hands in a very familiar way, and with a glance at Leah, who was more calm and silent, he asked tentatively, "I thought that you acquiesced to our following?"

--And it is.

Bai Liu, who were responsible for infiltrating the tribunal by posing as jurors, delaying the trial and distracting the bishop, worked with them to open the doors of each tribunal, which gave them time for a more mature deployment and made what should have been a particularly difficult task of cleansing the tribunal much quicker and easier, while also reducing many witch casualties - both to the witches on trial and to themselves. -Both the witches on trial and themselves.

This is why Leah acquiesced to Bai Liu's following.

Leah was a little more even-keeled: "What do you want to do?"

Bai Liu was sincere: "We want to submit to the Witch District."

"What?!" You Zhen's voice instantly rose as she looked at Bai Liu with eyes that went from tentative to hostile and a cold tone, "You want to enter the witch district?"

"The witch quarter will never take in men, get lost."

With that, You Zhen dragged Leah away - she was now really angry.

"You can use us as an aid." Bai Liu spoke in a calm tone, "- like today."

"This place, the Inquisition, is naturally repulsive to you, but we can be your instruments, helping you enter and assisting you in your attacks, which will reduce your casualties."

"- You're preparing for a big battle, aren't you? With tools like us, your attack will go a lot smoother."

Leah's back stopped, she turned her head and at the same time held You Zhen's shoulders as she continued to walk forward and looked straight at Bai Liu and asked, "Why are you helping us?"

"There's no way they're going to help us!" You Zhen finally turned her head in anger, "Come on, Leah! They're in the witch zone for a reason!"

"Like saying something about respect and liking, but ending up using and swindling the witches in the witch quarter!"

--something that is not without precedent in the Witch District.

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow, "We definitely wouldn't."

"My desires are mainly directed at my boyfriend and money."

You Zhen was about to laugh at Bai Liu's lie, but when she met Bai Liu's eyes, she narrowed her eyes for a moment and stopped short of cursing.

"We can tell when a man is lying." Leah says to You Zhen, "He's not lying."

You Zhen's mood eased, but her expression was still icy as she pointed at Tang Erda and sneered, "What about him? He looks like a straight guy, he can't have a boyfriend too, can he?"

Tang Erda: "....."

Bai Liu's tone was subtle: "It's true he doesn't have a boyfriend."

You Zhen was about to mock when Bai Liu sighed and said, "It took all his strength just to love one man."

Tang Erda: "....."

You Zhen: "....."

"What about him?" You Zhen pointed at Muke.

Bai Liu rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "He has a heart condition and can't think about that."

Muke: "....."

You Zhen took a deep breath as she pointed to Mu Sicheng: "What about him! He's always a heterosexual man, isn't he?"

Bai Liu's eyes scraped over Mu Sicheng's body before he gave a regretful tsk - Mu Sicheng was indeed straight, which was a bit of a problem.

Mu Sicheng's scalp tingled at Bai Liu's look, and then he saw Bai Liu's eyelids twitch as if some good idea had occurred to him and said in a dawning tone, "He does like the opposite sex, but he shouldn't be considered a man with us; we rarely treat him like one."

Mu Sicheng: "????"

You Zhen: "????"

"What is he if he's not a man?" You Zhen asked incredulously, pointing at Mu Sicheng.

Bai Liu smiles: "Transport and monkeys, whatever you like."

You Zhen started to get dizzy as she pointed at Bai Liu's group and circled around, "What kind of a strange group of men are you, anyway?"

Bai Liu laughed softly and shrugged, "Maybe we're just a group of normal men who want to follow the witch's tactics?"

You Zhen's eyes sweep over Mu Sicheng, who is furiously chasing Bai Liu with his monkey claws.

A gay man, a half-gay man who has failed at being gay, an asexual heart patient, a transport and a monkey - you guys don't have anything to do with normal anyhow, do you?!

But in the end, Bai Liu and his team were not able to join You Zhen's team.

"No men are accepted in the Witch Quarter." You Zhen pointed warningly at Bai Liu's nose, "Stop following us or you'll get your asses kicked!"

Leah, in a rare moment of hesitation, gave them a complicated look in her eyes, "We can't take you in right now because there's no way to deal with the changes you've caused since you came in."

"But ..... witches don't hate all men, as you'll soon see."

As he watched You Zhen tug Leah away, Mu Sicheng sighed with mixed feelings, a rare moment of frustration: "Are we still going? They don't seem to want us to?"

"Follow." Bai Liu was very straightforward, " Jiayi's orders are to assist the robbing court, so we will follow them to the end."

"Actually ....." Mu Sicheng scratched his head, "we could split up with the witches and rob the other courts, couldn't we? That would be more efficient too?"

Bai Liu said, "No, it's not an assisted robbery, it's us acting on our own."

Mu Sicheng was a bit confused: "Does it have to be an aid? Why?"

Bai Liu gave Mu Sicheng a bland look: "Our aim at this stage was to join Jiayi, that is, to enter the witches' quarter, but as you can see, because we are men, the witches are very hostile to us."

"Yeah." Mu Sicheng went on as a matter of course, "but if we show more ability, help them out a bit more, rob some more courts for them, then maybe they'll-"

Bai Liu coldly interrupted Mu Sicheng's speculation, "-then we'll never enter the witch zone again in our lifetime."

Mu Sicheng's hopeful elaboration stalled, and he asked, with a sense of wonder, "Why?!"

"Because in this copy, our position is completely different from theirs, we have a vested interest in the environment, and if at the same time we are powerful enough to even force our way past them to take the lead, to interfere with their decisions, to interrupt their plans, it would lead to a terrible outcome -" Bai Liu looked levelly into Mu Sicheng's eyes. -Bai Liu looked Mu Sicheng flat in the eye, "If they accepted us easily and we turned against them, they wouldn't be able to accept the consequences at the moment, we would become enemies and both would lose."

"That's why they will never easily agree to our decision to enter the witches' quarter - even if we have no animosity towards them, people change."

Advertisement

"It was a wise decision, in a situation like this where we can easily backtrack to gain greater benefits after we defect, there is no need to interfere too much with the other side's decisions if we are really sincere in wanting to join their organisation, rather it is more important to show our own sincerity, so we can only assist - -that's why Jiayi gave this order."

"Otherwise, with Jiayi's current position in the witch district, she could have just told the person in charge on the other side that she wanted to let us in - and I'm sure they would have seriously considered it, but that's not what she wanted."

Muke nods: "So Jiayi wants us to impress the witches ourselves by our actions and get them to accept us slowly."

"In the context of a witch trial like this, sincerity is more important than competence." Bai Liu said in a light tone, "The men who tried them were all very capable men in the Order."

"So what do we do next?" Tang Erda enquired intently.

Bai Liu replied calmly: " Jiayi didn't order us to stop, so we continued to follow."

"But next they we see how the situation assists, not necessarily all the people being tried in the tribunal are saved and they do it before we do it."

Tang Erda frowned, "Why?"

Bai Liu's tone was calm: "For it is men who will be judged next."

Trial Court 77.

Mu Sicheng and Bai Liu, hidden behind the mass jury, rose slightly on tiptoe to look at the defendant tied to a post in the middle of the courtroom, then withdrew his eyes in some shock: "It's really a man!"

"Don't witch trials only judge witches! Why are there even men!"

"Have you forgotten about the Witch's Heart trial?" Bai Liu's tone rippled, "After that, in addition to the witches on trial, anyone connected to the witches will be tried as well."

"Unless you are the one testifying against the witch, if you have a witch in your family, then you will definitely be implicated."

The bishop in the judge's chair slammed his gavel, "Silence!"

Advertisement

"Defendant, your wife defected in court three days ago after being accused of being a witch, and have you secretly assisted her since then?"

The man tied to the post shook a little and did not speak.

The bishop slammed the hammer hard, his tone lowering, "Answer me, accused, or you will be pronounced guilty together for aiding the witch!"

"Your family's property will be confiscated by the Holy See in court as a punishment, and you will be executed or sent to the borderline to do hard labour until you die in order to atone for your sin of marrying a witch!"

"But we won't completely deny you a choice, after all, you are a victim too." The bishop's voice became softer, "Now, there are two choices before you."

"The first option is to permanently separate yourself from your witch's wife, to report her to the Holy See at the first sign you see her, and to contribute half of your family fortune now, to buy holy water from the Holy See, to drink it in court to cleanse you of the witch's spell, and to swear that henceforth you will always belong to the Holy See and serve as a member of it, dedicated to killing all witches you see. "

"The second option-"

The bishop's voice gave a beat and went noticeably colder: "That is, you confess your sins and we judge you, and the rest of your family, with holy fire like a witch's trial."

"What's your choice?"

All eyes turned to the man tied to the post, and the room fell silent, and all that could be heard was the rapid, disordered breathing of the man with his head down, his expression confused and frantic, as if he were a trapped beast struggling.

Hidden in the shadows, You Zhen's breath caught in her throat and she stared at the man with the same expression of self-realisation that the man was struggling with.

"The witch district took in a witch three days ago, supposedly his wife who defected." Leah said softly, "The witch said that her husband and the rest of her family had helped her defect."

"She regretted defecting at first because all her family would have been tried except for her."

"But what she fears more than regret is seeing the outcome of her family's trial."

"- is betraying her, is it?" You Zhen took a deep breath as she raised a hand to wipe her reddened eyes, her tone sarcastic and sobbing, "We could help her save her family from harm, but her family wouldn't necessarily choose the outcome of being saved by us."

Advertisement

"They'll choose something else, they'll choose to be on the opposite side of us - they won't go with us."

You Zhen's hands were shaking as she said this, and so was her voice: "It's like when I went to save my family."

Leah tapped her silently on the shoulder. "I ....," the man asked, looking up, almost hoarsely, "can I choose neither?"

"I can give you all the family fortune, but I don't want to be part of the Order and go on a witch hunt, can I?"

The bishop rejected him icily, "There are only two kinds of people here, the enemies of the witches, and our enemies."

"You are not the enemy of the witch, then you are our enemy."

"The jury pronounced its verdict."

The gavel fell heavily.

The men's backs were also flush with [guilty] signs - these were jurors who, after trying a witch or a person associated with a witch, were able to share in a portion of the property of the person tried as a reward from the Holy See.

Tang Erda looked at the firewood placed at the man's feet with a stony brow: "Do we save it?"

"Wait." Bai Liu's tone was unhurried, "They save us before we save them, we don't move until they do."

Meanwhile, Leah looks over at You Zhen, whose gaze is struggling and her expression frozen, and asks her in a low voice, "Is this an option we can save?"

You Zhen stared dead into the man's face, her teeth clenched as her chest rose and fell twice, then, the moment the torch was lit, she drew her bow and arrow behind her and aimed it at the head of the bishop sitting on the high dais, saying in a harsh and cold tone.

"This choice does not satisfy me, and on principle I do not want to save any man."

"- but in principle I don't want to spare any sluts either."

Advertisement

"Witch's code number four." You Zhen hissed out through clenched teeth, "- Do not ignore the judgment of the innocent!"

As the bows and arrows were released, the court was in turmoil and Bai Liu's eyes flickered as he quickly ordered, "Match their attack."

After a soldierly rescue, Bai Liu stepped forward and lowered the man tied to the post and quickly retreated with the witch, holding the unresponsive man down before the Order could make a second comeback.

Immediately afterwards, the two sides met up.

You Zhen questioned, "Why are you still following me?"

Bai Liu quickly threw up his hands in surrender and innocently stated, "I just saved this person and wanted to ask how you were going to place them?"

You Zhen and Leah both stare blankly at the sight of the still unresponsive man with the burns on his body.

--Handling men has always been a problem for all witches.

In order to protect the witches, men are not accepted in the witch quarter, but sometimes they do save male relatives of the witches from the court, such as parents, brothers, and husbands - men who would have been saved by the You Zhen women after they had made the choice to side with the witches in the court and would have been burned at the stake.

But then came the problem that although they had saved the men, it had always been a problem to place them.

Baola Currently an area is being created around the Witch Quarter to house the men, but the Witch Quarter is very polluted and it's not safe for the men to stay there, but it's not possible to send them back to safety .....

And with this area already full, the matter is currently on hold against the backdrop of the impending Great War and is now at a complete standstill.

You Zhen, in a rare moment of silence, stares at Bai Liu without saying a word.

Bai Liu's loins vibrated as he glanced down at the message he had just received from Liu Jiayi and looked up, smiling as he offered his resolution, "If you don't mind, you can place the rescued males on our side and we will help you process and vet them."

"You can treat us as a third-party organisation [of normal males who submit to witch deployments], where we don't enter the witch zone and use our male identity to lurk in the safe zone while we submit to your deployments and help you attack."

Advertisement

You Zhen gave a puzzled ahhh, and Leah raised her eyebrows subtly -

-- a decision that works perfectly, almost as if the tactics were tailor-made for the girls now.

Bai Liu smiles and asks, "What do you think?"

The message from Liu Jiayi at his waist reads - [third party organisation].

Meanwhile, the papal palace.

The Pope's Palace is the most central institution in the kingdom, housing the Pope, the highest authority in every generation of the Papacy, and the Cardinals, Archbishops and Nuns who have risen from the episcopate to the core of the Papacy. -Today, for the sixth time, the papal palace has been renovated and expanded and is now nearly half the size of a city.

The current generation of popes had a very striking proposal for the extended papal palace - he extended it below the island in the sky and built a staircase to the sky.

But this is not surprising; every generation of popes has been the master of the island of the sky, and this extension arguably overlaps his territory both above and below the sky, and makes it easier for Papists to get on and off the island at any time, and below the stairway to the sky, which connects to the nunnery hall of the papal palace.

The Nunnery is a place in the papal palace where nuns are brought up to be educated. Every year, girls between the ages of 8 and 14 are collected from all over the world and, after being verified as having no contact with eels or having swallowed eels, they are brought to the papal palace to be educated in scripture and doctrine and to be brought up to a holy and undefiled nature. The eels are then taken to the inner sanctum of the papal palace, where they are educated in the scriptures and the teachings of the Church.

The nuns need to remain pure so they don't have to swallow eels. The role of the nuns is to purify things and people contaminated by witches, which also includes a prayerful purification ritual after each trial, where the nuns devoutly pray for an hour in front of the burned witch to destroy the witch's soul - this is to prevent the witch's soul from escaping from the body and out of the body and swoop down into the bodies of other women to continue to haunt them.

The best purification is done by young nuns, that is, those under the age of eighteen. Then after a nun reaches the age of eighteen, according to the doctrine, her purification becomes progressively less effective, and although the merciful Holy See does not excommunicate them for this reason, most nuns consciously withdraw from the Order at this time.

There are two very "good" ways out for nuns who leave the Holy See.

The first is that she can marry a man and never be accused of being a witch again for the rest of her life, because she was once a holy nun.

Secondly, that they have priority to board the Sky City.

So becoming a nun was the best path for most young girls who had not yet been accused of being witches, bar none, and having a nun who had quit the Order as a wife was the greatest fantasy of all men - when a commoner had a nun in the family, they were insulated from the whole witch trial thing, because the holiness of the nun would purify everything.

Advertisement

So the families who gave birth to girls would do everything they could to send their children into the Order to be raised as nuns, and the families who gave birth to boys would frantically teach their children from the start that you must work hard now, that everything you do is so that you can afford to marry a nun when you grow up.

-- if you are not a nun, if you are not surrounded by nuns, then you will one day be judged by the Holy See!

As a result, nuns became a particularly popular profession, but there were, after all, only a small number of nuns, so competition between members of the nuns' reserve was fierce - as fierce as the competition for their suitors.

Although the doctrine requires only purity and piety in the faith of the nuns, when the Holy See selects, preference is always given to good-looking and distinctive young girls, and many parents even go to great lengths to give their children, who are only teenagers, plastic surgery in order to send them to the nunnery - but this was soon strictly forbidden by the Holy See.

"Don't go about modifying your appearance at will, we need you to stay as you are." The priest who selects the nuns for the Order explains compassionately, "That is how God has given you to look."

With this fierce competition, every nun selected is naturally beautiful and pure, and this year's batch boasts one of the most beautiful nuns since the witch trials.

She did not come from within the kingdom, but from outside it, with bright green eyes and long, silky, curly, shimmering blonde hair that made her look as innocent as the angels accompanying God in the glazed paintings - and that was the reason why everyone praised her as the most beautiful of all, she fitted perfectly into everyone's fantasy of the word nun.

It was so touching whenever she closed her hands and lowered her eyes in pity to pray for those who came to her with their complaints.

"I hope your affliction dissipates soon." She whispered softly, "May your soul go to heaven after death."

"Thank you!" The man who had come to complain was on the verge of tears of gratitude, he reached out his hand to subconsciously shake the nun's hand, but soon came to his senses as if suddenly awakened by the nun's avoidance and blushed with great embarrassment, "Sorry, I forgot that nuns are not allowed to touch us ordinary men who are not of the Order."

She simply smiled and waved her hand to show that she didn't care.

More and more grateful, the man stole a couple of glances at the nun and took a deep breath, gathering his courage before daring to ask: "You, may I ask when you will probably leave the Order?"

-- In this kingdom, asking a nun when she will leave the Order is like asking when she will marry.

"Of course! I know I'm not good enough for you!" The man was quick to defend himself, but under the gaze of the nun's innocent bright green eyes, his words seemed so weak that he stammered, "I... I was just asking a question! You don't have to answer me either!"

"Leave the Holy See?" The nun smiled gently, "I turned sixteen this year, when do you think I will leave the Order?"

Advertisement

"Two, two years later?" The man stumbled over his answer.

"No." Sister's bright green eyes shone with an unknown emotion as she curled her lips and her tone was so careless, "Anytime, of course."

The man, dizzy and confused, left the nunnery and passed a priest with his head bowed, anxious and in a hurry, in the inner garden of the papal palace, who pushed open the door of the nunnery and, after seeing that she was the only nun, wiped the cold sweat from his forehead before crying out, " Phoebe!"

Phoebe turned around, her green eyes darkening for a moment, "Still no word on Hearts' identity in this game?"

Qi Yifang, dressed in a priest's outfit, was swept up in a cold sweat as if by reflex by Phoebe, and he replied weakly, "..... No."

Phoebe commented in a lazy tone, "You and Liu Ji are two real losers."

Qi Yifang: "......QAQ."

Empress, where the hell are you? Come on! We can't hold Phoebe!

First they were drawn in the challenge and had to play one more game, and now they have lost contact with Hearts as soon as they logged into this copy, and they can't get in touch with them. Hearts.

" Where's Titan?" Phoebe sat casually under the idol, took an apple that these people had offered to the god, took a big bite and with a sweep of her green eyes Liu Ji, "You didn't let him be found, did you?"

"No, no!" Qi Yifang shook his head frantically, "We hid Titan on the beach like you told us to! Liu Ji is currently in charge of the Order over there and has not been found!"

"But it is true that the Queen has not yet been heard from."

Qi Yifang's face fell in worry: "This is not right, the Queen usually contacts us, it's not right that we have all rendezvoused and she hasn't heard from us yet."

Phoebe lifted her eyes a little, "I got a tip that there's someone on Sky City from the title Queen of Hearts."

Qi Yifang was delighted: "Then it must be the Queen! Then let's go up and find ....."

Advertisement

"But that guy is a guy." Phoebe scanned the stunned face of Qi Yifang, who knew nothing, with amusement, and said almost nastily, "And you know that you can't change your gender in the game, so what do you think, or what do you expect ....."

"Is this man the Queen?"

Qi Yifang's expression went blank: "Ha?!"

Phoebe, after admiring Qi Yifang's dumbfounded expression, withdrew her gaze in bemusement and her tone became cold again, "Can't go up to the Sky City to find it for now, I don't know what's on that map, the fact that the Hearts are stuck up there and can't come down to us means there's something wrong with that map in itself. "

"We should start by sweeping the map from below the island."

"But, but ....." Qi Yifang's mind was already overwhelmed by what Phoebe was throwing out one after another, and he could only stutter, "But we haven't met up with the tactician yet! But we haven't met up with the tactician yet! We're just going to push! We should wait until the Queen joins us and then push after the tactician is out. ....."

"Why do we have to wait for him?" Phoebe interrupted Qi Yifang impatiently, she looked up, her eyes and words completely cold on her obviously innocent face, "He can't come down from the island to us on his own, that's his own waste too."

"It's league time and I don't leave time for waiting for crap."

Qi Yifang was so dumbfounded that he was on the verge of tears: " Phoebe, but we don't have a tactician! How can we play in the league without a tactician?

Oooooh, he misses Jiayi at this point, who also acts as their tactician, but at least it's a negotiated one, and Phoebe is the type who is so strong that there's no way to interject, except for Hearts who can barely communicate with her on an even keel - and that's mostly because Hearts has a higher panel than Phoebe, and Phoebe is the type who can just send you off on the spot in order to win.

--whoever you are.

"It's just that Hearts isn't there, so why no tactician?" Phoebe gave him a strange look, "Aren't I human?"

Qi Yifang just wanted to hold his head and scream - he knew it!

Whenever Phoebe was brought into a match, every game was a major usurpation - Phoebe would constantly steal tactician's rights from Hearts, and would sometimes even turn on Hearts, thanks to Hearts' experience.

This is the reason why Hearts didn't let Phoebe into the team before.

Advertisement

Phoebe is a very aggressive and ambitious player, with strong mobility and aggressiveness. Although she is a supportive individual and takes the [control] position, she can play all the [roaming] and [main attack] positions, and can be said to be a talented all-round player, in some ways even stronger than Liu Jiayi at the beginning, and Bai Liu and the Reverse God, who are on the same level. He was the same level of player as Bai Liu and the Inverse Gods, dragging their teammates, who couldn't keep up, to death every time.

She's a natural tactician - Qi Yifang has heard the Queen say this about Phoebe more than once.

But Phoebe has one Achilles' heel - and that is that her tactics are so aggressive that she can easily die on her teammates.

In other words, the team is too weak.

Qi Yifang, as a teammate who has always been mocked by Phoebe as a [loser], is really afraid of Phoebe taking control.

She doesn't care about them at all.

But now that Hearts is gone, there's no one in the room who can hold Phoebe down!

Phoebe bounced lightly off the pedestal table under the idol, she threw away the core of her nibbled apple and clapped her hands together in a slightly cheerful manner, her bright green eyes curved in a smile, " It's just as well Hearts isn't here, I don't like his weak style of play at all, it's not cool at all."

"He's stuck on the island now and can't get out, so if he has any sense and wants to win this game, he'd better delegate his tactician privileges to me now."

"Of course it doesn't matter if we don't delegate." Phoebe shrugged indifferently, "Just wait until he can't hold out and die on the island and leave this game, and the tactician privileges are mine."

She folded her hands and closed her eyes in prayer, "Lord, then I wish Hearts to go to hell right now."

"?!?" Qi Yifang was scared and wanted to cry, like a poor child whose parents had left home and had to stay with bad kids who bullied them, all he could do was shiver and whisper back, "Phoebe, the Queen is at least our president, right? Wouldn't it be nice if you cursed her like that?"

"President?" Phoebe gave Qi Yifang a light-eyed sidelong glance, suddenly smiling innocently with curled lips, "Maybe not soon."

Qi Yifang was stunned: "..... What does it mean that the Queen will not be the President right away?"

"That weakling." Phoebe smiled sweetly, her hands folded under her jaw, a holy glow all over her face, "Gave me access to the guild's heir before this year's tournament in order to escape what he didn't want to face oh."

Advertisement

"-as soon as he does die, I'll be the president of the King's Crown."

"So please let him go to hell quickly."

Qi Yifang's mind was now completely blank: "What? The Queen has given you the authority of the President?!"

Phoebe's system panel vibrated, and a prompt popped up saying

[System Alert: Player Queen Hearts has transferred the team's tactician authority to you, please deploy carefully and lead your team to victory!]

"What a weak approach to Hearts style." Phoebe snorted very softly as she smiled and waved the system panel in her hand at Qi Yifang whose expression was on the verge of dementedness, "Tactician access is mine now too."

"Come with me, loser mate."

Ornamental pool.

Wang Shun winced when he saw the Tactician logo appear on Phoebe's head, a reaction echoed by the large crowd in the auditorium.

Now even the host looked numb, his face dazed as he looked at the big screen and spoke into the microphone with a bit of a break, "Nation, the King's Guild has also delegated their tactician authority to the new players ....."

"So what's this?!"

The host said incredulously, "Two freshman playmakers duking it out?! In a crucial game that will decide whether or not both families make the playoffs?!"

Whispers from the audience.

"Wow shit, a newcomer versus a newcomer, so who wins and who loses is not certain?"

"..... What are these two presidents thinking?"

"Am I the only one who cares what the nun just said; that she's the new president when the queen dies?! What's going on here!?"

Yuan Guang, who was sitting next to Wang Shun, was also tense, he was sitting here on behalf of the merged Russell Cemetery, he had been dizzy from this operation when Bai Liu had delegated his authority to Liu Jiayi, and now that the other party had also delegated, he was even more dizzy and had to hold Wang Shun and ask him: "What is this? "What the hell is going on here?"

"I didn't expect the ..... Empress to give Phoebe the guild and the Tactician's authority so quickly." Wang Shun's face sank slightly, "All I know is that a long time ago she didn't want to be the president anymore, that's why she picked Jiayi as her successor and groomed her to take over her authority."

Yuan Guang was stunned: "You don't want to do it anymore? Why? She's one of the strongest players in the game?

"I don't know." Wang Shun bowed his head heavily as he folded his arms in front of himself and was silent for a moment before speaking, "The Queen's skill would make me the person I wanted to see in the core of my greatest desire when I looked directly at her, so I never succeeded in testing her mind."

"Why would a top player in the prime of his powers give up his position?" Daniel asked bored as he leaned over the railing and turned his head to Cen Buming, "Hey President, you look like you know everything, do you know why?"

Cen Buming clutched his chest and gave Daniel a nonchalant sidelong glance: "Shouldn't you know more about the King's Guild?"

"That dangerous nun, that's your sister, isn't it?"

"Biologically speaking, she is indeed my sister." Daniel looked at Phoebe on the big screen with a slightly resistant expression and tsked in annoyance, "But by all accounts, a more accurate definition of her status would be my competitor than sister."

"And a pretty strong contender at that."

Cen Buming raised one eyebrow slightly, "While I have no interest in your family affairs, I can listen if you want to talk about them."

--what a gossipy sentence of rejection.

Daniel couldn't resist switching hands and mopping his jaw as he stared at Phoebe on the big screen for a moment, his apple-green eyes darkening.

"You should know who I am in reality, right, President? I don't need to give you any more information about my background, do I?" Daniel's voice sounded suddenly.

Cen Buming gave a cold nod, "I know. "

Advertisement

--An arms dealer so powerful that the Bai six of other worlds would be willing to cooperate with him, would choose his heir from among his own offspring in a way that could be described as cruel, as if he were taming a beast.

Daniel, the winner of the offspring of these fights, inherited the group after his father's death and became one of the best and most easily discharged guns in Bai six's hands.

"My father had many lovers, he didn't care for them and wouldn't let them into our family, but he would bring back all the children of his born of these lovers and teach us to handle and shoot a gun from the time we started walking." Daniel cocked his head and said in a casual tone, "My mother was the first wife he took into the family and then he killed me when I was five because she betrayed him and was praying at bedtime."

" Phoebe's mother was his second wife and he married Phoebe's mother when she was already raised in the Cinchimani family until she was five years old, when I was almost seven."

Daniel paused for a moment and, as if amused, began to play a question and answer game with Cen Buming: "Why do you think my father chose Phoebe's mother as his second wife out of a long list of lovers?"

Cen Buming was quiet for a moment: "I don't know."

--in short, there would be nothing in this little madman's family that could be routinely inferred.

"It's because of Phoebe." Daniel leaned back lazily in his posture, "My father was going to marry the mother of another boy - another of his lovers."

"But Phoebe changed his mind."

Daniel looked up, he looked at Phoebe on the big screen and his tone was dark: "At just five years old, Phoebe was a perfect inheritor of his genes, even surpassing him, she was cruel, powerful, cold, clinging to her gun when she was crawling, with an innate desire to control anything she could plunder and move up the ladder, compared to other heirs who only cry, Phoebe is as good as a creature of another species."

" Phoebe's excellence impressed my father, and although there had never been a female heir in the Cinchimani family, Phoebe swayed him."

"He decided to marry Phoebe's birth mother to pave the way for Phoebe's place in the heirship."

"When I was thirteen and Phoebe was ten, our family had an heir trial." Daniel looked at the big screen and recounted in a calm tone, "The trial was simple: shoot a living person ten metres away with an apple on their head."

"These living people were our closest adoptive mothers at the time, and all the children came on crying, except Phoebe."

"-despite the live target she had to shoot at, the living person standing across from her with the apple on top was her biological mother."

"We had to fire a total of ten shots, we would be given apples to change, some of the kids broke down and stopped on the first shot, and people on the field kept getting hurt and dragged down again for resuscitation."

"There were only two kids on the field who finished firing ten shots, one was me and one was Phoebe, my live target was my servant at the time who was uninjured and ended up leaving the field in tears, I called a time out when I got to the sixth shot and took a minute break."

Daniel paused for a moment, " Phoebe didn't call a timeout."

"She just calmly held the gun up and fired ten shots with uncanny precision at the apples that kept being replaced over her own birth mother's head."

"On the third shot, her mother couldn't hold it together and broke down on her knees and started crying and praying, saying she wanted it all to stop, and my father asked Phoebe if she needed to take a break, and Phoebe said - no."

"She said to hold mum in place and just keep changing apples, it'll be over soon."

Cen Buming is silent.

Daniel looks up: "- and now Phoebe is still the number one heir to the Cinchimani family."

"She didn't seem satisfied with having to wait until her father died to get what she wanted, though, so-" Daniel shrugged indifferently, "I wasn't surprised to see her in the game for that matter. "

"Did you just say that all the kids on the field cried except the nuns?" Cen Buming asked thoughtfully in return, "So you cried too?"

Daniel: "....."

City in the Sky

In-game.

Qi Yifang followed Phoebe cautiously, eyeing her up: "Are we really not going to save the Queen? She's given you access, so she must be in a critical condition, right? Why don't we go up to the Sky City and watch ....."

"He gave me access because he knew I had the advantage over him." Phoebe interrupts Qi Yifang's crumbling comment as she gives him a spare glance, "He should have done this a long time ago."

"He's never going to win with that soft defensive play, he's only wearing himself out."

"Relying on [shields] doesn't make you weak ....." Qi Yifang's defensive voice faded under Phoebe's emotionless gaze, "We also got second in the ....."

"If this is the right tactic, why would Hearts want me on the team?" Phoebe countered gently, "Why should I be given the status of heir to the presidency and access to the tactician?"

" Hearts is only doing this to show - he knows himself that he can't win that way and he's using me to help him win, so doesn't that just prove that I'm doing the right thing more than he is?"

Qi Yifang was anxious and upset: "I'm still don't understand, the Queen can still fight, she's so young, why is she so anxious to give you the guild to inherit?"

"Is she leaving the guild to do something?"

"He's not leaving the guild, he's trying to get out of the game, he's trying to escape it all." Phoebe replied in a light tone, "So he's been looking for an heir to take over the guild, first the witch and then me."

"Get out of the game?" Qi Yifang asked incredulously in return, "There's a way out of the game?"

Phoebe replied in an even tone, "Of course we do, don't we have people leaving the game every day all around us?"

Qi Yifang was confused: "Around me? How did they leave?! How come I don't know?!"

"What's the best way to get out of the game, apart from winning the league and making a wish at the end?"

"Die." Phoebe yawned lazily, looking at the dumbfounded Qi Yifang with that gentle smile on her face as she prayed, "You can leave even after you die, have you forgotten?"

Qi Yifang stopped dead in his tracks, his expression blank for a few seconds before he realised what Phoebe meant by that.

"You mean ....." Qi Yifang questioned Phoebe incredulously, "You mean the Queen wants to die?!"

"Or what?" Phoebe shrugged, "What reason but death would motivate a ruler at the peak of his power to seek an heir?"

"Why?!" Qi Yifang was going crazy, his mind was shaken, and his pupils were lax, "Why is the Queen seeking death?!"

Phoebe, with that pitying, careless smile on her face, replied, "Because he's weak."

"No matter how many [shields] he finds to protect himself, he's still too weak to face here, to face himself anymore, both in and out of the game."

" Sister Phoebe!"

Far away, across the nunnery, a man in bishop's clothes was calling out to Phoebe, who was waving, his voice tinged with urgency: "Please come quickly!"

"The Pope has been attacked on the Island in the Sky! The witches are attacking all the Inquisitorial Courts and we need your help!"

Phoebe raised her eyebrows a little: "The Pope was attacked?"

If her information was correct, the pope was the same priest who had promoted Quan Baola, captain of the first generation of saints.

He also succeeded in suppressing Quan Baola, who was a powerful witch, and further established the position of the Holy See, so to speak, and his promotion was like a rocket. He was soon promoted to the papacy.

No matter how well prepared he was, no matter how terrible the sorcery used on him, he was useless and died without a scratch. It's hard enough for anyone to attack the Pope, who seems to have armour all around him.

It was the first time I had heard of this attack.

..... and still attacked on the Island in the Sky.

The ordinary NPCs of this world are already shocked by the majesty of this Pope who has no part in the attack on the witches. The existence of this Pope has made them more and more convinced that God exists and blesses the people of the Holy See, and the more they dare not disobey the Holy See, not to mention those who are screened by the Holy See to get on the island of the sky, there will be no one who will not think of attacking the Pope.

Unless this assailant of the Pope has the strength and confidence to kill this Pope at first sight.

Phoebe narrowed her eyes - she suspected the attack had been done by Hearts.

But if the attack was carried out by Hearts, the pope should not have been attacked, but killed - and cut to pieces, by a thousand cuts.

So what's going on? What's on Sky Island? Why is this Pope not dead?

The Island in the Sky.

Hearts is half pinned to the ground by a group of men, surrounded by a scattered pile of playing cards, a mess of knife marks on his face and a pile of used up game props on the floor.

His shoulder-length hair slid down the side of his face to his god, his eyes brimming with red and purple as he looked in the dim candlelight, and on his lips were dried blood stains that he licked away before he slowly raised his head to look across at the man sitting in the chair - a man dressed in a pope's line, with a face so familiar to him that he couldn't help but start to laugh, and so he did laugh.

"Do not be rude to the Pope!" Someone raised his sceptre in anger and gave him a sharp blow in the face.

So he was slapped across the face, blood dripping from the corners of his mouth, and Hearts slowly pushed his tongue against his cheek, which was sore and numb from the headstock of the sceptre, and laughed more and more, almost to the point of a frenzy.

It was so funny, he hadn't dreamed of this scene for years and he actually saw it again in this fake game.

"You ......!" The man was about to fight when the Pope, sitting within a wide sofa chair, raised his hand to stop him.

The loving, middle-aged Pope looked at Hearts with an inexplicable pity: "He is after all my child, there is no need for that."

"But he attacked you! My Lord Pope!" The man next to him accused with righteous indignation, "This foul son of a witch actually tried to kill us all!"

"If we had not had the blessing of God, we would have died by his hand!"

Hearts Lifting his eyes, he looked up at the panel of monster books that was spinning above the heads of the Pope and the group of cardinals :

[Witch Trials Monster Book Refresh - Pope (Master of the Sky City) (1/4)]

[Attack Value: Attacks against members of the Order are weakened, weakening one member of the Order by fifteen percent of their blood at a time, attacks against witches and the judged are enhanced, weakening the opponent by twenty percent of their blood at a time (combat style has been unlocked by combat)]

[Attack: Sacred Scepter, Words of Judgement]

[Weakness: ?? (unexplored)]

[System Alert: Unlock the first page of the Witch Trials Monster Book, "The Pope", due to player Hearts' persistent attacks]

[Note: The NPC should have been promoted to Pope for leading the coming of the Witch Trials period and gained the Oracle Blessing shield, which can ignore attacks from all males in the area ruled by the Papacy and all witches who have been judged and can trigger rebound attacks under special circumstances].

[System Alert: Player Hearts, because you are both a tried witch and a male in the area ruled by the Holy See, every attack you make against the Pope will trigger the bounce mechanism and be bounced back to yourself, please attack with caution].

[The Witch Trials Monster Book Refresh - Cardinal (Sky City VIP) (2/4)]

[Attack Value: Cannot attack the Pope, one attack against a member of the Order will weaken one member of the Order by ten percent of their blood, attacks against witches and the judged are enhanced by weakening the opponent by fifteen percent of their blood at a time (combat style has been unlocked by combat)]

[Attack: Mallet, Doctrine Recitation]

[Weakness: ?? (unexplored)]

[System Alert: Unlock the second page of the Witch Trials Monster Book, "The Cardinal", due to persistent attacks by player Hearts]

[Note: As this npc has gained the Oracle Blessing shield for judging countless witches, it can ignore the attacks of all males in the area ruled by the Holy See and all witches judged, and can trigger rebound attacks under special circumstances].

[System Alert: Player Hearts, because you are both a tried witch and a male in the area ruled by the Holy See, every attack you make against the Cardinal will trigger the bounce mechanism and be bounced back to yourself, so please attack with caution].

"That was ..... so much fun." Hearts cocked his head and looked up, his eyes amazingly bright and his face not at all disheveled, but with a smile on his face at the Pope's familiar face, "It has been a long time, my father."

"After all these years, I can't believe I'm in your clutches again."

"So, guess this time ....."

Hearts twirled his wrist and two fingers on his hoisted right hand flashed a playing card while he lifted his eyes and smiled almost lazily, "How soon will I destroy your island?"

Meanwhile, the witches' quarter.

Having defeated the Order, Quan Baola took Liu Jiayi back into the witch's quarter, where she spread out a map and began to talk seriously to those around her about the next attack.

Liu Jiayi was watching, and as she watched, she suddenly frowned and tugged on Quan Baola's coat: "Can I ask a question?"

Quan Baola turned his head to look at her: "What's the problem?"

"This location is the core of the Papacy, right, with the Papal Palace below and the Sky City hovering above, so generally speaking we should attack this place first, right? Once we take this place, all the main members of the Papacy will be wiped out, and the remaining Inquisition will not be a problem, so we can take our time to clear it." Liu Jiayi wondered, "Why are all your attack routes bypassing this place?"

Quan Baola's face stilled, the rest of the witches did not have as much control over their emotions as Quan Baola did, and a few of their faces sank instantly.

Liu Jiayi was keenly aware that something was wrong: "This place, is there something bad to fight?"

Quan Baola remained quiet for a moment, but opened his mouth, "Everyone who has been on this island is immune to the witch's attacks, and in some cases can even bounce back from our attacks."

"The last time I prepared a small team to go to the island once." Quan Baola's purple eyes dimmed for a moment, "Everyone gave it their best shot, but it ....."

A witch next to her whispered through gritted teeth, "Any attack on them is ineffective as long as the witch has been tried!"

"I have tried to board the island many times in all the years since I defected to the witches' quarter." Quan Baola said in a very soft voice, "We even formed a team from the males that were rescued after realising that the witches couldn't make it to the island, but there was still no way to attack them."

"Some say that the Sky City is the closest place to heaven, that they are blessed by God because they judged us and did the right thing, and that God gave them the Island of the Sky to protect those who go on it from us wicked witches. "

Liu Jiayi reacted almost instantly - this island should be a boss of size, with armour stacked on it.

And the gauntlet is deliberately aimed at witches.

Liu Jiayi looked at the floating island on the map and pondered - if a witch who had been judged could not attack, and neither could a male of the local population, then there were only two identities in this map that could fight a boss.

The first is from within the Holy See.

The second is a witch who has not yet been tried - like her.

But both identities are a bit of a problem, Liu Jiayi narrows her eyes slightly - no wonder the witches have been holding back on this area, it's a zone that has been formed entirely against them.

"Witches like me, who have not been tried, should be able to attack them." Liu Jiayi spoke calmly, "But it's rare for someone like me to join the Witch District on my own before I've been tried, and there's no way to gather a team to attack the Upper Sky Islands, is there?"

Quan Baola was quiet for a moment, then nodded: "Yes."

Girls who have not yet been judged, even if they already have the signs of a witch, that will not easily defect and join the witch district, they will try to hide themselves until the moment of their trial comes to position.

"It is also possible for those within the Order to attack the Upper Sky City." Liu Jiayi said thoughtfully, "But the people inside the Order are too dangerous for you to contact, and even if you can turn one or two of your insiders, you won't be able to form a scale and form a war party."

But again, the Sky City is the core functioning area of the entire Papacy, and if they don't fight their way up there, the more vetted witches there are, the more cardinals will be eligible to ascend, and the more they won't be able to fight against, the more people with armour.

There are now two entry points, the first of which is from within the Holy See.

There is a very good entry point within the Holy See, and that is - the resident group of nuns on the City in the Sky.

Quan Baola seemed to have thought about this a long time ago as she recounted in an articulate manner, "We tried to contact the girls on the Sky City and they went up there and never came back down, which is not the same as what the Holy See told them at the beginning, nor is it like what the Pope told them before, that they were to be free to pick their partners up there and choose which of them they liked that and be happy with each other forever, but to be chosen by a different man every week, or even every day, and then be with each other."

"But they can't leave the Sky City, they can't contact the outside world, and naturally they can't tell the girls down on the island who still want to go up to the Sky City what they see up there."

"And you witches know what it's like up there, though." Liu Jiayi calmly adds the second half of Baola's sentence, "But when you speak, no one believes you at all."

"And in this extreme situation, the City of the Sky, as the only clearing for the female inhabitants who have not yet been judged, their best retreat apart from the witches, someone who denigrates the City of the Sky would be denigrating their last chance of survival, and they would not believe it."

Quan Baola did not speak, her expression had a still, skilful look, her eyes were slightly downcast as if she was a little sad, and it was a long time before she spoke softly, "Why don't people want to believe what the witches say?"

"Why do people prefer to believe in the casual trials of the Papacy rather than in the death-defying struggles of witches?"

"For no one will listen to the words of the judged and will feel that the other side is all arguing against their own crimes." Liu Jiayi replied in a faint tone, "Nor will anyone listen to the Holy See when you have cleansed the whole kingdom of all the tribunals of judgment after you have fought your way up to the city of the sky."

Quan Baola took a deep breath: "But fighting our way up to the Sky City is a big problem, and although we can reach the girls up there, they have never swallowed an eel, are not witches, have no resistance against the Papal bunch, and are so tightly controlled by the Papal bunch that it is difficult for us to see them. "

"But it's certainly an entry point." Liu Jiayi's tone changes, "There is another entry point that we can use for us."

Quan Baola was stunned: "What entry point?"

Liu Jiayi looked up into Quan Baola's shining purple eyes, and her tone couldn't help but start to wander a little: "But I'm not sure you can accept using these people as an aid to cut in."

"- is a group of men who have been used as reserve witches and transported from a foreign land."

"They are not local and not affiliated with the Order, so the attack on these people on the island should be effective."

"A male from another country?" Quan Baola nodded very gently as she replied seriously, "I will give the offer some serious thought, but we have another, quicker and more direct solution on our side."

Liu Jiayi asks, "What is the solution?"

"[The Heart of a Witch]." Quan Baola's tone was solemn, "We have a copy of the [Witch's Code] here, in which it is written that there will be a powerful witch who, hardened by extreme pain and hatred, will harden her otherwise insubstantial soul into a ruby red heart, and that by placing this heart on top of the highest Tower of Babel in the Sky City, the light emitted by the heart will break all the protection of the Holy See, and at that time we can ....."

A witch next to her raised her voice to interrupt Baola's somewhat agitated narrative and looked at Baola with great concern and seriousness: "The Witch's Heart is only a legend, Baola, you are not allowed to read it anymore!"

"If we ever catch you reading this legendary story in secret again, and privately using some so-called painful cultivation to harden your soul, it's going to be your ass!"

Quan Baola couldn't resist arguing, "But everything else in the [Witch's Code] is useful, and we've learned a lot of witchcraft from it, and if the [Witch's Heart] in the [Witch's Code] really exists, then all it would take is a heart, and everyone wouldn't have to work so hard to attack the island in one go!"

"But the extraction requirement for [the Witch's Heart] is [the soul leaving the body]!" The witch who was arguing with Baola couldn't help but raise her voice, "That means you're going to die! Baola!"

"You're going to die, and your soul becomes a heart so we can get your [Witch's Heart]!"

Liu Jiayi captures the key phrase: "Witch's Heart?"

"You mustn't listen to Baola." The witch next to her advised bitterly, "It's just a legendary item that is said to break all the protections the Order has against us, but it's not even known to exist and no one has ever seen it, we're not going to get our hopes up on it!"

"But I think there must be a witch's heart that can conquer all things." Quan Baola's eyes were determined, and she smiled, as if jokingly, "I'm known as the [First Witch] by those in the Order, what if the [Witch's Heart] is in me?"

The witch looked warningly at Quan Baola: "Baola!"

Quan Baola threw up her hands in surrender and whispered, "Okay, okay, I know you don't like it, I won't say anything."

Meanwhile, Liu Jiayi looks to his refreshed system panel.

[System Alert: Congratulations to player Liu Jiayi for obtaining the key information - If you obtain (Heart of the Witch)].

[Only when a witch dies, her soul is separated from her body, and the heart that is formed is called (the heart of a witch) and can break the protection of all the members of the Order.]

Liu Jiayi's eyes narrowed for a moment - this shows .....

Wouldn't that mean they would have to kill the witch to get each other's hearts?

" Baola!" You Zhen's voice came from far away, a little excited, "We're back!"

Quan Baola turned his head and made sure everyone was back with a look before smiling, "Looks like everyone showed up in force this time."

"That's for sure!" You Zhen smiled triumphantly, her eyes shining, "We brought back all the witches on trial this time! Not a single one was left out!"

Quan Baola looks to Leah next to him: "What about the families? Did you bring them back?"

Leah and You Zhen were both eerily silent for a moment, they had saved the men before, but basically, they didn't take them to the witch area, they just saved them and ran, but every time Baola would ask.

At the look on their faces, Quan Baola, helpless and in tears, sighed: "Did you leave her outside the courtroom again?"

"I'll go down later and bring the people back and take them to the witch sanctuary, they were victims of the Order too, there's no need to take it out on them." Quan Baola paused for a moment, "Many are still children, only a few years old, you shouldn't do this."

Many of the males on trial were [sons of witches], whose mothers were tried in the first place, executed or defected after being condemned as witches by the Papacy, and they were in the second place, and these children were basically no more than fifteen years old.

You Zhen whispered in defense: "..... usually kids we still bring back."

They all know how Baola was tried and how Baola's children are still confined to the Island of the Sky as [sons of witches], the queens of the ..... gang.

So, You Zhen, no matter how much she disliked men, could not help but think of the infants who had been tried by the priest for having a [witch's heart] when she saw these tried, young [sons of witches], and saved them to bring them back.

--for not bringing it back, who knows if these children will also be brought up to the city in the sky because of their overly beautiful appearance, or for other reasons.

"But why not this time?" Quan Baola enquired softly.

You Zhen paused for a moment as she and Leah looked at each other and took a deep breath before speaking, "Because a strange organisation took them in and I thought they were a more appropriate place to house the men on trial."

"A strange organization?" Quan Baola frowned slightly, "What kind of organisation?"

Leah and You Zhen told Quan Baola everything, and Quan Baola realised something almost instantly, turning her head to Liu Jiayi behind her, her eyes wandering, with a smile in her voice: "This is what you said, a male from another country that can be used as another entry point? "

Liu Jiayi resisted the urge to cover her face and gave a very difficult muffled cry.

..... admits it's really embarrassing to know such an odd bunch of men.

"You know these men?" You Zhen looked in shock at Liu Jiayi, who also reacted quickly and asked incredulously, "You wouldn't be the witch who healed him that that guy said was willing to slay the gods for you, would you?!"

Liu Jiayi pursed her lips and nodded a little, "If he didn't know any other witches, it would have been me."

You Zhen scratched his head a little awkwardly, "Eh, it's someone you know, huh? Tell me earlier ....."

She had been so good at targeting them and ended up throwing the men at them and then fierce them away.

"No." Liu Jiayi looked up, her tone even, "If they can't even make peace with you and do their job as auxiliary witches, there is no need for you to be kind to them for my sake."

"They don't deserve your kindness if they can't even show that kind of sincerity."

You Zhen flinched for a moment, and Quan Baola's eyes moved to Liu Jiayi before a genuine smile appeared, and she turned her head to Jiayi, held out her hand and said in a cooperative manner, "Can I meet them?"

Liu Jiayi held out his hand and shook Quan Baola haughtily: "They are always at your disposal if you want them to be."

Quan Baola winked as she smiled a little, "I hope we have a good time together then."

Liu Jiayi breathed a sigh of relief in his heart - at last he was willing to meet Bai Liu and the others.

When she had suggested it, Quan Baola had said she would consider it, but it was clearly a very low priority - the seemingly mild-mannered head witch was in fact very thoughtful and vigilant, and she was very clear-headed, and would never open the door for men to enter the witch quarter until she had dealt with the relationship between the men on trial and the witches. She is very clear-headed and will not open the door for men to enter the witch quarter until she has dealt with the relationship between the men on trial and the witches.

It also means she won't just accept the help from a bunch of exotic men.

But now You Zhen's attitude has made Quan Baola reconsider the matter - as a third party group outside the witch zone, this group also has the ability to protect young victims such as the Sons of the Witch on trial, better place other men in the safe zone and train them to be able to defend themselves, while also They can also be used as a support team to clear the Inquisitorial Court of their friends, and because they are only in the support position, they will not cause major damage to the witches when they attack, even if this team turns against them.

This solves all the current problems perfectly and has been implemented once and seems to be working quite well - a tactic she had developed at the beginning.

But she was also prepared for the tactic not to work, as she was unsure how well Bai Liu would work with the witch team and whether she would succeed in impressing them.

Liu Jiayi watched Quan Baola's back as he turned to continue his deliberations and couldn't help but curl the corner of his mouth a little.

But not a bad job so far, it seems, with this oddly shaped group of men.

At the same moment, the oddly shaped group of men were sitting in a sad huddle.

They got them to clear out an abandoned warehouse on the outskirts of the last Inquisition, cleaned out all the eels inside once more, and then placed the men and children who had been rescued from the Inquisition today here in the warehouse and were about to prepare for their rest.

It's supposed to be a relatively easy process that doesn't cause Mu Sicheng to break down and scream for help: "Bai Liu, what am I going to do? You've got to help me!"

Bai Liu rolled his eyes to look at him, "No what to do."

"But I really don't know how to carry a baby!!!" Mu Sicheng was really going crazy, he had a small child in his arms who looked four or five years old and was now buried in his arms, grabbing his hair and crying, "Mummy! I want my mother! Didn't you say you'd get a mother if you came with you!"

"Where's my mother!"

Mu Sicheng was going crazy, his brain buzzing with tears: "There will be a mother! I will find your mother! Will you stop crying!"

Yes, that's right, they're all bringing up children.

When the judge asked the sons of witches in a coaxing tone whether they would choose the Holy See or your foul and sinful witch mothers, all the little children howled in the court dock.

"I want my mother!"

"You're the bad guy! You took mummy away! You give me back my mum!"

So the trial process for small children was exceptionally easy and quick, unless the father next to them sternly demanded that they change their confessions, and almost all the children were pronounced [sons of witches] in court and sentenced to some lowly drudgery to be brought up as slaves in the kingdom.

Tang Erda rocks a small two-year-old child from side to side in one arm, both of whom are tired of crying and fall asleep in his arms, clutching his collar and sobbing in their sleep, their eyes red.

"What brutes." Tang Erda's face was stony and cold, but the words came out softly, as if she was afraid of waking the children up, "To try children this young and to torture them."

These seven children included two girls, one aged four and one aged six. After going to court, both girls, probably because they had witnessed their mother's trial, were very resistant to and afraid of the Holy See, and began to cry when they went to court, refusing very strongly the bishop's request to join the Holy See to be cleansed of impurity, and not willing to drink holy water to prove their innocence, and were finally pronounced [guilty] by the whole jury.

Not pronounced [sons of witches], but straight up [witches], saying that the wicked witches came to earth with the help of their tainted mothers, who had not yet awakened to witch consciousness only, and that they were to be burned with holy fire in court, or identified.

The two girls, one now on Bai Liu's back with her head tilted against Bai Liu's shoulder, the other in Bai Liu's arms, patted gently on the back, curled up insecurely in a small ball, arms and legs twitching gently, a little ash from the fire still on their faces, also tearfully asleep.

Bai Liu glanced down at the stain on the little girl's face and gently wiped it off with his sleeve.

Muke had only one with him, but the boy was quite quiet, only sleeping restlessly, waking up now and then to cry and then drowsily clinging to Muke as he fell asleep again, he had been looking at the child with some distress and mixed eyes, and when he heard Mu Sicheng's painful cry for help raise his head, he could not help but say with amusement, "Don't argue with him, he is He's just scared, he's tired of crying and he's sleeping."

Mu Sicheng was also getting teary-eyed as he was hung by the energetic little boy's neck, riding on his back and crying loudly for his mother and father, and almost choked up as he looked to a silent Bai Liu and Tang Erda: "Why are you ..... so skilled with children? Why are you so skilled with children?"

Tang Erda, in particular, is so skilled with 2 two-year-olds.

"I was surrounded by new fathers who were anxiously looking up parenting experiences every day, and I followed some of them." Tang Erda pauses slightly, "Probably know how to bring up."

Mu Sicheng, the boy, had finally tired of his antics and had fallen asleep next to Mu Sicheng, clutching the corner of his coat, and he breathed a long, relieved sigh of relief - normally he would have been furious with such a child.

But now .....

Mu Sicheng looked at the burns on the little boy's arms, remembered the little boy crying hysterically at the bishop in court, saying, "Burn my mother if you can, burn me if you can," and tsked again, taking off his jacket and covering him up.

Not bad for a bit of backbone.

"What do we do next?" Mu Sicheng's head is spinning at the thought of new children coming in every day, "I can't even bring one in, what's going to happen behind me?"

"Let the others who have been admitted take them, there are relatives of these children among them." Bai Liu's tone was even, "We'll just leave one of us here, the rest of us have to go out on the circuit, and the court has a new trial every day."

Mu Sicheng gave a loud, fiery cry, "There's a trial tomorrow? Can this trial court be burned down?"

"Of course it's going to burn." Bai Liu calmed, "Preparations for the big battle should be underway in the Witch Quarter, we'll just wait for the catch."

"Speaking of which ....." Muke frowned, "it's a bit odd, with all the fuss we've made since we logged in, why hasn't the Kings Guild come looking for us, we haven't heard a word about them? "

"What are they doing?"

"We landed on the Witch side, they should have landed on the side that is hostile to us, the Holy See." Bai Liu pondered, "That's what I've heard, the Queen of Hearts landed her copy on the Island of the Sky, which is the heart of the Papacy."

"As to why there's no movement now ....."

Bai Liu narrowed his eyes slightly, "I don't think there's no movement, it's just that it's movement we don't know about yet."

Muke paused: "What do you mean?"

"From the information we've gotten so far, there were two people tried in that [Witch's Heart] trial back then, one was Quan Baola and the other was her child, also known as the Son of the Virgin." Bai Liu spoke in a calm tone, "These two characters now happen to be one in the other camp as Hearts logged in, and one as the leader of our side, exactly one on each side."

"If this is a fair game design against each other, then there is a great possibility that these two people who belong to both camps have the so-called [Witch's Heart], and what we, as people from the witch's camp, should do is to go and grab the other side's [Witch's Heart] before putting it on the high tower."

"The other side's [Witch's Heart]?" Mu Sicheng came over a little confused, "According to you, doesn't someone on our side of the camp have a [Witch's Heart]? Can't we just send our [Witch's Heart] up to the tower?"

Bai Liu gave Mu Sicheng a light-eyed sweep, "From the main quest, your idea is fine."

"But only if we, who have taken Quan Baola [Heart of the Witch], are not killed by the rioting witches before we ascend to the Sky City."

"Wait ....." Mu Sicheng reacted slowly as he asked back in shock, "Isn't this [Witch's Heart] a spell or a prop or something? It can't really be a witch's heart, can it?!"

"Maybe it's worse than that." Bai Liu slowly lifted the receiver with a message just sent by Liu Jiayi, who raised his eyes and whispered, "[The Witch's Heart] is the heart condensed from the soul of a witch after her death."

Meanwhile, the papal palace.

It is late at night at the moment.

In the empty nun's hall, the Bishop looked pityingly and salivating at Phoebe, who sat opposite him, and sighed in his heart at the beauty and beauty of the young girl, who had grown to an age when she was ready to be enjoyed.

"You're turning sixteen this year, aren't you?" The Bishop took Phoebe's hand and placed it over hers like an elder, patting it gently twice, "Have you thought about what you'll do when you become an adult?"

Phoebe withdrew her hand without moving and looked at the bishop in a prayerful manner, "Did you not come to speak to me about the assassination of the Pope?"

"The two things are related." The Bishop feigned seriousness and withdrew his hand into a fist and coughed, " Phoebe, you are the best nun of our generation in the Papal Court and concern for your going is as important as concern for the assassination of the Pope."

"Is that so?" Phoebe was noncommittal as she smiled, "It doesn't look like something big happened to the Pope then."

The bishop looked compassionate as he gripped the cross on his own breast: "The Pope has the blessing of God, and even if he were to be attacked by more evil men, God would protect him from the slightest harm because of his merits."

"But that's not the case with the others."

The bishop sighed: "The Pope and the bishops accompanying him were attacked by a regular dweller on the island of the sky, but soon, by the blessing of God, after a brief fright, they took control of the regular dweller who had suddenly turned on them and were ready to take him into custody."

"At first there were no casualties, but something went wrong during the interrogation of this occupant."

"But that regular occupant, who grew up on an island as pure as that in the sky and had never touched an eel, could actually use witchcraft!"

This bishop's brow furrowed sadly: "Whenever he looked directly into the eyes of anyone, he became the one the other person feared and wanted to see most; all were bewitched by his sorcery, and whenever he succeeded in bewitching someone, he cruelly ordered that person to harm himself in the most vicious and painful way."

"Twenty-one cardinals have died under his sorcery."

Phoebe's eyes narrowed slightly - it was Hearts' personal skill, and it was Hearts who had assassinated the Pope.

But this guy usually rarely use personal skills on NPCs and players, after all, this person does things lazy and expensive and picky, prefer to make people, can lie under the shield or use flat A slowly torture the opponent's case, is definitely not just open a big give the opponent a pain, can be said that a strange fetish and fault.

Hearts' poker flat attack is enough to kill these clerical npc's in this copy, so why would they fail the first attack and only cause a wound drain the second time they fire a big skill?

-- and ..... only twenty-one dead bishops?

In true Hearts fashion, if things had gotten to the point where he was willing to open up his skills indefinitely, the island would have been slaughtered by now.

"And then what?" Phoebe inquired softly, "What happened after he killed the twenty-one cardinals?"

"He has bewitched the Pope with the same sorcery!" The bishop shook his head bitterly, "The Pope was trampled under his feet and mocked with abandon, this man played with the Pope like a little worm, he made the bewitched Pope kneel on the ground and bark like a dog, he made the Pope lick the blood of others on the ground after they had died, the Pope was bewitched by him and did as he was told without resistance."

"At last he gave the order for the Pope to kill himself by swallowing the decorated sword in the room, and it looked as if the Pope was about to be killed by his bewitchment, but he suddenly stopped his order."

Phoebe raised her eyebrows slightly, "Stopped? Why?"

She'd never seen Hearts stop halfway through a big skill, and it was the kind of scene where they just looked like they were having fun, and to be honest, usually in these situations Phoebe would think they'd just have to wait and win as Hearts came down from the Sky Island and bloodied the ladder to them.

The bishop paused, "The Pope said that God blessed him, so God controlled the evil demon witch the moment before he was about to kill him."

"But actually ....." the bishop gave a slight pause, "we don't know why he stopped so suddenly."

"All we know is that he looked up at the mirror across the room and then stopped moving at all, allowing us to tie him up and take him to the prison in the Sky City, as if the demon wizard who had been killing people with impunity before did not exist, as if his soul had been drained away and he had become a puppet-like puppet, never to resist again. "

Phoebe finally showed a bit of surprise now, "Stopped resisting when you saw the mirror?"

Hearts is not the type to drop his weapon at the last minute, rather, he is a vindictive, vengeful, vindictive, vindictive man who has no room for a third emotion in between, and Phoebe only knows two people who can make him drop his poker hand in the heat of hatred. -Phoebe

-- One was his mother, who had been dead for ten years.

-- One was the strange guest who boarded the Island of the Sky back in the day, a man who is supposed to be dying.

In other words, if the Queen of Hearts is not a player but a monster, then the [Weakness] option on this monster book called [Queen of Hearts], as long as you live to explore it, then you will see the [Weakness] with both his mother's and the guest's names written on it in unmistakable detail.

Neither that man nor Hearts' mother appearing in this copy is very realistic.

"Yes, it is true that the sight of the mirror stopped the resistance." The bishop nodded, "So when the Pope came down from the Sky City, he also brought down this mirror that had protected him."

"I have come to you at this time because the Pope is in shock, he may have been corrupted by some degree of evil witch power and needs to be purified, he is now resting in the palace and is very weak, you are our best nun so I would like to ask you to go and purify the Pope of some residual witch power."

"Besides." The bishop's face finally became serious, "The witch's power has become so ubiquitous that it has managed to infiltrate even on the Sky City, our counterattack against the witches is imminent, you, as a nun, are the main force in our purification of the witches, the Pope may also have a reason for seeking you this time to discuss the matter of attacking the witches."

City in the Sky

The main hall of the Papal Palace.

This is the main hall, which only the Pope and his entourage are allowed to enter, and which is guarded by guards so thick that not even a mosquito can get in for a day, and at this time of the Pope's assassination, is lined with all sorts of mechanisms and guards for witches.

The closely guarded Pope was now huddled in his seat with fear on his face, his chest heaving violently, panting so hard he was about to vomit.

The fear of having escaped death at the hands of the Queen of Hearts still hung over him like a sword, as she stepped on his head, looked at him with the indifference and hatred of an ant, and said to him with a lowered head.

"What on earth gave you the confidence to say the words you are my father?"

The Pope, who had never been threatened with death so close to him again after the Witch's Heart trial, looked up in a trance, opposite the mirror, the mirror in which Hearts had stopped moving after one look.

Just as he was about to kill himself under the compulsion of the Hearts, the Hearts stopped moving as if frozen in time and were taken to the bottom of the cell.

-- like the enemy killing you is even more frightening because you don't know why the enemy spared you.

The Pope shuddered in fear and closed his eyes, but couldn't help thinking - it was all right, the prison at the bottom of the Sky was so hard there was no way a man could get out of it!

But at the same time, it occurred to him in some trance -

What was it that made his own child, whom he had judged by his own hand, so powerful, and what was it that spared him?

Is it because he’s his father?

If the Pope had asked this question and Phoebe had heard it at the door, she would have laughed out loud at the sheer hilarity of what he said and broken her pretense of innocence.

If there were 10,000 bad revenge stories in the world about poor children of their biological scum fathers who show mercy to their fathers and let them off the hook in revenge, there would not be one with a protagonist named Hearts.

--This is a guy who can keep his adoptive and biological fathers and twenty-three stallions in heat together.

A man who makes a fool of himself with Hearts can only get himself killed.

The bottom cell of the Sky City.

Hearts' arms and legs were suspended by two thin, long white bone chains from the loops on either side of the cell, his shoulders pulled straight and immobile by this drawn-tight chain, his long crimson hair sliding down the back of his scarred, naked neck in front of his blade, the ground shuddering as blood dripped down the ends of his hair to the ground.

He slowly lifted his head to look at something directly above him, unable to resist a lazy grin on his face.

"No wonder I was told that the prison at the bottom of Sky Island was the best prison in the world for men and that I would never be able to get out, it's because of these things."

"It's quite a trick to hide the male eels and make a prison out of it."

Above Hearts' head is a huge, transparent glass pool filled with millions of tossing male eels, the sides of which are set into the rocky crevices of Sky Island, and it is at the bottom of this pool that Hearts is imprisoned. He could look up and see through the glass bottom the grey bodies of the eels writhing and tangling, like noodles coming to life, tumbling in the pool's boiling water.

The bone chain in his hand could not have trapped him, but the loops on either side of this chain were stuck to the glass, and if he ripped it off, this whole pool of male eels would have tilted and fallen on top of him, drowning him and wrapping around and climbing up his body.

Eels are pervasive, and male eels in particular - a monster that is said to be digestible only by the intestinal fluids of males.

If he did not want to swallow the digestive eel in reverse, then he had better not act rashly - the bishop who had brought Hearts here threatened him so viciously, but at the same time there was fear and hesitation hidden in his eyes.

Although the word was that this was the one place in the world that was sure to hold a man, no one knew if this place could keep an eye on Hearts, so the cardinal watched Hearts' expression carefully and found that instead of being angry, he had a vague smile on his face and snorted very softly.

"A prison that's sure to hold men? Are you sure?"

The Cardinal was stunned for a moment when he saw Hearts turn his head and look up at the top of the cell, his purple pupils reflecting the boiling, writhing eels in a light, sarcastic tone.

"Aren't there more women locked up on this island?"

Hearts was trying to make a point as he continued to threaten in a stern voice: "You will not escape! In addition to this layer of organs, the pool of male eels, we have another layer of organs that are naturally formed on this island, and you will never get away!"

"What organ?" Hearts cocked his head on his arm in boredom as he looked over at the Cardinal, a smile on his face that actually held an indescribable sense of seduction, "I've lived on this island for so long, I'm surprised I didn't know there were no naturally occurring mechanisms?"

"Will you tell me?"

The Cardinal quickly looked away, breathing heavily - it took less than a second of looking directly into that overly beautiful face, those purple eyes, before his heart began to tremble and his mind was turned upside down, what a terrible witchcraft!

"The island was sold to the Pope by a very mysterious gentleman." It was clear that at this moment he was supposed to be leaving after imprisoning Hearts, but his mouth uncontrollably continued to explain at Hearts' questioning, the resulting fear and fascination on his face twisting into an eerie expression as his voice trailed off, "That gentleman, when he sold the island to the Bishop, told the Pope that it was an island that would never hit the ground, that would forever be suspended in the air, a city in the sky for all to look up to."

The expression on Hearts' face faded and he looked at the Cardinal with a slight inclination of his head, "And?"

"Did he say anything else? Like why the island was being sold to the Pope?"

The Cardinal shook his head, "No, none of us know the transaction, only that the gentleman sold the island to the Pope."

Hearts stared at the other man: "How high did the gentleman he ..... bought the island for?"

--He had always known that the island had been sold by Bai six, but he didn't understand that the other man, who was obviously a god and had spent a huge amount of money and expenses taking him out on a casual trip, didn't look like someone who was so short of money that he needed to sell the island, or such a bizarre island in the sky.

Although ..... he himself knew that without this island in the sky, there would be other islands in the sky to bear the ugly desires of these men, this island was Bai six just the trafficker, he did not know what would happen afterwards, he was just an outsider.

But in those four years, after Hearts had learned that the island had once belonged to Bai six, when a thunderstorm raged outside, Hearts couldn't help but look out of the window and wait for the peculiar, masked guest to step onto the island, and something else was uncontrollably mixed in with the anticipation.

..... is like Bai six - the god who was the first to take him off the island, the guest who took him to see the sea, to see the sky, to see the earth, the friend who held out his hand to him, who gently smiled and answered all his requests and said yes, the friend who was supposed to bring him the brightest joy memories, is also using this territory, once his own, to bear the pain he has felt for over ten years.

Hearts couldn't help thinking, "Why, Bai six, why sell the island?

Is it really just about the money?

"That gentleman didn't ask for money." The Cardinal replied to Hearts, "He made a deal with the Pope that had nothing to do with money."

"A deal?" Hearts repeated those two words word for word as he slowly looked up, "What deal?"

"That gentleman said that he had come in response to the Pope's desires and wishes, that he had come to grant the Pope's wish, to sell and give the Pope an island that floats in the sky, that can do anything and will not be easily discovered, and that only those you allow on the island will be allowed to do so." The Cardinal took two steps back with some trepidation at the momentary hollow look in Hearts' eyes and stumbled over his words, "But, but as the price for granting the wish-"

"That the Pope should henceforth be sacrificed for all the suffering produced by himself and those around him, and for all the suffering produced on this island."

[Are you ..... making a wish at God Xiang?]

The guest smiled at the fourteen-year-old Hearts: [Yes, I will grant all your wishes].

[But the price is that henceforth you and all those around you who suffer because of you shall be sacrificed to me].

Hearts blinked very slowly and his fingers, bound up in bone chains, twitched spasmodically.

..... For so long, he had avoided himself in general and hadn't been able to ask the question when he met Bai six on that occasion at the age of eighteen, knowing he was dreading the answer.

But the answer really came without fear, and his emotions, his brain, and even his soul seemed to turn into a blank, an infinite blank.

The island is first sold to his father, who exploits everyone on the island according to his own desires to cause suffering, and then chooses him to mutilate those who exploited him back then again in the course of his rebellion, causing suffering a second time and inducing him not to kill them, prolonging the suffering of both sides indefinitely by means of a trial.

-a rather beautiful reckoning, doubling, oh no, infinitely multiplying the painful sacrifice.

From start to finish, it was what he expected.

He was just one piece of the game that the bad gods had devised in the world.

Hearts looked laxly ahead of him, a gap in the rock, through which he could faintly see that it was raining outside the island, with a slight pattering that calmed all boiling emotions, like the night he had wished for Bai six.

[Is the price I have to pay for granting my wish a sacrifice of pain to you?] Hearts asked him softly, "Is it important to you to sacrifice pain? Does it mean that you don't exist if no one offers pain?

[No, if I really ceased to exist because of it, I would be delighted by it instead]. The guest sighed softly as if in sorrow.

Hearts queried: [Then why do you need me to sacrifice pain?]

[Because .....] the guest smiled and answered him, [It is the soul that bears the pain that is interesting and beautiful.

The guest with the peculiar mask smiled, extended his hand and said to him, "This time, will you come with me to see the earth?"

They went to the crowded train, where the guest smiled and said to him, [I put a bomb in that man's mirror].

Hearts looked curiously at the man in the carriage holding up a huge mirror and asked: [Why did you put a bomb in that man's mirror?]

The guest laughed a little: [Because this is the game I designed].

[Wouldn't a lot of people die if it exploded like that?] Hearts wondered, [Why was it designed that way?]

The guest laughed and answered him-

-- [Don't you think that's an interesting design?]

City in the Sky

The Bishop froze abruptly as he saw Hearts' head drop abruptly into silence, and he scanned Hearts' expression carefully.

There was nothing on Hearts' face, no sorrow, no joy, no anger, no fear, not a glint in those purple eyes that had been so bright, and he lifted his head slightly to look at the crack in the rock at the bottom of the island in the Sky, where the storm had poured in, the cool, moist wind blowing against his dry face, causing him to blink, and then to smile very softly.

Then, he wept.

The bishop was stunned and, out of surprise, his words stuttered: "You, you're crying?"

In all his time on the island, the Bishop had seen thousands of women cry on the island, but he had never seen Hearts' tears, not even on the night Hearts came to the island at the age of twelve.

All the men who ordered Hearts complained that no matter how much they tossed it, they never cried, that face was so beautiful, those eyes were so brimming, how charming they were when they cried, why didn't they cry?

Later, Hearts' tears, along with his beauty, became a legendary feature of the island, and the men who came to the island were always drunk, asking Hearts with fascination and longing in their eyes - Why don't you cry? I would have to give my life for you to cry for me?

Hearts just raised his eyes with a lazy smile, "Tears are a sign of pain."

"If I weep, I will shed one less pain, and I will not shed a single tear for you mortals, for the sake of the God in whom I believe."

"You're not worth it."

"Did I cry?" Hearts asked back in a daze, "So it was me who cried?"

"I thought it was the rain from outside the island through the cracks, blowing water down on my face."

"..... gap? There's no gap here where the wind can blow in ....." The Bishop followed Hearts' gaze, then looked puzzled, "That gap?"

"Look a little closer, Hearts, that gap isn't a crack in the rock, that's a doorway."

With the Bishop's reminder, the rocky crevice was instantly transformed into the slightly open slit of a silver-blue door with an endless stream of silver-blue light stars inside, and the crack in the rock that Hearts had just seen was like an illusion.

The bishop looked to Hearts: "This is the second organ of this prison and the secret of the island's ability to float."

"The reason why the Sky City never falls and floats in the sky is that it relies on the wind currents blowing out of the very bottom crevice of this island."

"The gap was left by the gentleman who said that the chasm was a doorway he had left on purpose, that the other side of the door led to the abyss and sin, and that he told us not to look directly behind the silvery blue glow of the doorway, which would cause those who looked directly to see beneath the ecstasy, and that what was on the other side of the door would slowly suck us into the other side of the door and then never come out. "

"It's an unsightly, unspeakable chasm, and we purposely built the sky prison on the opposite side of the chasm; you have to pass through it to leave, and with the pool of male eels, no one has ever managed to get out from underneath it."

The bishop condescendingly pronounced to Hearts, "Don't struggle, you will be trapped on this island for the rest of your life."

When the bishop in charge of Hearts emerged from the bottom of his cell, he soon received a phone call from the Pope, which he respectfully answered with the Pope's heavy question, "Have you locked him up?"

"Locked up." The bishop spoke in a submissive tone, "Hang him for a couple of days, and when he is weak, we will interrogate him properly, making sure to get to the bottom of how he acquired these sorceries."

"Well." The Pope was silent for a moment, "There is no need to be too harsh with him, may God protect us all."

Borrowing from the Pope's words, he asked, "..... What did he see at the bottom of the cell, when he looked straight into that gap?"

Hearts was not the first prisoner they had put in the Sky Island, a prison that, apart from being tightly held, was the equivalent of a lie detector and a truth-teller, as the slit had the effect of confusing the mind and allowing one to see what one's heart desires most, as well as having the effect of being a good interrogator of prisoners.

All one needs to do is to imprison the prisoner in it, and the prisoner will say what he sees when he looks up and sees the chasm, to learn what is in the prisoner's heart - even the most stubborn, even the senior fraudster who has fooled himself, will have to face his innermost desires and truths in the presence of this chasm.

The Bishop was not surprised that the Pope asked this, for Hearts had surprised everyone by not laying a hand on them today, and was waiting to see the outcome of Hearts' interrogation after the chasm.

But there is clearly no way to please everyone with this result.

" Hearts ..... saw a cleft in the island." The bishop replied hesitantly, "He said that he opened out through the cleft and saw that it was raining outside the island."

"The seam does not deceive us." The Pope was silent for a long time as he slowly repeated the Bishop's words, "So the Queen's heart yearns for ..... a rift in an island where it is raining?"

Papal Palace, main hall.

The Pope and Phoebe came face to face with the bishop who had brought Phoebe, whose eyes were cloudy on his sagging face and whose tone was slightly shaky, not like a powerful pope, but like an ordinary old man on the verge of decaying into the ground.

"I ordered the Cardinal to hold my attacker at the very bottom of the Sky City, where there was absolutely no way he could escape."

"But this incident is also enough of a wake-up call."

The Pope's eyes, which had been cloudy, suddenly sharpened as he spoke in an abruptly low tone, "The Island of the Sky! This pure land that belongs to me and to God, that a witch's power could go up there!"

He lifted his heavy sceptre and pounded it into the ground, causing it to shake with anger and rebuke, "How negligent you who watch over the ground have been in allowing witches to ascend the stairway to heaven, allowing the only Noah's Ark of mankind to be polluted by the evil that has spread upwards!"

"Twenty-one cardinals have died, and even I have been threatened." The Pope shook his head sorrowfully, "These are all men of merit who have tried countless witches in the midst of the witch trials, and they actually died in the safe zone delineated by the Holy See, what do you make the people think of us? If word gets out, won't the prestige that the Holy See has so easily built up be destroyed overnight?"

"We can't even defeat a group of rabbles that defected from the Inquisitorial Court led by a Holy Maiden Patrol leader who defected from the Holy See, and we're talking about clearing out all the witches!" The Pope jerked his scepter to the ground, "Where is the captain of the escort guarding the stairs to the island? Punish them severely!"

The bishop who had led Phoebe in had shaken his shoulders and reported in a very low voice: "Your Holiness, we have kept the news under strict lock and key, and it should not get out."

"And the Stairway to Heaven ....." the bishop paused as he raised his head slightly to look at the scepter in the pope's hand, swallowing a mouthful of saliva and reminding in a whisper, "My Lord Pope, are you forgetting? You are the only one who can open the Stairway to Heaven."

Phoebe, who had been keeping her head down, looked up with her at the moment, followed the gaze of the bishop next to her, looked at the sceptre in the Pope's hand, and then raised an eyebrow.

The sceptre looks ancient and heavy, like it was carved from some extremely old wood, with an uneven surface, in the shape of an octopus with its tentacles ringing upwards. There is some cottony detritus, but none of this is the first reason why this uniquely shaped sceptre catches the eye -

--This jewel has a faint layer of silvery-blue light in its centre, and with the sceptre shape of the tentacles, and the suspended head of the jewel, it looks like a ctenophore glowing in the ocean.

The bishop carefully raised his hand to indicate to the Pope to look at the scepter in his hand, "My Lord Pope, the stairway to the island can only be opened by the scepter that can be held in his hand."

"You begged the gentleman who sold you the island, saying that you wanted the floating island, the [Sky City], to be well hidden, that only those you wanted to go up could go up and those who didn't could not, that you wanted the island to be like your home and that only you had the key to the island."

"The gentleman agreed to your request and literally made you a key to the city of the sky."

"He wrapped a small section of the rift with a gemstone, making the light coming through the rift mild and safe, so that nothing would happen if you looked directly at it, and then placed this gemstone on your scepter, gifting you as the key to the island; the rift wrapped in the gemstone is of the same origin as the rift in your gemstone, so only the scepter in your hand can open the ladder to the island, regardless of whether the escort Captain guards the ladder or not, as long as the scepter is still in your hand and the [key] to open the island is still there, it is unlikely that any witch will be able to get to the island and contaminate it."

The Pope looked to the jewel on the sceptre and fell into silence.

After a long, long interval, the Pope spoke, "You are right, as long as the sceptre is in my hands, no one will be able to board the island."

The bishop, who thought he too would be severely punished, let out a long breath.

"The chasm encased in the sceptre jewel that that gentleman gave me ....." the Pope fell into a memory, and he whispered in a trance, "possessed such great strength that a chasm so short, less than a metre, at the bottom of the island, could hold up an island floating for more than ten years without sinking, so dangerous and sharp a crevice, and yet that gentleman was able to easily wrap it into a safe jewel, which was easily gifted to me as a key."

"I have wondered about the material of this gem, like the scepter I hold, and have used many hard, unbelievable materials to try to wrap the gap at the bottom of the island, and I have tried every gem in the world, and none of them have been able to resist the strength of that gap, but in the blink of an eye, they are ashes."

"In the end I couldn't help my curiosity, and I asked the gentleman what kind of stones and materials would encase and fill the chasm under the island."

"That gentleman laughed and told me that there is no gem or material on this earth that can fill the gap that leads to the abyss."

"I held up my scepter and asked him, "And what is this jewel in my hand?"

The Pope paused for a moment as he said in a trance, "The gentleman smiled and answered-"

"- is the heart of a suffering soul congealed."

"Only a jewel condensed by a soul in enough pain after leaving the body can close the door to desire and the abyss."

City in the Sky

"Phoebe." The Pope bowed his head, his gaze obscure, "You are our best nun, this battle with the witch, you must do well to act as a spiritual symbol, do not let the people believe blindly Quan Baola, her power to compel the mind is extraordinary, you must win her."

"Afterwards, I shall allow you to go to the island."

"But I'm not of age, can I?" Phoebe, with an innocent expression, asked in a puzzled tone, "Isn't the Sky City only for nuns who are of age?"

Looking at Phoebe's pure and beautiful appearance, the Pope's eyes smiled meaningfully: "There are exceptions."

"The last Queen Extraordinary has left the island for the time being, and a place has just opened up for you to take over from him and continue your duties as a nun on the island, purifying the foul desires of everyone who comes to the island, which you seem to have the potential to do, so I am giving you permission to come to the island early."

Phoebe winked and she smiled, "So I thank His Holiness in advance?"

Not catching Phoebe's questioning tone, the Pope nodded rather smugly, then waved his hand: "Go down, I will give the details to the Bishop who is leading you, for now I will discuss other matters with him."

Phoebe bowed nicely and withdrew.

After Phoebe left, the Pope's face quickly clouded over: "Has the continued output of male eels improved?"

"No." The bishop shook his head with a somewhat fearful expression, "At first, the female eels that we stole were consistently producing female eels, but then gradually, one or two male eels began to come out of the ten thousand, and we were happy at first, because then these male eels could mate with all the female eels, unlike before, when only one male eel could mate, and so the production The rate would be faster, and we had all the women then turn in the eels they could not digest, the male eels, to the Holy See, saying we would take care of them, but in reality we were putting them out into the waters everywhere."

"Soon we had the great eel explosion, a time when the eel production was actually getting out of hand, so much so that some homes would turn on the tap and eels would come out. Not only were the eel bones collected every day, which the families themselves were digesting and handing over, but the popularity and income were increasing by the day, so the Pope at the time acquiesced in the continuation of the eel project."

The bishop swallowed: "But by the time the first witch appeared at a later stage, the Pope was also frightened and he really moved to try to suspend the plan, but then Quan Baola appeared."

"She appealed to the people not to blindly allow women to swallow eels, but to find other solutions, and was willing to come forward to solve people's problems first, and she soon formed the Patrol of the Holy Virgin, which was then a spontaneous organisation independent of the Holy See, quick to solve problems, and the leader Quan Baola The Holy Patrol was a spontaneous organisation, independent of the Holy See, quick to solve problems and the leader, Quan Baola, was so quick and friendly that people gradually preferred to go to Quan Baola to solve their problems rather than the Holy See, whose authority was weakening, and after hinting twice to Quan Baola that she wanted to collect her Holy Patrol and being refused, this made the then Pope angry and increased the deployment of the male eels."

"Under these circumstances, witches began to appear in droves and the Papacy pulled off the witch trials, which Quan Baola did not approve of and stood in opposition to the Papacy by flagrantly opposing them."

"But at a later stage, when both eels and witches were growing in number, the population, which had been under the protection of the patrols of the Holy Virgin, finally lost control and they fell to the Holy See, and at this time you seized this opportune moment and succeeded in trying Quan Baola, and after Quan Baola was tried for defection, the country finally came completely under the control of the Holy See, even the Holy Virgin The patrols were integrated into the Holy See."

"We've finally stopped the eel project, but, but ....."

The Pope finished the second half of the sentence in a sombre tone, "But the output of the male eels is completely out of control."

The Bishop shuddered and nodded, "Yes! There are now enough male eels collected from all over the country that the prep witches can't digest to fill the pool under the Sky City prison, and the amount is still climbing, we have no idea how many wild male eels are out there in the wild ....."

"This male eel but, but ....." the bishop stifled a shudder and broke down and cried out, "but it takes our intestinal fluids to dissolve it, O Pope!"

"Shut up!" The Pope viciously interrupted the Bishop's miserable cry, "Don't I know?! Why else would I hide these male eels on the Island in the Sky to isolate them from these female eels?!"

The bishop shuddered at the yell, paused for a moment and quickly spoke again in a whisper, "Why are there more and more male eels, weren't the ones that had been producing before always female eels?"

The Pope also fell into an eerie silence.

Yes, didn't all the eels start out as female eels? Why did they suddenly start producing male eels in large numbers?

The other end.

The night was silent, all curled up on the ground in a deep sleep, the full moon hanging in the sky but half obscured by a huge island.

Bai Liu sits on the top floor as he looks out over the island, his eyes narrowing for a moment.

"You came up alone, are you going to talk to Jiayi about something?" Tang Erda was still awake, he and Bai Liu were used to keeping watch for the others, and on the first night of the game they usually stayed up while the others slept, so when he saw Bai Liu coming up, he followed him.

Tang Erda sat down propped up next to Bai Liu and looked at him with a tilt of her head, "You're still worried about Jiayi, aren't you?"

After all, it was the first time I had taken over the authority of a tactician and it was such a crucial game.

"No, she's more thoughtful and stable than I am." Bai Liu shook his head as he looked up at the island, his tone calm, "I was thinking about something else."

"What is it?" Tang Erda asked.

"Jiayi just told me that the witch side told her that the eels that were heavily contaminated were female eels, that male eels were indigestible to the witch, but that male eels were rare." Bai Liu pondered, "Any creature has a tendency to overpopulate, and it is rare to see so many females outnumbering males in a species that has already overpopulated, usually more males than females."

"A creature that is on a mission to reproduce will indeed produce females in large numbers in the early days, but when the number of females reaches a certain amount, it will be the other way around and the creature will start producing males in large numbers again. This is the way to achieve an overproduction."

Tang Erda, somewhat puzzled, asked hesitantly in return, "You mean to tell me that ..... actually has a large number of male eels present that the witches can't digest, don't you?"

"Well, that's my personal guess." Bai Liu paused, "Any kind of monster has its corresponding weakness and way of elimination, it's the setting of this game, I was actually thinking that if the witch's digestive juices can't destroy the male eel, then by the symmetrical setting of this game, the one that can digest the male eel would be ..... "

Tang Erda eased out, "Male digestive juices."

Bai Liu smiles: "Bingo, that's what I was thinking, and I was thinking a bit worse, I thought it might be intestinal fluid."

A chill ran down Tang Erda's spine as he looked at Bai Liu's mischievous smile and held his forehead helplessly, "I can finally see why you led me up here to talk to me about this, Mu Sicheng would have jumped up and down covering his butt when he heard your speculation about the setting."

"Why do you guess it's intestinal fluid?"

"Because if the liquid in which males can digest eels is also saliva, then there's no way it would have gone undetected in this case." Bai Liu rested his cheeks and spoke in a lazy tone, "Now the eels have become so excessive that they need to go abroad to smuggle women over to fix them, but ordinary civilian families can't afford to pay the price for the services of a prepared witch, and because of the mass witch trials, many families no longer have a single female in their household."

"In such extreme and desperate situations, there are also males who go on to imitate the behaviour of witches by swallowing eels and trying to digest each other."

"At least two men in the pile we rescued from downstairs had done that, and they had strange scratches on the corners of their mouths, still fresh."

"If this speculation that male digestive juices can digest eels is assumed to be true, then at least the upper digestive tract, which is easy for ordinary people to experiment with, is unlikely, otherwise the situation with the witches would not be so lopsided, then I think the lower digestive tract, which is relatively more difficult to experiment with, or rarely thought of, is more likely."

"That is, the intestines."

" Jiayi and I are in agreement with our suspicions, but there is no suitable candidate for the experiment on her side at the moment, so there is no way to draw the most accurate conclusion, and to avoid baiting, so she is not informing the witches of her deduced conclusion for now." Bai Liu scanned Tang Erda for a moment, "So we have a mission tomorrow other than saving the witch on trial."

Bai Liu smiled and said, "-that is to catch a priest from the Pontifical Jury and give Jiayi an experiment."

Tang Erda, who was sweating profusely, let out a long breath, "This is no problem!"

He was scared to death! When Bai Liu had just given him a glance, he thought Bai Liu was going to say that since there was a shortage of people, why don't you go and experiment on Jiayi?

At the other end, the papal palace.

The smile on Phoebe's face as she emerged from the main hall faded for a moment into a bemused expression as she walked briskly across the gardens, her eyes pausing motionlessly as she looked to the staircase on her right that led straight up to the island before reaching the nun's hall.

The ladder was shrouded in a silver-blue light, and she had tried twice to get up it on the way in, with nothing to show for it but the loss of seventeen points of blood - as that pope had said, it was indeed impossible for anyone to get up there without the key.

But the [sceptre], which is the key, is held by the Pope for a moment.

This Pope must have some special monster setting or buff on him if he can lock Hearts in a prison, and she'd better not do anything rash until she knows for sure.

But that doesn't mean she can't move either.

" Qi Yifang, the Bishop will issue me with an assignment later to take charge of some witch trials, remember, wherever he tells me to go, you and Liu Ji will apply to go to whichever court." Phoebe gave her orders to Qi Yifang in a cold tone.

Qi Yifang asked suspiciously, "What is it to do?"

Phoebe looked up at him, no emotion in her turquoise pupils, but a pure smile on her face as she folded her hands and prayed in a reverent tone, "What else could I go and do? To send the Inquisitor to hell, of course."

"-isn't that the essential work of a nun?"

The Pope can't move, so let's start with the priests at the bottom and see what level of the Papacy the monsters she can kill with her hands are on.

Qi Yifang was creeped out by Phoebe's laugh, but as a league-quality player, he knew the moment he learned Phoebe had taken tactician privileges that the only word he could say to Phoebe was, "Yes."

"Tomorrow is a tough day, so get some rest tonight." Phoebe smiled and waved her little hand at Qi Yifang, "Remember to pray before you go to bed so that the Lord will bless you with a good night's sleep."

Qi Yifang: "..... Good, good QAQ."

Oooh, Queen, miss you!

Phoebe returned to the nun's hall and stood beside her white lace bed, a silvery white moonlight spilling over the edge of it, she slowly lifted her head and looked out at the incredibly bright moon, its light glistening on her long golden curls, her look indifferent and holy, her turquoise eyes like emeralds on a laurel crown, a misty glow, she closed her eyes and folded her hands against her chest Prayer.

She always stood and prayed; she never knelt to anyone, not even in prayer, and there was no one on earth who could make her kneel, not even God.

"May the Lord protect ....." Phoebe opened her mouth and said this, suddenly stalling, then she shrugged her shoulders indifferently, "Of course you don't have to protect them, I'll make them go to hell myself. "

She finished lying down on the bed, her head impartially in the very centre of the pillow, not a crease in the coverlet, and she folded her arms across her chest in a very disciplined way of sleeping - the way her devoutly religious mother had taught her to sleep, as if in prayer.

All things she once did not understand and found troublesome, but she was used to them.

She has been noticed by her father for as long as she can remember.

Her father looked at her incredulously and, in a rare move, held her over his knee in a pile of boys, removed the gun she was clutching in her death grip and asked her, "Why are you holding a gun on your brother? And you loaded it? Who taught you that?"

What was her answer? Something like, "Kill him so I can get the bear he's holding, it's mine and I've warned him three times and he hasn't given it back to me."

"No one taught me that, but I've seen you use it."

Her father asked the creature who was supposedly her brother to give her back the bear, but all the other did was cry and bite the dust and wipe his own tears with the bear, so without hesitation she grabbed her gun and shot the bear in the little boy's hand, the huge recoil of the gun dislocated her arm straight away and everyone stood up, including her father.

"What are you doing Phoebe ?!" Her father looked at her in amazement.

The stupid boy who had originally grabbed her bear grabbed the gun-shattered remains of the bear's Muppet and sat on the floor in fear, pissing all over the floor, as she looked at her father but smiled bizarrely, "He touched the bear and got it dirty, I don't want it, but he can't have it either."

Her father looked into her eyes as if he had seen a monster and a genius, and he asked her in awe, "What do you feel like now, Phoebe ?"

Phoebe arched her eyebrows and smiled, "I feel very happy."

-a pure harnessing of power and the joy that comes from threatening an opponent.

Since then, no one in the Cinchimani family has dared to take what belongs to her, and her father has married her biological mother, a woman of unknow origin, in order to give her a legitimate claim to the heirship.

The first moment the woman saw her, she was stunned in place.

She stood next to her father, dressed exactly like a little boy, in little boy riding boots, a small jacket, her blonde hair cut just a few centimetres short and tucked into a cap, and simply curtsied courteously to her own mother, whom she had never met: " The Cinchimani family welcomes you, Mother."

--she looks almost exactly like her father.

That night her mother sat on her knees at the foot of her bed and prayed all night, and with tears in her eyes she said, "I'm sorry I came so late, they made you this way."

"You look just like your cold-blooded and cruel father ....."

"I'm sorry, I shouldn't have said that about you." She placed her hand over her heart and prayed reverently for her, "The Lord will protect us."

"Mum." Phoebe who was lying on the bed spoke very coldly, " The Cinchimani's do not believe in gods, we only believe in ourselves, I respect your beliefs but if you want to pray you can go to your room, if that is not enough I will have the servants build you a special prayer room, if you can, please go back to bed, I have gunsmithing lessons in the morning. "

Her mother knelt at her bedside in silence for a long time and left, lost in thought.

There was a brief ripple in her days after she received back her mother, who was really a strange woman, always with unrealistic expectations and wishes, always with incomprehensible tears and prayers, always with delusional yearnings for freedom, talking to herself all day long, saying that she hoped the Lord would bring about the destruction of the dark family so that she and her children could be free again.

She was surrounded by people who whispered in her ear that her mother was in fact crazy.

But Phoebe felt otherwise, she felt that her mother should have been a normal person, but in the Cinchimani family, normal people don't survive.

Just a poor, helpless, normal person.

As her mother prayed again with tears in her eyes for Phoebe to pray with her, Phoebe looked at her mother with downcast eyes and very rarely agreed to this waste of her time to work on her fighting skills and firearms.

"It's only five minutes." She said calmly, "I can pray with you for five minutes on Mondays, Wednesdays and Sundays."

Her mother cried tears of joy and said, "Enough is enough child.

She was dressed for service as a nun, and when her mother said she would kneel down to pray Phoebe coldly refused, and her mother had no choice but to kneel beside her in prayer.

"Pray that my Phoebe may escape here as a bird to a free paradise."

Phoebe indifferently read along, "Pray that all those idiots in training today will fly gun themselves to a boundless hell."

Phoebe's mother: "....."

After her mother cried and laughed and corrected Phoebe's prayers three or four times to no avail, Phoebe finally fell in love with this prayer of verbal hell before bedtime (?). Her mother, a normal person who had always felt weak and incompetent in the Cinchimani household, condoned her cursed prayers.

Wasn't this a stain on her devout faith? Why not accuse her of doing wrong, but just cover her face and laugh helplessly beside her every time she finished cursing?

Finally, at one point, she asked, and her mother looked at her with a smile and stroked her forehead: "One's unrealistic faith in the gods is an escape from one's own weakness and incompetence, and you are right, prayer is indeed a very weak act, and no matter how much I pray, there is nothing I can do to take you away from the Cinchimani house, and under these premises I have no way of accuse you, for you are right in your opinion."

She asked, "Then why pray?"

"I am not praying at God Xiang." Her mother answered her very softly, "I am praying to my soul, to your soul, and I am trying to tell them that even if they are going to be trapped here for the rest of their lives, to keep their hearts filled with love and hope, both yours and mine, and to keep our souls as they were, waiting for the day to come when they will fly away from here as little birds."

"Even if that day is the moment when death comes."

"It's just a reminder."

Her mother, dressed in the garb of a nun, knelt reverently before her, clasping her hands in the moonlight with her eyes closed and whispering, "My child Phoebe and I will one day have the freedom we want."

She looked at her mother's reverent, almost holy face in the moonlight and realised for the first time that this woman possessed a strength she had always ignored.

-a power very different from holding a gun, a sense of conviction that cannot be destroyed by firearms or external forces.

She believed in something, even if it would not come to pass, and Phoebe saw for the first time such a strange faith - a faith so weak, so pliable, yet so indestructible that she dared to say that even if her father had held a gun to her mother's head, she would not have stopped to pray for it.

Phoebe had always been taught by her father that the weak could be broken, but she felt at the moment that no one in the Cinchimani family could break her mother who was praying.

But she deserves to be weak, but she is clearly weak.

Phoebe doesn't like the underdog.

But she extended her daily prayer time with her mother to fifteen minutes.

Gradually, as she grew up, her dominance among the heirs became more and more apparent, and her father's subordinates' attitude towards her changed from disapproval to admiration for her excellence, only to be followed each time by "It's a pity Phoebe is a girl."

Phoebe is so calloused by this phrase that she is completely uncomfortable with it.

It's just that her father would always lament, "Yeah, if only she was a boy like Daniel."

Daniel was her father's other child, three years older than her, another heir to her father's throne, with a similar history to hers - married to Daniel's mother as his rightful wife - and who, like her, resembled their father.

The resemblance is as much in personality as it is in appearance; they are both standard blondes, and when Phoebe cut her hair short and wore men's clothes, the two stood together like twins, with the same haughty, aloof and powerful look.

Of course, they never stand together.

Just as the offspring of lions compete for the food that is thrown at them before they even open their eyes, the other person's status in relation to theirs is [competitor] before they realise, they are [brother and sister].

"It's almost time for the heir selection." Her father patted her on the shoulder, " Phoebe has always had the best grades and apart from her gender, she is the perfect heir."

"I've been thinking about it all night, and if she manages to win the heir selection, then I'll basically be able to identify her, and as far as the gender hassle goes, I'm going to let her show herself to the public in male attire all the time."

"Always in male attire?" A subordinate joked, "What a cruel father, Phoebe hasn't developed yet, how are you going to get her to pretend to be a man at a later stage?"

"What's that?" Her father said gently, "Just corset her breasts and she won't develop any more."

" Phoebe is cruel as a man, strong as a man, the only downside is not really being a man, but the good thing is that she is not weak at all and won't be able to take even this pain of a breast corset."

So that night, Phoebe was subjected to a tight corset and her mother was beside herself, her expression falling into a complete trance as she held up the corset: "What is your father up to?!"

"Such a tight corset, you're only ten years old! It'll deform your chest!"

"It's not like we're going to start wearing them today." Phoebe lay impassively on her bed as she yawned, "I'll wear it when I start to develop."

"No!" Her mother got serious in a rare moment, "You can't wear that! You're a child, you have to develop as you should, and no one can disrupt your normal growing up process!"

"I'm not obsessed with breasts." Phoebe turned her head lazily to her mother who was lying on the edge of the bed, "It's just an organ, size doesn't matter, if you have to corset your breasts to win the heirship, then so be it."

"That's not the problem!" Her mother retorted sternly, "The problem is that you can obviously win without a breast corset! Why do you need a girdle!"

"Can you win without corseting your breasts?" Phoebe asked suspiciously in return, "The group of subordinates said that too much boob would keep jiggling and affect the speed of the draw, didn't they?"

"Go to hell dog men!" Her mother exploded in front of her for the first time ever, explaining to Phoebe in all seriousness, "Didn't anyone tell you that too much noise affects how fast a man can run?"

Phoebe thought back for a moment and she rubbed her chin, "That's not true."

Daniel should have developed, right? I didn't see a crotch jam when he was speed running either.

Her mother asked, "So why would breasts affect the speed of putting the gun away?"

"Why not let the tools adapt to the organs that humans already have, and let the organs adapt to the tools that humans have invented? Humans can invent different underwear for their gender, why not different guns?"

Phoebe paused for a subtle moment as she looked at her mother, who was suddenly seething, "Calm down."

"But my father will not be satisfied without this corset." Phoebe spread her hands in a flat tone, "He's not dead yet, so at least I can't disobey him explicitly, let alone you, of course."

Her mother wilted quickly, looking tearfully at Phoebe.

After a moment, her eyes lit up, "I can alter this corset for you so that you can wear it, but not squeeze it."

"Try it on?" Her mother handed it to her nervously after altering it, "Is it still tight?"

Phoebe took the modest-looking corset, paused for a moment, then put it on, "It doesn't strangle anymore."

She would have been suffocating even to catch her breath in it before, but now she had a gap to catch her breath.

Watching her mother stay up all night altering and sewing corsets next to her, Phoebe's feeling ..... was amazing.

She didn't really care much about it, things like her underdeveloped breasts just seemed inconsequential to her, and her seemingly gentle and soft mother would get so angry over this insignificant matter and then go out of her way to get her clothes altered just to give her a gap where she could breathe.

There was only so much leeway she could give in the Cinchimani household, given her weakness.

Her mother let out a long breath, "That's good."

Phoebe looked at her and was tempted to tell her that in the Cinchimani family it was pointless for the weak to struggle for this gap, but swallowed the words as she watched her mother begin to pray on her knees again.

Her mother knelt at the foot of her bed and prayed reverently, "May both my child and I grow up and die free."

After her mother had prayed and left, Phoebe looked out the skylight at the moon and wondered, "What is freedom?

Phoebe reached out and touched the corset that had been loosened a little under the pillow so that she could continue to develop normally, and she stroked the fine stitching on it and thought - is this freedom?

What a fragile freedom.

Soon it was time for the Heir Apprenticeship, and after all the children had been given the content of tomorrow's exercise, they all crouched down and bawled, the only ones who managed to keep their manners and say goodbye to their father before leaving were her and Daniel.

But she saw Daniel's open hand spin twice, his hand shaking so much, his apple-green eyes hollow and cloudy - the servant who was to top the apple had been left to him by his mother, one of his most loyal servants and playmates.

It was she who finally reached out and swung the door open for Daniel.

As she left, she could hear her father's grumbling behind her, "This batch of kids is so spoiled, they should have been weaned off their intimacy earlier."

"How can they inherit the Cinchimani family if they don't have the courage to raise a gun to someone, they are close to, when they can be betrayed at any time in the future."

The subordinate next to him exclaimed, "Yes, back then, when you discovered your wife's betrayal, you killed her with hardly any hesitation, you could say it was very thunderous."

"My heir should have that kind of manners." Her father returned lazily, with a note of regret, " Daniel is a cold-hearted boy, but he's actually very accepting, not as much as Phoebe, who fell out with me for a while after I killed his mother."

"I hope this time he doesn't let me down again and can muster the courage to pull a gun on his own mother tomorrow, just like Phoebe did."

There was a pause in Daniel's back as he walked ahead, and Phoebe could clearly see his fists clench and then leave.

Phoebe turned her head indifferently and went back to her room, she also opened the door twice this time before opening it, not because her hands were shaking but because her palms were sweaty - why they were sweaty Phoebe couldn't figure it out, she knew she wasn't one to have sweaty hands or she wouldn't be able to hold the gun.

But why?

"You're back." Her mother opened the door and carefully and worriedly inquired, "You look so pale, what was the heir trial about?"

Phoebe looked into her eyes, that feeling of sweaty palms coming back, and she took a deep breath and told her all about it.

But to Phoebe's surprise, her mother was very calm about it, saying, "You are free and able to fight for the heir, so if you want to shoot me, shoot me."

"In every way, you're the best kid I've ever seen and I'm sure you won't miss a beat."

Phoebe sat on the edge of the bed, her hands only beginning to tremble at this point: "What if I miss?"

"Then I might have died." Her mother's voice was as calm as a windless lake under the moon, and she actually smiled demurely as she said it, "But death at your hands is better than death at the hands of the rest of the Cinchimani family, isn't it?"

"You will see my soul turn into a little bird and fly away from here."

"Mum." Phoebe interrupted coldly, "I don't believe in fairy tales."

Her mother sighed regretfully, "All right."

That night at prayer time, her mother prayed those same prayers as always, and very rarely did she stand, but instead and sat up at the head of the bed, looked out the window at the moon, closed her eyes, and for the first time truly prayed in her heart.

"God ..... hope you bless me not to miss tomorrow."

"Of course, it's okay if you don't bless it." Phoebe opened her eyes and she looked at her mother's face with her eyes closed and still praying, her gaze blazing as she took a deep breath, "I will not miss the shot."

Next day.

After everyone had fired the first shot, the whole scene was in chaos and Phoebe's mother crouched down in a suspicious half-crouch, her mind blank for a moment - she knew exactly that she had hit the apple, so why was she down?

Soon someone came up to inform us, "Some bullets from other children came flying over the barrier we had erected and grazed Madame's arm."

"Do you want to pause for a moment?" His father asked her in a seemingly gentle manner, "I'll let her continue topping the apple in a different position."

Her expression was cold and unforgiving, but her chest rose and fell violently in that corset - she was grateful at the moment for the gap that allowed her to breathe properly in this situation, otherwise she would surely have suffocated from lack of oxygen.

"Temporarily ....." she was just about to lower the gun and open her mouth when she saw her mother's muzzle through the scope.

Her mother, who was half on her knees, in a prayer position, with apples placed on her head, looked at her, with tears in her eyes but no fear in her expression, and said-[Shoot]

[You'll win, you can win, you're a genius.]

[You won't miss.]

"No pause." Phoebe said calmly, "Just keep mum steady in place and keep changing apples, it'll be over soon."

She pulled the trigger.

-- As she had done before, ten shots, and she didn't miss a single one.

Her father looked at her with awe, as if he were looking at a formed leader, and said tersely, "You're perfect as a boy, Phoebe."

"That's not really a compliment, Father." Phoebe put the gun down with a cold expression, she shook off her shaken hand and looked around the room, "I'm a lot better than those other boys you call boys."

City in the Sky

Her father had a rare moment of speechlessness.

It's true, Phoebe was not only the first child on the field to finish, but she was also the fastest, the youngest and the one who didn't show any emotional reactions from start to finish.

It took ten minutes before another child appeared who had completed the task - Daniel.

Unfortunately, Daniel's maid ran away, crying and wailing, as soon as Daniel had finished shooting, and Daniel stayed where he was, his hand shaking as he dropped his gun, his head bowed and his emotional reaction heavy.

So, her father spoke coldly and resentfully, " Daniel is a boy, but no more so than you, and he reacts too heavily to the shooting of those close to him."

Phoebe gave a noncommittal shrug, and she turned around to unwittingly lock eyes with her mother, who had been helped off the field.

Her mother, whose feet had gone limp with fear, saw her look over, but winked playfully, gave a veiled thumbs up and said with a muzzle - [That's amazing!]

Phoebe lifted the corners of her lips very slightly.

Phoebe was one of the few kids who was in the mood for a trip to the range's washroom when she came out of the washroom and heard a subtle cry.

The two looked at each other wordlessly, their understanding developed over years of rivalry allowing them to understand almost quickly what the other was up to.

Daniel quickly looked away and his tone was extremely harsh, "Warning Cinchimani - Phoebe, you better not come and watch me laugh at this time, I'm in a bad mood and I'll kill you."

But as there was still a certain amount of crying in his voice, it made the threat seem weak.

Phoebe leaned neatly against the wall with her chest clasped, her tone even: "You don't have the courage to shoot a servant, do you have the courage to shoot me?"

Daniel gazed at her almost bloodily, his tone self-deprecating and sarcastic: "I certainly don't possess the courage to shoot at my own mother, unlike you, you and my father are practically identical."

Phoebe looked at Daniel, who still had tears in her eyes, thought for a moment and said seriously, "I didn't really have the courage to point the gun at her either."

Daniel "Ha?!" He gave a weird and subtle stare at Phoebe who didn't look like she was lying: "You just shot your mother ten times."

"All I have is the ability to never hit her." Phoebe shrugged indifferently, "I'm not incompetent and weak like you, it's just a ten metre target, I have that confidence."

Daniel: "....."

The man really owes it to himself.

But even with Phoebe's indebtedness, Daniel is still unable to say a word in rebuttal - and in this respect, the guy is a genius.

In almost all of her father's tests, she comes first by a wide margin, and sometimes Daniel feels that she is not competing with a human being, but a machine made to rule the Cinchimani family.

"So?" Daniel disliked it back with no good grace, "Did you come to me and say that just to show off your excellent heir qualities?"

"No." Phoebe's tone and look went cold for a moment as she jerked closer to Daniel, the resemblance bringing a sense of oppression he couldn't have imagined, he took a step back as Phoebe's green eyes, darker than his, stared straight at him, "I'm telling you this because I hope you'd better run fast enough to catch up with me. "

"The sole heir will have my father's eyes all over my head, and that can't be good for me, or my mother."

"A piece of affectionate advice for you - give up those childish weaknesses of yours, Daniel, when you have the ability to shoot someone who won't kill the person you care about across the street, you won't be hiding in tears like a puppy who's been kicked by its owner."

After saying this, Phoebe instantly regained her indifferent expression as she naturally pushed Daniel away and washed her hands, waving her hand and turning away, "By the way, I hate it when people say I look like my father, next time I say that I'll smack you."

Daniel was stunned for a moment before he slowly looked up and then he broke down in a second: " Cinchimani - Phoebe!!!"

"This is the gents!!!"

The days went on smoothly amidst all the bickering until the year Daniel turned sixteen and Phoebe thirteen, when they were officially put on the Cinchimani stage for the last time.

The theme of the competition was [Cowboy] and they had to walk ten paces back to back like two western cowboys, then turn around and draw their guns to face each other and hit a blood bag tied to the four joints of the other's hands and feet as well as the neck and abdomen, and they won.

But with a real gun.

So, this competition has two results, the first one of which breaks the blood pack with precision but does not kill the other.

The other was one of them killed the other outright.

Her father, sitting leisurely on the viewing platform, explained to Phoebe: "If one of you beats the other to death, it means that you have a hard-on for the other, that the other is not available to you, and I don't like to see a bruising power struggle after ascending to the top, so it's only fitting to let the strongest man settle his heart before he gets to the top. "

In short, it means that if one of them has doubts about the other, then they will simply kill each other in this match and sit firmly in the first seat of the heir from then on.

"But if the strong man is merciful at heart, cherishes and uses the other side, controls his guns, and not only is not killed by the other side in the struggle, but instead simply disperses six blood packs on the other side with precision - this is proof enough that whichever side is victorious has the ability to control the other side, then naturally can stay and be used for you."

Her father looked at Phoebe and smiled lovingly, "But the Cinchimani family has had only one heir from this pedestal for generations, Phoebe, do you understand what I mean?"

" Daniel is not a suitable brother for your use."

Phoebe was just silent and didn't answer, it wasn't that she didn't mean to answer, but a sudden cramping in the small of her back and she got up to go to the bathroom about an hour before the game started.

A sharp pain that ripped through her abdomen came in a steady stream. She was alone in the bathroom, and she slumped over the toilet, gasping for breath, her fists clenched, cold sweat seeping from her pale face.

The constant, vague pain was almost like the ache from an unhealed wound after being punched hard in the abdomen; she had never been so weak.

What's wrong with her .....?

Soon, after seeing the blood on her trousers, she reacted - she should have gone into some kind of physical reaction, something her mother had been readily reminding her to carry.

There would be no such thing as sanitary towels in the Cinchimani family bathroom, so her mother would have placed them in her clothes from the time she turned twelve, but the Cinchimani family bathroom had all kinds of clothes that could be changed at any time - after all, all kinds of juvenile episodes happened here all the time.

Phoebe quickly changed out of her clothes and, staring at the countdown on her watch, she sat on the toilet and leaned back, closing her eyes and adjusting her breathing to the bizarre abdominal bouts of pain.

"Hello." Daniel's voice came hesitantly, "It's about to start, what are you doing?"

Phoebe's eyes opened and she saw Daniel standing outside the ladies room, looking suspiciously at a clearly pale Phoebe: "You're hurt?!"

"No." Phoebe flatly retorted, and after a moment added, "Well, it amounts to an injury, after all, it's bleeding."

Daniel hesitated for a long time: "So you're on ....."

Was it the one he was thinking of?

Phoebe gave him a cold look, "My womb is bleeding, the lining of my uterus is peeling off, I'm getting used to the sensation, nothing else you can go away."

Daniel: "....."

Would it kill the man to be polite?

Daniel wanted to ask if it would affect the game, but looking at Phoebe's rapid breathing and pale face covered in cold sweat, he withdrew his question in good faith - well, the little devil did look pretty affected by the situation.

"Shall we put the match on hold then?" Daniel asked politely.

"No need." Phoebe raised her eyes, her demeanour still calm and arrogant, "I'll beat you just the same, you just might have to bleed a little, don't worry, it won't be much more than me."

Daniel: "....."

"Father wouldn't agree to a reprieve either." Phoebe spoke calmly, "Come on."

"Wait." Daniel paused for a moment as he glanced at Phoebe, looked away, pulled out a tablet of painkillers and handed it over, his voice slurred, "Do you want ..... to take a few before you go up?"

He's used to taking two painkillers before going into the ring because he's been bloodily abused by Phoebe for years.

Phoebe looked at Daniel with a strange expression, "Why are you helping me?"

"Not helping you." Daniel looked equally cold, "Just giving you a pro-tip, take it or leave it."

With that, Daniel dropped the painkillers and was just about to turn and leave when Phoebe called out to him, her tone subtle, "You're thanking me for not listening to your father and plundering what your mother left you all those years ago, and for forcing you to grow up chasing me all the time, aren't you?"

Daniel's back was turned, then he left.

"I'm in for a real treat." Phoebe muttered to herself as she simply broke open the painkillers and took two, her face quickly returning to normal.

"The game is officially on."

Daniel and Phoebe stood back-to-back on the dais, their movements identical as they quickly stepped forward and held their guns flat against the sky, their equally green eyes focused on the gun in front of them.

"Ten, nine ..... three, two, one."

"Duel!"

Phoebe took a deep breath and turned diagonally across the room, dodging the first shot from above, then quickly rolled closer to Daniel who was ten paces away, cocked the gun with a stern gaze and pulled the trigger.

"Bang-!"

"Bang, bang, bang, bang, bang!"

Almost in the blink of an eye, Daniel was on the ground, Phoebe pale and breathing heavily as she held the gun up to Daniel, who was bleeding from the side of his neck.

Daniel opened his eyes.

Phoebe withdrew her eyes expressionlessly as she turned without looking back and walked off the stage, stumbling a little on her way down the steps and quickly steadied herself.

All six of Daniel's blood bags were broken with precision, and only his leg bled a little from a graze - exactly as Phoebe had said earlier.

Looking at the side of Phoebe's face as she calmly talks to her admiring father, Daniel's eyes wavered for a moment -

--This guy is, no matter what the situation, incredibly steady with his hands on the weapon.

It was ..... pure power, so powerful that he couldn't even afford to resist.

What kind of faith is harboured to maintain such stability in this sinful family?

City in the Sky

That night.

Phoebe was lying on her back, and when she first found out she was having her period, her mother was clearly delighted: "You're growing up Phoebe!"

But soon this delight turned to bitterness at the sight of Phoebe's pale face and the bloodstains on her body: "But it doesn't seem to be a good thing for girls to grow up around here."

Phoebe lay motionless on the bed like a corpse, her eyes vacant as she covered her belly and said, breathlessly, "Can I curse all the gods who make women bleed during their periods to hell when I pray tonight?"

Her mother smiled up, "Of course."

"Phoebe." Her mother, lying next to her, looked at her pale face and asked her, somewhat distressed, "Why do you want to be the heir to the Cinchimani family?"

"This is not a good place for you to grow up and if you are able to leave now, you can ....."

"Is there a place in the world, where I can grow up?" Phoebe asked in an unusual tone, "or rather, a place where I, with my Cinchimani name, would not be found by my father?"

Her mother was silent.

"It's normal not to." Phoebe rippled, "Then I'll just get the Cinchimani family and make it fit for me to live in, and that's it."

"If this place is not free enough, I will be its controller and make it free."

Phoebe turned to her bewildered mother, "You don't need God Xiang Ming to pray at that time, you just need to tell me what you want and you will have it all."

"If you want to be a bird, I can get them to make artificial skeletal robots so you can really fly in the sky like a bird."

"If you want to leave Cinchimani forever, I guarantee you will never see the Cinchimani family again and if you want Cinchimani to disappear, then it will disappear."

"Mum." Phoebe looked at her, her face still a little pale, but her tone was normal and sure, "The only true freedom in this world is to be strong."

"There is no freedom for the weak."

Her mother said nothing for a long time, then she asked Phoebe softly, through tears, "Maybe you're right, Phoebe."

"..... You remind me of someone, a friend of mine who helped me a lot, but I haven't seen him for a long time since I came here, and I miss that boy."

"I want to take you to meet him."

"I'm fine these days, but it's hard to get past my father when you're going away with me." Phoebe thought for a moment, "Wait until Daniel's seventeenth birthday, he's taking over some of the family business to go on an adventure, my father will be going along on a visit to Daniel and will be away for at least a month, we can run away during that time."

Soon after, Daniel's seventeenth birthday arrived.

Cinchimani children do not celebrate birthdays until they reach adulthood, and the first birthday they will be widely celebrated is the bar mitzvah - that means they have lived to adulthood in a tussle.

And to start killing.

On the day of coming of age, the Cinchimani children take their own guns and go to the Cinchimani family's private prison, pick one of the prisoners who has been locked up - perhaps someone who has betrayed the family or someone from another family who has been locked up - and fire the first shot of their turbulent lives at the prisoner, killing him with their own hands. This is an iconic ritual that signifies that you are henceforth a member of the family, born to kill those who are hostile to the family and those who betray it.

It is reasonable to assume that they will not receive a trial assignment until they reach adulthood.

But since Phoebe's intention on the shooting platform was to train

Daniel, Daniel came off the shooting platform and was taken on various missions by her father, who led him to do them all very well, so this time, Daniel is going on a trial mission on his own, with his father monitoring him from start to finish and not interfering or helping - which means Daniel will officially be second in command of the Cinchimani family. This means that Daniel is now officially the second in command of the Cinchimani family.

Before leaving, Phoebe stood at the corner of the stairs on the third floor and looked at Daniel in front of her.

Daniel is growing fast, having grown a head taller in just a few months, his soft blonde curls looking out of place in his hands, his apple-green eyes cold as a cocktail of ice, his gun at his waist, his right hand bandaged, the smell of blood as he brushes past Phoebe's shoulder, his whole persona an extreme and twisted desire to kill.

--It's hard to imagine being a little boy four years ago who would hide in the bathroom and weep after shooting.

"There's training in mind before you move." Phoebe said blandly, "Not saving some strength for yourself to save your life?"

"Oh?" Daniel scattered back, his apple green eyes playfully sweeping Phoebe, "Do you care if I die or not? The future head of the family?"

Phoebe gave Daniel's face a sidelong glance of unwashed oil paint - the man was getting crazy, painting himself in various clown masks before going on a mission, and although the intention was to disguise himself from outsiders, the choice of this also exaggerated approach said something in itself.

"I know the servant your mother left you on your last mission betrayed you and was shot dead by you." Phoebe paused, "but I left you alive on the firing table because I wanted you to be second in command, not a madman."

"Do yourself a favour."

"Me as second in command?" Daniel's nervous laugh came from behind her, "Be careful, Lord of the House, I may have blood in my bones from my mother's side, called betrayal."

"Is that so?" Unperturbed, Phoebe shrugged her shoulders and replied indifferently, "This blood is cleaner than the Cinchimani blood, no matter what?"

On the night of Daniel's departure, Phoebe uses her powers to get her and her mother out of the Cinchimani family, and after a few rounds of transfers, Phoebe and the girls make it to Sky Island.

That was the first time Phoebe saw Hearts.

The man, draped in a graceful robe of interlocking red and black patterns, his long hair falling, a long dark red tassel earring in his right ear, leaned languidly in the sofa, looking away from the island at the rain, his purple eyes half-closed as if lost in thought, the teardrop beneath his eyes faintly visible in the dense candlelight, a beauty that could not be discerned in its gender.

To be honest this is the first time Phoebe has seen such a beautiful human being.

But she didn't like Hearts.

"You look weak." Phoebe looked at Hearts and raised an eyebrow, "The man who gave my mother faith is actually a weakling?"

Phoebe's mother turned her head in disbelief, " Phoebe!"

"I'm weak?" Hearts turned his head to look at Phoebe and he smiled, "What am I weak in? My appearance? Do I look weak?"

"No." Phoebe looked Hearts straight in the eye, "My mother kneels at my bed every night praying to leave the place that traps her, why don't you have that faith?"

"Why are you afraid to leave this island that traps you? What are you holding on to on this island?"

The smile faded from Hearts' face as he looked levelly into the green eyes of Phoebe, who looked squarely at him impartially.

"Can I ....." Hearts turned to a somewhat baffled Phoebe's mother and smiled slightly, "talk to her alone?"

After Phoebe's mother left.

"You cherished your mother and sent her to see me specifically to protect her, you were good to her." Hearts paused for a moment, "What if one day she leaves you?"

"Why did she leave me?" Phoebe asked rhetorically.

"She died." Hearts said very softly.

"What made her die." Phoebe asked.

"The disease, the island, her faith, the many people." Hearts replied, "People are fragile and die easily."

"If it's a disease, I'll cure it, if it's an island, I'll blow it up, if it's faith, I'll make her change." Phoebe looked up arrogantly, her eyes were as strong as ever, "What kills her, I will destroy."

"..... What if ....." Hearts looked up, his purple eyes held a lot of emotion and his tone was as soft as the rain off the island, "was she herself?"

"What if she doesn't want to live herself?"

--sudden illness, each on-time decline, the final long-accepted farewell, the long-prepared last words, like a dance play that she had rehearsed countless times, played out before him to fall.

Hearts repeated the words very softly, "What if it was she, herself, who had chosen to die?"

Phoebe choked, and she got stuck in a rare moment.

Phoebe had no answer to this question when she was escorted off the island that day by Hearts, and she looked back at the man in the large, wind-blown tunic standing on the edge of the stormy island, and Hearts' eyes fell for a moment on them as they boarded the boat, through the darkness of the storm, and then moved away again.

--It was as if he was expecting an answer from her too.

When she got back that day, her mother told her about Hearts and finally just sighed, "I knew Hearts' mother, and it was a wonderful person, just ....."

"Not everyone can live and die like that."

And what about you - Phoebe wanted to ask the question but she didn't end up asking it because she didn't know what the answer to the question was that she would be satisfied to hear.

Soon, this issue, which Phoebe had forgotten about, came to her and her mother in an unexpectedly poignant form.

When Daniel disappears during a trial mission, his father becomes furious and mobilizes almost the entire family, but Daniel is never found again. After clearing out suspicious enemy homes outside, her overly suspicious father quickly turns on those within the family.

What was important to her father was that someone dared to move his men in front of him, against his wishes and out of his control.

During one round of family purges after another, the fact that Phoebe and her mother had left the family during Daniel's trial mission was soon revealed to the tortured servants.

No one can do in front of her father what her father does not allow and does not know, including her as the heir.

Phoebe was used to being thrown in jail and tortured, her father used to discipline her when she didn't answer and behave as he wanted, it wasn't unique to her, Daniel, or to every child in the family who had been in private prison.

But what was different this time was that her mother came in too.

Before she was arrested, Phoebe repeatedly warned her mother that the officers at the private prison would administer a lie detector to her and that they would not torture her as long as she told them the truth - it was a tradition in her family that the Cinchimani family would treat honest people well.

So Phoebe knew that if she was honest, she would be out of this filthy prison in a week at most.

She did confess honestly that she had gone to Hearts, whose bizarre island in the sky was not accessible to anyone without Hearts opening the door anyway, but the tense way the men repeatedly asked her where exactly she had gone made her subconsciously a little anxious.

..... This was in the case of inconsistent statements from the inmates on both sides of the conspiracy, repeatedly verifying the statements before asking her the same questions over and over again.

On the tenth day, honest Phoebe is released from the bastille, but her long-held ominous premonition is verified when she meets her tortured and bruised, dishonest mother.

Her father sat aside in the overseer's chair and looked at her with a downcast expression, "Your mother was as foolish and stupid as my former wife, who also betrayed me by refusing to tell me honestly where she had been."

"The Cinchimani family has no room for dishonesty, but she is your mother, and you are my only heir, and I will give her one last chance for your sake and in your presence."

Her father looked to her mother, who was on her knees with her hands nailed to a bloodstained wooden post, "Where did you go? Seen someone?"

"If you give an honest account this time, I can let you live."

"Honesty?" Her cloaked mother tilted her head, Phoebe had never thought her always weak mother could actually put on this look in front of her father, with sarcastic disdain, she was covered in bruises and was actually laughing, "I've told you a million times."

"I ascended a territory of freedom that a sinful man like you could never ascend."

"I met someone as beautiful as you will ever see."

"Name the place and the name." Her father's face had gone completely gloomy, "Your daughter has already given part of the information, if you give a truthful account of how you found the place, I will let you go"

Her mother looked at her father with hazy eyes and smiled hoarsely, "You have been to that place before, and you have seen the people I have seen."

"But it's been almost a dozen years, so it's normal for you not to remember, but you're going to hear from me to go along with tricking him into opening the door for you to go up to that place-"

"-never."

"That place was once known as the Pure Land, and now it really is the Pure Land; you are not worthy to ascend to disturb his purity; even if I die, I will not let you see my late friend one more time."

Her father's face stilled for a moment, then he raised his hand and a squire beside him solemnly drew his own gun from his back waist and placed it in her father's his spread palm.

Phoebe stared deathly at the gun, she was familiar with its construction and had used it a thousand times, but right now, looking at the blackened muzzle, for the first time, she had a strange feeling - she was fearing the tool she had used countless times.

Her heart pounded wildly.

"You are the second wife to betray me." Her father adjusted his gun carelessly, "I'm sure you already know what happens when you betray my first wife, I never regret killing a betrayer of my family with my own hands, but the only thing I think I did improperly in that case was to alienate Daniel from me because of it."

"I failed to teach my young one competently what a betrayer was, leaving him not to understand what I had done in killing his mother, growing up quite rebellious and drifting away from me until he grew up betrayed and suffered a lot in the mission."

"Once you've done it, I won't make the same educational mistakes this time."

Her father looked up at Phoebe, reached out and held her shoulder forcefully, put the gun in her palm and said coldly, " Phoebe, as a worthy heir to the throne, you know how to treat a betrayer, don't you?"

Phoebe's chest rose and fell sharply in the corset that had grown and tightened as she developed, the little gap her mother had made for her by carefully altering it day and night was not enough for her to breathe in such a tense scene, and she subconsciously gripped the gun with a rare expression of post-choking stasis.

"Just like you did when you were ten -" her father whispered, "with a gun to your mother's heart."

"It's like knocking an apple out of the hat, punching through that heart."

She looked to her mother who, as always, looked at her with a smile, as she had done that day of the heir test, and said to her with a muzzle: [Shoot it].

Phoebe took two deep breaths as she slowly raised the gun without a tremor in her hand, then flipped and pinned her unresponsive father in a swift motion, pressing the muzzle against his temple with an icy expression.

Almost instantly, all the attendants drew their guns on Phoebe.

Her father slowly raised his hands, a crack of horror appearing in the expression he had been holding in his hands, "What are you doing, Phoebe ? Why do you dare point a gun at me ?!"

"Why wouldn't I dare?" Phoebe cocked her head, her expression sweet but her tone icy, "The moment you taught me to point a gun at my mother, you should have expected me to have exactly the same courage to point it at you, my esteemed father."

"Untie her."

Her father froze for a moment and ordered, "Untie her mother."

But at the same time, her father made a very faint downward gesture, which Phoebe saw with quick eyes - a coded signal from the head of the house, meaning to shoot.

So, Phoebe shot her father's hand first, without hesitation, and almost as soon as her father screamed, the guards froze their guns.

"I said, untie her." Phoebe was about to hyperventilate from the corset, but her tone was still calm.

"..... True to form, a child I have raised with my own hands, courage and reflexes not missing a thing." Her father actually looked up with a little appreciation covering his own palm that was gushing blood, he stared at her with a sinister gaze, "Perhaps with a little more time you could actually succeed in taking power from me."

Phoebe felt acutely uncomfortable as she saw her father pull out a circular object with the sign of the reverse cross from the lining, the scent of the object emitting made Phoebe want to back away for a moment.

"It's the family's new smuggling business, the scientific name for this is [Heresy] and it has all sorts of effects you can't imagine." Her father laughed out loud, "Like this one in front of you, the effect is that if you shoot me, the gunshot wound caused will be transferred to the person who matters most to you."

"And the gunshot wound in my body heals." Her father held up his intact palm and looked over at her with a smile, "Amazing isn't it? I carry a lot of these [heretics] around with me."

Phoebe's pupils fluttered and she turned her head to look at her mother - she was on her knees covering her hands and bleeding all over the floor.

"It seems I have not taught you enough." Her father suddenly gripped her gun, his look and tone turning grim and cold, "Then let's re-teach you starting with this lesson today."

Her father took hold of her gun and snapped it at himself, at the same time a loud gunshot rang out behind Phoebe and her expression and movements were frozen as she was cupped by his face and turned her head to look over.

Her mother, struck through the heart, collapsed in a pool of blood.

Phoebe tried to breathe hard, but couldn't muster the strength.

Because she felt the little gap in her bodice that she could use for breathing, disappear.

[System Alert: Player Phoebe's desire to log into the game has been detected.]

After Phoebe crawled out of her first single player game covered in blood, she went on a mad scramble to find something that could heal her wounds.

She knew that as long as she didn't log out of the game now, her mother's time would be frozen shortly after the moment she was wounded, and that her shot had missed a bit and not hit her heart squarely, so maybe there was still hope!

But soon Phoebe realizes that the game, which seems to be omnipotent and can grant everyone's wishes, has no healing props - the player has no access to props that can restore life points, and she can't find any that can instantly heal gunshot wounds.

Phoebe logged out of the game in a trance and chose a random coordinate.

Unfortunately, her mother did not die.

Hearts had sent someone to follow them after sending them off the island, and when things went wrong, Hearts realised something was wrong and quickly sent someone from their guild, or player, to infiltrate the Cinchmani family by any means necessary to bring her mother, who had been shot, out and bring her to the island under close guard.

Phoebe meets her unconscious mother on the island.

"I used a lot of props to keep her vital signs up." Hearts sat end over end next to a speechless Phoebe and was quiet for a moment before saying, "But there are no healing props in the game, there's only so much I can do."

"I'm sorry."

"I fired the shot and I caused her to be where she is." Phoebe's tone was flat, "I'm sorry it's not your turn to say that."

The two men lapsed into silence as they looked at each other without a word.

"She hadn't fallen into a coma when we rescued her, she was just a little fuzzy on consciousness." Hearts paused and whispered, "Her last words were left for you."

"She said, Phoebe, you are right, it is the strong who have freedom, and a weak person like her is not worthy of freedom in this world, no matter where she goes, under the island, only to pray and struggle."

"She lives, and to you, perhaps, it is only a burden of the weak against the strong."

Phoebe's hands clenched in her lap.

Not so!!!

I'm the weak one to you now! There's nothing I can do!

Hearts got up and left, and Phoebe stood alone at the foot of her mother's bed for a long time, then she looked out of the window at the moonlight for a moment, then folded her hands and slowly knelt down.

"O God." She closed her eyes and chanted softly in a hoarse voice, in a gesture of reverence, as her mother had clumsily corrected her earlier, "If you do exist, I pray to you with devotion."

"I hope she survives."

"Did you know?" A player whispered, "That little witch, the player who recently made a big splash on the Newcomer Rank 1, actually has a healing skill!"

"Wow, a healer? The major guilds are going to go crazy for her!"

"Yes, the King's Guild has spent more than a million charging points, but I have not seen her join, and she has harsh conditions for healing, never easily heal players, she does not even see pulling in front of her, completely depending on the mood to heal, sometimes a dozen players at a time, sometimes not a single treatment, and she will not only heal, or poison people, sometimes you beg for treatment to make her guilty, directly give you poison stun.

"It's kinda dangerous to find her then."

"Yeah, the big guilds are getting defeated, we bottom players are better off just watching the action."

The chattering player walked past Phoebe, who stared unblinkingly at a player covered in black robes in front of the entrance - the little witch.

Hearts' admonition was still ringing in her ears - [The Little Witch is a very dangerous player, you've only just entered the game, follow the guild and brush up on your skills, leave the subjugation of the Little Witch to the guild].

[Don't go near the little witch, she only plays dangerous big books with more than fifty people, you're just sending heads if you follow her in].

Her mother had weakened to a very dangerous threshold.

In fact, after using so many props, she shouldn't have weakened so quickly, but it was as if her mother had lost her will to live, decaying so quickly that she could feel her breath grow faint every time she came close.

Phoebe finally had to face the question Hearts had posed to her - [what would you do if she chose to die?]

She also gave the answer - there was nothing that could be done, nothing that could be done.

But she can't just sit back and wait either - it's Phoebe's idea to approach the little witch and gamble at least once.

She, a novice player who had entered the game less than a week ago, just followed the high-ranking novice list one [Little Witch] into the highest difficulty copy in the small TV area - a large copy with more than fifty people.

Then unsurprisingly, they were abused to the hilt.

Phoebe was not sure how much she was relying on her obsession, dragging her body, almost corrupted by the monster, to the ground with her hands braced in death, towards the witch who was standing on the ground, jumping lightly, spraying poison everywhere and dispersing the corrupted monster.

The poisonous mist mixed with the monster's brooding blackness and lunged towards Phoebe's face, and she looked into the twisting black mist in a trance, almost seeing the blackness that represented death descending before her.

It was as if she had seen the chaos of blood in the private prison that night.

..... Is this the end of her?

She had never lost since birth, ignorantly thinking she was the strongest in the world, only to be vulnerable as an ant in this world and never get the freedom she wanted.

The black mist is broken by the shaking cloak, the monster is dispersed by the poison and the forest falls into a shimmering light.

The little witch in her cloak lifted a corner to reveal a pair of grey eyes, and she seemed to be "looking" in Phoebe's direction, reaching out and handing her the white bottle in her palm: "Here you go, the antidote. "

--the miracle of the world that had come to her in a most bizarre way.

The one who gave her light was an invisible fellow.

She clutched the antidote handed to her with a death grip, braced herself to sit up, but couldn't, and thanked her somewhat rawly, "Thank you."

Phoebe was quiet for a moment and asked weakly in return, "Why did you give me the antidote?"

"Because you're too persistent too." The little witch knelt down and looked at her curiously, "The others who wanted to follow me would have scolded me for running away when they saw that I kept putting out poison without giving an antidote, but you kept following me no matter how badly I was hurt, and you're a girl."

The little witch shrugged her shoulders, "I'm still gentler with girls than I am with dog men, so here you go, here, use it."

"I don't need it." Phoebe refused with a very gentle shake of her head, "I'm taking it out and giving it to someone else."

"Huh?" The little witch sounded puzzled, "But I can't bring my antidote to the game."

Phoebe: "....."

The little witch was slightly alarmed: "Hey! Don't you cry! I can think of something!"

"..... that's right ....." After clearing the entire map of monsters, the game ended without Little Witch and Phoebe logging out of the game, Little Witch sat on the edge of the game's cliff and thoughtfully, "You're bringing it to your mother to use, let's see, there should be a trick to it."

"Ah there it is."

The little witch snapped to attention with a high five, "I know that Charles, the gamblers guild leader, has a skill that allows him to store skills to take out and use, and he's been pulling my strings lately, so let him use his skill to store a bottle of antidote for me, and you can take it out and use it."

Phoebe.

The rumours that the Little Witch's intelligence panel is in the nineties don't seem to be true, as she came up with Charles' skills almost at the same time as the Little Witch.

But .....

"Why do you want to help me?" Phoebe asked softly, "I'm just a weakling who is of no use to you."

"Is it because of sympathy?"

The little witch asked back with a slight hesitation, "You just pretended to cry to gain my sympathy, so why do you now look like you mind if I help you out of pity?"

Phoebe: "....."

Seen out.

Indeed, she had just heard the little witch say that she would be gentler with the girls and had quickly pretended to cry and sell out - she thought the other girl might eat that up, not realising that she had been shown up.

But seeing as it still ate up the set, it made Phoebe even more suspicious.

"You just said that your mother chose death because she felt she was weak and a drag on you." The young witch rested her jaw and changed the subject with a flourish, "It is strange that the weak have no freedom."

"What's so strange about that?" Phoebe asked rhetorically, "Isn't it an iron law of the world that only the strong can have freedom?"

"Even in the game, it's the strong who have more."

"Now you are weak even before me." The little witch shook the antidote in her own hand, "Where did you get the antidote from me, or the freedom to free your mother?"

Phoebe paused: "My freedom comes from your blessing."

"The freedom of the weak comes from the charity of the strong."

"Not oh." The little witch retorted calmly to her, "I did not help you because I gave you charity or sheltered you, it was your faith that moved me."

"That persistence and belief that I could definitely get the antidote out of my hands struck me, and I knew that as long as you didn't die, you would follow me around until I gave you the antidote, and the odds were that if I didn't give it to you now, I would be annoyed by you subsequently, so I gave it to you."

Phoebe was stunned.

"The source of freedom for the weak is faith, and there is freedom for the weak as long as they believe that what imprisons them will one day be overcome by themselves." The little witch's robes fluttered in the wind of the cliff, her voice floating in the wind from beneath her hood, "I too was once an oppressed weakling, but I too protected others in their plight, you too are now weak, you too are struggling to protect what you want to protect, we all have that freedom."

"It is not because one is strong that one has freedom, but because one aspires to freedom that the weak become strong."

Phoebe got the antidote and on the night her mother woke up, she knelt alone in front of her bed and prayed.

"God." She whispered, "I have seen only hell, never heaven, since I was born."

"If only a place as wonderful as heaven really existed in this world."

"Then please do let the little witch go to heaven."

City in the Sky

After that, Hearts managed to introduce the Little Witch to the Guild.

After Hearts had contacted the young witch two or three times, he had no hesitation in putting her on the permanent squad for the next league and began to focus on her development, before which Hearts had a chat with Phoebe.

The conversation took place in a sombre room piled high with burgundy duvets on the island, in the pouring rain of an afternoon.

"I was ....." Hearts' stunningly beautiful face showed a rare glimpse of real weariness from its slouch, as he leaned back in a chair so wide that it looked like a bed, his feet curled up on it, his long burgundy hair dripping wet down the side of his face to his slightly open heart. "I was going to let you join the team."

Phoebe gave him a quick glance and hit the nail on the head: "You went to see your mother?"

She knew that Hearts' mother was buried on another island far from here, and if that was the case with Hearts, it could only mean that the guy had gone to visit his mother's grave before going to the island.

"Well." Hearts clearly didn't want to talk about it, he avoided Phoebe's eyes, his voice calmed down again and he moved the conversation back, "But Little Witch is a better fit than you, your skills overlap and you're a bit too extreme for the league so early on, Little Witch has developed very smoothly in all areas, she's a better fit than you. She's more suited to the team, and with her ability, although she's still a novice, she could even take over the tactician's position."

"I don't have a problem with being her replacement, she's strong, I deserve to be her replacement." Phoebe looked at Hearts and her tone was direct, "Even you should be her replacement."

"You're too weak and less likely to win than she is to win as a tactician."

"You're not as strong as she is."

Hearts was silent for a long time, he raised his hand over his eyes, his body leaned back and his voice was hoarse: "..... you're right."

"She was so young, through so much, so heavily suspicious, and in the midst of the hatred, she actually remained calm and had the will and the strength to protect others."

"..... I don't know what else I can protect, even your mother, my old friend, was saved by her."

"You're right, I should indeed be her replacement." Hearts slowly lowered his palm over his face as he looked across at Phoebe and whispered, "I want her to be the president of the King's Guild, and the true tactician of this warband."

"You're letting her go as president?" Phoebe perceived something keenly, "So you're leaving the guild are you, and what are you going to do?"

Hearts inclined his head, his eyes stoic as he gazed out over the island at the rain, and did not reply.

That night he went back to his mother's grave, a small European village in the middle of nowhere, which Hearts had bought, but which he did not care for, and which only contained his mother's grave.

It was raining heavily, and Hearts stood silently and wordlessly at his mother's grave, with a black umbrella, for a long, long time before he knelt down, hugging his knees and curling his body up like a child who feels the cold, lifting his head from them and looking quietly with those purple eyes at the picture on his mother's grave.

"I met a very powerful little girl." He said softly, reaching out to brush the droplets off the photo, "More powerful than Phoebe, who saved Rebekah the last time I told you."

"I want to give her the guild."

" Phoebe is right, I am indeed weak, and no matter how many [shields] I have to protect, I don't have the courage to bring you back into this world."

Hearts grows lighter in tone.

Phoebe had asked her a long time ago why she didn't resurrect her mother, when it was possible to do so with the power of the Guild, and Hearts sat in her desk chair for a moment, lost in thought, before replying with a scattered smile - the dead have a will.

Did you ask her if she wanted to live again when you just brought her back to life? If she lives and suffers and wants to die again, do you want to kill her again with your own hands?

-or watch her kill herself again?

What can be done with a resurrection?

The world still had the Papacy, still had the head arms dealer, still had everything to override him, to easily take her freedom from his hands, to demoralize her beautiful existence, and ten years ago he could not protect her, and ten years later he had not succeeded in protecting anyone who went down from the island.

As Rebecca said to Phoebe's father before she married him - what's the difference beyond the island?

But it's just a bigger island.

The only island free from the shackles of the world, Sky City, still floats in the sky, overcast and filled with the stench of blood left by the trials of that year, the only place he can master and protect her.

But if she came to life, was he going to let her live as he had for decades on an island covered with the traces of having hurt himself?

He had entered the game burned by anger and hatred, and after gaining the ability to sanction his enemies, he repeatedly tormented and judged them, growing weary as they were painfully tortured in this extreme, hatred with great intensity.

Hearts begins to feel a little empty and tired, sometimes feeling an uncontrollable disgust after seeing in the mirror a face that bears a slight resemblance to that of the man - the man who started it all, his biological father.

Disgust, hatred and exhaustion intermingled to drain him, and he was on the island, alone, lying in a trance in his flannel listening to the rain, the playing cards that once represented the settlers above scattered on the floor.

Why keep judging theirs, their guilt is established, why not kill them - Phoebe asked him - kill them and it would be over.

He was always reluctant to give that group of people a break so easily, to let them and his own mother all end up in one place - dead, and whether their spirits after death would nag her for the freedom she had so easily gained, and because of the note the guest had left him, he always saw death as the best outcome for these people, but that day at Phoebe's puzzled questioning, Hearts took a rare moment to ponder - what would happen if he did kill them?

What will I do after I kill them?

Hearts asks himself very gently.

He has been on this island for twelve years since that day.

He started the guild wanting to become stronger, and he did, as he had hoped, become stronger, the whole world was his power, he even had the power to fight and confront the arms dealers, the daily flow of points in the guild warehouse reached a horrible lot, and in the early days he was a little relieved to leave the island, to become an actor as he had wanted to be in his childhood, to show himself to everyone, and He had naively hoped to receive the compliments she said, without any hint of desire.

But the truth is that you just can't get it, and the people he has come into contact with, from fans who have written to his studio for three years straight to investors who say they chose him because they believe in his acting, come in all shapes and sizes, very much willing to sleep with him if he wants to, or if they taste the extra meaning in a look he gives them.

Power, money, love, almost the top of these things he has seen, with a cold and weary gesture.

Was there really someone who was just genuinely complimenting her beauty, as she said? Or was it just that she was wrong and there was actually a glow of desire in his eyes?

He had no wishes, no desires, no things he wanted to do, no places he wanted to go, staying on the island day by day listening to the loud sound of the rain falling and walking away. He became lazier and lazier, even playing matches, preferring only to open [Shield] to torment his opponent instead of taking the initiative, acting as if he expected that one day someone would suddenly kill himself on the field.

It all came to an abrupt end when the black bone whip in the hands of the player named Spades was seen.

He could no longer recall the exact moment he had seen Spades, it was like hearing an explosive thunderclap on a rainy day, he was almost still, all his thoughts came together and he sat up straight for a rare moment, staring blankly at the black bone whip that Spades wielded on the small television.

"What's his name?" He heard himself ask.

Wang Shun respectfully replied to him, "Empress, he is the dark horse of this term."

"He doesn't have a name, he seems to have a code name, Spades."

You can't call me by my real name, just call me by my code name, you can call me Spades.

What followed was a logical progression, with Hearts' mad quest for Spades rightly interpreted as a quest, and he was rarely so career-minded as to chase Spades all the way to second place in the league - but only because Spades is a guy who only sees the game and his opponents, and if not If you don't meet him on the field, this guy will never respond to your questions and will walk right past you as if he didn't see you.

After losing the match, Hearts stood in front of Spades, and the hosts kept shaking their hands, but Hearts never held out their hands.

Hearts looked at Spades with barely any emotion in his eyes, a look of anticipation, "Your whip and code name, who gave you that?"

There is no such thing as a coincidence in this world that just happens to match up.

Spades replied, "I don't remember."

Hearts was silent for a long time before he extended his hand and looked up again with that impeccable lazy smile, "Very nice to meet you and I hope to see you on the field next time I see you."

"At that time, I hope you will remember the answer to your question."

Later on, Phoebe entered the game, the young witch joined the guild, and after many unsuccessful attempts to test Spades, Hearts got lazy again and started to let go of his power in the guild, letting the young witch take over in turn.

"So what the hell are you going to do?" Phoebe approached Hearts alone on a rare occasion and she stared at the other woman, "What are you going to do away from the guild when you're letting go so quickly and the little witches will all take over the Kings Guild by the end of this year?"

Hearts was quiet for a long time and spoke in reply, "Go outside the island."

His eyes were half-lidded and he smiled scatteredly, "Go to the dance where no one wants to sleep with me afterwards."

Phoebe is quiet for a moment - apart from a few essential things, Hearts hardly ever goes off the island, he loathes it as much as he loathes the island.

"With a face like yours, places like that don't exist." Phoebe replied nonchalantly.

-- Hearts' favourite dance is the Dance of the Seven Veils, a dance that is a bit seductive in its own right, and which Hearts dances to the point of seduction, a man who has grown up on this island of lust, and whose bones are soaked with compulsion.

"Well, I know." Hearts responded lazily, a smile still on his face and a certain sigh in his tone, like he was lost in memory, "I've only danced that one time where the other person just purely admired me, and I waited ten years for that guest, even the guild was named after him."

"And then never saw it a second time."

"I searched for him for a long time ....." Hearts rested his jaw, the candlelight swaying beside his face, his long lashes falling in wavering shadows, "and every time I was going to find it, I was so close to losing it. "

"Think outside the box." Phoebe said lightly, "Maybe he's already dead?"

Hearts laughed out loud for a moment, then went quiet again, "It might end well for him."

"That guest ..... did yearn for death."

Phoebe's heart swelled with a sense of foreboding, and she looked at Hearts' face, which was haunted by the candlelight, even in its contemplation, and almost instantly guessed what the other woman was thinking, and she pressed Hearts somewhat sternly: "So ..... you feel good about dying because of him too, do you? Is that right?"

"So, you left the guild because you wanted to die, did you?"

"At first ..... when he said he wanted to die, I did find it hard to accept, I even wanted to kill the person who was going to kill him." Hearts spoke very softly, "But after all that time, now that I think about what he said, it doesn't seem like anything is wrong."

"It's all boring to me, and I don't need to bring her back into this uninteresting and dirty world."

"- Death might be a good ending."

"Even if I go to hell after I die, it might be cleaner than this island I'm on now."

Hearts tilted his head slightly, the faint glow of the candle reflected in his godless purple eyes, and raised his hand to flick the wick casually as the candle light went out.

So not a ray of light could be seen on the island.

The sound of rain outside the window is piercing.

A few months before the league was due to start, something changed, and Phoebe was the first one to notice that something was wrong with the little witch.

She knows that Liu Huai, the weak and incompetent man, is at the heart of the little witch, but the Guild has Liu Huai well under control, and although the little witch is always silently "looking" at the controlled and somewhat muddled Liu Huai, not looking like she approves of what they are doing, she does not stop them from doing it.

For someone as timid, incompetent and weak as Liu Huai, such tight control might also be a form of protection.

Phoebe dislikes Liu Huai, one might even say loathes him, and although she has changed her mind about the underdog, she dislikes Liu Huai as a weakling with no conviction and a passion for betrayal.

She is certain that Liu Huai will be the young witch's weakness, and she feels that Hearts shares her opinion - otherwise this guy wouldn't have pulled off some kind of grooming operation for a prep group of brothers.

But Phoebe is not happy about this kind of operation.

"If a person's core desires could be easily replaced or transferred, they wouldn't be core." Phoebe hit the nail on the head, her tone tinged with disgust, "And these brothers you're looking for are too inferior for the young witch to easily transfer to these men."

Hearts smiled noncommittally as he asked her, "And what do you think it means to be a quality brother to a young witch?"

"Being able to understand her to some extent, support her in what she wants to do and be able to get her to successfully empathise, similarity in appearance to Liu Huai is a must, as well as similarity in experience, such as having taught her a lot and believing in her abilities ..... " Phoebe raised her eyes, "And finally, preferably also as cowardly as Liu Huai, so that she can be protective."

The smile on Hearts' face faded.

Phoebe said nonchalantly, " Hearts, I can't believe you haven't noticed that the little witch has similar complex feelings for you as she does for Liu Huai."

"You're the perfect person for her [brother]."

"You only need to use the skill once on the little witch and you will become Liu Huai in her eyes, you and her brother are not only identical in appearance, your personality and the role you play in her current experience are also similar, with your skills you can also completely replace Liu Huai in the little witch's mind psychologically, Liu Huai's weakness is replaced by you With this weakness replaced by you, the Little Witch can become stronger and more stable ....."

Hearts' tone faded: "That's enough."

Phoebe looked Hearts in the eye: "If you are determined to make the little witch overcome her weakness, why don't you want to lie to her yourself?"

"Obviously you're the right one for the job."

"Me in person?" Hearts gave Phoebe a smirking look, "I'm [the Queen] in her eyes, how is she going to accept me as her brother?"

Phoebe looked up, " Hearts, there's no use running away."

"You're a man, and in that way, you're fit to be her [brother] as well."

"You've done all the bad things, dragging your feet like this will only backfire, don't be a vicious and cowardly person in power, Hearts."

"Well, that's the end of the discussion on this matter." Hearts gathered his expression, his eyelashes dropping, "Go ahead and leave, I'll think about it."

Phoebe paused for a moment, pushed open the office door and left. Hearts sat alone in his chair in silence for a long, long time before slowly pulling open the drawer under his desk, he took out the picture that was in the drawer and placed it on the desk.

Hearts slowly lowered his head, leaned it on the table, buried it in his elbows and looked at the picture of his mother's bright smile, his voice too soft to be heard.

"..... I hate the idea of becoming a man to lie to her and win her over."

"It will make me think of you."

"..... So I got someone else to do the job." Hearts slowly lowered his head as he gave two abrupt low chuckles, " Phoebe's comment was pretty spot on, I'm so cowardly and vicious ....."

"But I really ....."

"I don't want to lie to Jiayi."

City in the Sky

Phoebe's prophecy came true when the Little Witch defected two months before the tournament and the whole King's Guild was in chaos, Phoebe was in a state of unprecedented depression and she was so mad that she almost killed Bai Liu, but Hearts stopped her.

"Can't we at least give it a chance, so we can see what kind of person she chooses?" Hearts said this to Phoebe, "I'm not going to let you get involved in this until you've calmed down."

"For you to deal with?" Phoebe raised an eyebrow, "A coward only misses opportunities over and over again."

"If you had chosen the best option from the start, the witch would not have defected at all, you left her open - at first I asked you to kill Liu Huai, you wouldn't do it, then I asked you to pretend to be Liu Huai, you wouldn't either, and now there is someone willing to kill and replace Liu Huai at the same time, the witch's defection is a natural one."

Hearts pauses: "True, but the gap is perhaps also freedom of choice, isn't it?"

"It was her own choice."

Phoebe paused and added with a sneer, "I watched the replay, and it was more Liu Huai's choice than the little witch's, wasn't it?"

"It's her choice, too." Hearts said, "I can bring her back, but only if you stay out of it."

Phoebe replied, "You better be able to."

Hearts met the player who also used the bone whip, Bai Liu, who was flying around the small TV screen with a very casual, loose smile on his face, spreading his arms wide and laughing in the wind created by Qi Yifang.

The wind ruffled Bai Liu's shaggy hair as he smiled and held out his hand to Liu Jiayi and said, "Yes."

"Whatever you want to do, whatever you choose, is fine."

[Yes.]

[Whatever you want to do, you can.]

Hearts' fingers curled slightly at the familiarity that followed him, and he remained still in front of Bai Liu's small television for so long that the attendant next to him cautiously reminded him, "The Queen?"

"Sorry, just got lost in thought." Hearts lowered his eyelashes and raised his hand in order as he turned his head without looking at Bai Liu's small television, his tone indifferent, "Round him up."

..... Could it be him?

Or was it another trick he deliberately set up to play his game - just like Spades, after he had calmly and clearly followed his choice of death, and then released such a player more similar to him to continue to entice him to live and suffer endlessly in this game.

All thoughts were only fleeting, and Hearts soon returned to his old languid self, ordering a methodical and vicious round-up of Bai Liu - even if it was really him, there had to be a price to pay for taking away his only heir, who had been so carefully groomed.

..... If it was really him, he could have easily survived these tactics of his, right .....

"So that's why you let him take the little witch?" Phoebe looked coldly at Hearts, "And let me take over?"

"Do you think this Bai Liu guy is similar to the customer you've been waiting for?"

Hearts gave Phoebe a quick glance, " Charles intervened to bail him out."

"And you let him go?" Phoebe sneered, "You can use that as an excuse to put off the rest of the guild, but you can't fool me, if you really wanted to round him up, then even if Charles had intervened, he would be dead by now."

"The bone whip, the soul, the love of trade, the tone of voice, the way you act, even the way you treat the little witch, all remind you of yourself back then, don't they? Bai Liu is a lot like that customer, isn't he? And because of that resemblance, you've gone soft on this man called Bai Liu."

Hearts is silent.

" Hearts." Phoebe said coldly, "You'll regret letting Bai Liu go today."

Soon the day of regret came.

Hearts' pupils trembled lightly as he looked at Bai Liu in his school uniform in the first group battle of the challenge - the uniform he knew, he had worn it, and he remembered that it was the first thing he had worn in his adult life that wasn't from the island, the first man he had imitated - -was the outfit and the request that the guest brought.

[The pupils of that child's eyes are black].

[Don't look at me like that, he looks at me cold, he hates me, he doesn't look at me with such like eyes].

[He refused to kill me.]

[Speaking of which, he's about the same age as you, also eighteen this year].

Hearts had never seen the customer look at his finished imitation with such emotion in his eyes - even the first time he imitated the silver-blue boy, the customer's eyes were still calm and wistful, without much emotion, but that time, after he had done his full imitation as requested, the customer's eyes He was expecting "him", or to be more precise, the customer was expecting the boy he was imitating.

The guest, wearing a mask, smiled and said to the boy he played, "I look forward to you, to the day when you grow up and have the desire to come to me."

"I can't wait to meet you."

He asked his guest, "Who is this?

The guest smiled and said, "This is the man who will kill me in the future."

"Or to describe it a little more accurately, it's a me with a soul."

Trembling and confused, he inquired softly, "What does it mean, a you with a soul?"

"I am a god without a soul, and this human being you are playing, he is a derivative of me, to be more precise, he has the same appearance, the same personality traits, the same desires, he is identical to me in everything except that he is not a god, a mortal version of me, so to speak."

"By definition, he was derived from me and should not have had anything different in him from me, but it is very strange that he in this world, apart from his appearance being the same as mine, has personality traits and desires that are completely different from mine, as well as the most important point-"

The guest slowly sat up straighter, his tone rising slightly: "- I am soulless, but he is."

"A [me] with a soul, I am strong enough to imagine that he is powerful, and if there is some kind of being in this world that can kill me, it is bound to be him."

"Why do you look so angry when you hear that I am to be killed by him?" The guest looked at Hearts with a smile, his head tilted to one side, resting on the back of his hand, his tone slightly diffident, with a kind of ambiguity, "If you like me so much, you might like him better than me."

"Because I don't understand [love], but he can."

"I wouldn't like him!" Hearts showed an expression as if he had been humiliated as he retorted angrily, "I wouldn't like someone who was going to kill you! My liking is not something that can be so easily transferred!"

"Oh? Is that so?" The guest's tone dazzled, and his lips curled in a smirk, "And you've only met me twice, so why do you like me?"

"Just because I was in the right place at the right time, with the right powers just in time to help you get your wish, you like me, don't you?"

"Is it me you like, or is it this person who has appeared just at the right time? Would you like this person if it wasn't me and it was someone else?"

Hearts was still, and he looked up incredulously, eyes wide and breathless, but unable to answer a single word.

He stood up, lowered his eyes and straightened his black leather gloves, pulling them upwards a little.

"As I understand it, human liking is also a superficial and utilitarian thing that can be easily created and transferred."

The guest said with a smile, "If you really want to prove to me that you won't like him and express your loyalty to my liking-"

"-then kill him and prove it to me."

The moment the words were spoken, Hearts felt the guest give Hearts a very light pat on the head and he looked away from Hearts with a smile in his eyes as if he was looking at Hearts and the person Hearts was playing, "If you really like me that much."

The pupils of Hearts' eyes trembled slightly.

--This was the first time this guest had touched him.

"What a rare visitor." Charles folded his arms in front of himself as he looked at Hearts, who had pushed open his office door, and said with a grin, "What could possibly be going on that would make the high and mighty Queen knock on my dirty gambler's door after watching the challenge and not even having a rivalry meeting?"

Hearts walked up to Charles and looked at him with a misplaced look in his eyes, "I want to know what's behind Bai Liu."

"Behind the scenes information?" Charles spread his hands as he smiled politely inquiringly, "The Queen and I have been working together for a long time, of course I am willing to sell you a lot of information, after all I even did things like create a fake identity within the Gamblers Guild to invest in Spades for you last year."

"That's not you helping me." Hearts retorted impassively, "It was you who agreed to work with me because you yourself needed an extreme gambler to boost Spades' status and build up his popularity."

Last year Hearts was trying to get in touch with Spades, which is why he was dropping points to work with Charles - he was trying to ask Spades where he got the bone whip from, normally a novice would have a personal connection with the gambler who backed him the most, but Spades was a player who was out of the ordinary. After all the points Hearts had dropped, the man didn't even give a second glance to the punters at the top of the leaderboard, nor did he have any desire to lynch.

It was only after Hearts had fought him in the ring and killed him in a bloody fight that they got a reply from Spades about the origin of the bone whip - [I don't know].

"Spades last year, Bai Liu this year." Charles teased. Charles teased, "Queen, you have a great eye, you pick my dark horses with precision every time, last year you were willing to work with me because you wanted access to Spades, is that the same reason this year?"

"I don't like Bai Liu." Hearts retorted in an indifferent tone, "I just want news of him."

Charles shrugged, "Well, it's basic ethics for me not to question my clients, but I sell my news here by the bar, what news do you want? Career? Background? Marriage? A relationship? Or something to do with the league?"

"For the sake of our cooperation for so long, I'll give you a friendly price of 10,000 points for one."

Hearts looked up: "I want all the information you know about Bai Liu, no matter how much you know."

City in the Sky

In-game.

The next day, as the first rays of sunlight hit the holy statue of the goddess in the highest tower of the island floating in mid-air, the nuns sleeping in the papal palace and the witches in the polluted area opened their eyes at the same time.

They jumped lightly from the mattress where they had been sleeping, put on their clothes and brushed their hair sideways while walking unhurriedly towards the door of the room they were knocking on.

The Cardinal pushed open Phoebe's door and said lovingly, "It's time for you to go out to the witch trials, my child."

"The witch trials are starting today." You Zhen, standing outside the door, took Liu Jiayi's hairband and tied it for her, her tone heavy, "but today we're going to prepare for a sneak attack on the Pope's palace, try to break out of the staircase once to see if we can get up there, and not be able to spare the men to rescue the people at the tribunal."

Liu Jiayi tilted her head slightly, and she smiled sweetly: "At times like this, aren't the men who are put in the city useful?"

"If they don't want the witch to win the war and then judge them in reverse, isn't this the time to show their loyalty and offer to go to the rescue?"

You Zhen tied her hair with a flourish.

Phoebe put on her nun's hat and she turned her head, her hands joined in a gesture of prayer, her expression innocent and holy: "I'm ready to pray for those who deserve to go to hell, Bishop."

The Cardinal, thinking Phoebe was talking about the witch, nodded compassionately, "Good child. You are doing the right thing."

Phoebe, as she walked past the Bishop with her eyes downcast, said briskly, "May the Lord bless you to hell, my Lord Bishop."

The bishop did not catch it, and asked back in confusion, "What did you just say?"

"Nothing." Phoebe smiled sweetly as she put her hands behind her back and winked, "I'm praying for your future."

Meanwhile, the Western Safety Zone warehouse.

Bai Liu's communicator vibrated, and he took it out and saw the message Liu Jiayi had just sent.

[Break out in two units.]

[Bai Liu open Mu Sicheng panel and Muke go to the Pope's Palace, your skills are obscure and suitable for sneaking, search for the sky ladder inside the Pope's Palace, the sky ladder is said to have a mechanism, only the Pope can open it, look for the key to open the sky ladder on the Pope, cooperate with the witch to open the sky ladder and wait for the Sky City].

[Mu Sicheng and Tang Erda lead the rest of the group to attack the Court of Judgment, save and capture only, do not fight, avoid confrontation with the King's Guild who may be on the side of the Holy See, come to the Papal Palace and break out with the witches after saving them].

[Let Tang Erda be aware of the two-sided high-damage match between the nuns and Liu Ji].

" Phoebe ." Qi Yifang followed the nun with anxiety, "Are we really going to split up? The opponent is that Bai Liu, he is very extreme, he may sacrifice the players in his hand to swap with us, if Bai Liu plays a swap tactic, our side of the queen is on the island, one less player, it is very disadvantageous, it is better not to ....."

Phoebe gave him a bemused glance: "Since when can a regular player question a tactician's choice?"

Qi Yifang shuts his mouth in embarrassment.

"Their tactician for this one won't be Bai Liu's." Phoebe shifted her eyes back and dropped the bombshell in an unusual tone, "As you said, Bai Liu is a guy with extreme tactics, but so far what we know, both the breakout of the Inquisitorial Court and the witch matchups on the sideline are solid tactics, not aggressive, with the main focus on preserving their own team and reducing casualties."

"This tactic is not the style of the crazy Bai Liu."

"It's more like the handiwork of a little witch."

Qi Yifang was stunned: "You mean ....."

"I suspect the other team made the same tactician change as we did, because on this map, which is clearly the Little Witch's home turf, and that profit-minded Bai Liu is a man, there's no advantage to be had on this map." Phoebe's tone is muted, "He's probably going to do the same as Hearts and transfer his tactician privileges."

"And if it's a little witch as a tactician ....."

Phoebe's eyes lit up and she spoke in a pleasant tone, "I've watched and watched her grow and no one knows the tactics she'll use better than I do."

"Her tactics have always been based on protection and stability, then in this case, in order to minimise player damage and maintain player cooperation, she would most likely split up the more seasoned players and take the novice players separately, such as Bai Liu with Muke and Rose Hunter with Mu Sicheng, and then press the main task on Bai Liu, such as attacking the Pope's Palace to find the key to the Ladder, and press the main task on Bai Liu. For example, attacking the Pope's Palace to find the key to the stairway to heaven, and pressing the offensive tasks on the hunters, such as saving the witches awaiting trial today from the Inquisition."

"When the little witches split up, it's only natural that we should split up too, otherwise they'd be running a double quest and we'd be running a single quest and the quest would be twice as slow as they are."

"The problem now is how to split it up."

Phoebe turned around and she looked over at Qi Yifang and Liu Ji who were following her, her eyes narrowing slightly as she made her rounds.

It was as if she knew the little witch well enough to guess the pairings the other woman had given her, and the little witch, being so intelligent, naturally knew her well enough to guess the pairings she would use.

But Phoebe is not the kind of tactician who changes his tactics just because his opponent guesses.

She believed in her choice, so what if she was guessed, she could win all the same.

"Liu Ji and I will go to the Inquisition, Qi Yifang will stay in the Papal Palace and work with Titan's skills to steal the Pope's scepter." Phoebe calmly gave the order, her gaze obscuring towards the ladder next to the nuns' hall across the street, "No surprise, we're going to have a winner today."

Meanwhile, the eastern contaminated zone borderline.

Leah, stationed in position, watches the approaching white dots not far away and a sense of foreboding comes over her.

She saw the ecclesiastical troops of the Inquisitorial Court pushing a large vat of eels this way, along with many bows made of eel bones, led by the bishop, who was holding a loudspeaker and shouting at the witch-contaminated area.

"Listen up, witches, we've developed a plethora of secret weapons against you! If you don't want to be killed by a hail of arrows! Step forward and surrender now!"

"Now the merciful Lord is giving you a brand new path."

The bishop pointed to the male eels being pushed over next to him, "These are the male eels that have been surrendered by the indigestible offerings of the congregation, and we have heard that you have a child with strange sorcery on your hands, a little witch whose sorcery creates a poisonous swamp that can dissolve even eel bones."

"If you will hand over the young witch and allow her to use sorcery to digest these male eels, then the Holy See will let all of you witches live."

Seeing no response from the witch quarter, the bishop narrowed his already tiny eyes into slits in displeasure and raised his volume, "Just hand over one of her witches and you will be forgiven by the Holy See and have the right to re-enter the safe zone."

"You will only help your warlike spirit by keeping her, but how can she protect each and every one of you at all times when there is only one of her? After the invention of the eel-bone arrow, your resistance will one day fail."

"Not only that, but not only will your domination of her not save you from yourselves, but the day you dominate this strange little witch, the less these male eels are dissolved, the less eels will be produced, and the more people will be harmed by these eels! More women will be corrupted into witches by swallowing eels!"

"Don't you claim to be saving all witches? But by acting so selfishly you are clearly forcing them to become witches, you are making an enemy of all mankind!"

Leah gritted her teeth and raised an arrow and shot - that was the signal that there would be no consent.

The bishop was wrapped in a dense shield of bone, and the arrow struck the top of the bone shield in front of him, a threat so close that he could not help but grimace.

"It seems, then, that you do not accept the forgiveness of the merciful Church."

"An unrepentant dirty witch indeed."

The bishop raised his hand and spoke in a sinister tone, "Release the arrows!"

Thousands of arrows were shot out, aimed at the witch zone.

Leah's eyes sank as she turned her feet into snake tails, enclosing the entire patch, and took a deep breath - the battle was coming and she was ready to die.

Witch Code #5 - If the ultimate in freedom requires sacrifice in exchange for it, then sacrifice also symbolizes a freedom.

-a freedom of the soul after death, a freedom of the future.

As the first sharp arrow pierced Leah's snake's tail, spilling blood, she looked up with an expression so painful that she grimaced at the island floating above the sky, breathing heavily, her voice hoarse as she ordered

"Attack-!!!"

Papal Palace.

Bai Liu and Muke used the map given by Liu Jiayi and Muke's shadow sneaking skills to quickly make their way around the back door of the papal palace, knocking out two priests, dragging them into the shadows, stripping them of their clothes and changing into them, and sneaking through the shadows all the way to the main hall of the papal palace.

Muke, hidden in the shadows, scanned the front of the main hall and his brow furrowed: "What's with all the guards?"

"It's not just the guards, look over there." Bai Liu nudged Muke's shoulder and pointed to the side of the main hall, "There are lots of cardinals chanting and a choir."

"It must be that something has happened to the Pope in the main hall and he's in shock, which is why so many people have come to watch."

Bai Liu rubbed his chin in thought, "But we weren't even in the papal palace yesterday, and we didn't do anything to the Pope, it must have been the Hearts who did it."

"This greatly increases the difficulty of our stalking." Muke looked grave, "We're not sure what level of monsters these guards are, whether they can be killed, what buffs they have on them, and on top of that, even if we could kill them, so many guards would take us a lot of time, and finally, we're here to steal the key, and such a big noise of the key would scare the Pope inside, and let him run away with the key, we would have made a trip for nothing up."

"It's not just that." Bai Liu added, "The worst that could happen is that the Pope runs straight onto the island with the key and unlocks the ladder so that we can't climb up, while the attacking witches will be surrounded by heavy guards."

"From Jiayi's description, the witches couldn't have withstood such heavy casualties."

Muke nodded, worried, "So our operation must not go awry."

"So heavily guarded and the Pope is clearly a glutton for punishment, the kind of man who is always cautious ..... What would it take to not spook the snake and be seen and still manage to blend into the main hall?"

The same question plagued Qi Yifang, who was wandering anxiously around the side entrance of the main hall.

He was clearly given the status of a priest of the Holy See, but was likewise turned away by the Pope when he asked for an audience - news of the witch attack had reached the papal palace, leaving the Pope as if he were a bird of prey and would not receive anyone.

It also made Qi Yifang, who had been given the task of stealing with care, understand why Phoebe had unbelievably left him with the big guy, Titan.

It's a Titan to break through if he can't negotiate!

..... is really a tactic used by Phoebe, a guy who likes to come on strong.

Qi Yifang could not help but smile bitterly at the thought, but not only would there be more variables if he forced his way in, but the Queen, who was imprisoned by the Holy See, would surely be affected, and he did not want to force his way in until the final step.

But what would he do to meet the frightened Pope if he didn't come strong?

Qi Yifang has a headache.

Seriously, he didn't think the Pope would receive anyone in this situation.

Muke echoed the same sentiment, his brow furrowed: "There's no gap in the main hall to sneak into, we'll have to force our way in."

"..... looks as if it is." Bai Liu looked at the door to the main hall, his eyes narrowing slightly, "but the cost effectiveness of the strong attack is just a little on the low side."

"How about a different kind of bet."

Muke was stunned: "A bet?"

"It's true that the Pope doesn't open the door to receive anyone." Bai Liu analysed in a calm tone, "But there is one exception, according to the information Jiayi gave us, this Pope has a great deal of respect for the man who sold the island to him in the first place, and although I'm not sure who this man is, Bai six is behind all the games I've come across so far."

"How about the bold assumption that if the man selling the city of skies to the Pope was Bai six, in this offensive situation, this Pope, who made his fortune on the island in the first place and who is terrified beyond belief, is bound to receive Bai six, the god who has helped him grant his wishes."

"And I look exactly the same as Bai six."

Bai Liu said in a light tone, "If my suspicions are correct, the Pope would have opened the front door to greet me if I had come forward to see him."

"But what if the person selling the island to the Pope is not Bai six?" Muke's brow furrowed, "Just like the previous game, Bai six found a medium to reach the other side, which is possible."

"Then it's not too late to make a strong attack then." Bai Liu said, straightening his gloves and adjusting his expression as he walked straight out with his hands held high.

"?! Who!"

The guards turned their bows on Bai Liu, who was in a surrender position, and demanded in a fierce tone, "Who are you?"

Bai Liu explained without skipping a beat, "I am a guest of the Pope."

"A guest of His Holiness?" The guard's tone was suspicious as he aimed his crossbow at the aorta next to Bai Liu's neck and approached to pick up Bai Liu's chin, "His Holiness has no appointments today."

"Perhaps if you tell His Holiness whether the key to the Island in the Sky in his possession needs repair, he'll remember." Bai Liu raised his eyes in a wave.

-- If Bai six is the one selling the island, then the key in the Pope's hand that can jam a witch to death is more than likely something the bored god did with his own power at his own whim.

He did not think that a mediocre and foolish mortal like the Pope could possess the ability to make the key to the Sky City.

The guard hesitated for a moment but turned his head and asked the man next to him to pass on the message for him.

"I'm not accepting an audience with anyone!" As soon as the Pope saw the guards enter, the man in a state of panic shouted in a fury, "Who told you to open the door! What if you let in those witchy witches!"

The guard who entered fell to his knees in fear at the Pope's yell and reported tremblingly, "Yes, yes, Your Holiness, a man claiming to be your guest has come."

"I have no appointment with anyone today! Arrest him and put him to death! He must have been sent by the witch!" The Pope hysterically slammed the fine China cup in his hand in front of the guards, "Now get out! Leave me alone in safety!"

The splattering of the cup scared the kneeling guard, who hurriedly stepped back on his knees and nodded frantically, "Yes Lord Pope!"

"I'm going to torture and execute this witch spy who claims to have once sold you an island that could be repaired with the keys to the Sky City!"

The Pope's barking antics gave a lurch and his stormy expression instantly froze on his face as he jerked to his feet holding his seat, "Who did you say it was?!"

The guard shrank his shoulders in confusion, "One, a man who claimed to have sold the island to you once."

The Pope took two deep breaths and he stepped tremulously from his seat, but then thought of something and walked back, pacing anxiously back and forth, his chest heaving violently with emotion as he muttered to himself in a trance, "How could that One come in person?!"

"..... No, not necessarily, that one's mind ..... will get involved in anything that's interesting, and now that the witches and we're in a big battle, this might be interesting in that one's eyes too ....."

"Maybe, maybe it will really come to my aid!"

"Describe it to me." The Pope held the arm of the throne of God and asked warily, "What does that guest ..... look like."

"He looked to be a young man in his early twenties, with a white blouse and black gloves in his priest's outfit." The guard described it carefully, "looked to be from an unusual background and was calm when we aimed our bows at him."

The Pope closed his eyes and walked quickly downwards, almost rolling off the throne of God, "And invite him in!"

The guards nodded hastily, "Yes, yes! I'll invite that distinguished guest in right away!"

The doors of the Palace's otherwise closed main hall opened in layers, revealing the opulent interior to Bai Liu, and the stained paintings on the huge, glazed glass refracted in his face with layers of glittering light, causing him to blink very slightly.

The guard who had just pointed his bow at Bai Liu bent ninety degrees to him respectfully and reached out to lead the way for Bai Liu: "I didn't recognise you just now and offended you, please forgive me for my crime."

"His Holiness says that whenever and wherever you wish to come, the main doors of the papal palace are always open for you to enter."

Bai Liu nodded slightly and followed the guard forward, while glancing at Muke who was waiting nearby.

Muke, who had been waiting with bated breath beside him, let out a long breath as he collected the dagger in his hand and rejoined the shadows, following closely behind Bai Liu's pace and instantly sneaking into the papal palace.

Qi Yifang's ears twitched as he heard a greeting coming from the main hall and, stopped by the guards at the side door, he was about to seize the opportunity to rush in when the guards held him back again.

"His Holiness the Pope is receiving his honoured guests." The guard's tone took on a distinctly warning tone, "I would ask His Holiness the priest not to trespass in the main hall."

Qi Yifang gritted his teeth and his face sank as his hand moved to reach inside the priest's robes and grip his weapon - a weathervane.

His code word with Titan was that if there was an unusual storm here at the papal palace, Titan would storm the sea and hammer the papal main hall.

He wanted to solve all this in a peaceful way, but it seems that the Pope can't afford to do it, so he has to use the [storm]?

..... But who exactly is the guest who, under these circumstances, can still make the Pope, who is so afraid of death that he keeps the doors of the main hall of the papal palace closed, open them and receive them with such high specifications?

Qi Yifang's eyes move to the main hall of the papal palace, and he is lost in thought.

Inside the main hall of the Papal Palace.

At the sight of Bai Liu, who was welcomed inside by the guards, the Pope stepped down from his throne, trembling with excitement, and stopped two metres away from Bai Liu, and with a very submissive and humble gesture, he lowered his body and raised his right hand in a hat-raising salute.

"I can't believe it's really you!" The Pope looked up, his eyes welling up with tears, and followed Bai Liu step by step as he led him up to the throne, and standing on the steps beneath the throne, the Pope bent down with immense humility and said, "Please sit on the throne; there is no place worthy of you in the whole papal palace except here."

"Isn't this your seat?" Bai Liu lowered his eyes and asked rhetorically with little emotion in his tone, "You gave it to me, so where are you sitting?"

"Before the gods, there is no place for mortals." The Pope tilted his head, clutching his hat in his hand, and looked at Bai Liu with a devout and maniacal faith in his eyes, "You taught me that, have you forgotten?"

"We believers are not worthy to be seated in your presence!"

Bai Liu sat down nonchalantly, leaning on the armrest with one elbow, propping his face up, his eyes half-closed, his tone placidly inquiring, "You've seen my face?"

"By chance, I had the pleasure of meeting you." After seeing Bai Liu's face, the Pope had no doubts about Bai Liu, recalling, "You did not deliberately hide your face when I made a wish to you."

With a dispensable nod, Bai Liu asked in a light tone, "Where is the key to your sky city?"

"Oh!" The Pope, not doubting it, respectfully offered his hands to the scepter he held as if it were his life, and inquired with some apprehension, "I have used this key for decades, is there something wrong with it that needs to be fixed?"

Bai Liu lowered his eyes to this sceptre that was placed in his hand.

The wooden cameo sceptre is crawling with the huge tentacles of the creatures of the deep, uneven to the touch, which wrap around and climb to the top where a cloudy jewel of silvery blue light hovers.

The warm glow of the gemstone is reflected in Bai Liu's dark pupils like a cosmic rift torn from the midst of the night.

--The silvery-blue chasm from which Bai Liu has stepped out, as Bai Liu has seen countless times.

Seeing Bai Liu just survey the sceptre without a word, the Pope clasped his hands together nervously, swallowed and asked again, "Yes, is there something wrong that you need to fix with your own hands?"

"Something's wrong?" Bai Liu's seemingly perceptive voice sounded softly as he casually leaned back on the divine throne, which was somewhat large for him, legs folded and swept a seemingly smiling glance at the Pope standing before him, his posture and eyes appearing so careless, the end of his tone even bringing out some laughter, "This scepter does have something to be repaired."

The Pope was extremely disturbed by the look in Bai Liu's eyes and his voice trembled as he inquired, "Yes, what is the place?"

Bai Liu turned the sceptre, held it, and smiled sideways as he replied to the Pope, "It is the owner of this sceptre who deserves to have it repaired and replaced by a better one."

" Muke, kill him."

With this laughing command, the assassin, hidden in the shadows, leapt to his feet, his eyes blazing and cold, his dagger in his hand, stabbing the Pope in the side of the neck as his pupils snapped open!

The Pope narrowly dodged it and cried out in panic, crawling forward on his hands and knees, "Come, someone, help!!!"

At the same time, Qi Yifang took hold of the weathervane and looked to the guards in front of him, asking once more solemnly, "Is it true that I can't go in?"

The guard lifted his chin haughtily, "How many times have I told you, you're just a priest."

"A priest has no business setting foot in the papal palace without permission."

"Eh, there's no way out then, although I don't like killing NPCs in the game, nor do I like [Storms]." Qi Yifang sighed helplessly, his eyes staring as he took out the violently spinning weathervane from his priest's outer robes, "But sometimes, only a storm can wash away all the filth."

"It is the order of my tactician that I must enter the papal palace, so please die for that order!"

[System Alert: Player Qi Yifang has used the skill to summon a two-hour localized mega-storm].

The wind and rain suddenly arrived, and like a player full of destruction, the huge rainstorm and the wind rushed into the papal palace with impunity and began to destroy everything, and the guard, who had just been strutting his stuff, was instantly blown up in terror, clutching the pillars of the papal palace for dear life before he could steady himself and shouting in fear: "What is this!"

In the distance came the sound of a giant running fast and roaring, and the earth shook with it - it was Titan on his way.

Qi Yifang, his entire body drenched, the weathervane spinning to the point of resembling an electric fan suspended in his hand, the ends of his hair and face covered in droplets of water, looked away, wiped a handful of rain from his own face, sighed and answered the guard NPC's question with a subtle chuckle in his voice:

"It's a storm, haven't you ever seen one?"

City in the Sky

Trial Court 23.

This is the first witch trial court to be held today.

The witch on trial, tied to the central pillar, was a young girl, looking no more than sixteen or seventeen years old, who opened her mouth a little to say something, but only managed to make a few fractured sounds.

And with that, she was met with a fierce "No noise in the Court of Judgment!" from the guard next to her. Keep your mouth shut!"

"She can't hear." The bishop sitting above said indifferently, "She's deaf and dumb, let's gag her first."

The guards gagged the cowering girl's lips with a ball of cotton, and she looked around her with a confused and frightened look on her face - she didn't seem to understand what she was going through, and no one was there to explain what was happening.

"Your mother defected on the day she was declared a witch, so we had to try you next, and then we found out that you were born deaf and unable to speak." The bishop spoke coldly, not caring whether she heard or not, "Of all the children born in this world, why are you the only one born deaf and dumb."

"God never chastises the good, and if you are deprived of hearing and speech, it must be that you have done something to anger God and he has sent down chastisement on you."

"-like the fact that you are simply an evil witch who was born into this world!"

Although she could not hear it, the Bishop's expression of disgust and accusation was so obvious that the girl shook her head in subconscious horror, her eyes filled with tears and she kept moving her hands, trying to argue in sign language, but her hands were firmly bound.

Someone could not help but whisper in defence of the young girl: "My Lord Bishop, this child, who cannot hear or see, has been at home since she was born and has never gone out, and has never done anything bad, so she cannot be a witch, can she?"

"It is forbidden to make noise in the court." The bishop gave the man a cold look, "Do you defend this witch to be tried, are you compelled by this witch to be tried together?"

The man's neck craned, and he closed his mouth uncomfortably.

He was a neighbour of the child's family and had watched the child grow up. After the child's mother was reported for confirmation in the witch trials, the child and her father were dragged off to other courts and now there was no one left in the courtroom to speak for the child, so after he got jury service, he thought he'd come - at least to speak for the child. At least he could say a few words for the child who could not speak.

But it turns out that there is no difference between being dumb and not being dumb before the Holy See - you will be condemned no matter what you argue.

"But God is not so cruel." The bishop's words changed, "Originally witches like you were to be tested by holy fire, but now that the war is on and there aren't enough women in the country to digest the eels, the Holy See isn't so uncaring."

"So we changed the way the test was done."

The bishop waved his hand absently, "Serve the eel boxes."

A box full of eels was pushed by the guards in front of the young girl, who looked at the box with horror and struggled violently as if she realised what was going to happen.

The bishop was unmoved: "If you can finish digesting this box of eels in court and still maintain your mind, not fall under the devil's spell and become a witch, swear eternal allegiance to the Holy See, always clean and digest eels for all mankind, and come to the Holy See monthly to receive your share of eel digestion - pretty much the amount you have in front of you - we will be able to release you without charge."

At the bishop's raised hand, the guard loosened the young girl from the pillar, made her kneel before the box of eels, held her writhing head down in front of the box, pulled the ball of cloth from her mouth, and haughtily and disgustedly ordered, "To prove you are not a witch, begin to swallow."

"Swallow quick! There are many more witches to be tried today, don't waste our time."

The young girl's teeth were clenched, her eyes red, her thin shoulders trembling, unwilling to speak.

The guard cursed and began to reach for her mouth, forcing her to start swallowing.

Hidden from the jury, Mu Sicheng's blood pressure rises sharply, his fists clench for a moment, Tang Erda's face drips with gloom and the gun in his hand is loaded.

"Fuck." Mu Sicheng cursed, "Are they animals?!"

This young girl reminds them of Jiayi.

"Shall we do it?" Mu Sicheng turned his head to Tang Erda.

Tang Erda shook her head calmly, "It's easy to hurt her now, the guards are too close to her."

"But we can't just watch her ....." Tang Erda paused, "wait another thirty seconds, if we can't we'll force a rescue."

Mu Sicheng took a deep breath and gave an OK gesture.

"Wait, my Lord Bishop, before she begins, should I not pray for her purification?" A soft, feminine voice came, interrupting the guard's compulsion to allow the young girl to swallow the eel.

Mu Sicheng and Tang Erda tensed up the moment they heard the voice, and they turned their heads sharply to look over.

The blue-eyed girl with long, curly, brilliant blonde hair, dressed in a pure, white, two-tone nun's habit, her hands clenched slightly in front of her in a prayerful gesture, looked at the bishop with crystal eyes and asked sincerely, "May I pray for her before the trial begins? It is my job as a nun, and I ask you not to refuse me."

After seeing the look on Phoebe's face, the Bishop couldn't help but have his heart beat wildly as he almost struggled to take his eyes off the small patch of pale skin exposed on Phoebe's chest, made a gesture of invitation and stuttered, "Of course! If you don't mind the other side being dirty."

Phoebe smiled sweetly and curtsied slightly, "Thank you, Your Grace, for allowing my capricious request."

The bishop was simply mesmerised by the rumour of the most beautiful new nun, who leaned forward and spoke to Phoebe with misty eyes, seemingly forgetting about the witch on trial on the stage: "But what brings you here so soon? You should still be in the First See, where the trial has not yet begun."

"Is that so?" Phoebe winked playfully, "Probably because with my help, all of today's trials have ended extraordinarily quickly, those witch trials in the Inquisition are over oh Lord Bishop."

"Believe me, your trial here today will also be over soon."

Phoebe curled her mouth downwards and approached the shivering maiden, the curve of her smile somewhere between holy and cruel, and spoke in a soft voice: "- Soon, my lord bishop, you too will be able to finish your work and go to rest with my help, like the other bishops of the tribunal up."

"Forever Oh~"

The bishop did not hear Phoebe and asked something in confusion, but Phoebe did not answer but jumped twice lightly and took small steps down the steps to the young girl.

Phoebe raised her hand and she slowly signalled, "Are you a witch?"

With tears in her eyes, the young girl looked at Phoebe, who had come to her with fear and a hint of expectation - the first person she had spoken to since her capture - and was about to shake her head in denial when, for some reason, the shake suddenly stopped and her fingers moved as if she wanted to say something in sign language.

Phoebe glanced up at the guard next to her, "Untie her."

The guards hesitated, but untied the young girl, who, with difficulty, was signalled shakily by the red marks strangled on her wrists: "I don't know what a witch is."

"All I know is that my mother was convicted as a witch."

"If she's a witch, I suppose I am too."

Phoebe crouched down with amusement as she said in sign language, "How dare you admit to being a witch in front of me when witches are subject to trial and much torture by the Holy See?"

With tears falling from her eyes, the young girl questioned in anxious and puzzled sign language, "But they say mummy is a witch!"

"Mum's fine, so the witch should be fine too! Why should the witch be judged!"

"You're right." Phoebe arched her eyebrows into a smile as she signalled, "I don't think a witch trial is necessary either."

After the exchange with the young girl, Phoebe turned her head and looked up at the Bishop with a look of regret: "My Lord Bishop, she has just admitted to being a witch."

The bishop froze, "Seung, admitted?"

"Since she confessed to being a witch, is it customary to burn ..... her with holy fire oh no, to test her?" Phoebe inquired in a calm tone.

"Well then, now that you admit it." The bishop hesitated, "..... Then let's go to Holy Fire."

The torches were piled under the pillars and the young girl was confusedly set back up again. The neighbour looked away uncomfortably, not wanting to see the cruel scene, and Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng looked at each other, ready to strike.

"She shall not speak, she shall not hear, this is the mutilation of her body, this is the penalty God has given her, she is condemned to burn and go to hell as a witch, and after death her soul shall suffer burning and shall not go to heaven." The bishop recited the doxology with righteousness and seeming compassion, and concluded with a salute, bowing his head and whispering, "May the Lord forgive her sins."

The young girl should have been terrified as the crowd came by with torches, but she looked at Phoebe, standing directly in front of her, and for some reason felt a sense of trance and calm.

She looked at the blonde nun with a light smile, signalling to her as if she were chatting.

"You know what? The fact that they pronounced you a witch by physical mutilation is my favorite."

"You remind me of another witch."

"I haven't prayed sincerely for a long time, but let's make an exception for you today."

The nun lowered her long, curling lashes over her turquoise eyes and whispered a prayer with a look of innocence, "May the Lord bless her to heaven."

[System Alert: Player Phoebe uses the skill (Prayer - Gospel)]

[This skill can confuse all NPCs as well as players within a partial range, causing the other party to open their hearts to the player, believe everything the player does, feel close to the player, and involuntarily approach the player].

Phoebe's huge white feathered wings spread out behind her and the holy light spread throughout the church, dazzling the senses and putting them in a trance, as if they were lost in a heavenly dream.

The moment Phoebe's wings protruded from behind her, Tang Erda, a keen veteran player, caught Mu Sicheng, a novice who hadn't yet reacted, backing up sharply and quickly jumping onto the side wall of the church, climbing through the cut-out at the top and looking inside, narrowly avoiding Phoebe's evangelistic reach.

As he watched the bishop of the church roll out of his seat at Phoebe's feet, the guards dropped their torches in a daze and knelt to confess their sins, the other men crawled to Phoebe on their knees with dumbfounded expressions and reverently confided in her, Mu Sicheng patted his chest with a sense of relief, "Holy shit, that's a lot of skill, it's a lot of range. "

Tang Erda's face, however, did not look good: "She's stronger than I thought."

..... is clearly a control position player, but it looks ..... so aggressive and imposing.

A normal control and roaming player would be the type of Muke who deliberately hides his presence, but Phoebe's presence from start to finish is significantly over the top, which is not characteristic of control and roaming players.

Phoebe is in control of the field, a characteristic of the main attacker and tactician.

"I suspect she's not just taking on the control and roaming position." Tang Erda's tone sank a little, "She may have taken on the role of lead attacker and tactician as well."

"Main attacker and tactician? Mu Sicheng was a bit incredulous, "Control, roamer, tactician, main attacker, this guy takes it all on, is she a hexagonal warrior?!"

"She's a player in the same league as Bai Liu and Reverse God, growing up to be a formidable opponent, and this is only her first year in the league." Tang Erda's tone got lower and lower, "No wonder Jiayi assigned me to play Judgement Court, Jiayi should have guessed that Phoebe was the main attacker and would come to sweep Judgement Court, with her attacking ability, I guess only you and I with high defence can carry the load."

"It's a tough battle."

Inside the courtroom, Phoebe walked unhurriedly up to the young girl, she untied the ropes that bound her: "You leave."

"Today's trial is no longer about you."

The young girl looked at Phoebe's face in confusion and signaled, "Isn't it my trial? Why is it not about me?"

"How will you be judged?" Phoebe shrugged her shoulders, and she smiled, "Everyone but you of course, I don't like judging witches."

The young girl looked at Phoebe incomprehensibly, but soon, induced by the Gospel, she obediently left and helped her dazed neighbour away, and before she did so the young girl looked back at Phoebe, whose mind was somewhere between lucidity and chaos, and seemed to see Phoebe waving at her, smiling and saying in sign language.

"Bye-bye, Miss Witch."

Phoebe lowered her eyes to the prostrate men and ordered softly, "Let me think, how would you better end this?"

"Burning I've already used, how about just-"

The white feathers on Phoebe's back vibrate lightly and flip upwards from their low end to become black bat wings. Her originally pale green eyes darken in colour and give off a ghostly luminescence, two sharp teeth show at the corners of her mouth and two small red horns about a finger long grow out of her forehead.

[System Alert: Player Phoebe has equipped the monster book form "The Witch Who Fell to Hell"]

Phoebe grinned impishly with that innocent face, her tone playful and nasty: "How can you judge people to hell all the time and not have seen it yourself?"

"Why don't you let me pray you to hell today, it's part of the nuns' work."

[System Alert: Player Phoebe uses the skill (Hell's Prayer Song)]

[This skill increases the damage of your player Team Quan by four hundred percent (including yourself) for fifteen minutes, with a cooldown of two hours.]

The whole church was instantly shrouded in darkness, and the ground seemed to be filled with gusts of wind and chill as if countless spirits had arisen, and countless slimy, invisible ghostly corpses and skeletons crawled out of the ground, holding the hands and feet of the men who had not yet come to their senses, sucking their yang energy face to face and soon reducing them to nothing more than skeletons.

Mu Sicheng was completely dumbfounded by this hellish sight: "..... What the hell is this? Phoebe doesn't have this skill in the information given by Wang Shun! Isn't her big skill a single bloodsucking attack?

Tang Erda frowned: "It's really a main attack, and a ranged attack, this card is hidden deep enough by King's Guild, Phoebe hasn't used this skill in previous matches, and Wang Shun doesn't have any inside information, so it should be King's Guild's card for the playoffs."

That bishop, briefly awake for a moment after the Gospel, his face rapidly drying up as seventeen or eighteen skeletons grabbed his hands and feet and sucked the life out of him, looked in horror at Phoebe standing in the middle of the tribunal and asked, dry and hard, "Why .....?! "

"Aren't you a nun?!"

"Why do you want to be on the side of the witches when the Holy See has spent so much effort to train you?!"

Phoebe sat on her little legs shaking on the high judgment table, she cocked her head a little and repeated the Bishop's words in an uncomprehending tone, "Why?"

"It's true that you can win games with nun status, and it's kinda nice to win too."

"But I can win on the side of the witches, I chose to be on the side of the witches-" Phoebe spread her hands innocently, a good-natured smile on her face, "That's because, naturally, I like witches a lot. "

"Even though they're not the same kind of witch, using the same title is right up my alley."

Phoebe jumped down from the judgment seat and stepped on the Bishop's dried up head with a smile.

"And it's too easy to kill cowardly and dirty men like you, it doesn't take much effort on my part, it's just a handy thing to do, and I'm happy to do something for that I like."

The bishop stared at Phoebe in death, struggled twice in resignation and turned into a skeleton.

"The two people who are peeking out." Phoebe carelessly stomped on the skull's head as she looked up at the empty spot at the top of the tribunal court with a harmless smile, "You guys don't think I turned on my big skill just to kill these inconsequential NPCs, do you?"

Tang Erda's eyes gleamed as she quickly grabbed Mu Sicheng's shoulders and reversed the jump, plunging off the top of the clerestory.

At the very moment Mu Sicheng was caught and jumped, there was a loud popping hammer behind them, and Mu Sicheng looked up at the huge hollow where they had just been hiding, and there stood a man covered in flames, holding up a huge bone half a man high, which was also ablaze.

[System Alert: Player Liu Ji has equipped the monster book identity "Burning Freak"]

[System Alert: Player Liu Ji uses skill (Flaming Bone Hammer)]

[This skill burns forty points of the player's life and triples the original S-rank killing power to SS-rank].

[Player Liu Ji is in the range where (Hell's Prayer Song) is in effect, the boosted killing power is quadrupled again, raising the killing power to twelve times its original size, and one hit can penetrate the protection of the current top player, dealing between twenty and twenty-five percent life damage.]

And where they had just stood the dome was now completely smashed open, with a huge hollow at the top of the ecclesiastical church, as if it had been bombarded by some missile, but being within the range of Phoebe's skills had left the church still shrouded in darkness, with not a single ray of light coming through.

Liu Ji, who was burning, leapt from the hollow of the dome, the bone hammer he was carrying hitting the ground hard, creating a deep depression in the ground, so loud that Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng, who were standing firmly on the ground, were shaken.

Mu Sicheng felt this huge attack and oppression for the first time, and his scalp tingled as he looked across at the burning monstrosity - it wasn't his imagination, was it? This guy's attack damage was so high, it felt like his blood bar was going to go down halfway when he took an attack.

It wasn't like this when I saw Liu Ji in the Rose Factory before, what happened in between?

Tang Erda's back muscles were completely tense as he pulled out his gun and stared deadly at Phoebe, the witch standing in front of him: "So it's not that the King's Guild didn't recruit a main attacker this year, it's not that you didn't prepare a main attacker and let Liu Ji be your main attacker, but that you cooperated and this is your full main attacker form, is that right?"

Phoebe's wings vibrated with pleasure and she smiled briskly with her hands behind her back, "No, oh no."

"Rather, as long as I'm around, anyone in our guild can be the main attacker, so no matter how crap someone is, they can put up a nice attack with my assistance."

Liu Ji who is burning life points: .....

Although, it's true, but ..... so hurtful Miss Phoebe QAQ.

"Now I'm sure you know what the key to our confrontation is." Phoebe walked nonchalantly towards Tang Erda, her smile looking friendly, but Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng stepped back, "We are both tasked with the main attack, and are both key attackers on the team."

"-that means that whichever side gets a head start and is able to grab the key to the stairway to heaven by settling the opponent first and being able to rendezvous back with the larger forces of the papal palace and overwhelm them with numerical superiority."

"Which means-" Phoebe's wings vibrated and disappeared into place, and the next second, she appeared almost out of nowhere in front of Mu Sicheng, gripping him by the neck and saying in a cold tone "Whichever side loses first, loses."

"- Then let's take care of the weak newcomers in your main attacking team first."

Mu Sicheng's pupils tightened.

City in the Sky

At the same moment, the Papal Palace.

Bai Liu and Muke leapt backwards to avoid the punch, and the Pope, smashed under a piece of ceiling, escaped, looking dazed and stunned, his legs shaking as he watched the scene.

Bai Liu pulled his whip from his haunches, raised his eyebrows slightly and looked across at Qi Yifang and Titan, who had emerged from the centre of the storm with a smile: "It seems that we are not the only ones who want to get to the island."

"It's been a long time, Mr. Bai Liu." Qi Yifang nodded politely, his hand hovering over the spinning vane that was spinning more and more furiously and raised his eyes to the sceptre in Bai Liu's hand, his eyes pausing for a moment as his expression became obscure, "As expected of you, Mr Bai Liu, to have entered the Papal Palace and obtained the key to the island while I was still hesitating. "

Muke stood unmoved behind Bai Liu, who stood up straight as he shook his whip, shaking the rain off it, and asked with a soft smile, "You are no match for me, and your tactician is cruel to you to force you to stand in my way and let me kill you like this."

"It is true that I am no match for you, and it is also true that my tactician is cruel." Qi Yifang's face slid down with rain, but his expression did not change as the wind vane in his hand spun to a sharp stop, "But a match is a match, and a tactic is a tactic."

"What we're going to do doesn't change whether we die because of it or not, that's what the King's Guild trained us for."

Qi Yifang looked straight at Bai Liu: "We were born to serve the Queen and to serve the victory to the death."

"What a devout faith." Bai Liu spread his hands appreciatively as he gave a smirking glance at the Pope who was climbing out of the ruins of the main hall with Titan's help, "But looking at the clothes, I suppose you're set to be the Pope now? Isn't that a bad thing to say in front of your other top boss?"

Muke came up to Bai Liu's ear, he covered his arm and his tone was a bit low: "Just now my dagger hit that Pope NPC but it bounced back, I unlocked his monster book, this guy is immune to all attacks from men and judged witches, he even has a fifty percent chance of triggering a bounce, he's a very hard NPC to kill. "

"But the weird thing is ....." Muke hesitated, "The monster book says it's only witches who have to be judged and males in the ruled area that are immune and bounce damage, we don't fall into that category, but we also get bounced damage."

Bai Liu glanced at the bleeding wound on Muke's arm: "That's the wound the Pope bounced back from? Show me the monster book your panel unlocked."

Muke showed Bai Liu the Pope's monster book and Bai Liu's eyes narrowed as he quickly tapped out and swiped his system panel to refresh it, his gaze pausing for a moment and his tone of voice becoming clear: "So that's it."

The status setting on his system panel changed from [Prepared Witch] to [Witch wanted by the Holy See pending trial].

Muke also reacted and his face sank in a flash: "So it's the identity setting?!"

"Although we are men, and logically not immune, we were set up as reserve witches to begin with." Bai Liu explained articulately, "And after that time when we were rescued by the witch team, we, as defecting reserve witches, had come under the witch team in the eyes of the Holy See, and so the Inquisition wanted us, so our status is now that of witches awaiting trial."

"But it's still not right, even if we're witches on trial now, we're not part of the damage exemption for attacking the Pope." Muke wondered.

Bai Liu continued in a calm tone, "But we have now come to the Papal Palace, the heart of this trial of witches, so as [witches to be tried] we are being tried by the Papacy at this moment."

"It just happened to fall within the immunity range that invalidates attacks on popes and bishops."

The Pope, staggering and being helped to his feet by the guards, shouted in hysterical rage, "Arrest and execute these two witches' accomplices!"

"Where's the priest! Where's the priest who just rushed in and saved me!"

Qi Yifang replied in a very soft voice to the Pope, "I am here, Your Holiness."

The Pope hid behind Qi Yifang as if he had seen a savior, shivering from the wind and rain, but still ordering in a commanding manner, "I just saw you order that giant, that giant you called to save me, didn't you? Quickly, tell that giant to kill these two thieves and take back my sceptre!"

"The giants are indeed powerful, but so are those two, so in addition to that I need your help, my Lord Pope." Qi Yifang whispered softly, "Will you make it possible for me to marshal your team?"

The Pope hesitated for a brief moment, but he turned his head to look at the sceptre in Bai Liu's hand and, with a grit of his teeth, agreed: "..... you mobilise it."

Qi Yifang, standing at the front, raised his hand and dragged the weathervane in front of him, looking at Bai Liu and Muke, who were surrounded by the cardinals, and replied to the Pope with no expression on his face: "As you wish, Your Holiness. "

Looking at the Cardinal who kept approaching him, Muke and Bai Liu stood back-to-back, his face turning ugly: "The monster book says that the Cardinal is also immune to damage from attacks like ours [by the Witch on Trial]."

"That's a problem." Bai Liu's tone was even, his whip flicked to the side as he looked at Qi Yifang, who was looking across the Cardinal and him, with a little smirk actually on his face, "It seems that the other side's tactician, has been preparing against us for a long time."

"Purposely lured us, a group of [witches to be judged], to fall into the injury-free category."

In the midst of the grey and stormy weather, the giant's huge shadow loomed in the white light of the lightning, treading on the ruins of the papal palace, his body stepping heavily as he approached, his breathing deafening like the faint sound of thunder, giving a great sense of lingering oppression.

Titan clenched his fists, his expression fierce, his eyes white, and hissed as he hammered down on Bai Liu and Muke in the centre, while Qi Yifang dragged the wind vane high in his right hand and waved his left hand down in a harsh tone.

"Thunder burst!"

Thunder flashes and crackles on the weathervane.

[System Alert: Player Qi Yifang uses the skill to override extreme weather (falling thunder) over a localized area with the overlay of (Storm) area weather, which can last up to one minute with reduced stamina and will enter a ten-minute period of stasis, unable to move.]

A purple and white thunderbolt flickered down from the swirling clouds at the centre of the storm, condensing into the shape of a sword and plunging straight into the ruins of the papal palace where Bai Liu had fallen, the flash of lightning falling from in front of Bai Liu's emotionless black pupils, exploding fiercely and scattering sparks the moment it touched the ground.

Several laser-like flashes of lightning shone in the sky, blinding the eyes, and the top of the ruins of the papal palace was silent, the only sound to be heard was the cacophony of rain washing over the thunder and smoke.

Qi Yifang's heart pounded wildly as he stared at the smoke filled area, and he held his breath - he was about to enter a ten minute stasis period, and if he didn't chip away at Bai Liu's blood this time, it was going to be hard to do so later!

Bai Liu, Bai Liu, this monster of a guy, was not such a scary player to him even a month ago.

The growth is just horrible, and although he's also growing like crazy under Phoebe's pressure, it's not even on the same scale as a monster like Bai Liu who is crushing his own growth - it's horrible, growing to the same level as the Queen after only a few months.

Even a strong attacking tactician like Phoebe avoids its presence when formulating tactics.

"Eh!?" Qi Yifang pointed incredulously at his nose as he looked at Phoebe, incredulously repeating himself to the team, "I'm going to stop Bai Liu ?!"

"I can't even stop him!"

"Of course, I know you can't stop him, so I'm giving you Titan."

Phoebe swept Qi Yifang with an afterimage.

Qi Yifang whispered, "But even if we give me Titan, I don't think we'll be able to stop Bai Liu ....."

Just when Qi Yifang thought he would be despised by Phoebe as the underdog, he saw Phoebe fall silent for a rare moment before agreeing with him with a slightly irritated squint and a tsk, "Yes, you and Titan can't stop Bai Liu either."

" Bai Liu is strong, he is the ace of their team, the kind of ace that can turn the tide."

"It's consistent with Spades' role in the killer sequence."

"For a team like ours that doesn't have a strong main attacker, Bai Liu is totally a card face that can wreak havoc, if I were the Little Witch I'd have him on the main quest too, he's got a good brain, flexible skills and will push through quickly despite being a little less cooperative, other than that, the one thing that's still troublesome for us is that Wandering Circus as a team has, in addition to Bai Liu, the ace, and a fairly high defence and high attacker as the main attacker."

Phoebe looks to Qi Yifang: "It's the hunter with the mysterious identity."

"Their team doesn't have a shield position, and the roaming position is two rookies, not strong, but their main attack and Bai Liu, their ace, can completely fill the gap, and with the little witch taking on part of the return and [shield] role, this is a tough team to beat."

"..... Indeed." Qi Yifang smiled bitterly, "Especially since our side's ace is still trapped on the island."

"The mechanics of the league are relatively fair." Phoebe raised her eyes as she pinpointed, "Since the game traps our aces and gives us such big identity setting limits, they must and will somewhere from eating big limits."

"If they're in the witch camp, for example, then they'll more than likely be immune to injury when they attack members of the Order, then we just have to be flexible and use that."

Qi Yifang was stunned: "How can ..... be used flexibly?"

"I don't recommend a head on confrontation with this Bai Liu guy, this guy's tactical style is messy and unscrupulous and could easily wear us out." Phoebe lifted her eyes to Qi Yifang, "So for him, I decided to use attrition tactics, that is, to use the relatively weak fighting force in our team to stall him, what did your king say, the tactics of Tian Ji horse race?"

"That is, use your control skills to stall Bai Liu, Qi Yifang."

Qi Yifang: "..... Okay, Miss Phoebe, what do I have to do?"

Although expected, it still felt like I'd taken an arrow to the knee.

"Hold Bai Liu off the island until we get back." Phoebe lowered her eyes, "I'll do everything I can with the rest of the team to clear out their main attacker Hunter, until then, just do what you can to stall Bai Liu from getting to the island before you die."

"It's best if you survive, and if you don't-"

Phoebe looked at Qi Yifang: "Then use your best, make your death worth more to us, cause more damage to Bai Liu and pave the way for the team that will be on the island."

Qi Yifang was quiet for a moment, then took a breath and looked up with a firm gaze, "I know."

As the lightning cleared, Qi Yifang's body went rigid. He looked at the fallen figure in the middle of the ruined main hall, took two deep breaths and was just about to breathe a sigh of relief when a soft laugh suddenly came from behind him.

"Obviously an acquaintance, but so hard on me the moment we meet."

Qi Yifang's breath caught in his throat and he couldn't turn his head fast enough to see a gloved hand on his shoulder, and further up, a Bai Liu slowly falling from mid-air, his ponytail knocked to one side at the back of his shoulder, the bone whip drawn from behind him tingling with lightning, the pupils of his dark eyes curving slightly, looking at Qi Yifang with a smirk, a teasing smile The black pupils of his eyes curved up slightly, looking at Qi Yifang with a smirk and a teasing tone.

"How sad, to meet and strike me with lightning, am I so unappealing?"

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu loads player Muke's panel and uses his personal skill (Flash Strike)]

"That can't be helped." Bai Liu withdrew his hand and vibrated his whip, smiling as he waved it over, "I'm a man who holds a grudge; if you slash me, I'll be sure to return the favour."

The flashing thunderbolt was instantly in front of Qi Yifang's eyes, and his pupils almost gritted their teeth as they reflected the flashing thunderbolt.

-- Bai Liu, who didn't hesitate to abandon his teammate Muke at the moment the lightning descended, and used Muke's skill to steal away!

He used Muke as a shield to protect himself from the lightning bolt! The man who fell on the rubble was Muke!

How can you call Phoebe's tactics brutal when you're taking a teammate's crumbs!

Bai Liu's whip threw itself on Qi Yifang's face, knocking him ten metres away.

Qi Yifang is on the ground, breathing heavily, barely holding himself up to look at Bai Liu.

Bai Liu approached him nonchalantly, smiling as he straightened the whip in his hand, "You have this look on your face as if you're accusing me of using a teammate to defend myself from a knife, but isn't that a normal thing to do?"

"In this game, everyone prioritises preserving the more valuable player, like Phoebe giving up you for my main attacker."

"I would also give up my teammates to preserve the more valuable myself."

Qi Yifang's face froze as Titan behind him snarled and brought his fist down on Bai Liu, who swung his whip back to avoid it, raising his eyebrows to look over as Titan stared at him and dropped his fist again.

[System Alert: Player Titan uses the skill (Dimensional Shield) on the area in front of player Bai Liu]

[After using this skill, different spaces will be cut into different dimensions of time and space, neither living nor non-living beings will be able to enter another space, light and sound will no longer be able to propagate, and the spaces where the skill is implemented will no longer be merged under the same multidimensional space]

[The skill lasts for one hour and has a cooldown of one hour.].

A black hole the size of a man suddenly appeared and swallowed Bai Liu, with star-like fragments swirling inside.

The moment he sees Bai Liu wrapped in the black hole, Qi Yifang finally lies on his back, his eyes slack, looking up at the sky where the rain continues to fall.

..... just now almost thought he would die.

Finally, Bai Liu was able to trick Titan into using his skills.

He took great pains to use up his big skill, playing Bai Liu, in order to trick Muke, the assassin in Bai Liu's panel, into an instant escape [Flash Strike], so that Bai Liu, a man with too much freedom, would not be able to make a gimmicky escape, and then be able to use Titan's skill to load Bai Liu in.

Next -

Qi Yifang looks over at Muke, who is being set up by the guards, and his chest heaves violently - by letting these guards kill Muke, he has replaced one of his team members and succeeded in his mission .....

Wait! Mission!

Qi Yifang, his body in a state of rigor mortis, sat up straight in extreme shock, having just suddenly realised that something was wrong - his mission was to get the sceptre and delay Bai Liu's arrival on the island.

But the scepter is in Bai Liu's hand!

Bai Liu got the scepter straight into Titan's space! His mission is ruined!

[I would also give up my teammates to save the more valuable myself.]

Bai Liu's chuckling voice suddenly rang in Qi Yifang's ears and he winced violently, looking over at the racked Muke who wore a smile as if he had seen this coming, even as he raised an eyebrow at him in a slightly haughty grin.

Shit! It's a trap! The person being played was himself!

Qi Yifang's face was incomparably sunken - Bai Liu's aim from the beginning was to trick Titan's great skill and wrap him in a dimensional shield, so that although he could not move, he had the key prop, the scepter, and in Titan's dimensional shield space, even in the Pope's Palace There is no one who can harm him in such a place.

In this field, the witch is free to move, Bai Liu has no way to use the witch's panel to heal herself or her teammates at will. In a head-to-head duel, when she finds that the environment is not favourable to her team and she cannot attack the NPCs in the Pope's palace, in order to prevent her ace from being seriously injured and depleted, putting her team at a disadvantage, she simply abandons her teammates and enters Titan with her scepter instead of fighting them. The scepter went into Titan's dimensional shield!

And it stayed for an hour!

Even if Qi Yifang kills Muke now, it won't matter, he's stalemated, Titan's skills are on cooldown, Bai Liu has one of his big skills in his hand, and he still has his scepter, so he'll have to wait for it to come out before he can get to the ladder, but by then, the Little Witch's army will have already hit and matched him!

With the little witch around, this guy will get his blood back and won't die again no matter what!

They miscalculated!

Qi Yifang's face almost twisted when he realized this - he and Phoebe both thought Bai Liu was a rampaging, extreme tactical type who could fight to the death in key events like the Challenge, not caring about his own blood levels and playing like that. I didn't expect this guy to be able to play like this!

No, if that's the case, they'll be totally passive when Bai Liu comes out!

Qi Yifang looked up and yelled sternly, " Titan, go to the courtroom and help Phoebe kill the hunters!"

--Make sure you change the hunter before Bai Liu comes out, or you're screwed!

By the time the hunters converge back on the defensive and Bai Liu comes out of his shield, the double attack formation of the witch as a healer plus Bai Liu and the hunters is too much for them to handle!

City in the Sky

Trial Court.

Phoebe steps down the steps of the high church with her bloodstained round-toed shoes, Tang Erda and Mu Sicheng on their knees with burn marks on the ground, a burning Liu Ji struggling to get up as he covers his shot abdomen, the ground wailing with evil spirits, a mess, obviously having been in a bad fight.

"What a rarity." Phoebe raised her hand to the right, slightly spreading her five fingers, cocking her head in confusion at Mu Sicheng, who was on his knees, barely trying to get up again, "Aren't you a thief known for your speed?"

"Under the circumstances, it's only natural to escape from me and rejoin the main battle group, right?"

"Why stay here all the time and die with us?"

Phoebe's eyes rolled to Tang Erda, who had her gun pointed at her from the other side, and raised her hand upwards, "Our time is precious, and we don't want to waste it on a rookie thief."

[System Alert: Player Phoebe uses skill (Skeleton Armor)]

Tang Erda's eyes were cold and stern as she raised her hand and pulled the trigger. The moment the bullet exited the muzzle, layers of skeletons crawled out of the ground in front of Phoebe, like a hard armour.

Blocked again.

--This is supposed to be Phoebe's defence-boosting skill as mentioned in the Wang Shun profile.

Phoebe's two skills, one boosting defence and one boosting damage, are perfect for a main attacker, even if Liu Ji is not a strong main attacker, he can almost overpower them with Phoebe's skills.

Tang Erda gritted her teeth and looked at Phoebe, hiding behind her skeleton armour, and raised her gun again.

Ornamental pool.

Wang Shun, sitting at the front of the crowd, clenched his fists as he watched the situation on Tang Erda's side, while the teams at the back of the crowd, looking at the current stalemate, continued to discuss the situation.

The fact that the Kings, who finished second last year, were able to force out all of the cards they had hidden for the playoffs and still play in such an unpredictable situation speaks for itself.

--This is a very strong new team.

Killer sequence team side.

Lu Yizhan, who appeared out of nowhere, tapped Liao Ke on the shoulder: "I'm back."

Liao Ke looked at Lu Yizhan and gave him a seat: "Is it all done?"

"Well, I went out and spoke to Georgia and it's being dealt with." Lu Yizhan's tone was steady as he looked up at the big screen in the middle of the viewing pool, "Where are we at with the game?"

"You'll see." Liao Ke shook his head, "In this situation now, with every step the tacticians on both sides take I can't see what other cards they're holding and what they'll do next."

"Is that so?" Lu Yizhan smiled with arched eyebrows, "Even you look lost, these two little girls are playing quite well."

Liao Ke sighed helplessly and patted Lu Yizhan on the shoulder: "Don't make fun of me for not being able to read a game, give me a quick analysis, big tactician."

When they heard it was time to analyse the race, the other two, Bai Jiamu and Bai Yi, who had been watching the game with a bitter grudge, moved closer without a word - they couldn't understand it either!

The god of inversions who can commentate is finally back!

Spades was still watching himself, with his face expressionless, clutching his chest, looking a kind of thorough and indifferent, as if he knew all the shenanigans of both sides on the big screen, especially capable of bluffing, Spades always watches the game with this movement, if not as a teammate after the game with this guy to do a review, no one knew that Spades was watching the game, in fact, when He's just staring at one spot and staring away.

Ask this guy after watching what tactics were used on both sides and he'll just tell you - [I don't know].

Ask him what he knew after watching the game and Spades will say - [I knew I could beat them].

[That's enough for the game, right?]

It was only after Lu Yizhan arrived that Spades was subdued by Lu Yizhan's tactics and was able to participate in the team's match review - still not a serious review, but at least he'll be able to take part in the replay sessions.

"I wouldn't dare." Lu Yizhan smiled as he looked at the big screen to collect himself and thoughtfully rested his jaw with two fingers, "..... Both sides split their teams, ah."

"The nun's intention is obvious, she knows that the weakness of the national Captain Wang Wu is that there is no strong main attack, so she wants to combine to send away the opponent's main attack, so she lets Liu Ji burn life, she directly opens a big skill, and tries to send Tang Erda the hunter away quickly, then even if Liu Ji dies in the process of burning life, the situation becomes manageable. The situation becomes manageable."

"After the one-for-one, she held the little witch who could regain her blood, and Qi Yifang, a weak control player, was under less pressure and only had to combine with Titan to hang on to Muke and Mu Sicheng, a newcomer to the group."

"But that ....." Liao Ke frowned rhetorically, "doesn't make it a sure win, does it? She sold her team's only main attacker, sacrificed the big skills of everyone on the entire team, and just sent Tang Erda away, but didn't get the dominant position and put herself in a passive position."

"It's not a clever tactic."

Lu Yizhan pondered a little: "No, it's a good tactic."

"How so?" Liao Ke inquired, "I also think there should be something superior in this tactic, otherwise I wouldn't have fought Bai Liu and the others like that, but I can't figure out exactly what."

Lu Yizhan answers the question, "Who do you think is the most important for a team?"

Bai Yi, who was listening in rapt attention, quickly raised his hand to answer, "Tactician, of course!"

"Well, thank you for complimenting me on my importance, Bai Yi." Lu Yizhan received Bai Yi's compliment with a smile before continuing, "I don't deny the importance and central position of the tactician in the team, but if you ask the tactician of any team who is the most important part of the team, chances are he won't answer that you are the tactician."

Bai Yi dropped his hand in some confusion, "Who is that?"

"It's the ace player." Lu Yizhan explains gently, "Did you forget? Last year Spades didn't even have a tactician on his team and won with just his own ace."

"The most important thing for the tactician is the ace player on the field, this player can be in control, shield, main attack and roaming position, but using this card well will definitely have a game breaking effect."

"But ....." Bai Jiamu asked with a frown, "isn't the King's Guild's trump card this year the nun? She's already used her big skill; it hasn't done much good."

"No." Lu Yizhan looked up at the big screen, "When the tactician is Hearts, the ace is indeed a nun."

"But now that the Tactician is a nun, the Ace is the most useful face of the Captain Zhang’s staff in the Tactician's hand, so the Ace in the King's Guild would now be Hearts."

"And Hearts is on the island."

Lu Yizhan looks back at the others and asks with a smile, "Do you understand the nuns' tactics?"

Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu: "....."

Damn! I feel like I'm supposed to get it! But I don't! Can anyone really hear that and get it!

Liao Ke nodded his head in a daze. Stroking his palm, he said, "So that's it! I see!"

Bai Yi: "....."

Bai Jiamu: "....."

You smart people don't need to talk to the last level, do you! Explain to me to the last level!

In some strange psychological way, Bai Yi didn't want to ask Lu Yizhan why, not because he didn't want to expose his stupid shame! It was simply that she didn't want to ask again!

So, Bai Yi, with some kind of mischief in mind, elbowed Spades, who seemed to be watching the game but was definitely lost in thought: "Hey! Spades, did you get that? You must not have listened; you must not have understood!"

If you don't get it, ask the Reverse God again for us! Thank you so much!

Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu look at Spades with such longing in their eyes.

Spades gave the two teammates an indifferent sweep of his eyes, "Heard and understood."

"I told you, you must not have understood it either, reverse god you say it more carefully ....." Bai Yi stopped in mid-sentence, he turned his head incredulously and looked over, his voice broke, "What did you say! "

Bai Jiamu couldn't hide his surprise, and even Liao Ke was a little surprised - not just that Spades would say he understood such a thing, but that Spades would actually listen to Lu Yizhan's in-game analysis!

This guy has been known to snooze on the league field before!

Liao Ke even gave Spades a psychiatric consultation, but only found out that Spades was depressed because he was not allowed to stay at home alone and had to go back to his own team, and that he was only a little more active when he came to watch the challenge today. He was only a little more positive when he came to watch the challenge today.

Everyone expected Spades to sleep through the challenge, keeping their faces open until now, and to be honest, Liao Ke felt that Spades had done both teams a favour.

"You said you understood ....." Bai Jiamu couldn't hide the subtle expression on his face, "So you, explain it to us?"

Spades only swept him from start to finish as Bai Yi stabbed him, quickly moving his eyes back to the big screen, his voice not too fast or too slow in explaining, " Hearts stayed on the island, the nun used a ruse to stall the others from getting to the island, it would leave enough time for the ace Hearts to move freely, the nun was trusting her ace player Hearts Queen's, she felt sure that Hearts would break free from his prison on the island, so she was squeezing him for time."

" Hearts is the closest player to where the task is completed, and as long as they drag it out until Hearts can move, the advantage will easily come back to them."

"That's the ultimate aim of her tactics."

"That's right." Lu Yizhan nodded with a smile.

Bai Yi looked back at Bai Jiamu with a dazed expression, "Did I hear you right? Spades actually got it."

"..... has he actually been actually watching the game seriously today?!" Bai Jiamu What is even more incomprehensible is this.

Isn't this lizard always reckless in his games! A forceful type of player who would skip even NPC conversations! Why is it that he suddenly seems to be enlightened and is now seriously analyzing the tactics of other teams!

And such a good analysis!

"Why do you look so surprised?" Lu Yizhan smiled and spread his hands, "As I said it's not that Spades doesn't actually understand this, he's just used to a more direct approach and so doesn't want to understand such convoluted human tactics."

Bai Yi is still confused: "So why is ..... suddenly willing to understand?"

Lu Yizhan looked to the side of Spades' face who was staring at the big screen with his eyes in the wrong place, smiled, withdrew his gaze and said with a sigh, "Probably trying to understand someone who likes to express himself with these convoluted tactics."

City in the Sky

Trial Court.

The flaming Liu Ji regained his footing, wheeling his huge flaming bone hammer in the direction of Tang Erda, who retreated to avoid it, but was still grazed by the edge of his jacket, and thinking of what Wang Shun had reminded them, that being caught in Liu Ji's flames would keep burning off their life points, Tang Erda took off her jacket at once.

The sparks that had only touched the corners of the jacket instantly consumed the entire jacket, leaving nothing but ashes.

Mu Sicheng, who had caught a glimpse of Tang Erda's battle at the end of his eyes, gritted his teeth as he lifted his feet and disappeared in an instant, and in the next instant, almost instantaneously, he was behind Phoebe, his eyes bloodshot and his monkey claws raised high, slashing at the back of her neck.

Phoebe raised her hand without looking back, the skeleton armour wrapping her entire body without a single seam in almost a blink of an eye, the young girl's light voice coming out of the armour, "I told you, even the fastest speed is useless in front of my skeleton armour."

"It's like the lips of the dead are the best keepers of secrets." Phoebe's green eyes looked at Mu Sicheng through a gap in the bones, "The bones of a dead man are also the tightest protectors."

Mu Sicheng's sharp, outstretched claws grasp the skull with an ear-piercing scraping sound, and he clenches his teeth reluctantly as he presses down, eyes wide with rage, the bones of his monkey paws creaking.

Fuck! This thing is too hard! It can't be broken with a fast attack speed!

This guy is so invulnerable, this skill is so buggy! Is there such an outrageous and flawless skill!

Wait, it seems like this guy hasn't moved much since a while ago .....

Mu Sicheng's eyes suddenly twitched as he remembered the video clip Wang Shun had shown them of Phoebe using the Gospel to draw her opponent in, rather than allowing herself to take the initiative and attack him.

So is it possible that .....

"Hey." Mu Sicheng slowly withdrew his monkey claws as he turned to Phoebe, who was hiding in her skeletal armour, and gave a somewhat sinister smile, "You've been moving at a reduced range since you used your skill, haven't you-"

"You have a range for using this Hell's Prayer Song skill that keeps decreasing over time?"

Phoebe's pupils contracted very lightly.

Almost immediately, Liu Ji came back to the defence with a wild hammer blow that sent Mu Sicheng flying, stripping off his burning jacket and landing on the church pillar with an outside foot, flipping into the air beside Tang Erda.

Tang Erda said quickly, "I just heard that."

"If the opponent's range of movement will narrow over time, that is convenient for us to escape."

"But if they all run, it'll send the guys back on the defensive and cause trouble for Bai Liu and the others, right?" Mu Sicheng huffed and puffed, shaking off his burned white eyes and grimacing, "What a horrible attack, we have to leave one of them behind to stall these two or they'll go back on the defensive and Bai Liu's side will be in trouble."

"I'll stay." Tang Erda took up the burden quickly, "You can't hold them both back."

"But you are their target, aren't you?" Mu Sicheng, in a rare moment of calmness, scanned Tang Erda, "Wouldn't you be doing what they want by staying here?"

Tang Erda was stunned: " Mu Sicheng, you want ....."

Mu Sicheng could only end up in one way if he stayed here - and that was to be killed by these two men.

Phoebe swiped back and raised her hand, and a million souls rose from the ground in a fury and swarmed in Tang Erda's direction, her face cold as she interrupted the two men's conversation, "I don't remember leaving you time to discuss your options."

"Give me hell for all of them."

The moment she said that, Liu Ji jumped up and, using the cover of the skeletons surrounding Tang Erda, brought his burning bone hammer down on Tang Erda.

At the moment of impact, Mu Sicheng almost dodged in front of Tang Erda, his monkey paws crossed above his head and one foot retreated, resisting Liu Ji's hammer.

His arm was instantly enveloped in the surface fire of the bone hammer, and in the excruciating pain of the burning heat on his arm, Mu Sicheng reluctantly opened one eye and took two deep breaths to adjust his breathing before he hissed to Tang Erda behind him, "You go back to defend Bai Liu and the others, I'll hold off these two."

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng has a stacked status (Burning Both Arms) and is currently 78 .....76 .....]

"That's a great team bond." Phoebe waved her hand to the left with an indifferent expression, "You'd still look pretty cool blabbing about letting hunters escape if your life expectancy didn't drop so fast."

Black smoke cascaded over the ground, and in addition to the skeletons, still some twisted corpses crawled out of the ground.

Mu Sicheng's right monkey paw was already burnt to the bone as he gave Phoebe a raspy, gangly smile: "But my life expectancy is dropping even faster than you want it to, right?"

"What you want to trade away is the life value of the hunter, so every bit of life value I drop for him is a block to your plan, so you can count me as having earned it, right?"

"Stupid calculated strategy." Phoebe's scowl grew colder as she moved her hands back, "Is that what your shrewd tactician taught you to do against the enemy?"

The skeletons and zombies on the ground went berserk as Phoebe moved towards Tang Erda, who dodged them with one foot back, looked back at Mu Sicheng and quickly ran towards the entrance of the church.

" Liu Ji, stop him." Phoebe ordered coldly and quickly.

Liu Ji spun the hammer around a few times and slammed it hard into Tang Erda's only exit from the Order, flames erupting in every direction with the downward motion, Liu Ji pulled back and roared, about to swing the hammer right into Tang Erda's face. In a blink of an eye, he was in front of Tang Erda, deflecting Liu Ji's full force hammer.

The moment Tang Erda was about to step out of the front of the Order, the ground began to tremble violently, and the sound of the giant's swift running came.

Phoebe's expression froze for a moment at the sound of the running, and she quickly realised what was happening at the papal palace - the Qi Yifang guy had failed in his mission and had given them Titan in the nick of time, hoping that they would complete their mission quickly and return to help.

Before she could think, Phoebe gave another order, "Titan, stop the hunters."

The giant's mountainous fist fell from the sky like a meteorite, hammering a hole in the ground half the size of the Inquisition, which was hollowed out beneath it, cutting off the road to the Papal Palace directly outside the Holy See.

Liu Ji holds his burning bone hammer aloft as the giant pulls his fist out of the ground and drops it again in the direction of Tang Erda.

The bone hammer and the fist fell almost simultaneously, and layers of ash burst out as if a small explosion had just occurred.

When the ashes had cleared, there was a ragged Mu Sicheng on one knee on the ground, one fist clenched in one hand, his right hand all but burning from the flames of the bone hammer, choking and coughing as he raised his head, ashen, his knees hammered on the ground with a bloody scar, but his dirty face was actually wearing a smile.

An open, even somewhat lazy smile.

"Didn't I tell you guys?" Mu Sicheng curled his lips, "Your opponent now is me."

"Hunters who want to hunt us down, step over my dead body first."

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng has taken a heavy hit and has lost

33 life points, currently at 41 life points].

All expression was gone from Phoebe's face as she ordered coldly, "Kill him first, then go after the hunter."

City in the Sky

Papal Palace.

Qi Yifang gritted his teeth and stood up, somewhat in a state of rigor mortis, holding the shoulder of a guard next to him, not far from the Pope, who was going mad.

The Pope stood at a distance and did not see all the confrontation, it seemed to him that a thunderbolt had fallen and the two men on the ground had become one, and that the "gentleman" who had taken his scepter had suddenly disappeared, so that the Pope, unwilling to accept the truth, began to shake Muke's shoulders like a hysterical psychopath, like a madman. and asked him to give back his scepter.

"Leave him to me Lord Pope." Qi Yifang propped himself on the guard's shoulder and advanced towards Muke with a snap, his gaze obscure, "I have a way of making him give the key back."

Actually, there is none.

The key had been taken into Titan's dimensional shield by Bai Liu, and there was nothing he could do about it.

Qi Yifang is still frozen, unable to move quickly for ten minutes, and without knowing when Muke's [Flash Strike] skill, which allows him to flee, will expire, the best thing to do is to get Muke out of the Pope's hands and kill him now.

He fired a big skill, cost Titan another big skill, and ended up not only not getting the key but putting their team in a corner, so at least he had to replace one of the circus side players to do so.

And .....

Qi Yifang looks at the black fog that hovers over the spot where Bai Liu disappeared - the dimensional shield that swallowed Bai Liu.

..... If the King's Guild's information is correct, Bai Liu's whip and Spades' whip, which can rip through space, seem to go together, and if that's the case, if he's hitting Muke with a shield, maybe Bai Liu will... ...

"If you're thinking that if you kill me, Bai Liu might use his whip to rip through space and save me, then I advise you to give up on that idea."

Muke, who was being held in chains by the guards and cardinals with their swords and spears at his throat, looked at Qi Yifang and suddenly narrowed his eyes and smiled crookedly, "I'm not worthy of Bai Liu coming out to save me."

Qi Yifang turned his head to Xiang Muke and said with a light mockery, "You are very self-aware."

"The most important thing an assassin can do is to be self-aware." Muke slowly raised his eyes, the smile on his face curving wider, "You serve the Queen, I serve the King, we both have people we sacrifice and want to serve, so do you know what an assassin who is trapped by someone he cannot attack will do?"

Qi Yifang's heart rose with a sense of foreboding as he swept the cardinals around Muke and took two cautious steps back: "What's the matter?"

"He will attack ..... with his life in order to avenge the Lord." Muke lowered his eyes and his voice trailed off as he slipped a short dagger from within his sleeve, it was held steady as it landed in his palm and with a sweep outwards as he raised his eyes, the "-the only enemy he could attack in the entire field."

Muke's dagger grazed Qi Yifang's eyes, cutting a strand of Qi Yifang's hair and leaving a bloodstain under his eyes, while at the same time Muke's face was cut with a dozen bloodstains from the knives that were in his way, but Muke didn't care and kept on striking with a smile.

"You're not the only one who wants to kill me." Muke smiled crookedly, his white glowing blade pressed right into Qi Yifang's heart, "I want to kill you too, Mr. Qi Yifang."

Qi Yifang, still stiff, clenched his teeth as blood slowly seeped from the cut under his eye and dripped down his jaw to the ground.

The horrified voice of the Pope next to him resonated throughout the papal palace.

"Catch this fleeing assassin!"

Outside the papal palace.

Quan Baola's gaze was calm, and she waited until she had received a message from Leah before ordering, "Prepare to infiltrate the papal palace."

"We can attack the priests, but take care to avoid the cardinals, who are unaffected by our attacks and have sceptres in their hands that can affect our witch power instead."

"If you encounter anything you can't fight against, retreat in time and don't attack strongly; our aim this time is to take by trickery rather than force, and preservation of numbers is the highest priority."

"Do you hear me?"

The witches responded in unison, "Yes!"

Quan Baola took a deep breath as she looked to Liu Jiayi, who was following her: "I hope your teammates will work well with us."

"My teammates obey my command, and they will cooperate fully with the witch operation." Liu Jiayi gave an OK gesture, "Just leave the co-ordinated dispatch with them to me."

"Now that there is chaos within the papal palace, it is most suitable for an invasion, let us prepare to go in."

"Then ....." Quan Baola looked to the island hovering over the papal palace, her complex eyes eventually solidifying into determination as she ordered in a deep voice, "Sky City attack, begin! "

The witches instantly dispersed and infiltrated the papal palace from different entrances on all sides.

Meanwhile, inside the lowest prison in the City of Sky.

Hearts raised his eyes and looked at the gap before him, his form shifting and eventually taking on the form of a fourteen year old boy, his slender wrists easily retracting from the chains that held him, Hearts maintained his teenage form as he rubbed his spinning wrists and looked sideways at the gap that was blocking him, raising his eyebrows slightly.

To get out of here, you need to close the gap with a gem on a strange sceptre to do so, otherwise gazing at that gap for a long time will not only cause hallucinations, but also a feeling that you will be swallowed.

But he's the granddaddy of playing with compulsion and spirit level reduction skills, and this level of spirit level reduction doesn't affect him much, he's used to it.

But Hearts doesn't have one of those strange gems in his hands right now, but combined with the words of the bishop who sent him down, and the hints in the background commentary of this game - [The Witch's Heart placed on the tower will end the Witch Trials and bring the island down] - it's not hard to guess what kind of thing it would take to close The gap.

--That's the [Heart of the Witch].

That gem-like thing should be a prop similar to [Witch's Heart].

If this is the thing, combined with this [Son of a Witch] identity setting he got, it's not hard to guess that the [Heart of a Witch] prop is either in his possession or in the possession of another witch in his ..... possession.

And based on the current team configuration and the distribution of camps between the two sides, the game is currently heading more like a tower defence game, with both sides guarding their [Witch's Heart] and competing for the other side's [Witch's Heart], so it's likely that both he, the [Witch's Son], and that witch have the Witch's Heart on them.

If so .....

Hearts' face was expressionless as he took one step towards the gap, his body slowly changing from fourteen to twenty-four again, and finally he stopped in front of it and closed his eyes.

It should be possible to close the gap with something called [the witch's heart] in his body, right?

What are the implications?

What exactly does this [Witch's Heart] thing refer to?

What damage would it do to him ..... Never mind that, it didn't matter, Hearts opened his eyes in boredom, and the moment he was about to touch the slit he stopped, he looked back as if remembering something, at the large pool of writhing male eels above his head, and said to himself with a dazed look. "Almost forgot about this thing."

He remembered that below the Sky City, was the Papal Palace, right?

Wouldn't it be interesting for the priest-bishops who kept him here to see the large pool of male eels they had taken the trouble to collect and hide on the island to hold him fall off the Island in the Sky and onto their bodies?

The bishop who kept Hearts here had coldly told Hearts, "The City in the Sky is an island without a seam."

"So, the rain you see through this gap outside the island is all your own fantasy, it's all fake."

Hearts at that time just laughed lightly and asked back, "Really?"

The smile on Hearts' face was now thin, and he held a playing card that was slowly emerging in front of him between two fingers, dropping his eyes as he spoke reminiscently, "But the island in the sky I was on was full of gaps that could be seen beyond it."

"-that's an island with a lot of holes in it."

"I really hate it when the island I'm used to reverts back to something I'm not used to."

When Hearts was in a bad mood, he would use the island to vent his frustrations, flinging cards around like darts, sticking them all over the island, and the ground was covered in cracks from the cards, with many of the stones broken.

As if sensing that they could emerge from the pool, the eels surged agitatedly, and as the eels were about to pour out of the pool, Hearts flung a second, third, or fourth playing card, unfazed, and the sharp, knife-like edges of the cards The sharp edges of the cards scrape against the bottom of the channel with a metallic ping-ponging sound, eventually meeting in a circular shape.

The round shape of the stone slowly sinks into a hole through which the wind from outside the island pours in, blowing the hair away from Hearts' forehead, who looks at the hole without emotion on his face.

Outside the cave entrance all that can be seen are indistinct floating clouds and it is impossible to see what lies beneath.

But Hearts knows what's underneath.

He flung another poker card lazily at the crack in the glass pool of eels that had finally broken completely at the top of the prison at this moment.

Like a spring gushing from a fountain, the eels bubbled up, wagged their tails and poured down through the hole through the clouds towards the papal palace.

City in the Sky

Four or five cardinals stood in Qi Yifang's way, but even so, the unpredictable Muke took half of Qi Yifang's blood.

With such a suicidal attack, Qi Yifang clearly knew that if reinforcements did not arrive soon, he would be cleared by Muke down to a bloodied bottom, and Bai Liu would come out and take him.

Before Qi Yifang could recover from this thought, he heard a guard screaming, "Witches, witches are coming in!"

"Don't panic!" A cardinal was shouting, "These witches are tried sinners, they cannot attack us holy monks!"

As soon as the cardinal's words fell, a black shadow suddenly fell from the sky above, and all looked up to see it.

The weather in this part of the papal palace was already within Qi Yifang's grasp, and this sudden appearance of shadows was not at all what he had expected.

"Eels!!!"

The guards screamed in horror, "It's the eels!!!"

"Eels are raining from the sky!!!"

The eel fell from the sky and hung like a vine and a snake on the Cardinal, who had just been screaming that the witch could not attack him, and when he saw the eel hanging from him, his face hissed in horror, and he shook his cloak frantically.

"Go! Go!"

The cardinals shuddered and shook the eels off themselves, "Call the reserve witches to digest these eels!"

"Okay, I don't think so ....." The cardinal next to him swallowed with a blank expression, he had just seen an eel get into one of the guards' clothes, the guard's immediately covered his buttocks and rolled on the floor with a twisted expression.

"This eel, the eel seems to be a ..... male eel."

The expressions of all the cardinals who heard these words froze, and the Pope stumbled a little and turned his head incredulously to the cardinal who had spoken: "What eel is this, you say?!"

The eels do not swim towards the attacking witch, instead they gather around the men and crawl up around their calves, and every man's expression changes.

Many of the bishops fell to the ground before they could take two steps. The originally holy and glorious papal palace was like a huge snake pit, hung with grey and black eels, and the screams and cries for help of the members of the Papacy were everywhere. In just a few seconds, the magnificent and lofty papal palace was turned into a hell on earth by a pool of male eels.

Qi Yifang dodged the approaching eels while dodging Muke who kept flickering closer to him with his dagger in his hand, gritting his teeth and looking at his panel - five seconds to the end of the stasis, twelve life points left, should be in time.

Five .....

Muke's dagger stabbed Qi Yifang in the side of the neck, bringing out a trail of blood.

Four ……

The voice of the witch calling was close at hand, and Qi Yifang heard Liu Jiayi's voice for the first time in a long time, which put him in a trance.

For a moment, he thought Jiayi had come to his rescue - just like when he was playing in the King's Guild before, whenever he was on the verge of dying, the little witch would descend from the sky and bring him out of the shadow of death.

Three ……

Qi Yifang finally heard Jiayi's voice, she was shouting, " Muke! Bai Liu!"

Two ……

Qi Yifang's eyes regained their composure as he looked towards the dimensional shield that was spinning and faintly showing signs of shattering, gripped the weathervane in his hand and took a deep breath.

One ……

All the chaos is happening in this moment.

Bai Liu drew his whip and tore out of dimensional shield space. Qi Yifang gripped his wind vane and summoned the storm again, Muke's white-glowing blade stabbed relentlessly into Qi Yifang's heart, at the same time Qi Yifang's wind vane stabbed hard into Muke's heart.

[System Alert: Player Qi Yifang has zero life value to confirm his death, exit the game.]

[System Alert: Player Muke has zero life points to confirm his death and is out of the game.]

The howls of anger and sorrow of the giant at the loss of his comrades came from the far side of the court of judgement, the time limit for the prayer song descended by the nun had expired, and the burning monster who had charged for her fell to the ground after burning twice his life, along with the thief who had fallen, battered and burned beyond recognition, in the centre of the great hole under the giant's hammer, still laughing uncontrollably.

"..... wanders for the main attack, no loss."

[System Alert: Player Liu Ji has zero life points to confirm his death, exit the game.]

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng has zero life value to confirm his death, exit the game.]

The storm forms a barrier, blocking everyone's path to the staircase, and behind the Pope are clusters of eels chasing him, the old, decrepit man in a state of disarray, his expression frightened, panting, rolling and crawling towards Bai Liu with his sceptre, which he opens his five fingers to snatch from his hand, and which Bai Liu dodges with a deft step back.

On the Sky City, Hearts' eyes closed, he stepped in front of the gap, the wind blowing out of it seemed to blow his soul out, and the moment Hearts touched it, his heart beat wildly and fiercely as if it had frozen into a jewel, and his soul wrapped itself around the gap like a substance.

A silvery blue glow flickered erratically in this slit.

The entrance to the Stairway to Heaven hidden in the storm.

The scepter in Bai Liu's hand shook, and the silver-blue slit in the middle of the jewel glowed like a resonant light, as if it had an autonomous consciousness, and sprang up and flew into the Pope's hand.

The moment the Pope had the sceptre, he ran in the direction of the staircase with great joy, followed by Bai Liu, who followed the moment the Pope opened the staircase with his sceptre.

The moment the stormy Quan Baola found the stairway open, he sprinted up it, leading the team of witches behind himself, the Pope fleeing upwards on his hands and knees while constantly waving his sceptre back in terror, trying to use it as a key to close the stairway and stop the men coming after him.

But the staircase, which had always been able to close instantly, kept flickering as if it had malfunctioned, and could not be closed in any way but slowly.

The Pope realised just a moment later that something was wrong with the resonant seam beneath the City of Sky, and that was why the stairway would not close.

The young witch, almost blown away by the fierce storm, grabbed the pillars around the ladder, barely able to open her eyes to see around her, and escorted the witch and Bai Liu up to the island, ready to break off and go up last - she had to stop the other cardinals from going up, or Bai Liu and the witch would have a difficult fight against each other on the island. The Cardinal is immune to injury for them.

The Cardinal's scepter did a lot of damage to her, Liu Jiayi did not dare to zoom in easily and had some difficulty blocking it with the CD skill of poison. The moment one of the Cardinals was about to approach Liu Jiayi, the Hunter's swift shot arrived and hit the scepter in the Bishop's hand with precision.

The sceptre falls and Tang Erda appears.

" Jiayi, you go first to the island." Tang Erda quickly changed magazines, "I'll break off the rear."

Liu Jiayi nodded, and the moment she was about to step onto the ladder, it suddenly flickered and quickly closed up, while at the same time the giant's frenzied hammer came down on the ladder, smashing it to pieces, and with it, the cold voice of the nun: "It seems we are too late after all."

"It's letting some people on the island who shouldn't be on the island."

In the midst of a storm that could have covered the sky, the nun slowly stepped down from the giant's lifting grip and came up to Liu Jiayi, who looked at her tensed up and suddenly smiled.

"It's been a long time, little witch."

"I am finally strong enough to stand on a battlefield with you."

Phoebe smiled sweetly as she cocked her head and whispered inquiringly, "Face me squarely for once, little witch."

"You're the one I want to win the most."

The moment she said that, Phoebe closed in on Liu Jiayi, raising her hand in a cold slash to the back of the neck, Tang Erda drew her gun back, and Titan moved in with a roar, slamming it down in Tang Erda's direction, separating him from Liu Jiayi.

Tang Erda frowned - this Titan's attack was not high, but his defence was ridiculously high, resulting in his opponent not being able to kill him, although he could not kill him either.

"Guess if the hunter sends Titan away first ....." Phoebe smiled and struck again, "or if I send you away first?"

Ornamental pool.

The crowd watched with bated breath, and although the whole situation was now in chaos, almost all of them realised one thing - the two sides were in the heat of the battle.

Lu Yizhan pondered: "With Phoebe and Titan holding Tang Erda and Jiayi at bay, Bai Liu couldn't use Jiayi and Tang Erda as his two power-ups, which is why Muke suicide swapped Qi Yifang out of the game and Mu Sicheng out of the game. So now Bai Liu has the speed panel of a thief and an assassin in his hand, which is good for Bai Liu - it's no coincidence that this was probably Jiayi's tactic from the start. If we encounter a switch tactic from the opponent, she should have dictated who to switch first."

"Because the game has come this far, it's all about who moves faster."

On the other side, Mu Sicheng and Muke, both a little bruised, were resting with towels over their eyes, breathing heavily and still recovering from the strenuous workout they had just had in the game.

Mu Sicheng suddenly spoke up, "I kept Tang Erda."

Muke calmly answers, "I kept Bai Liu."

The two men were quiet for a moment, then suddenly smiled in unison and raised their hands in a lazy high-five.

"The execution of the tactician's plan is complete."

City in the Sky

As soon as Bai Liu boarded the Sky City, he quickly switched to Mu Sicheng's panel and began to run, glancing from side to side as he did so.

It is an island of great beauty, full of birds and flowers, full of beautifully built pavilions entwined with flowers, in which walk maidens with white scarves and garlands of flowers, with beautiful faces and slender bodies, playing harps and singing about the gods.

The rest of the island looks like a medieval painting, except for the formal and somewhat unconventional marble tower in the middle of the island, which is a vision of paradise.

But a frantic Pope, followed by Bai Liu and the witch, spoils the dreamlike view.

"Stop them!" The Pope ran hard all the way towards the central tower, hissing orders, "Don't let these evil sorceresses get anywhere near the running centre of the whole island!"

Bai Liu's eyes look towards the tower, the end of the Pope's run.

The white tower with its rattling bells and the suffering statue of the goddess can be seen, the final end point of the game - once the witch's heart is placed on it, the game is over.

On the other side of the tower, Bai Liu spotted Hearts walking barefoot upwards.

The tower is surrounded by a circle of white marble steps that swirl upwards to the top, on which walk Hearts, bruised and battered, dripping blood with every step, but strangely, dressed and groomed with the same grace and naturalness as if he were walking at ease.

--It was as if he was going, not to the end of a game where he had to dig out his own soul for sacrifice, but to an end that had already been foreseen.

Bai Liu's eyes rested on Hearts.

He understood what Hearts was trying to do.

If you only need to place the [Witch's Heart] on top of the tower, and it doesn't say that it has to be the opponent's [Witch's Heart], you can also place your own [Witch's Heart] on top of the tower.

But with the concept of [Witch's Heart] tied to the soul, no normal player would even do that - it no longer represents the kind of low-risk situation where death and a death-free medal can be waived, but rather the offering of the soul to this tower in the Sky City, just to end this vast witch trial.

After this, the player is likely to be left in this copy forever as a monster because his soul is left on this high tower.

But why make this choice?

Hearts was at the top of the island and could see Quan Baola, who was chasing and saving the nuns, and then easily attacked Quan Baola, who was unaware of his presence and defenceless, from high up, to take away the witch's The Heart of the Witch is offered to him.

Why did you choose to sacrifice your soul between an NPC and yourself?

"Cough ....." Between the smoke, Phoebe moved back on her knees, her feathers behind her stained with blood and her still face covered in various wounds, she looked across at Liu Jiayi almost without a glance, covering her mouth and choking violently, the corners of her mouth There was crumbling, dirty blood coming from the corners of her mouth.

She had just accidentally swallowed the poisonous mist the little witch had sneaked in and now her insides ached as if they were corroding.

But the little witch was equally bruised and battered, her Great Skill of Poison and Great Skill of Antidote drained from her, leaning against the ruined pillar of the stairway, barely able to stand, her arms and calves covered with the scars from her wings.

"You've grown up a lot from before." Liu Jiayi wiped the blood from his face and staggered to his feet, making another attacking gesture and aiming at Phoebe.

"You are also more powerful than before." Phoebe wiped the blood from the side of her mouth with her thumb and folded her hands in a prayer gesture.

The two men looked at each other and fought almost without stopping, colliding, moving backwards and not stopping until they were dead.

They are the tacticians of the team, they plan and fight for the team's victory until the end, until they have used up their last bit of energy, their last bit of mental energy, their last bit of life.

Finally, they lie dying on the ground, immobile, staring up at the island hovering in the sky, with the distant roar of the hunters and Titan being confronted.

The wind blew past their bruised hands, and apart from the heaving of their chests, they were as dead as two bodies on the ground after a fight.

"I didn't think you'd actually let go of the key to the whole game and give it to Hearts." Liu Jiayi choked and coughed as she squinted at Phoebe, who had collapsed next to her and was slowly weakening from the poison, "Don't you hate Hearts?"

"But it can't be helped." Phoebe spoke with a smirk in her voice as she tried her best to turn her head and look at the young witch, shrouded in ghosts and corpses, "Who told him to be the team's ace in the hole?"

"It's a tactician's instinct to believe in aces, isn't it? Didn't you also put the key to victory on the player called Bai Liu?"

"Hmm." Liu Jiayi turned back to her eyes as she looked at the City in the Sky and paused for a moment, "..... What if Hearts chose to offer their souls?"

Phoebe's tone was calm: "I have sent him up with the other witch's heart."

"If he still chooses that way, there's nothing I can do about it."

"Is that so?" Liu Jiayi asked rhetorically, somewhat in a trance, "Wouldn't you be sad if the Queen did leave her soul here?"

"- Your favourite person in the guild is the Queen, isn't it?"

"For all your talk of his weakness, the one in the guild who trusts him the most, the one who has followed him, the one who insults him to keep him awake a little, the one who will put all his chips on him in the ring, the one who believes he will win to the end and live to see the end, after I leave, is only you."

"So the Queen has placed the Guild in your hands."

"You're like family to each other, right?"

Phoebe was quiet for a long, long time.

"I cannot stop a man whose soul has chosen to die."

"Mom did, and so did he."

Phoebe opened her eyes, her turquoise eyes reflecting the shadow of the island of the sky suspended in the sky, like a withered leaf falling into the heart of a clear lake, with a rare hint of watery mist and confusion.

"I can become strong, but I don't have the means to keep him alive."

"Hey." Liu Jiayi sounded a little helpless, "Don't cry."

"My ace player is still on the island." The little witch smiled as Phoebe had done when she first met her, those grey eyes curving playfully, then said to the light and proud, "That man would not allow anyone to spoil the value of his soul in front of him."

"The Queen's soul is so valuable that the guy would have done everything in his power to save it."

On the City in the Sky.

Hearts walked to the top of the tower, where he looked away from Bai Liu, who was standing on the ground, across the white doves flying with the bells and the falling rainstorm.

Bai Liu, dressed in a thin white shirt, his priestly garb draped over his shoulders and rattling in the wind, gazed up at the tower above Hearts with emotionless pupils in his dark eyes.

The storm swept through them as if to raise an even greater storm.

Hearts eyes drifted a little - the first time he had met that evil guest was also on such a violent and rainy day.

And now, also on such a rainy day, Bai Liu has landed on his island once again.

In the storm, Bai Liu, dressed in a priest's outfit, was dressed almost identically to the guest, but brought him a completely different feeling.

Hearts lowered his eyes and gazed at Bai Liu in the storm.

He still had the same appearance he had shown before - long burgundy hair and red eyes - and his expression was still languid and careless, his eyes a little lost in thought as he fiddled with the cards in his hand for a moment.

This is not the first time he has confronted Bai Liu directly.

After realising that Bai Liu was, as the guest said, his soulful self, the words with a smile [You will like him because he knows love and affection]. just lingered in his ears.

So, Hearts, in an almost rebellious spirit, went to Charles to find out what kind of a character he was in reality, the one who supposedly had a soul and was impersonated by him, to say something like that to that guest, even to the point of overreacting at the first sight of Bai Liu.

The kind of thing everyone says to him at the end of their relationship - [Do you want to sleep with me?]

Desire and love are two different things, every player knows what desire is, but not many players stay in the game for love, everyone sinks in desire and turns into a monster in desire, Bai Liu, the guy who seems to be synonymous with desire in the game, the demon who trades his soul as a means of trade, would really know what love is?

He wanted to humiliate this [Bai Liu], who was appreciated by that guest as having a soul like no other and who knew how to love and feel, as if he had been humiliated by his own fondness when he was eighteen years old.

But when Hearts and Bai Liu locked eyes for a moment, he, in a rare moment, backed away.

His skills are born out of desire and love, and whenever the person looking at him has a desire in his heart that he can't get rid of, a lover he can't let go of, an old friend he hasn't seen in a long time, any emotion that he can't let go of or even fear, Hearts will become that person.

Hearts is so used to playing a thousand different faces for people to entertain and relieve the pain of not being able to release their desires that they eventually don't even remember what they look like in the mirror, forgetting their original names and leaving behind a code-name for themselves - [Queen Hearts].

When he is within the game and this skill exists, each player cannot avoid looking at him when he looks at others through him, creating a projection of desire towards him.

When he is outside the game, a skill that does not exist, it is difficult to avoid that every viewer, while watching him, will become obsessed with the character he is playing and will have a derivation of desire for him.

He was in the game and on earth, as if he had never for a moment been free from gazing at it with desire.

There is no one, who is looking through him to himself.

Even that guest was hoping to see [Bai Liu] through him.

And the only person in the world who would look at him and really gaze at him and compliment him on his beauty, had gone forever twelve years ago.

But that time ..... when he actually walked up to Bai Liu in reality, looking straight into the dark pupils of Bai Liu's eyes, he actually saw his whole self in this guy's eyes - without any desire, any projection, any derivation of meaning.

Just simply, calmly, gazing at him in person.

--A man called Zhao Muchi.

So he left, as weak as Phoebe had said he was, unable to face such eyes as he had not been exposed to in twelve years.

And in this scenario, he is once again face to face with Bai Liu, and Hearts looks down at the playing cards in his hand and gives them a slight twist - to kill Bai Liu?

He had the power to kill him, he was his enemy, the man he had nagged to kill to prove that the longing and affection he had at least given was at least not a joke, and now that he was dying, why not kill this man and make him feel a little better before he died?

Killing him would have at least made Phoebe feel better.

The storm grew more violent, and Hearts looked across the rainstorm at the blurred figure of Bai Liu for a brief moment of silence before dropping his long eyelashes and gathering up his poker, turning back towards the higher reaches of the tower.

..... Forget it.

He doesn't kill people on rainy days.

He definitely didn't have a crush or a crush on this fake called [Bai Liu], it was simply ..... rainy days he didn't like killing people.

And with a win coming up, there's no need to make a scene.

Hearts goes higher and higher, and meanwhile the witches on the ground are rescuing the other permanent residents trapped on the island, while the island's original clerical guards are fighting the witches, and everywhere the sound of people hissing, attacking and crying turns the island from paradise to hell in just ten minutes.

Of course, for the witches and the people trapped on the island, it's the other way around.

As Hearts climbed to the top, reached out and touched the slitted silver-blue device that held the witch's heart, the pupils of his eyes reflected the silver-blue device and drifted back to the events of his own life.

The guild and the island were handed over to Phoebe, and it was all taken care of, and even without him, that Phoebe boy could have played quite well - or even better - in the next league, and his [shield] tactics were paradoxically incompatible with that Phoebe boy's aggressive tactics.

He had also found someone to deal with the matter of the Holy See, and the men who were at their wits' end could no longer make any big waves.

..... her grave, and he repaired it, and Rebecca will pay his annual respects for him afterwards.

The studio will announce his retirement tomorrow at the most, saying that he is ill and needs to recuperate and will not be taking on any more work.

Everything had been taken care of a long time ago, as if there was nothing left undone.

Hearts closed his eyes as he reached out ready to grip the device.

A man lurched out from behind him.

The man, cloaked in the robes of the Pope, was in a frenzy, holding a scepter to Hearts' neck and threatening him hysterically: "It was you, wasn't it! You were the one who just destroyed the island's slit device, weren't you?"

--was the Pope who ran frantically up the tower.

Hearts was unmoved by the attempt to throw the Pope over his shoulder, but as he moved, the Pope waved his scepter and the jewel at the top of it flashed and a sudden, sharp pain shot through Hearts' heart, causing him to freeze in place, unable to move again.

"Surely it is you!!!" After seeing that the Hearts were not moving, the Pope laughed out loud in triumph and madness as he waved his scepter, "The guest who sold me the island said that as soon as someone had devoured the slit device with a very tough soul gem, the slit would malfunction, but at the same time, pieces of the slit would remain in the devoured soul gem! "

"The slit fragment remaining in your soul and the slit in the jewel on my scepter are of the same origin, they can resonate with each other, then I can manipulate you with my scepter!"

"-that guest said that it was to safeguard that no matter how many people tried to attack my island, the gap that engulfed my island shutting it down, I would always be able to control the group that had swallowed the gap as long as I held the scepter, and the scepter was owner-recognized, and that guest said that its owner was recognized by God as my prop, then it will always be my prop!"

"Then this way, I will always have the power to control this island, and the City in the Sky will always be mine!"

The Pope laughed almost insanely as he waved his scepter and commanded the island as if he were holding a remote control: "As long as this island exists, as long as these men's desires exist, the Papacy can still start over!"

"Fly to the west over the sea, my Noah's ark!"

With a roar and a huge amount of dust emanating from its circumference, the island slowly began to move, or rather, flee, in the direction of the sea to the west.

But before that, the Pope had another thing to do - he had to get rid of all these obnoxious witches on the island!

" Quan Baola!" The Pope shouted, his voice heard by the entire island through the amplification device on the high tower, " Look over here!"

"I have your son!"

"If you want to save him, be a good boy and get the hell off my island!"

Quan Baola, who was rescuing a trapped stationary resident, turned his head to look over.

The moment Hearts saw Quan Baola turn his head over to look at him, his pupils clenched along with his heart.

He who is used as a bargaining chip after being held hostage by his father, his mother who is threatened, her and him who are forced to board the island.

It was as if what he had experienced twelve years ago in reality and the [Witch's Heart] trial twelve years ago in the game were repeating themselves at the same time.

Ornamental pool.

Qi Yifang was so anxious that he was about to jump out of his skin, he was so nervous about the situation that he was about to hyperventilate, and for the first time, he wanted his opponent to win quickly rather than himself.

When he heard Phoebe say that the Empress wanted to die, he thought it was just Phoebe laughing at her, but now he sees that the Empress wants to die, but she wants to live forever!

Don't even want your soul!

Where is the game more important to the whole King's Guild than the Queen!

If you lose, you lose, but as long as the Queen is there, you can do it again next year!

If people die, there's no future at all!

"Although the Queen will be immune to damage when she attacks this stupid Pope!" Qi Yifang rolled in place in a hurry, "But her skills are usable, right!"

"As soon as the queen uses the skill, she becomes the person the pope likes or fears the most, she can compel the other person, and this pope can't threaten her!"

Meanwhile, on the other side, the killer sequence.

" Hearts is not going to use the skill on the Pope." Lu Yizhan's tone was smooth, "That skill would make him into, right now, the last person he wants to see himself."

"He tried it once, so he's even more unable to accept it and he's definitely not going to use it this time."

"Who?" Bai Yi asked curiously from next to him.

Lu Yizhan paused: "Who do you think the person with the heaviest papal desires would be?"

After a moment, Bai Yi said, with a slightly bewildered and stammering expression, "No, no?"

In-game.

The Pope stepped back while grimly smiling, "Why don't you use that strange skill of yours to threaten me anymore?"

"My dear boy."

"Do you share my fear of the person you become in your mirror when you look at me-"

"- Fear of the mother who left you alone on the island in the first place, Quan Baola?"

"Stop it!" Hearts' expression clouded over, his whole face misshapen and mad, "I will not allow her to be mentioned from your lips!"

"Shut the fuck up!!!"

That day, when he used his skills on the Pope, he took on her form in front of the Pope.

He saw himself in the mirror and saw a lustful, murderous mother, whose smiling, dark, uncertain look appeared on her face, so sickening and disgusting.

In that moment, he saw clearly the ugly and dirty depravity of his own soul.

He had actually used her face, made that face, done that kind of thing - he didn't even dare look at himself in the mirror.

If she were alive, she would probably fear and loathe him like that too?

-a man who, like all the other men on the island at the time, was full of bad desires, unable to control himself and self-absorbed.

Is there any place for those who have reached this point but death and destruction?

Even if he did, he would not accept it.

Just as Hearts at the age of fourteen punished those men, Hearts, now, torments herself in the same way.

"Your mother, Quan Baola is unable to attack me." The Pope laughed hoarsely, "If she is ruthless enough to abandon you first, what will her group of witches who follow her think of her later, and is a woman so ruthless really worth following?"

"But if she doesn't give you up now, she'll have to give up saving the others on this island, and you'll surely live in pain later when you think of the people on this island who died for you?"

"It's a relief to see Quan Baola and you in pain!"

"I pursued her so much back then, and she was so arrogant that she refused to even give me a second glance, and was so intent on saving those in the world, now I'm going to show her that a woman like her, no matter how much she struggles, she can't save anyone, and she can't escape me!"

"This is all retribution for her rejecting me back then! And you know what! Retribution!"

The Pope's face was red and bruised as he roared, and at the end of his roar he could hardly stand.

Hearts' eyes shifted back as he looked towards the device less than an arm's length away from him, slowly adjusting his breathing and moving motionlessly closer in that direction.

As soon as he held the device and consecrated his own (witch's heart), the island would be destroyed in an instant.

The fights, the confrontations, the threats, the games ..... all the things that disgusted him were over.

Including his own.

The same moment.

Quan Baola clutches his bow and arrow in his hand and stares up at the high platform.

Bai Liu leaned closer to her, "The Pope is immune to injury for all witches, with one exception."

"I can use the Little Witch's panel, they don't have the Little Witch wanted, the Little Witch is a witch who hasn't been tried, it's possible to attack the Pope with her panel."

"I'll use the poison fountain later, but it's too far away from the tower for the poison fountain's range to attack anywhere."

"But arrows can, can't they?" Quan Baola withdrew her gaze as she took a deep breath and looked squarely at Bai Liu, "My arrow through the fountain of poison will do, as long as it hits the Pope with precision, won't it?"

Bai Liu nods his head.

"Come on then." Quan Baola calmly agreed, her hand trembling vaguely, "I will hit this arrow!"

Hearts on top of the tower caught the Pope in the throes of euphoria and gripped the device, and a silvery blue gust of wind blew violently out of the gap and across the island.

The wind blowing out of this gap was in the opposite direction to the wind that was dragging the whole island along, and the two fierce winds collided so violently that the whole island broke apart with a karaoke sound, rumbling and crashing into the sea below.

The island was filled with exclaims of

"The city in the sky is going to fall!"

"The island is collapsing!"

"Everyone, run!"

The moment the Pope realised what Hearts was doing, he was furious and about to swing his sceptre and kill him.

Bai Liu, on the ground, hurtled towards the tower, using Mu Sicheng's panel, while Quan Baola, standing on the disintegrating surface, drew her bow with all her might, and as the witch's poison lifted, the cloak behind her flew up in the clash of winds, and from above the tower it looked as if two horns had sprouted from her head.

Her dress was half torn in the wind, exposing her waist and back, but this did not detract from her concentration at the moment, and her purple eyes grew brighter in the storm.

The Pope, on top of the tower, looked at Quan Baola and was in a trance - not only had the woman not grown old and ugly after all these years, but she had become more and more determined and beautiful.

He couldn't help but think of the accusation that had been concocted to slander him back then.

[Her back so white, her waist so soft, her eyes glowing purple like a chimera in the moonlight, and two glittering ram's horns growing from her head].

But she still looked at him as if he were an ant, as if he were grass, as if he were dust, and even though he had done that to her once and thought he had tormented her for decades, it was only after many years had passed and he saw Quan Baola again that the Pope realised at this moment that it was only his own opinion - that she did not care about him at all.

He had never been in her eyes - it was as if after all he had done, he still did not deserve her to look at her more than once, her eyes still looked at the high tower, at the clouds, at the wind, at the people she cared about.

Can't see the Pope as a jumper.

"WHY!!!" The Pope was almost in a frenzy, a huge, as if denied cynicism eating away at him, "Why do you just look down on me!!!"

"In the name of the First Witch!" Quan Baola drew her bow to full strength and spoke in a hushed tone, "pronouncing Father Lee Woo Soon guilty of lying, mutilating his fellow man, and betraying his trust!"

She shoots a bow and arrow, Bai Liu lets loose a fountain of poison.

The arrow went through the fountain and struck the Pope's head with a single shot.

The Pope tilted his head back incredulously and fell from the top of the tower into the pool of male eels pierced by Hearts directly below, struggling for a moment with his hand outstretched, still engulfed by the eels and disappearing inside with a whimper of pain.

As Quan Baola shot the arrow, the island began to disintegrate and she ran two steps towards the tower, anxiously falling into the sea with the disintegrating rocks, and at the last moment before she fell off the island, she looked to Bai Liu, who was about to run up to the tower, and with tears in her eyes, she pleaded loudly.

"Please, you must save my child!"

"Don't let him die alone on this island!"

As the island collapsed, the tower began to tilt and lurch to one side. Hearts on top of the tower seemed to take a heavy hit and shook for a moment before holding the device and falling down with the tilting tower.

Bai Liu's eyes twitched, and he raised his hand to fling the whip while tapping on the panel.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu cuts to player Muke's panel and uses his personal skill (Flashing Strike)]

In a mere blink of an eye, Bai Liu appeared beneath Hearts, and with his whip he swept Hearts around the device. Hearts' heart was a burst of silvery blue light, and his soul seemed to have been sucked into the device, but at the same time, his left hand held the scepter, and the jewel on it was glowing with an intense light that resonated with Hearts' soul.

The gem and the device simultaneously hold Hearts' soul, actually giving it a peculiar, almost-departed-but-not-quit state.

In this peculiar state, Hearts seems to have become unconscious, unable even to hold his weapon, the playing cards, which are scattered from his powerless right hand, are scattered in the air and fall down around the two men.

Bai Liu rolled the whip around Hearts' waist, grabbed the tall tower with his other hand, and led Hearts to hang above the tall building, his voice soft: "Zhao Muchi, wake up."

Hearts eyes looked up hollowly, his voice hoarse: "It's ..... you, Bai Liu ."

"I'm going to win, so you give up ....."

"Is that so?" Bai Liu's tone was even, his eyes dropping calmly as he looked at the Hearts he had caught, "I didn't just come here to win either."

"Outside the game, I promised Jiayi, I would save you, and inside the game, I just promised Quan Baola I would save you."

"I'm a man who makes promises that I can keep, and I usually do."

"- So in addition to coming to win you, I've come to save you, Zhao Muchi."

Hearts' heart skipped a violent beat, then at the same time, a stab of pain from the device sucked away accompanied it and he laughed hoarsely, "Save me?"

"What are you doing here to save me?"

"Then you clearly tried to kill me earlier at the tower." Bai Liu retorted back impassively, "Then what did you spare me for?"

Hearts was stunned for a rare moment, and soon he lowered his head and looked away, breathing hard and deep, trying to pull out of Bai Liu's hand: "Let go! I don't want a man to save me!"

"I hate men, get lost!"

"Is that so?" Bai Liu's tone was calm, "I don't think that's necessarily the case."

He pushed upwards and climbed on top of the collapsing tower that was caving in, pulling the Hearts back beyond it with his other hand. Bai Liu turned his head and he looked down at the Hearts on the ground who were choking violently, looking straight at each other on one knee, his eyes and tone very calm, and held up a card.

"This is the skill card you just dropped, I didn't want to pick it up but I've seen it in Jiayi's hand, it's called a telekinetic heart, it reflects who the person looking at the card likes in their heart." Bai Liu twirled it between his two fingers, the card facing Hearts who looked up, he lowered his eyes, "I haven't seen your card, only you have seen your card, so this is your Heart card."

"That's me on your telepathic heart sign, isn't it?"

The man on the card, with black hair and pupils, indifferent eyes, white shirt and leather gloves, and, most iconically, the scar of a still-unhealed reverse cross over a slightly open heart.

Hearts' pupils tightened.

Bai Liu's tone was flat and judgmental: "You like me, don't you?"

For a moment, Bai Liu's bland face overlapped with Bai six's smiling face six years ago: [You like me, don't you?]

"I, ahem! I'm never going to like you!" Hearts looked confused and hideous, as if he was caught in that nightmare from six years ago, staggering up from the ground and muttering, "I'm going to kill you!"

"Just kill you and I won't like you ....."

"As long as I don't like you, I won't be like those men ....." Hearts looked in a trance, "I won't be so much like those men when I can unleash my disgusting desires on so many people when I'm being promiscuous and disgusting to people ....."

"My ..... favorite is something very precious."

"I'm going to kill you!"

[System Alert: Player Hearts uses the skill .....]

The moment Hearts uses his compulsion on Bai Liu, bewitching him, Bai Liu doesn't hide, he looks calmly straight at Hearts, whose long burgundy curls shorten and straighten, whose burgundy pupils fade to purple and whose body becomes slender.

After the use of the skill, he turns back into his original form in Bai Liu's eyes instead.

-- With so many skill uses, this was the first time he didn't turn into someone else's appearance after a skill use, but turned back into his own.

Hearts looked down at Bai Liu and stopped in stunned silence, tears slipping from his eyes, "Why, why would you ....."

Will I see myself in the midst of my desires?

"Because that's what your soul is like." Bai Liu raised his eyes and his voice was smooth, "I look at people only for the value of their souls."

"This is what you look like at your most valuable."

Hearts came to a slow halt, holding very gently to the device beside the tall tower, his breathing slowly becoming calmer from rapid, as if trying to recover from the effects of the device, he shook his head slowly, dizzily holding his forehead repeating Bai Liu's words word for word, "My most valuable look?"

"..... How did it get to be this way?" He asked softly and rhetorically, lost in thought.

"And what do you think you should look like when you are most valuable?" Bai Liu asked patiently.

"The most valuable look I could have had would have been, would have been a girl." Hearts eyes were misty and hazy as he looked at Bai Liu, he whispered, "If I was a girl, then she wouldn't have had to struggle for so long."

"From the moment I was born, I would have been seen by my stepfather, who wouldn't have noticed her, she wouldn't have gone to the island, it would have been me who went to the island from the beginning, and I would have been able to carry everything for her."

"She'll survive."

"I hate men."

"It was because I was male that she was unwilling to accept her fate to expect it, that she struggled so long for me, that she went to the island for me and eventually died so painfully."

A tear fell very slowly from Hearts' purple pupils, and he murmured softly, out of breath, "I hate myself."

"I hate all men."

Bai Liu looks at Hearts calmly: "You probably don't hate men."

"You just hate bad people."

"You like me don't you?"

"Aren't you bad?" Hearts asked back with a soft smile and tears, "You're the worst person I've ever met."

"Perhaps." Bai Liu was noncommittal as he smiled and held out his hand, "But at least for the moment, I'm here to save your soul, so at least for the moment, I'm still a good person to you, right?"

"If you trust me, you can temporarily store your soul with me, there is no need to waste your soul in this low level game copy, after you give me your soul, you can use the Witch's Heart to pass this copy as well, but then your soul will already belong to me and will never be violated, wouldn't it be more cost-effective?"

"As a deal." Bai Liu promised sincerely, "I can promise to meet one condition."

"People who have no way of surviving with expectations of themselves can appropriately place them on others."

"Why should I put it on you?" Hearts snickered, "Because you're bad enough aren't you?"

"No." Bai Liu looked Hearts flat in the eye, "because I can really answer your expectations."

"I can make this world, the way you, the people you want to bring back, would like to survive."

"I showed good faith in the deal." Bai Liu held out his hand and politely asked Hearts, "So what is your answer Empress?"

Hearts gazed down at Bai Liu's hand, he was quiet for a long, long time, so long that the tower that had fallen over the sea was drowning, and finally reached out and placed his hand very gently over Bai Liu's, asking with a touch of self-deprecation, "So, this is another wish to the gods, is it?"

"What will it cost me?"

"You have paid for it." Bai Liu gazed up at Hearts, "Your soul is my payment."

"That was a very beautiful and valuable soul."

Hearts looks stunned.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has taken player Hearts' (Witch's Heart)]

Bai Liu smiled: "I will do what I am told."

The Witch's Heart was placed on top of the tower, and Phoebe and Liu Jiayi, lying on the ground with only their breath remaining, watched the light coming from the tower above the sea as the eels on the ground were warmly dissolved.

"That guy ....." Phoebe laughed, a tear crossing the corner of her eye, "didn't die."

Liu Jiayi also laughed: "My tactics, how could I let Hearts die?"

"I really hope one day." Phoebe turned her head with difficulty, her eyes looking reverently at Liu Jiayi, "I can become as strong as you."

"The ability to have the power to save anyone."

The witches who remained in the papal palace wept with joy, Quan Baola, who had crawled out of the sea, was thrown up in a flock, while the bishops and guards who had been in the papal palace were pinned down and imprisoned by the witches, their expressions frightened and cowering - they too seemed to realise what was going to happen to them.

"It's time to start the trials against the witch trials." You Zhen crossed her arms and bared her teeth as she let out a long breath, "These men, how many people have been harmed by the witch trials in the first place, will have to be reckoned with!"

"That's natural." A bruised and battered Leah was dragged over and smiled back, "But before that, there's the Baola election ceremony."

"She's going to be the new leader."

The sea shone brightly and persistently, the witches in the contaminated areas were able to return to their original places and cry with their families, those whose property had been taken by the Holy See were counted and returned to them, while the legal trials of those who had participated in the tribunal and even reported witches during the witch trials were in full swing.

The Inquisition has since become the exclusive inaugural centre for witches, and has become the centre of a legal system that is renowned throughout the world, with two entire books of strict regulations for witches, or women.

But these are things that happened later.

After the fall of the Sky City, the sun's rays, after the sea horizon had risen, were finally able to shine again on the ground.

Quan Baola looked back at the shimmering waves on the sea and shed tears as if in a dream.

The boy, at last, saved her child.

Since then, the Sons of Witches and Witches have ceased to exist, and after being cleared of false accusations and dirty laundry, only the living names of Baola, You Zhen and Leah remain.

They are not witches, nor are they sons of witches, just people.

[System Alert: Player Hearts exits the game.]

Playoffs

Slowly, the last players to exit the game walked out beside the large dark screen.

The crowd looked on in silence as the two teams emerged, largely in a trance, as if they hadn't recovered from the stalemate of the battle.

The MC, standing on top of the platform, took a deep breath as he waved his hand down and pointed to the side Liu Jiayi had stepped out from: "Game over."

"The winning side of the challenge is -"

"The Wandering Circus!!!"

"Let's congratulate the new team for beating the second-placed King's Guild team to advance to the playoffs!

After a brief silence, the crowd erupted in cheers and applause, but no match, no matter how exciting, can be cheered by everyone - a victory for one side naturally means a defeat for the other.

Qi Yifang, sitting in his seat, covered his red eyes, trying his best to hold back the tears that were falling, but after Liu Ji silently hugged him again and hammered him on the shoulder, Qi Yifang finally couldn't hold back and hugged Liu Ji and bawled.

"We all gave it our best shot! "

"Why did we still lose!"

Liu Ji reassured him clumsily, "Maybe we're not good enough."

Qi Yifang was even more upset: "You might as well stop, woo woo woo."

"It's okay." Liu Ji's face was covered in dirty burn marks, but his eyes were bright, "We'll be better next year, we'll win next year for sure!"

"Don't cry so weakly." Phoebe gave a sidelong glance to Qi Yifang, who was hugging Liu Ji and crying her heart out, "It's just for now, not forever."

"Train well."

Phoebe clenched her fist: "Even without Hearts, next year, I will take you all to beat the little witch."

"What do you mean ....." Qi Yifang looked up in amazement, "no queen?!"

Phoebe paused for a moment as a loud system beep sounded behind her.

[System Alert: The King's Guild has changed its authority, with the former president, Queen Hearts, transferring all authority to the new president, Sister Phoebe].

[System Alert: After a successful handover, player Queen Hearts has paid the default fee and requested to leave the guild.]

[The new president agrees to the withdrawal request and the player, Queen Hearts, has successfully withdrawn from the club.]

Qi Yifang's expression went completely blank: "What does it mean when the Queen ..... withdraws from the club?"

"It means what you see." Hearts walked out after Phoebe, his tone casual and natural, seemingly unaware of how much of a stir he had just made in the game, he even replied to Qi Yifang with a smile, "A player like me who sells souls to others is not worthy of being your president, there's too much uncertainty. "

" Bai Liu That greedy man has got my soul, I don't want him to get my hard-earned guild again through my panel and it's time for me to retire and give myself a long vacation after being president for so long."

" Phoebe has grown up to be a better manager of this guild than I am." Hearts spreads her hands lazily and smiles, "The position of president is for those who can, so it's out of the way."

The King's Guild, the second largest guild in the entire game, with an uncountable chain of points behind it, a guild that countless people dreamed of joining, was handed over by its founding fathers in such a flippant manner.

Qi Yifang was completely overwhelmed, as were the rest of the audience.

The crowd quickly snapped out of their end-of-game euphoria and began to discuss Hearts' withdrawal in shock.

Hearts handed over the guild something they already knew about in the semi-central part of the game, but, quit?!

This is not a transfer of guilds and means that Hearts will never compete as a member of the King's Guild again.

The last time something like this made such a big splash was when the Reverse God was transferred.

The host was shocked too, but the game was over, it was gossip outside the game and out of his commentary, so he did his job respectfully and wrapped it up, "Will the tacticians from both teams please come to the front and do ....."

After that sentence, the host stuck his shell in a rare moment: "Since there was a tactician change for both teams in this match, we would like to ask the four tacticians before and after the change to come to the stage and do a post-match exchange."

Front of the stage.

Liu Jiayi and Phoebe walked ahead and the two girls shook hands in a natural manner.

"One day." Phoebe looked up at Liu Jiayi, "I'll catch up with you."

Liu Jiayi replies earnestly, "I'm waiting for this day."

"But until then, I will not lose to you."

After shaking hands and bowing, the two girls turned to leave, and Bai Liu and Hearts, who were walking behind them, stepped forward and looked at each other.

"You bought my soul for one point coin in the game." Hearts clasped a point coin between two fingers as he raised his eyes to look levelly at Bai Liu, "In return, you will fulfil one of my demands."

"Anything you ask for?"

Bai Liu calmly agrees, "Anything you want."

[Yes.]

Hearts closed his eyes, and now Bai Liu's smiling voice overlapped with Bai Liu's in his head, and he took a deep breath before opening his eyes again, "Meet me at the shop where you first met me tomorrow at 6pm."

"At that time, I will tell you what I want."

"I won't wait long for you."

6pm the following day.

Bai Liu sits in an empty shop.

He arrived ten minutes early, the shop had obviously been contracted by Hearts and was closed straight away, he knocked on the door before entering, the owner handed him the key straight after opening it for him, Bai Liu raised his eyebrows in slight surprise, "The key to the shop is straight to me?"

"Yes." The owner's attitude was respectful, "Our shop was actually funded by Mr. Zhao in the first place, it's considered a big shop owner, it's just that the people below don't know about it, and Mr. Zhao didn't ask us to deliberately say anything about it."

"He said a valued customer would be coming to see him at six o'clock this afternoon, so just give you the keys to the shop straight away then."

Bai Liu took the key with a subtle look, "..... Okay, please."

Hearts This guy, surprisingly rich .....

Not far away.

Mu Sicheng, wearing binoculars, had a stern gaze and a cold tone of voice: " Bai Liu has entered the shop, are you still following?"

Tang Erda, who was hiding her body by the tree, was still hesitant: "It's not a good idea for us to follow Bai Liu's private date like this, is it?"

"Keeping Bai Liu safe is what we as a team are supposed to do." Muke's face smirked as he pushed the gold-rimmed glasses on his face, "Not to mention meeting with a high-risk individual like Hearts, just in case he has some strange designs on Bai Liu."

Lu Yizhan, cowering next to Mu Sicheng with a small branch, nodded in agreement: "Yes! What if something goes wrong?"

Liu Jiayi, next to her, rolled her eyes and spat, "Why are you here too, you killer?"

"Ahem ..... this ....." Lu Yizhan choked out a couple of coughs with clenched fists, and pulled Spades, who was crouched next to him staring at the storefront with a blank expression, over to him with a straight face. "Not out of gossip, of course! It's just that my team member is coming with me, and I'm half his guardian, so it's only natural that I come with him, right?"

Liu Jiayi: "......."

It's all about the gossip, right?

"But now that Bai Liu is in the shop and it's locked, we can't follow it, can we?" Tang Erda reluctantly discouraged, "What about going back? Bai Liu will be angry if he finds out we followed him on a personal invitation."

"..... Mmmmmm, yeah, won't do anything, just dropped something in the shop the last time I came in for a styling session and went back to get it." Muke called in a gentle tone, making a shushing gesture to the few people next to him, "Just hold the door open for me please."

Muke put the phone down and smiled harmlessly, "It's done, a clerk will be here later to open the door for us."

Mu Sicheng cheered up, " Muke is awesome!"

Spades seriously seconded: " Muke cattle ....."

Lu Yizhan interrupted quickly and seriously, "No swearing."

Tang Erda, on her forehead.

They went around to the side door and waited for the clerk to open it and then tried to follow them in, but Muke managed to sneak into the shop by easily fobbing the clerk off.

A group of people sneak around behind the dressing models in the changing room, looking through the half-open barrier at Bai Liu, who is sitting in the middle of the hall, reading a magazine.

Shortly afterwards, the main door opened again.

Bai Liu looked up to see Hearts, who had reverted to male attire, standing in the doorway.

He didn't wear the same flashy outfit as the first time, much more casual, his somewhat curly long red hair was braided and thrown behind his head, dressed in a very simple plain white top and jeans, looking like a college student playing an instrument, looking very different from the first time we met, as if the aggressiveness in his body had been washed away, becoming natural and leisurely.

"Right on time?" Hearts sat down opposite Bai Liu and naturally poured himself a glass of water, smiling at him slightly teasingly, "I thought you'd keep me waiting for a while."

"I'm always on time." Bai Liu put down his magazine and replied lightly.

"Is that so?" Hearts dragged his jaw on his water and smirked at him, "Then maybe I'm remembering wrong."

"I've always waited for another person before so I thought you'd make me wait too, I wasn't expecting it to be you waiting for me, I was quite surprised."

"Quite happy too."

"I never let traders wait for me." Bai Liu explains, "It's not very polite."

--Tang Erda frowned a little at the atmosphere.

It's too harmonious.

These two didn't even look like rivals who were battling it out on the field yesterday, instead they looked like two old friends who had agreed to hang out and had such a calm and friendly attitude making small talk.

"You are somewhat the same as him." Hearts looked down at his reflection in the glass and rubbed his fingers over the rim with a little movement, "but still more different."

"You didn't come to me to find out if I'm the same or different from him, did you?" Bai Liu looked levelly at Hearts, "What is your request?"

"If I asked you to do it with me once, you wouldn't agree to it, would you?" Hearts dropped a bombshell in a flat tone.

Mu Sicheng, hiding behind the curtain, gasped in shock and was swiftly covered by a grim-faced Muke, while Lu Yizhan's hands were bursting with veins as he held Spades down, frantically waving for Tang Erda to help hold him down.

Only Liu Jiayi looks on quietly.

"But what if it's just a kiss?" Hearts lifted his eyelids, his purple eyes reflecting a dazzling light in the fluorescent light, his tone carrying a strange sense of compulsion, "Will you give it to me?"

"As I recall, your skills are subject to paper money if you don't meet the other person's requirements after you've traded them, right?"

Hearts had taken on a dangerous undertone by the end: "So if I do ask for your kiss and you won't give it to me, you'll be put in the paper money?"

"Why the kiss?" Bai Liu inquired slowly, having the leisure to raise his glass and take a sip of water at this point.

"Why?" Hearts looked at Bai Liu with a smile, "Maybe because Salome, the siren who danced the dance of the seven veils, also asked for a kiss from her beloved saint John."

"That's the story." Bai Liu rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "If I remember correctly, John the Saint would rather die than give Salome that kiss."

"Yes." Hearts' eyes moved to land on Bai Liu's lips, fingers curling for a moment before moving away again, his tone still lazy, "So in the end Salome just killed Saint John, cut off his head, and eventually kissed the lips on the dead head."

"- she finally got the kiss she wanted, just in a gruesome way."

"Are you threatening me?" Bai Liu raised his eyes and asked calmly in return, "There's no need to threaten, I'm a man who keeps his end of the bargain, so if you really want the kiss, come on over."

Hearts almost seemed to freeze in place when Bai Liu agreed, then very slowly propped himself up on the table and turned his head towards Bai Liu, looking at him stoically for a moment before slowly leaning down.

The braid slid off Hearts' shoulder and landed in Bai Liu's glass of water, droplets of water falling on the back of his hand, which was propped up on the table and clutching the edge, so cold that his palm clenched for a moment.

The faces of the two men, as seen from behind the curtain, appear to be gradually overlapping and just about to fit together.

Even Lu Yizhan winced at this, but he quickly covered his mouth in death and stared in horror at the sight over there.

But by this time, Spades was strangely quiet, just staring at Bai Liu without moving, and Mu Sicheng looked at the man who was so agitated all the way and asked, bizarrely, "Aren't you going to go and stop Hearts?"

"No." Spades' icy voice came out almost simultaneously with Bai Liu's, " Hearts kisses don't go down."

"Why did it stop." Bai Liu tilted his head calmly and looked at Hearts, which stopped less than ten centimetres in front of his face, "Don't you want my kiss?"

"What are you trembling about?"

Hearts' shoulders, his hands propped on the table, and even his breath trembled.

"Or maybe I'll ask it another way." Bai Liu raised his eyes and spoke in a calm tone, "Why are you asking me for the kind of thing that you fear I will do to you?"

"So is going to bed, so is kissing."

"..... I have no fear!" Hearts lowered his head, fists clenched, and retorted Bai Liu, almost with some annoyance, in a sarcastic tone, "I thought you said I liked you? Why should I fear kissing the person I like?"

"There is no law that says so." Bai Liu said in a calm tone, "One must not fear the kiss of one whom one likes."

"I can be afraid too, so why can't you be afraid?"

Hearts' breathing slowly calmed as he collapsed onto the tabletop, face down, face buried in the table, his whole being radiating a sombre feeling, "..... Forget it, I don't want it."

As if anticipating this, Bai Liu picked up another clean glass and took another sip of water, "Well, you can change your request."

"I dropped that island and turned it into an island of the sea." Hearts was quiet for a moment, then suddenly spoke, his voice soft, "It has become beautiful."

"Go and see the island, Bai Liu ."

"Yes." Bai Liu pondered for a moment and he smiled up, "I've never been to a private island in reality, it should be beautiful."

"But apart from that, there's a small problem."

Bai Liu asks seriously, "Do you reimburse the costs of going?"

Hearts: "..... reimbursement."

"And then--" Bai Liu smirked, holding his cup of tea and lazily sweeping a glance behind him at the flickering curtains, "-- -Can I bring my family and friends with me to visit your island?"

Hearts looked up and he stared at Bai Liu's innocent face for a moment before finally smiling lightly in relief and saying, "Yes."

Playoffs

"So ....." Mu Sicheng took a bite of his fruit smoothie with a dazed expression while looking at Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu running around the beach in front of him, "didn't they just invite us to come and play on the island? Why is the killer sequence here too?"

After Mu Sicheng was found out yesterday, the group cheered when they found out that they had all received an invitation from Hearts to come to the island for a reunion, ah no, to be guests, Mu Sicheng was so excited that he stayed up all night packing his clothes, only to be told by Bai Liu the next day that he could not bring them.

"Why!" Mu Sicheng was furious, "I can't bring clothes, so how can I bring my swimming trunks for the swim!"

"Go straight into the game and go through the coordinates." Bai Liu shrugged innocently, "You can go into the game in your swimming trunks, so you can go through in your swimsuit, which is what I'm going to do."

"I recommend Tang Erda and Muke to do the same, it's easier."

Mu Sicheng: "....."

How can there be such a brazen person in this world!

But in the end, he entered the game in his swimsuit and tracksuit and logged on to the island via the coordinates given by Bai Liu, but as soon as he arrived, he saw the blue sky, white clouds and waves and went into the changing room to get changed. The first time Mu Sicheng walked into the changing room to change his clothes, his excitement had not yet subsided.

Bai Yi: "....."

Bai Jiamu: "....."

Mu Sicheng was furious: "Shit! How did you get on this island!"

"Because I went alone and invited the Reverse God and he politely asked if I could bring my team and family, I thought he was just being polite and agreed." Zhao Muchi, wearing sunglasses and sleeping on a lounge chair under a sun umbrella, wearing a flowery shirt with a slightly open collar and his braid hanging half-loosely outside the chair, spoke in a lazy tone, "I had heard Jiayi say that he thought it was your country's etiquette to say that you were really just being polite about a lot of things and not really bothering each other, but I didn't think he would actually brought someone up here."

"As surprising as you are, you don't know what politeness is."

Bai Liu cheekily took the obviously sarcastic remark as a compliment and accepted it with a big nod: "Tactician's routine."

"Is that so?" Zhao Muchi pushed his sunglasses upwards to reveal a pair of smirking purple eyes, "I, a retired veteran tactician, don't seem to be aware of such tactics?"

"Then you can properly learn more about it." Bai Liu rubbed his chin, "This should be the new tactician I'm about to lead the way with."

Phoebe, sitting next to her on the lounge chair, rolled her eyes and looked breathlessly at Liu Jiayi, who was looking down at the crabs on the beach: "Is your president always this shameless?"

"Yes." Liu Jiayi didn't even look up, answering quickly for a second, then quickly shifted her attention and pinned the little crab up in thought, "So this is what a little crab looks like alive on the beach."

"It's the first time I've seen it."

She had never been to the beach before and was intrigued by the place.

"Go look outside." Phoebe, seeing Liu Jiayi's interest in these little creatures hidden in the sand, offered, "There's more stuff over there by the sea, I'll introduce you."

"But over there ....." Liu Jiayi looked in the direction Phoebe pointed, and her expression quickly turned = =, "They're going crazy, they're not going to scare away what I found, are they? "

Mu Sicheng, wearing a swimming costume and goggles, is on a surfboard, gripping the edge with one hand and swinging back with the other, his lean waist swinging back and forth, the outline of his abs visible, controlling the balance of the board, moving recklessly and quickly over the waves, cutting a smooth line, his hair blowing in the fresh sea breeze, letting out a delightful and triumphant "Whoo-hoo!" The sound is a delightful and satisfying "woo-hoo!".

They were followed by two crooked boards, on which stood Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu, whose boards were more stable, but neither of them was clearly thinking about surfing at the moment.

They are arguing.

"Bai Yi, don't grab my board! Slide yourself! I was going to overtake Mu Sicheng!"

"I don't know how! Shouldn't you stay at a time like this and teach your brother-in-law a lesson! What's the point of winning a meaningless surfing contest like this when you're always thinking about competing with others! You ungrateful nephew! Can't you put aside your unrealistic desire to win for the sake of your only brother-in-law!"

"Let go, Bai Yi! I'm going to fall in the water!"

"I wouldn't, I wouldn't!"

The two boards collided in a great tug, and Bai Yi, in a panic, pulled Bai Jiamu's swimming trunks and, to Bai Jiamu's shocked and horrified expression, hit the board with him and fell into the overlapping waves.

"Puff!" "Puff!" '

Within moments, a pair of swimming trunks and two boards broken in two were washed up on the shore by the waves.

Lu Yizhan looked at the two boards and slowly covered his face, " Mr. Zhao, the surfboards are from your island right? I will pay for any damage caused to you, as well as the expenses for our visit to the island, we will be reimbursed for the number of people and the number of days."

"I'm sorry for your trouble."

"Not much of a problem." Zhao Muchi elegantly lifts a tall glass from the Little Mu table next to him and takes a sip, raising it to Lu Yizhan with a friendly smile, "The two boards were props given to me by the director when I was filming, they weren't very expensive and I kept throwing them in storage. They also asked my opinion when they used them, so I can't blame them all."

Lu Yizhan breathes a sigh of relief.

Zhao Muchi says with a smile, "It's just signed by some people on it, a souvenir of my killing, and fakes are already fetching over 50,000 on the second-hand market."

"Counting your cost, it would cost sixty thousand."

Lu Yizhan's breath, which had not yet been released, choked rapidly, and he covered his chest and choked up violently, kneeling down before the two plates with a pale face, muttering incredulously, "One hundred, one hundred and twenty thousand!"

"Uh huh." Zhao Muchi smiled lazily, "As for the other fees you mentioned, I wasn't going to charge them, I invited you to the island, naturally I consider you a friend and won't count on these things, but since you have the sincerity to pay, I won't push back, then I'll inform my agent later to calculate the exact price for me."

"I hope you have a good time on the island, Reverse God Grand Tactician."

Lu Yizhan: "....."

Lu Yizhan is going into cardiopulmonary arrest.

Bai Liu looks away from Lu Yizhan, who has turned grey and is on the verge of sanding, and looks behind Mu Sicheng, who continues to surf and is about to reach a big wave, with a slight raised eyebrow.

Mu Sicheng was clearly excited about the big wave too, shifting his body weight back and licking his lips, "Watch me go up to the clouds, first reach-!"

No sooner had he said this than a huge black surfboard brushed past Mu Sicheng's head in a perilous position from behind him.

Mu Sicheng looked up in amazement at the man on the board coming out from above him on his left - Spades in his swimming trunks and goggles, his hands hanging naturally at his sides on the board, surrounded by a myriad of shimmering water droplets, his eyes in his black-rimmed goggles squinting at the devolved Mu Sicheng, indifferent.

Although Spades didn't say anything, the implication of the glance was unmistakable - [I'm the one who's number one].

Spades flipped steadily through the air on the wave and swiftly made his way back to the beach, picking up his board with one foot and setting it aside, turning his head to look at Bai Liu, staring straight at him.

Sensing the barely concealed reward in Spades' eyes, Bai Liu applauded graciously, smiling and praising, "Very impressive."

"Shit!" Mu Sicheng, who arrived right behind him, held up his surfboard and jumped to his feet in anger, "He's not good at anything! If I hadn't been playing earlier, he would have got first place!"

Spades let out an oooh and turned to Mu Sicheng with an indifferent tone, "So, shall we do it again?"

Feeling provoked, Mu Sicheng was furious and Mu Sicheng decided to gladly accept the challenge and teach this ungrateful lizard the lesson of a lifetime!

"Just compare!"

"Are you guys playing some kind of sport?" A changed Fang Dian emerged from the changing room, holding up a beach volleyball and smiling sunny with her crossed arms, "I haven't been to the beach for a while, I just saw a beach volleyball inside the changing room, do you guys want to come and play?"

"Oh, yes." Fang Dian turned her head to Zhao Muchi who was lying on the beach, "Mega Islander, this ball I see in the toy basket, can I hit it?"

Yes, Fang Dian came too, she was picked up separately by Zhao Muchi in a helicopter and Zhao Muchi had a very good first impression of her, he had a very natural affinity for a bright and sunny girl like Fang Dian - you could say he agreed with Lu Yizhan brought the killer sequence up here partly for Fang Dian's sake.

--And Fang Dian, knowing that he owned the island, mysteriously called him Master Mega Islander like a martial arts novel, making him laugh for ten minutes, which was also inseparable.

"Sure." Zhao Muchi was noticeably gentler after meeting Fang Dian, "I have a special sports beach volleyball, do you want to play with that?"

"No need." Fang Dian smiled and patted the volleyball, "With sports games, props don't matter, the player you're playing with is more important."

Zhao Muchi narrows his eyes slightly at these words.

Was it his illusion?

..... always felt for a moment that Fang Dian had just seen him through.

" Mr. Lu." Fang Dian turned to Lu Yizhan and winked, "It's been a long time since you've played, why don't you play with me?"

Lu Yizhan came back to life the moment Fang Dian emerged from the changing room, looking at Fang Dian in her pink bow swimsuit, his mind dizzy for a moment before he nodded in a trance, "Yes, yes, Captain Fang."

"Volleyball is usually played with twelve people." Fang Dian looked around, "It's rare that we can barely get it together this time with so many people."

"Anyone want to play volleyball!"

Fang Dian shouted as she ran towards the beach with a volleyball in her hands.

Soon, with the response of the two captains, Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan, the volleyball team was barely assembled.

Team A, original member of the Killer Sequence.

Team B, Bai Liu, Mu Sicheng, Muke, Tang Erda, now with an additional Fang Dian.

"You go first, your first passer serves." Fang Dian tossed the ball over and warned with a smile, "Don't be lenient Mr. Lu! That won't be fun!"

Lu Yizhan smiled gently and responded, "Okay."

" Spades, you serve, hit it as hard as you can."

Next to them, Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu's pupils quickly quake with cold sweat.

Holy shit! Spades is a monster panel in real life! With a full tee shot you could put a hole in the sand! Captain, are you trying to kill your spouse by letting Spades serve!

Are you two couples so competitive in a game of beach volleyball!

"But Spades likes Bai Liu, I don't think he'll use his full strength ....." Bai Yi came up to Bai Jiamu's ear and whispered a forced.

"I suppose so." Bai Jiamu was just about to nod seriously, "That's why the captain gave the ball to Spades' ....."

Before Bai Jiamu could say anything, he saw Spades take the ball, nodded lightly and then tossed it up, his eyes quickly fixed on the falling ball, a strange light emanating from his hands, and aimed at the back of the ball.

The ball was hit into a fast-spinning, flattened depression that smashed into the opposite side of the sand, rubbing out sparks and arching into a half-man-high dune straight away.

Bai Yi looked dumbfounded: "Just now, Spades ..... did you use your skills to play?"

"Used." Spades replied calmly, "Don't you have to use all your strength?"

"It doesn't have to go as far as using skills!" Bai Yi broke down and covered his head, "It's just a game of beach volleyball!"

Spades' eyes were heavy: "But the opponent is Bai Liu, and you can't win until you get to that level."

Lu Yizhan nodded seriously: " Fang Dian is very strong, you guys give me a serious fight."

Bai Yi: "....."

Bai Jiamu: "....."

Don't really understand your adult love.

Is that how you want to win over your wife?

Playoffs

"Seven points for the A team." Zhao Muchi, the referee, lazily reminded, "Team B hasn't scored yet, so it's still Spades serving."

Spades threw it up, dropped it and hit it hard again, the ball almost flashed into the sand for the B team, even a highly physical man like Tang Erda didn't react, Muke tried to catch it once, but Bai Liu was quick to stop it - it would have been an obvious mistake to catch it.

"Can't catch it." Bai Yi looked incredulously across the huge sandy hole, muttering, "..... A ball from a monster like that can't be caught, no matter how you think about it."

"It does look like we can't catch Spades' ball." Fang Dian looked at the ball and rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "The strength and speed was a bit off the mark."

"Looks like we're not going to be able to catch this one, so should we take a timeout?" Bai Liu spreads his hands, his tone casual, "Tell the other team we can't catch it or something?"

Muke pursed his lips a little reluctantly, Tang Erda was relieved, but Mu Sicheng shouted, "Bai Liu, you have some backbone!"

"It's all about winning! You're so crazy in the game, why don't you go out and play volleyball with no determination to win! You're too decadent!"

Bai Liu shrugs noncommittally, "I have a disposable attitude to games like this where there is no concrete prize at stake, I don't have to win because I won't get anything, do I?"

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Shit, forgetting that the core purpose of this guy's game isn't winning at all, it's money!

"But it's no fun to let the other side waterproof the game, it's only fun if both sides do their best." Fang Dian shook her head, and after a moment's contemplation, she suddenly shifted her gaze to Bai Liu in her semi-opaque white shirt and raised her eyebrows subtly, "It's true that I can't catch it, but I have a way to keep Spades from serving it up."

Mu Sicheng quickly perks up and Muke jumps over to look at Fang Dian expectantly.

Only Bai Liu's heart was quickly filled with a sense of foreboding, his scalp tingling at that look in Fang Dian's eyes - the last time the woman had looked at him like that, when she had turned her head and auctioned off a million a year to Hou Tong.

..... such valuation and calculating eyes.

"What are you going to do?" Bai Liu asked calmly, side-eyeing Fang Dian's eyes.

"Ah, that's right!" Fang Dian smiled brightly as she slapped Bai Liu on the shoulder, "Spades loves you, doesn't he? Why don't you seduce him and make him lose his game so he can't serve with such power!"

Bai Liu: "....."

Sure enough.

"What's the difference between that and letting the other team let us win?" Bai Liu asked calmly in return.

"There's a big difference." Fang Dian, unmoved by Bai Liu's snubbing tactics, retorted with a smirk, "It's the difference between them being forced to lose to us, and losing to us of their own accord; the former is just a tactic, the latter is a surrender technique."

"Eh, don't resist, you're dying for our glorious victory! Go and seduce Spades!"

Fang Dian said as he pushed Bai Liu under the net.

Bai Liu stood still, took a deep breath and averted his eyes, "..... I won't lust after Spades ."

"Eh?" Fang Dian poked her head out from behind Bai Liu's back a little suspiciously, "You guys look pretty close, you haven't been seducing?"

Why, Fang Dian, could this woman ask such questions so naturally?

Muke and Tang Erda both quickly realise the meaning behind this statement, Muke's whole face flushes, he looks away politely and silently retreats, Tang Erda averts her gaze with feigned seriousness, clenches her fist and coughs twice, and pins away Mu Sicheng who has not yet reacted with her arm.

"Have you ever been seduced?" Bai Liu asked in a cold tone, intending to turn the tables on Fang Dian.

"That's for sure!" Fang Dian looked proud, " Mr. Lu can be easily fooled!"

Bai Liu: "....."

It was he who lost.

"Let me tell you ....." Fang Dian muttered mysteriously while holding Bai Liu's head and gesturing, "first you do this... then this ..... and finally this. ...then this ..... and finally this, got it?"

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow with a subtle look, "Are you sure?"

"I'm sure." Fang Dian nodded with certainty, " Spades ate it up at first sight!"

Mu Sicheng, who was poking his head in the distance, looked at Fang Dian and Bai Liu together and scratched his heart with curiosity, frantically trying to get over to listen: "What are they discussing?"

Muke and Tang Erda, one looking to the sky and the other to the ground, remained silent in unison.

"The B team captain requests a timeout." Zhao Muchi saw Fang Dian raise his hand to signal a timeout, then took Bai Liu to the changing room and raised an eyebrow, "The game will start later."

Lu Yizhan watched as Fang Dian took Bai Liu to the changing room and began to look unsteady. He turned to Spades with grave eyes and patted him on the shoulder, telling him in a serious manner, "Whatever Bai Liu does later, keep your mind on it and serve well, okay?"

"Don't be confused by external things, stay true to your heart and we will have the final victory."

"I'll beat him." Spades nodded calmly.

The calm lasted less than three minutes before Bai Liu came out of the dressing room and Spades' eyes were instantly fixed on it.

Bai Liu unpinned his long hair, his white shirt that had been buttoned up to his heart - and most importantly, Bai Liu replaced his knee-length shorts with swim trunks, the triangular kind.

Fang Dian then poured water on Bai Liu's body, leaving her long hair and shirt damp and sticky, the long hair snaking down the collar to the top of her collarbone, where it coiled in the shape of a small snake, the shirt half-permeable against her skin.

"There!" Fang Dian looked convinced, " With Bai Liu dressed like this, we're going to win."

Mu Sicheng looked at Bai Liu with confusion: "Huh? Is this body different from the previous one?"

Lu Yizhan looked at Spades' almost nice open eyes and slowly covered his face with sadness - their team's main attack was still confused by something external and the momentum was gone!

Spades' attention was quickly diverted by the Bai Liu behind the net and his eyes were almost on the strands of hair on Bai Liu's heart, so he missed his serve and the volley narrowly missed the net.

"I'll do it!" Fang Dian moved quickly to net the ball from the back row and hauled it up steadily.

Lu Yizhan, the second passer on the other side, saw Fang Dian on the net and with a gaze in his eyes, he jumped to rest the ball and pushed it over again, which was dragged by Fang Dian.

"Don't think we only have Spades on our side." Lu Yizhan smiled gently, but his movements were stern, " Captain Fang, I've been waiting under the net for you to come at me."

"Is that so?" Fang Dian replied with a smile, pulling back and jumping up in a pose for a dunk, "I haven't underestimated you, Mr. Lu."

Lu Yizhan also quickly jumped close to the net and put his hands up in the path of Fang Dian's shot - he was obviously trying to block the net and make it impossible for Fang Dian to get past the ball. Lu Yizhan is taller than Fang Dian, he has long hands and agile movements, and has a wide defensive range.

As the two jumped to almost face level, Fang Dian suddenly winked at Lu Yizhan, who was staring at her intently, and whispered, "Honey, do I look good in this swimsuit?"

Lu Yizhan, dismayed: "?!?!"

His defensive hands quickly appeared to break, and Fang Dian's eyes instantly went from flirtatious to fierce, her muscles tensing in her hands, leaning back and driving her entire body hard, snapping the ball down at that break with such force that it brought Lu Yizhan's entire body to the ground.

Fang Dian also landed on the ground and shook his fist and yelled NICE!

Lu Yizhan broke down: " Captain Fang, you cheated!"

"But ....." Fang Dian ruffled her hair and gave Lu Yizhan a flirty kiss, "cheating is a regular practice in the game."

"You have to accept that, husband~"

"One point for Team B." Zhao Muchi counted lazily as he silently plucked the sunglasses off his head and put them on.

What a shiny couple's light, it's going to blind him.

Fifteen minutes later.

Zhao Muchi, with his cheeks resting on his head, announced the result with amusement: "Fifteen to eight in favour of Team B."

Lu Yizhan fell to his knees as he looked at the ground and drifted off in disbelief, "..... lost, after all that complete strategic planning, I actually ..... lost."

Spades was silent, but with his head down, his expression sullen and his lips pursed into a line, it was clear that he too could not accept the result of the match.

Bai Yi broke down and pointed at the two men and shouted, "What's wrong with you! You look like you've given it your all and still lost! You two are the ones who are holding us back! Bai Jiamu and I are the ones who are crying on our knees!"

"In the second half, all they had to do was shout at you and you wouldn't move! Me and Bai Jiamu were running silly! We managed to score one point, but you gave the rest away! Are you spies sent to interfere with us?"

"Show some sportsmanship, please! Get rid of the temptation of beauty and play the game! You start off so formal, you get me and Bai Jiamu all fired up, and then you two pieces of shit drop the ball like crazy!"

"You guys deserve the most serious volleyball game I've ever played in my life!"

Lu Yizhan: "....."

Spades: "....."

The two men apologised honestly, "I'm sorry."

Bai Yi was so angry that he almost had a brain hemorrhage: "I'm sorry! All the hard work I put into that game, all the youth I put into it, it was all for nothing!"

"One more game." Spades' eyes were determined, "I'll win this time."

Lu Yizhan was full of guilt as he rubbed the back of his head, "We will play well this time and not be led so easily by the other team."

"After all, we're only one team. I should have respected your feelings properly during the game."

Bai Yi heart's anger down some, he even a little moved to, tears are going to come out: "..... harm, we so long teammates, also do not need to say such things, and then a serious game to win back ..... "Come on the line.

Across the net Bai Liu spoke lightly, " Spades, no more fighting, let's go, let's go back to dinner."

Spades gave a quick oooh and flipped over the net and followed Bai Liu's back, clinging to Bai Liu's waist as he walked, walking in lockstep behind him.

" Mr. Lu!" Fang Dian waved excitedly, "We're having seafood tonight, come and cook!"

"Here you go!" Lu Yizhan ran over like a reflex, without looking back, "What do you want to eat?"

Looking at the backs of the two teammates who had completely forgotten about them, Bai Yi, who remained in place with tears on his face, was filled with numbness: "....."

What about the promise of another fight to win back the respect for him?

I was so naive to believe you guys!!!

Liao Ke, who was walking last, patted Bai Yi's shoulder sympathetically: "Want some seafood?"

Bai Yi yelled angrily, "EAT!!!"

Playoffs

After the meal.

As the group is herded off to the showers after a long day, Zhao Muchi looks at the back of Spades' departure and slowly turns his attention to Bai Liu's face.

Bai Liu has already finished washing up, the man seems to have a penchant for keeping himself clean, having showered as soon as he got off the volleyball court, and is now leaning back on the living room sofa in loose pyjamas, casually flicking through a book, with drops of water falling from the ends of his hair.

"If you keep looking at me like that." Bai Liu closed the book and looked up at Zhao Muchi next to him, "When Spades comes out, he's going to fight you."

Zhao Muchi looks over at the book Bai Liu is flipping through - Salome - and he closes his gaze with a dismissive smile: "I dueled with him, but I lost."

"Is there something you want to talk to me about?" Bai Liu enquired calmly.

"Can I go out and talk to you alone for a minute?" Zhao Muchi looked at Bai Liu.

Bai Liu asks, "What do we talk about?"

Zhao Muchi looks down: "Salome?"

Bai Liu changed back into his white shirt and trousers, packed up and went out with Zhao Muchi for a quiet stroll along the shoreline.

The waves lap gently on the beach, the sun has not yet set completely, and from the horizon you can see just a glimpse of the sunset, a shimmering orange light blending with the approaching night, reflecting the shimmering light on the cascading waves, and the soft warmth of the sea breeze.

Bai Liu wears leather shoes, but Zhao Muchi is barefoot, and the two walk along the beach not far from each other, leaving a trail of shoe and footprints.

"The book Salome, you left it on the sofa on purpose for me to read, didn't you?" Bai Liu brought up the subject in a flat tone.

Zhao Muchi replied with a quirked eyebrow, "Do I make it obvious?"

" Freaking obvious." Bai Liu looked up at him, "But after that your reaction was obvious, you kept looking at me and you were waiting for my reaction to reading the book."

"So, what do you think?" Zhao Muchi turned his head as he looked intently at Bai Liu, walking backwards with his hands behind his back and a lazy smile, and asked in return, "What kind of story do you think Salome is?"

"What do you think?" Bai Liu asked calmly, his pupils dark, reflecting the faint light of day and causing Zhao Muchi to drift off for a moment, "Do you like the story?"

He had watched her mother's tapes so many times and knew the story so well that when questioned by Bai Liu, he was too familiar to answer exactly how he felt.

Yes, what did he think of Salome?

What was his feeling when he first heard the story?

Almost twenty years had passed since he first heard this story? I think it was when he was five or six years old, and she was at the foot of his bed, holding him tenderly as she told this somewhat bizarre story of this beautiful and mad princess, Salome.

"Once upon a time, a long, long time ago, there was a beautiful and unfree princess who was so beautiful that everyone courted her, even her stepfather, the king at the time, coveted her beauty."

"The princess hated the atmosphere, and she but never met a man who could not love his appearance, until one day a man reputed to be a saint, John, was taken into the palace by the king, said to be the wisest saint in the world, who could see through everything, and even the king dared not look him in the eye, but only dared to imprison him at the bottom of a well, fearing to see in there the reflection of his own filthy soul reflection."

"Princess Salome was so curious about John that she begged the guards guarding the well to show her John in the well."

"The guards, obsessed with her moonlit beauty, granted her request to see John in the well ."

" Salome took one look at John and fell in love with him."

The young man could not understand such unexplained feelings and frowned, "Why would the princess fall in love with John with just one look?"

"She's a princess, and so many men around her love her, why would she love a prisoner locked up at the bottom of a well?"

She stroked the top of his head with amusement, lowering her eyes and telling the story with a little sigh in her voice, "This is where we're going to talk next."

"For only John told the princess that the king was wrong, that it was a despicable king who should not have had incestuous desires for the princess, for her mother, and that he deserved to go to hell. "

" Salome falls in love with John and she makes repeated advances to him, but John rejects him at every turn, and eventually the princess vows to have John's kiss, begging the king, her stepfather, to let him kiss him."

"And the king said, if you do a dance for me, even if John doesn't agree, I will cut off John's head and give it to you so you can kiss him."

"The king asks Salome, beautiful princess, will you dance for me?"

"The princess said that I would dance the most beautiful dance in the world for you and I would get a kiss from the most holy man in the world."

"She danced the dance of the seven veils for the king, a dance so beautiful that it finally moved him to cut off John's head, which the princess took up and kissed the dead saint in ecstasy."

"But I still don't get it." He furrowed his eyebrows and tucked his hands in a serious analysis, " Salome is pretty and a princess, why should she like John and John doesn't like her!"

"Maybe it's because John doesn't like her that she likes John." There was a lot of complexity in her tone that he didn't understand, "..... Maybe all the princess wanted was someone who watched her dance and didn't want to kiss her."

At that time, he was not able to understand what she meant by that statement.

And at this moment, in the sea breeze and waves, Zhao Muchi looked at Bai Liu looking at him, his eyes so calm that there was not a single ripple, and suddenly understood the meaning of these words and why Bai Liu had said that day that he could not go on kissing.

-- because what he wanted ..... was never Bai Liu's likes or kisses.

Just a spectator who doesn't want to kiss him.

"I didn't like the way Salome ended." Zhao Muchi stopped in his tracks, the sunset reflected in his purple eyes, his tone light as a gust of wind, "She must have regretted it after she got that kiss."

"Is that so?" Bai Liu was noncommittal, "Your take on the story, it's interesting."

"Why do you think Salome regretted it?"

Bai Liu raised his eyes, no waves in them, "Because you think if you kissed down on me on that day, you'd regret it too, don't you?"

Zhao Muchi fell silent, then he quickly looked away and smiled: "..... Bai Liu, aren't people in your country very subtle in their speech? I don't think a blunt person like you would be liked, would you?"

"You can just say I talk obnoxiously, I don't mind." Bai Liu spread his hands with a smirk, "But it's true what you say, I am indeed unpleasant."

"I'm the opposite of you, I'm very likeable and everywhere I go people come up to me and confess their love." Zhao Muchi looks at Bai Liu with a smile and a teasing tone, "You're a bit insensitive to be rejected by someone like me, who likes someone like you, who is not."

"I've had a lot of people say that about me." Bai Liu smiles, "Maybe it's part of my personality."

"I don't hate that about myself, though."

Zhao Muchi looks out to the sea and takes a deep breath: "Do you ..... like to watch dancing?"

"Appreciate not." Bai Liu replied honestly.

Zhao Muchi: "..... At this time, I'd still like you to speak more politely."

"Okay, so is it okay if I re-answer?" Bai Liu corrected himself with good grace, "I do not really appreciate dance as an art form."

"But if you want to." Bai Liu's brow was calm, and he smiled a friendly and gentle smile, "I think you might refresh my perceptions and let me know anew that I was the one who was shallow-"

"- Dance turned out to be such a beautiful art form."

Zhao Muchi stared at Bai Liu for a moment and smiled as if with a sigh, "Has anyone ever told you that you're really a bad man who's good at coaxing people?"

"Is that so?" Bai Liu smiled nonchalantly, "Only you've said that so far."

"Do you mean you've only ever coaxed me?" Zhao Muchi lowered his eyes and said with a soft smile, "Stop it, I've seen more men than I care to admit."

In the sunset, Zhao Muchi, dressed in plain clothes and barefoot, gave Bai Liu a dance of the seven veils, and as time passed, the sunset light fell on Zhao Muchi's body like a veil, fading away layer by layer to reveal his original form, and he looked across at Bai Liu.

Bai Liu was promptly applauded on command.

Zhao Muchi sighed, "The look in your eyes tells me you didn't read it."

"Yes, I'm probably not really artistic." Bai Liu admits frankly, but soon he smiles and says, "But it's beautiful."

"You make me think that something like dance, which I can't find value in for the moment, still has its place in this world."

"Though the significance of that I may not understand."

"The highest compliment to the dance." Zhao Muchi stepped back on one foot, haughtily lifting the hem of her dress and bowing slightly in a curtain call gesture, "Thank you for watching."

Bai Liu smiles: "My pleasure."

A day later, in-game, the Wandering Circus Guild.

Wang Shun almost fell down as he ran to the conference room with a pile of materials in his arms, but he met Tang Erda halfway and helped him carry some.

"I'm glad I met you." Wang Shun let out a long breath.

Tang Erda wondered, "Why are there so many paper documents? Wasn't it all electronic before?"

"It's a long story." Wang Shun gave a bitter laugh and pushed open the door to the meeting room, "It has to do with our next game against, so let's talk about it inside."

The moment the door to the conference room was pushed open, Wang Shun took a deep breath and announced, "Gentlemen, our opponent for the next game is out."

"- is Golden Dawn."

Playoffs

At the same moment, in the real world, the Heresy Bureau is in its third inning.

"Captain." The team member knocked softly on Georgia's office door.

"Please come in."

The team member pushed open the door and Georgia sat behind her desk with her forehead in her hands, looking at the papers on her desk with a frown of contemplation.

"Captain, we have recovered all the Seven Star Eels that the Order picked up and secretly bred and are sorting them into different categories." The team reported truthfully, "Please ask the captain to check the situation at the shelter."

Georgia looked up and nodded politely, "Good work, I'll check in once I've finished with the paperwork."

The team member looked at the document on Georgia's desk reporting the irregularity of the loan of the Seven Star Eel, and hesitated before asking, "Captain, how did you find out that the member of the Order who borrowed our heretic was wrong?"

"Is it because of the man who came to you out of the blue?"

"Is he a member of the First Bureau of the Bureau of Heresy? But I've checked the active captains and members of the First Bureau, and I haven't seen a picture of him."

The person who came to see Georgia was Lu Yizhan.

After watching the beginning of the challenge, Lu Yizhan quickly figured out what the problem was, logged out of the game and went straight to Georgia, who had lent the Seven Star Eel heresy, and intercepted Quan Zhendong's helicopter, which was still carrying the heresy, and brought back the Seven Star Eel, which had not yet multiplied.

But the team was puzzled as to why the captain was meeting with a man who did not work for the Bureau of Heresy, and following his advice.

Georgia is a true aristocrat, very principled in his dealings with people, not aloof, but still aloof and distant. He was still not a man of words when it came to Georgia.

He has his own set of rules for doing things, which, of course, can sometimes be a little stereotypical and harsh - like the way he treats his only brother, Vice-Captain Armand.

The last time the team was somewhat surprised that Captain Georgia would approach someone to work with was the mysterious tactician in the game, the Inquisitor of the Reverse God.

Golden Dawn, despite being the third ranked guild in the game, has always been a very exclusive and secretive state in the game, with an extremely slow flow of people in and out, almost exclusively internal - that's for sure, the guild is basically full of people from all three boards and doesn't let extraneous people join easily.

And since the Third Bureau has always been a heretical guard, it has the number one reputation in the game for being a storehouse of secrecy, and the number one priority for secrecy is to be careful about who you come into contact with, and in the case of Captain Georgia, he has taken this to the extreme - everyone who sees him has to be vetted, and even when they are working together Georgia would still look at you with an overly cautious attitude, even if you were cooperating.

Trust is the hardest thing for Georgia to give, no matter who it is to.

For example, the reason why Quan Zhendong, who had taken the heretic away, could be recovered so quickly was that Georgia had sent someone to follow him.

From this point of view, the ease with which Georgia will enter into a partnership with the Reverse God in the game, contracting the protection of each other's warehouses, is really incomprehensible to this player.

This matter was also very controversial at the time.

As in this case, Georgia didn't hesitate to recover the Seven Star Eel the moment she heard the man say there was something wrong with it, and there were many objections from the team at the time, saying that it would be discreditable for the Heresy Bureau to take it back just after lending it out, but Captain Georgia stood firm and recovered it - of course Of course, it turned out that Captain Georgia was right, and the man had stolen the male seven-star eel!

Georgia glanced up at the hesitant team member and frowned.

It was in the nature of the members of the Third Bureau to be suspicious, and Georgia wasn't going to accuse the member of caring about something he shouldn't. The Third Bureau kept the most dangerous brew of desire in the world, situated next to the most dangerous sea in the world, the Gulo Sea, and they should be suspicious of everyone who came near it, and Georgia was only frowning because he didn't know how to explain it.

--It's as if Georgia couldn't explain why she was working with the Reverse God in the first place.

Lu Yizhan is a very special presence and the entire Heretic Handling Bureau, except for him and Cen Buming, the two captains who made it into the game, had no idea that Lu Yizhan's identity was that of the once insane Prophet captain.

But they should have known, they all knew about Lu Yizhan ten years ago.

Had it not been for that incident ten years ago in his homeland, the Gloren Empire, which forced Lu Yizhan to use his skills to collapse the world's memories of the Gloren Empire, as well as collapsing and modifying his own traces of having existed in the Heretic Processing Bureau, resulting in the current crew having only a vague recollection of the existence of such a prophet captain ten years ago.

But it was hard to get a glimpse of Lu Yizhan's face and some specific information, like the files that were sealed in top secret by the Third Bureau, buried by Lu Yizhan's skills in the deepest memories of all the members of the Heretic Processing Bureau.

Lu Yizhan was able to use the memory folding skill three times, once on the Gloren Empire, but even after folding the memories, the Gloren Empire died.

--He is the only person left in the world who remembers why the Gloren Empire fell, apart from Lu Yizhan.

Once Crown Prince of the Gloren Empire, now head of the Third Council - Georgia.

When he knelt before Lu Yizhan, who was carrying a heavy sword to seal off the entire Gloren Empire and prevent the disorder from spreading, the Crown Prince, who had never bowed his head before, bowed his head and woefully begged the other man not to fold his memory, saying that there should always be someone in the world who remembered how the country really fell, Lu Yizhan, after a long silence, agreed and told him with a sigh "Actually you don't have to think that everyone will forget the real, I am the executor and I will always remember."

"But you are not of the Gloren Empire." Georgia looked up, "I am the great prince they once worshipped in faith, and apart from my father, I am the one most responsible for this downfall."

"All can forget, but I, alone, must never forget."

"You still have your brother." Lu Yizhan said helplessly, "You and he are both princes, and you want him to remember the cruelty of it all too?"

"My brother, Armand, he's too young to remember all this because he doesn't really understand what's going on." Georgia pleaded sincerely, "But please, do let me remember."

Georgia propped himself up on the table and took a deep breath as he gathered all his thoughts, "That gentleman I can vouch for is not someone with ulterior motives against the heretics, but there is something special about him that I can't say straight away."

"If you still have suspicions about me, I'll go over to the Third Bureau later for the record, and you can do a proximity check on me, and I'll cooperate."

--A proximate investigation is when one of the three bureaus is suspected of lust or betrayal, the whole three bureaus will launch a series of investigations into that player, known as a proximate investigation.

"Yes Captain." The team member hesitated, "I'm not doubting you, it's just that you've really been in a bad shape lately and have been interacting intimately with some strangers who aren't on the Third Bureau's whitelist, and as a matter of process, we need to do a proximity check on you."

"I'm asking out of personal interest, is your recent condition ..... because the tournament is approaching?"

"Probably." Georgia closed her eyes and rubbed her temples, "I didn't think I'd draw the Wandering Circus that early."

"But that's only a rookie team, it shouldn't bother you so much." The player asked rhetorically in disbelief.

Georgia opened his mouth as he remembered that dream of his, and the [Bai Liu] in it, and breathed in sharply for a split second before answering softly, "The tactician on this team, he makes me feel threatened."

"And the thief Mu Sicheng."

Georgia paused but spoke anyway: "I had a dream in which he was the greatest enemy of the Third Bureau, would take orders from the tactician called Bai Liu, would often come here to the Third Bureau to steal valuable and dangerous heretics, would arrogantly send the Third Bureau teaser letters telling us what to steal, and many times succeeded. "

"Come here to the Third Council to steal heresy? And send a teaser letter?" The team member was a little amused to hear this, "Captain, you're too anxious to dream that kind of dream, who could steal heretics from here with this configuration of the Third Council?"

"Not to mention the theft, the heresy that the Holy See borrowed from here could easily be taken back."

As a result, before this team member could say anything, the door was violently pushed open by a team member who waved an envelope with an anxious expression, " Captain Georgia, we have received a teaser letter!"

The team member who was just laughing at the teaser letter looked incredulously at the team member who burst through the door and asked, "What teaser letter?!"

"The Heretic teaser letter!" The team member looked anxious, "The teaser letter is clipped to the electronic door of the heretic warehouse, but the door has been tampered with and is open, and right now we're taking inventory of the warehouse for any dropped heretics."

"The teaser letter says steal heretic number 0073 from us in two days!"

"Two days later?!" The player's voice rose incredulously, "Doesn't that happen to be the day of our game?!"

The moment he heard heresy number 0073, Georgia's eyes snapped open - it was a heretic named [Golden King].

--The heretic, who was his father.

Playoffs

Georgia propped herself up on the table and got up, "Have the islanders get ready, I'm going to check out the 0073 heresy."

Unlike heretics stored in warehouses, heresy number 0073 is an extremely special heresy. It is stored under an isolated island in the middle of the Gura Sea, on which is the branch processing department of the Third Bureau, and below the island, in the deep sea of about 3,600 metres, is this heresy number 0073.

To be more precise, heresy number 0073 is not a heresy, but a collective name for the six million heretics, including the Golden King, and is the largest and most expensive heresy the Bureau of Heresy has ever housed. --The King of Gold

-- [The Lost Country of Gold].

In the top-secret archives, which only Georgia and Lu Yizhan have access to, the heresy of 0073 is described in one sentence - [There are more than 16 million tons of gold stored here].

[Current Custodian of Heretics: Head of the Three Bureaus Georgia].

[Guardianship Purpose: To prohibit anyone from knowing, prying, or entering the sunken country of Gloren, the land of gold, to steal, sell, or cut up gold that has not yet awakened].

"Yes Captain!" The team saluted at the order.

As Georgia walked out of the office, he glanced back at the teaser letter left on the desk with a mixed expression, and finally turned to leave, his tone cold.

"On the day of the tournament, the three bureaus will be placed under emergency martial law and no suspicious persons will be allowed near the branch processing department of the three bureaus on the Gulo Sea, and special force may be used if necessary."

"Kill this thief who has come to provoke."

Game of the Wandering Circus.

Wang Shun took a deep breath and looked at the information he had just handed out in front of everyone: "You must be wondering why this time it is not electronic, but such a heavy paper document."

"It was because our first enemy of the playoffs, Golden Dawn, had the most tightly guarded secrecy system in the game and it was difficult for me to probe the minds of the members inside and after a tough probe, I had no idea what skills they were employing, resulting in me not being able to transport that scouted information electronically or in skill form, I had to document it in text. "

"But with text, the scouting method becomes inflexible and easily discovered, the information that can be recorded in text is very limited, Golden Dawn is worthy of being the most tightly guarded guild, I have been detected several times when I went scouting." Wang Shun waved the text in his hand with a bitter smile, the green and black under his eyes obvious, "So I'm not getting much information this time, everyone will have to go up and scout for themselves, sorry."

Bai Liu smiled and waved the text in his hand, "That thickness, it doesn't look like limited intelligence, it's hard to say if we'll be able to read it before we get on."

When Bai Liu joked about it, Wang Shun laughed and relaxed a little: "With Muke around, you won't lose track."

Wang Shun collected his expression and began to explain, "First, let's go over the basic rules of the playoffs with everyone."

"There are eight teams in the playoffs and there are three matches - eight into four, four into two and a final."

"Although the same draw is made, the rules of the draw are different from both the pre-season and the challenge, and instead of being random, the teams are divided according to their current standings, ranked from highest to lowest, with first to fourth drawing fourth to eighth, in other words, meaning that the playoffs are all high versus low matches."

"We won against Kings Guild but we didn't finish at the top of the table, being eighth, so we were out of the draw for the whole playoffs."

"It may be bad news for the average newcomer to the guild, but for our guild -"

Wang Shun laughed helplessly as he looked over at Bai Liu, who innocently spread his hands and replied with a smile, "It's a happy occasion."

"Yes." Wang Shun nodded with a sigh, "So I breathed a long sigh of relief when I saw that the team that drew us was Golden Dawn."

" Golden Dawn is the third ranked guild at the moment and with a not so strong tactical style, I was expecting this to be the easiest game we've had in a while."

"But only I thought."

Wang Shun tapped the information in his hand.

"The Golden Dawn I know is a team somewhat similar to Kings Guild, with good defence and secrecy, but not enough offense, but this year, just as Kings Guild introduced Sister Phoebe to counter their lack of offense, they introduced Armand. Armand."

Wang Shun tapped on the system panel and Armand's face popped up on the system panel, Wang Shun looked down and flipped through the information while clicking on the system panel to explain.

"It looks like Armand, like Phoebe, is a control position player and has not shone as brightly as Phoebe in the mid-season, the reason why he is a highly popular newcomer ....."

"It's the face, isn't it?" Bai Liu asked calmly and rhetorically, propping up his jaw.

"Yes." Wang Shun nodded, "Georgia, the Golden Dawn leader back then, was the same way, always popular and controversial because of his very refined and noble appearance, but then his strong skills and excellent competition performance broke the many controversies surrounding him, but now Armand is not so lucky, he is just a newcomer and already a number of players are mocking him as a vase."

"Not a surprise." Bai Liu looked at the panel thoughtfully, " Armand and the president called Georgia, their looks and aura gave me a very extravagant feeling, like a very well-born aristocrat, but usually, this innate nobility is extremely sought after by some people while being extremely disliked by others. "

"- like gold."

"Other than that, do you know anything about the skills of the players in this guild?" Bai Liu asked, closing the information.

"That part of the information, there is very little." Wang Shun smiled bitterly, " Georgia the president and tactician's skill is a golden leaf bow, skill related to time, but specifically some of the older players I still know some, like their guild's perennial ace - Chrissy. "

Wang Shun taps on the system panel, and a woman with brown hair and brown pupils and a dark profile pops up on the panel.

"I know her better because every year the best [Shield] bit player is chosen between Titan and Chrissy of the King's Guild, and I used to spy on this player named Chrissy in many ways under the Queen's orders." Wang Shun turned his head to look at everyone, "Her skill is the only one I know best, it's called [Non-Newtonian Fluid]."

"This skill summons a white fluid barrier that blocks all attacks in front of your Team Fang member - the barrier is so strict that you can't even get past Chrissy as long as you are aggressive, even if you don't act aggressively. The barrier of [non-Newtonian fluids] summoned."

"And the most troubling thing about this skill is that -"

Wang Shun sighs, "This skill has no CD and can be used all over the field."

Tang Erda subconsciously frowns - it's a skill that is specifically designed to grind down gun-based main attackers.

"Holy shit!" Mu Sicheng also heard his scalp tighten, "Universal across the board, how is this going to play?!"

"The skill originally had a CD." Wang Shun also had a big headache, "but Georgia, the captain's skill, can reduce the CD indefinitely when combined with Chrissy, and he can constantly reverse the time on Chrissy, bringing her back to a point in time where she hasn't used the skill yet, and eventually making the skill CD-free. "

"And Georgia, the captain, has a skill that works with every player."

"So, you're about to face a team where the whole team has no skill CD time."

Mu Sicheng's blood pressure rose as he listened, and his temples popped: "No CD for the whole crew?!"

Then how can they fight? They can wait for the CD and the opponent can grind them to death with unlimited openings!

"Yes, Georgia's dominant control game has turned back all the disapproval from the crowd." Wang Shun let out a long sigh, "Before Phoebe came out of nowhere this year, Georgia was the control match that all the main attacking positions dreamed of. He was smart, calm and elegant, able to combine the beauty and strength of the battlefield, aiding all players across the court with superb precision and control."

"In previous years, Golden Dawn's only weak point was not having a very good anchor, and everyone would be sad that a superb control like Georgia wasn't paired with a proper anchor to lose out on the title."

"And this year, they switched out their previous lead offense for Armand and everyone thought Golden Dawn was dropping the lead offense and getting ready to play the double control position."

"But I used a bit of special tricks to get Armand's mid-season output numbers and found out that wasn't the case."

Wang Shun opened the file in front of him and looked at the data with complicated eyes: " Armand's skill on the surface looks like a control skill that summons a hurricane and stops the opponent's movement, it doesn't look like a strong output in the league, even invisible a lot of the time, his presence is not found on the battlefield --This does not look like a main attack."

"But did everyone see that? Armand's output figures."

The moment Tang Erda scanned the data, she stopped, and Wang Shun had mixed feelings: "To be honest, I didn't expect it to be as high as it was."

" Armand's mid-season output was almost equal to that of Spades, the top starter, which of course had something to do with the fact that the Gods had Spades on the field in the mid-season, but that's scary, the guy is a rookie."

"What's even more frightening is that -" Bai Liu raised his eyes to Armand on the panel, "- such terrible output figures actually didn't cause an overwhelming advantage on the field, but slowly won in an unobtrusive way."

"This tactic is like a butterfly that intentionally hides itself in the middle of a hurricane."

Bai Liu looks down at the file, his eyes falling on the butterfly resting on his shoulder in Armand's photo: "- he's the one who started the hurricane that killed everyone, yet he disguises himself in such a beautiful and harmless way. "

"Is it to make the enemy let their guard down while they set off a bigger hurricane?"

Playoffs

Two days later, the first day of the playoffs.

If the atmosphere at the Challenge was buzzing, the atmosphere at the playoffs was almost boisterous, with people coming and going, floating machines everywhere hanging virtual banners, blasting electronic fireworks, and promoting their teams.

"Please support the Kabbalah Guild! It will not let you down!"

"The Gamblers' Union, a gambler's paradise, loaded with money!"

There were four games on the first day of the playoffs, so four viewing pools were opened. All four games of the eight-in-four were played in this round, and although the order of play differed, there were times when everyone was playing at the same time without being able to determine the time of the game, which meant that each viewer had to choose basically only one or two games to watch if they wanted to see the whole game.

The guilds were now setting off fireworks on every viewing pool to draw spectators' eyes over, and spectators were discussing and agonising over which viewing pool they were going to watch the game in.

"The killer sequence is against the Invisible Cloak Guild, and if Spades is confirmed to play, this one won't be much of a spectacle."

"The Gamblers' Guild is a bit interesting. The Gamblers' Guild was ranked fifth this year, but the second ranked King's Guild got squeezed out, so they moved up to fourth and got the right to draw against the Heavenly Masons, who are not too far behind them. ..."

"Kabala is up against the Deerhunters, right? The Deerhunters are double majors this year and have been going strong from mid-season to now, currently in second place, so it's going to be hard for Kabala to win."

"But to say that the most interesting game of the eight to four is really the one -"

All eyes surrendered to the same viewing pool - compared to the other pools that were constantly broadcasting commercials and blasting fireworks, this one was a little too quiet with nothing above it, but that didn't stop it from being the most crowded pool by far.

"Golden Dawn doesn't like publicity, it's an old tradition." One question from the audience was, "Why isn't this dark horse being promoted this year? I thought Charles was secretly investing in it? Can Charles, the peacock, stand to have his dark horse in the playoffs so quietly?"

"When the killer sequence he backed made the playoffs last year, Charles the guy was laying the hype for the killer sequence all over the TV section."

"It could be ....." a viewer tried to answer, " Charles doesn't like this dark horse much this year? After all, the playoffs were a loss to the Killer Sequence, so a late title win is less likely."

"Doesn't sound like it to me." A spectator retorted, looking at the pool percentage count panel outside the viewing pool, on which the Wandering Circus was riding a wave of support, almost tied with Golden Dawn, and spoke up somewhat arduously, "..... Have you guys ever thought that Charles isn't betting on the promotion just simply because the Wandering Circus might not need it anymore?"

"That's an approval rating that doesn't need too much more publicity to build momentum."

The spectator, in a trance-like state, continued to murmur to the steady stream of people pouring into the viewing pool of the Wandering Circus vs Golden Dawn.

"They are, by now, unknown to everyone and no one."

Inside the second ornamental pool.

Wang Shun stood up and walked back and forth, taking deep breaths as he did so, and after the MC called for both tacticians to come forward and shake hands, he took a heavy, deep breath, like a string that had been stretched to the limit, his entire back tensed up and he looked straight at Bai Liu who got up and took off his gloves, ready to come forward.

"..... is going to start the race." Wang Shun said in a hard voice.

"Don't be so nervous." Bai Liu smiled, "Didn't we already agree on the tactics?"

"It's just one game."

Wang Shun nodded and exhaled slowly, "Yes, a team game, no more pairs or singles."

The eight teams that made it to the playoffs this year all played surprisingly well, with all of them firmly within the line of immunity. In a playoff that is so brutal that it doesn't require a single popularity match, almost all teams will only make one choice after receiving immunity - abandoning the single and double matches, which are a waste of energy and immunity. The team has to go straight to the team competition, which will determine the winner of the tournament.

"Although we are inferior to them in intelligence and do not have shield positions, because of this, we do not need shield player protection and will move far faster than them overall." Bai Liu raised his eyes, "We mainly adopted the tactic of spreading out our positions early on, avoiding head-on confrontation and gathering information on the copies and their skills quickly."

At the other end, Georgia, who was straightening the cuffs of her uniform, spoke in a steady voice: "Because of their unfamiliarity with our skills and the lack of shield positions, they will most likely adopt the strategy of running the map quickly and scattering to avoid us."

"This will limit the protection of our [shield] position and also allow us to collect information as quickly as possible."

"So we're going to strike early and fast to send them off this ace player before they run the map to familiarise themselves with the full copy of the map and the game pass key."

"Whichever side gets the copy clue sooner, the sooner they can win."

Georgia looked up at Armand who was standing opposite him: "- this is a battle with speed at its core, do you, as our main attacking player, know who the core player is that you're going to snipe?"

"And they're bound to go crazy early on and send our most important players away." Bai Liu looks to Mu Sicheng, "It's a speed rush against, do you know what kind of responsibility you have in this game?"

Mu Sicheng took a deep breath as he clenched his fist, which had turned into a monkey's paw, "I know."

Armand raised his eyes and the butterfly resting on his shoulder flicked its wings: "On command."

"As a thief, run with all your might and escape from that dangerous hurricane they brought." Bai Liu ordered calmly.

"As a team member, use all your chase to keep that restless thief in the middle of your hurricane." Georgia said indifferently.

After they finished, they turned and stepped onto the stage, walking step by step towards each other and to the centre of the big screen, both sides shaking hands in a very polite and courteous manner, the calm atmosphere contrasting with the intense screaming of the hosts:

"Everyone! It's a strong showdown between the strong dark horses that won the King's Guild, the Wandering Circus and our perennial powerhouse Golden Dawn!"

"And the first big, winnable game to open this year's playoffs!"

"Who will actually win! Let's wait and see!"

Bai Liu looked up at Georgia across the room.

At close range, Georgia's unconscious stern nobility was even more compelling. Although it seemed that this man was suppressing some of his minor habits, some details still showed that this man had been educated in quite good, even harsh social etiquette - from the angle of his eyes to the way he looked at people, the way he shook hands, even the angle between his toes and his feet It was as if he had been ordered to practise these manners a thousand times, as if he had engraved them into his bones and still did not lose his poise in the face of an enemy like him.

With just one glance, Bai Liu had a definition in his mind - the Golden Dawn captain must not swear or talk trash before a match.

It's really hard to imagine this kind of person who seems to be a materialisation of the term [elegance and nobility] fighting people in a bloody fight on the field.

"You've met me." Georgia held out her hand, palm up, and looked down at Bai Liu, " Georgia, Captain Golden Dawn."

" Bai Liu ." Bai Liu smiled and reached out for a handshake, "Captain of the Wandering Circus."

" Captain Georgia, who do you think is faster, the wind or a man?" Bai Liu smiled softly and answered himself, "I think people are faster."

Georgia straightens her body without hurrying, her tone even: "I think the person who can make the wind is the fastest."

"Then it seems we have different views." Bai Liu said with a smile, "But there's no need to argue now."

"We'll get the answer to that question at the end of this game."

The host waved his hand and ordered with passionate fury, "Will both tacticians please return to their positions and the match, now begins!"

Bai Liu walked towards the entrance next to the big screen, followed by Mu Sicheng, Bai Liu walked forward without a glance while calmly ordering, "The other team will come to control us as soon as they enter the field Team Quan, until then I will try to create a gap for you to get out and run the map, but after you run out, the other team will definitely release someone to chase you. "

"The man who is chasing you, and you know who it is."

Hearing this, Mu Sicheng subconsciously glanced back across the field at the Golden Dawn team, who were also entering the field a short distance away, and then paused.

The guy with the short brown hair turned his head this way and was staring at him with a good eye while walking in with a cold look on his face.

This man's pupils do not waver when he stares as if he were dead, and his vision is so focused that it is creepy, almost as if Mu Sicheng can detect the meaning within the eyes the moment the man meets them.

-- [You can run, but I will catch you.]

Mu Sicheng's scalp exploded at the stare and he bared his teeth at his opponent, only to have Bai Liu calmly turn his head around with a twist: "Don't get confused before you get in, the secret to running fast as a thief is to think that your opponent must not catch up with you, it's easy for Armand to catch up with you if you can't keep your mind on it. "

"If he's going to catch up with you, circle back to me and I'll figure it out."

"But I'll come back and bring back Armand, the core of the other side's output, too, right?" Mu Sicheng frowned and quickly objected, "The pressure on you guys will skyrocket."

"Yes." Bai Liu doesn't deny it, "The fact that the opponent doesn't have a CD will put a lot of pressure on us, so while you're running the map and collecting clues back to me, it's best to also function as a roaming position at the same time - hanging off the opponent's main attack."

"But without being sure of the copy and the skills of the rest of the opposing team, all our tactics are based on current intelligence."

Bai Liu looked up at the entrance to the game in front of him, "All, subject to my orders once inside."

[..... is loading the game .....]

[System Alert: Both players have logged into the game The Lost Kingdom of Gold]

[(Golden Dawn) vs. (Wandering Circus), five-man team competition, official start].

The Lost Land of Gold

The moment you climb in, Bai Liu falls into the ocean.

Bai Liu felt the tremendous pressure around him, and if it wasn't for his current inhuman panel quality, he would have been squeezed and burst from the water pressure the moment he was transported into this sea.

The deep sea is dark everywhere, but every now and then a wave of water tells Bai Liu that there must be some kind of large fish swimming around.

All in all a place not to stay for long.

Bai Liu turns his eyes to the only source of light in this deep sea - a huge city sunken at the bottom of the sea.

Bai Liu was suspended very high above the sea floor, the city was below him, he couldn't even see the boundaries, and even more bizarrely, the city was encased in a huge semi-circular glass shield - a shield that Bai Liu had a familiar feeling of, when he had been When he was taken to the Heresy Bureau, the shield outside the Heresy Bureau was of this type.

It is supposed to be possible to see inside through the glass shield, but with golden dust floating above the whole city, one can only get a vague glimpse of the city's magnificent buildings.

It looks like a city that once thrived, but has somehow been shielded and sunk to the bottom of the sea.

From Bai Liu's viewpoint above, the city glows with a warm golden light, and the golden dust inside floats up and down as if it were snow, looking like an oversized crystal ball of snow, with a fairytale quality.

--This would be the [Land of Lost Gold].

[System Alert: Please enter (The Lost Land of Gold), to unlock the main quest.]

Bai Liu swam downwards, and he soon touched the top of the shield, and the moment he did so he fell into the golden kingdom beneath the sea.

Bai Liu's eyes were downcast as he looked up at the seemingly never-ending flurry of golden dust in the sky, reaching out to catch a bit of it and sip it away.

The texture is so fine, it feels like you can breathe in.

The ground was covered with this fine gold dust, from the magnificent and stately domed palace building in the sky to the buildings in front of us, all covered in a strange golden dust, and the ground was also covered with gold dust, so golden that one could not see it, and the whole city was incomparably quiet, not to mention the sound of people, not even the chirping of birds, so silent that only the sound of falling dust could be heard.

[System Alert: Ask player Bai Liu to find a fairy tale book that is widely circulated in the Golden Land to learn the backstory of the copy and unlock the main quest.]

Bai Liu jumped off the rooftop with a flick of the wrist. After landing, he found a landmark building nearby and sent a message to his teammates to meet up here, and within three or four minutes, all four team members arrived.

"No npc's or monsters were encountered on the way to stop us." Tang Erda received her gun behind her waist and frowned, "No encounters with Golden Dawn's men either."

"I had expected them to come in fast and furious as soon as they entered the copy, but along the way I observed the dust on the ground and saw no footprints of anyone else's movements other than ours."

"Yeah." Mu Sicheng looked at the bizarre surroundings of the replica and rubbed his goosebumpy arms, "I was all set to run, but no one came after me."

"It might have something to do with the game setup of this copy." Liu Jiayi tilted his head and tapped on his system panel, "Because the background explanation and main quest of this copy are different from the previous ones, instead of being given as soon as you enter, you have to explore on your own, the other party might be prepared to unlock the main quest first before acting like us."

Muke nodded in agreement, "But overall, it's not bad for us, it kind of gives us a cushion."

"I don't think so." Bai Liu shook his head in denial, " Golden Dawn was never meant to be a team that played a speed game, playing speed stations was our response, they like to slow down the tempo, but slowing down the tempo is not good for us players who can CD skills."

"The general idea is still the same as before, a quick fix."

Bai Liu's eyes narrowed slightly as he glanced down at the gold dust that had fallen on each of them, "I always felt more threatened by this copy itself, than Golden Dawn gave me."

"Let's find the fairy tale first."

"Yes!"

The group was led by Bai Liu into the nearest building, which was also covered in floating gold dust. The notice board at the front desk was so thickly covered in gold dust that it was hard to read, and Liu Jiayi knelt down and wiped the thick gold dust off the board before seeing what was on it.

Liu Jiayi stared at the writing on it for a moment, then waved his hand, " Muke, I can't read such characters."

"Here it is." Muke walks over to the notice and stares at it for a moment, pondering for a moment, "It's a very old little language, I can't understand it all, but I've taken an optional course in the modern language that evolved after it, so I can understand the general meaning."

"This notice says this month's notice that thirteen households have not paid their utility and gas bills this month, and that one household with serious arrears owes about 500g in total utility bills ....."

"Gold?"

Muke's tone was clearly hesitant when he saw the last phrase.

"Wow?!" Mu Sicheng crouched over with great interest, "A pound of gold for utilities, what did this family do at home? Did they raise goldfish?"

"What surprises me more than this is the rest of the place." Muke flipped the notice board forward, looking more and more peculiar as he did so, "This place has no currency of its own, the general equivalent of their daily transactions is gold, utilities are paid in gold, everyday food is bought in gold, three apples 2g gold, a whole leg of beef smoked in 12g gold."

"..... uses gold for everyday transactions?" Mu Sicheng staggered at the sound of it, as he silently converted in his mind, "These prices are so outrageously high, people here are so rich."

"To be able to use gold as a trading currency and prices so high, this would be a very economically developed place, they did have a lot of money at one time." Muke frowned, "But certainly not recently, the rent for this building has recently increased four or five times, the unit cost of the various utilities supplied has increased almost forty times, and food like this can basically be said to sit on the floor and change price from day to day."

"That's why there were previous tenants who owed a pound of gold on their utility bills."

"All sorts of things are going up in price." Mu Sicheng questions hesitantly, "Shouldn't that mean that people in this place are getting richer?"

Muke looks at Mu Sicheng for a moment: "It depends on what the price increase is."

"If the price increases are for non-essential items that are already at a premium, such as luxury cars and watches, which are toys for the rich, then it means that people have money for something other than the necessities of life to enjoy, and this is really only a sign of areas that are getting better economically."

"But judging by the announcement of this building, some of the slightly higher end foods, like cheese, are dropping in price, instead the price increases are all for necessities like smoked meat apples utilities and rentals, that can only mean that money, or gold, is flowing into survival products in this area, which means that people in this area are having a very bad time, which is what is causing them to hoard in large quantities in a panic essential goods, causing the price of essential goods to double."

"What I'm seeing is basically the same thing." Muke nodded to the bulletin board, "There are more and more tenants in this building who can't pay their rent."

"But I actually find it hard to imagine that a place that uses gold as its circulating currency would necessitate a premium of this magnitude."

Muke spreads his hands, "As long as the place has a port and they're willing to use gold for foreign trade, I'm sure there are plenty of places in the world where 2g of gold would sell them four hundred apples, but I see no sign of foreign trade."

"A pound of gold, which has been the cost of living for many families for several years, is just a few months' worth of utilities for this building."

"The world is full of people who are madly thirsty for their gold, but they are cantoned here, unwilling to trade with the outside world and allowing prices to rise wildly."

"Maybe it's because too many people want their gold that they don't want it?" Bai Liu knelt down on one knee and raised his eyes to Muke who was stunned for a moment, "What is this little language you speak of in this place?"

"That's one of the things that's strange to me." Muke ponders for a moment and replies, "I am learning a very rare and minor language that is spoken in very few countries in the real world, a minor language whose origin is a civilised language that exists only in legend."

"It is said that more than a thousand years ago, beside this overseas sea of the Ancient Luo Sea, there was once a very prosperous ancient country, although this country was not a vast country, just a small coastal country, but this country was very rich, so rich that almost even the floor of their palace was paved with gold, and it was known as [the country of gold favoured by God], at that time it was almost the world's economic centre of exchange, and the small surrounding countries aspired to this country, and they imitated the language of this country, which has been passed on to the present day, and is this little language that I am learning now."

"But everything about this country at the moment has been deduced by everyone based on some existing historical documents from the surrounding countries, there are no real relics or historical information to prove that this country really existed, nor is there anything to prove that the language I learned originated from this land of gold."

"But now it seems." Muke looked at the gold dust covered display next to the reception desk, the radio, and a couple of very modern mobile phones, "this country really does exist."

"And it also developed silently, out of our sight, for a thousand years until its demise."

Mu Sicheng listened with mixed emotions: "..... How did you learn such a small language that is so remote?"

"Because my father wanted me to learn that a son like me, who couldn't inherit the family business, could only be used as an external showcase, and when I learned things that no one around me knew how to do, he would feel honoured by that, so I learned a lot of things that I found useless but he found classy, small languages being one of them." Muke replies with a wry smile, "You could interpret this as the boring vanity of a rich man."

"But it's not all bad if it comes in handy now, I guess."

"So the system is asking us to explore why this country fell, is it?" Liu Jiayi frowned and said softly, "[The Land of Gold favoured by God], that sounds like a lot of-"

She didn't go on, and Bai Liu looked at each other, and all was lost in translation.

--sounds just like Bai six.

"We're looking for fairy tale books, right?" Tang Erda looked carefully through the front desk directory, "Residents with children are more likely to have fairy tale books in their rooms, right?"

"There are three residents with children on the first floor and also on the third floor."

Tang Erda turned to Bai Liu with the address book in her hand, "Shall we go up and look for it?"

Bai Liu nodded, "Let's go."

The search for the fairy tale book was not difficult and as soon as Tang Erda pushed open the door to the second room, they found a fairy tale book on the gold dusted table top without any problems.

"The name of this one is [The Land of the Gods' Favoured Gold]." Muke took the book and read the words on it, then looked up at everyone, "This should be the one."

"You translate and we'll listen." Bai Liu sat down on the small bench next to the sound and assumed a posture of attentive listening.

"I don't always get all the flips right." Muke took a deep breath, "But I try."

He turned the first page of the heavy fairy tale book, which was covered in gold dust.

"A long, long time ago, perhaps as long as a thousand years, there was a beautiful seaside country called Gloren, beside the Gulo Sea."

Meanwhile, Georgia stood in the palace, his eyes downcast at a place he knew and yet was unfamiliar with - the land of Gloren, which he had sunk with his own hands after ten years, the largest and most expensive heresy he had guarded on the sea for a whole decade, his only, unforgettable homeland.

This palace, this gorgeous palace sprinkled with gold dust, was where he was born and brought up, and he remembers when he was ten years old and the whole country celebrated his birth, the young man standing outside the palace terrace, standing on his tiptoes and looking down from beside the fence that was higher than he was, and the square was filled with his people cheering for his growth.

They set off fireworks, waved gold ground into gold dust, and called his name loudly and affectionately.

" Georgia!"

" Georgia!"

Gold dust and fireworks spilled over Georgia's shoulders, and the people's eyes reflected the best glow in the world as he held onto the railing in a daze, looking at the glitz and glamour and murmuring softly, "Am I really worth all that they've done for me?"

His father, the king of Gloren, laughed and held him by the shoulders: "You are the crown prince of Gloren."

"You are the king who will lead them to a brighter golden age in the future, who will protect them and uphold them."

"You certainly deserve it all!"

"But what if ....." Little Georgia clenched her fists hesitantly, "I can't do it right?"

"You won't do badly." The king stroked his forehead lovingly, "You are the best of princes, I know it, you may look cold and harsh but you are actually a good boy who has been responsible from the time you knew how to behave, and your greatest fear is to fail these people who are so eagerly waiting for you."

"And he who has such fears will surely make a good king."

"Hey." Seeing Georgia's ever-present frown, the king awkwardly stroked his brow open, "My boy, do you remember that fairy tale?"

"When the day does come that you don't do well, we are a nation of gold favoured by God and we can still go to God for help."

"But what if God doesn't help us?" Georgia couldn't hide his worry, which made him look a bit teenage, "No one will help us all the time for no reason, God helps us and will definitely make us pay for it."

"How can that be?" The king laughed innocently, "The whole point of God's existence is to make his followers happy who believe in him!"

"Captain?" Chrissy inquired softly, "What's wrong with you?"

"The system prompted us to find the fairy tale book and you led us all the way here, is this a place you know well?"

--The existence of Heretic 0073 is a top secret of the Three Bureaus, and apart from Georgia and Lu Yizhan, almost no one knows what Heretic 0073 looks like.

Georgia closed his eyes, gathered his thoughts, and when he opened them, he was the same calm and dignified captain of the Third Bureau again, "Yes."

"I remember that there is a book of fairy tales here, but I forget exactly where it is, so go and search elsewhere in the palace."

"Yes, Captain!"

Several members of the team responded and then trained themselves to start carpet searching the entire palace.

And after a brief stop, Georgia headed for the prince's bedchamber in the palace, walking with the same steady dignity as on the day he became crown prince, past the high platform where he was cheered by the people, past the meadow where he learned archery, past the flower bed where Armand had been knocked, and finally to his bedchamber.

Everything here is as stereotypically standard as it was then, with thirteen bows and arrows of different sizes hanging on the wall in harnesses, and a huge bookshelf opposite containing various books in separate categories, many of which have been thumbed through and have gold leaf bookmarks pinned inside - specially made for him by his father.

When he was young, he would fall asleep reading them. In order to force himself to read more, Georgia secretly hid an ice basin under his bed, and when he became sleepy, he would stand barefoot on the ice basin for a while, relying on the cold temperature to keep him awake and force himself to read more.

After Armand found out and reported it to his father, Georgia was punished by his angry father.

[The body is fundamental to the rule of the state.] His father rebuked him sternly, [You are so eager and utilitarian to learn things that you cannot remain calm in such a peaceful environment, how can you make the people follow you without fear?]

At that time Georgia was punished for not being allowed to read, and although he received his punishment on his knees and was calm, he was also uncontrollably anxious.

-- as if something would happen to this kingdom, which is favoured by God's favour, if one minute of his gaze were missing.

At that time, the only book Georgia was allowed to read was the fairy tale book, The Land of Gold for the Families of the Gods.

This book is a household name for fairy tales in Gloren country.

But Georgia didn't like the fairy tale book and he resisted reading it, but he read it anyway at that time.

Georgia went to the bed and slowly sat down on the bed covered in gold dust, and on the bedside table was a Quan family blessing, which he wiped clean and saw Armand, only a few months old, and himself, with a stern face but still with a smile in his eyes, his father, who was smiling a little foolishly, and his mother, who was sitting in a chair, smiling brightly. mother.

-- Armand was four years old when their mother died, after which their father fell into disarray and gave the title of Crown Prince to himself in advance.

So this is one of their few Quan family portraits, and one of his favourites, so it was kept by his bedside, but when it sank Gloren, he was in such a hurry to carry a sleeping Armand that he didn't even have time to take it.

I never thought I would finally see it again after so long.

Georgia was quiet, then he turned over his pillow and saw the book of fairy tales that he had hidden under it, and he turned to the second page:.

" The people of Gloren are industrious and kind, and although the country they possess is not vast and the land is not fertile, each one of them lives happily by their hard work."

"It was a time when everyone was after gold, but there were no gold mines in the Gloren country and they couldn't get it, so they ended up getting used to a smooth life and multiplying from generation to generation."

" The people in the kingdom of Gloren were so happy in spite of their poverty that this happiness attracted the attention of God, who came down to the then king of Gloren and smiled and said, "Will you make a bargain with me?"

"The king asked, God, we are a poor nation and have nothing to trade with you."

"God smiled and said, "Yes there is."

"-that is the joy that is in you."

"In exchange for the pleasure you deliver to me and the pain you pay, I give you an inexhaustible supply of gold, enough to last you a thousand years."

"But after a thousand years, you will pay me for the pain."

"And the king thought long and hard, and he summoned the nation, and asked the opinion of every one of them, and the nation rejoiced, and no one could hate gold, especially such gold as fell from heaven, and all agreed to the gods' bargain."

Muke turned to page six and continued reading softly.

" The Gloren country has changed forever."

"This formerly goldless land became a land of gold, where peasants dug everywhere and patches of gold appeared in the earth, fishermen fished out and the fish in their nets spat out stones that were gold and didn't even need to be forged anymore, and soon Gloren became the richest country in the world."

"But this riches attracted many nations with evil intentions towards Gloren, who wanted to wage war against it and rob it of its gold, and the wise king, in his desperation, found the gods again and said to them, O God Almighty, please hide us and leave only a small opening where the gold can be sold, and it will be done. "

"God agreed, and he hid Gloren from the world, and no one will ever again be able to search out the land of Gloren."

"And so, after a thousand years of peace and plenty, it was time for Gloren to pay the price."

Muke turns another page and the fairy tale book ends.

The Lost Land of Gold

The moment Muke finished reading the fairy tale, everyone's system panel popped up.

[System Alert: Congratulations on unlocking the main quest]

[This is the Land of Gold that is paying the price. Please find the key item Hourglass of Time, turn the pain of the Land of Gold into tears in the Hourglass, and when the Hourglass is filled with pain to the satisfaction of the gods, sacrifice it to the gods at the offering table, complete the transaction, reverse time, and turn the Land of Gold back to its original state.]

"The Hourglass of Time?" Mu Sicheng asked with a quirked brow, "What is this?"

"It should be one of the props that can reverse time in this copy." Liu Jiayi replied, her brows frowning. Liu Jiayi replied, her brows furrowing lightly, "..... reversing time, the effect of this prop seems to be similar to that Golden Dawn captain's skill."

"Would it matter?"

"Skills are derived from the core of the player's desires, and props are gods, or systemic set pieces." Bai Liu rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "This is the first time I've seen a time prop and a time skill in a game, and if the two are somehow related, it would stand to reason that one's desires would be influenced by an already existing setting object to derive a similar item."

"Then by that inference, that captain of Golden Dawn, Georgia, maybe this country has some kind of close connection that we don't know about yet."

"If this is true, it could be a breakthrough, but it's also an advantage for them." Bai Liu spreads his hands, "They must be more familiar with the map than we are, for example, we don't know where to find this so-called Hourglass of Time now, but that Georgia captain most likely does."

"But we're not all clueless." Muke looked up, he turned the fairy tale book in his hand to the first few pages, "The Hourglass of Time is not explicitly mentioned in this fairy tale, but it is a drawn fairy tale book, and the illustrations here -"

Muke points to the somewhat childlike illustrations in the fairy tale book: "It's about the time when God made a deal with the kingdom of Gloren a thousand years ago, see? The thing that God handed to the king when the deal was set up."

"This should be the proof of their deal."

Bai Liu's eyes swept up and his eyes stopped at the hand of the god on the screen -

--In the hand of the -god is a finely crafted grey and black hourglass.

Meanwhile, at the other end.

"The Hourglass of Time?" Chrissy stared at the silent Georgia, "Captain, since you're familiar with this place, do you know what it is and where it's hidden?"

Georgia was quiet for a moment, and when she spoke again Chrissy could no longer detect traces of emotion, so calm that there was no trace of a ripple: "I know."

"It's just that place is a bit dangerous, so tell the rest of the team to get the mental bleach ready and come with me."

"Spiritual bleach?" Chrissy quickly trailed off, "Is that a very mentally polluted place?"

"Well, it's not just mental contamination, it's physical contamination as well." Georgia raised her eyes, "The Hourglass of Time is in the gold mines."

Unlike the one Bai Liu and the others had, Georgia's fairy tale book [The Golden Land of the Gods] did not end abruptly when the price was paid in a thousand years, nor did it say anything about the Hourglass of Time, but rather it described in detail The book does not end when the price is paid in a thousand years.

"Father." Young Georgia looked up and asked her father in disbelief, "Why is my fairy tale book different from the ones other people in the market are reading."

-- one might even say that it was a very different kind of fairy tale.

The fairy tales on the market for children to read are sweet and innocent, and God loves the world, but in the book of fairy tales that

Georgia gets, God does not love the world, and is even a little scary, for the gods smile and say to the king, then I will come and collect the price of suffering from all your people, and you will make their tears fill this hourglass, or the suffering will never stop.

The king at the time agreed and asked God what kind of tears it would take to fill this hourglass.

The gods told the king that the hourglass could only be filled by tears shed in a single moment of pain that could be worth a thousand years of gold, and that the moment the tears fell into the hourglass, the hourglass reversed with time, the transaction was complete and the pain ceased.

Georgia wonders, "Does this hourglass really exist?"

The king was silent for a moment: "It exists, people just don't know about it."

"Why not let everyone know about it?" Georgia shook her head disapprovingly, "All the fairy tales people see talk about God giving gold and blessings because he loves the world, and they believe they are the ones favored by God to live so ....."

"Happiness, is it?" The king stroked Georgia's head with a sigh, "But what good would it do to tell them the truth, to tell them that there really is an hourglass that needs to be filled with pain and tears, except to make them less happy?"

Georgia was stunned.

"In everyone's mind, Gloren has always been a land of gold, isolated from the rest of the world." The king stood up propped up on the edge of his bed, he went to the window, bathed in the moonlight, looked out over the lush and peaceful land and sighed ruefully, "It was a fairytale land, everyone believed they lived in a fairytale, that they were favoured by the gods and that there would never be a moment of calamity."

"That's why fairy tale books sell so well in this country."

"Even the fairy tales here." The king looked back at Georgia, "all stopping at the moment when a thousand years have to pay the price."

"It's not that I deliberately kept people in the dark by cutting out the second half of the fairy tale to deceive them; the fairy tale book that was introduced nationally at the beginning was the one you're holding."

The king stretched his hands helplessly: "But the people fiercely resisted, they felt that fairy tales were not like that, that the Land of Gold would not be like that, that everyone should be hopeful and happy and live forever carefree in a fairy tale, so I cut out the second half and the fairy tale was pushed out."

"But it's just ....." Georgia shook his head very gently, his education had prevented him from saying anything critical of the popular outcry, but then he really didn't agree with it and frowned, "It's just ....."

"Just fooling yourself, aren't you?" The king laughed bitterly, "Sometimes I think there is nothing wrong with such self-deception, and I also deceive myself when I am happy, by lying to myself that the thousand years will really not come and that the gods will really favour our country forever."

"But that thousand years will really come." Georgia replied with certainty, "Just as the gold will come as promised, so will the pain."

The king looked at Georgia in bewilderment for a long time, then turned his head to hold the fence and lowered it to murmur, "..... Georgia, your lack of escape from pain makes me ashamed of myself."

"When I became king, when I was given the crown, I was also given an hourglass."

"Every king of Gloren is given a crown, but few know that with the succession of kingship comes an hourglass of time, which is said to have been passed down from generation to generation from the first kings."

"On the day I became king, my last one was already dying; he had been suffering from a long and painful illness and, on his deathbed, asked me to put the hourglass to his face and, struggling to squeeze down the tears, finally shed a single drop, which he watched expectantly and ecstatically as it dripped into the hourglass."

"He longed for the tear to fill the hourglass and end that millennial bargain, but unfortunately, the tear fell into the hourglass like a drop of water into the sea, without a sound."

"The last king died in agony and dismay, and before he died, he held his hand in his death grip and told me that the millennium was coming, and that it was our duty that the king must fill the hourglass before the gods came down to extract the suffering of the people."

"-[It is the king's failing in his duty never to let his subjects who have been brought up in fairy tales disbelieve them], so he told me."

The king turned his head, his eyes a little red and his lips quivering, "So on the night I lost your mother, I thought of this hourglass and I tried to fill it, but I shed tears all night and so many tears fell into this hourglass that it didn't even fill the gaps."

"I began to fear this hourglass, which even the tears shed by those who suffer from death and the loss of someone dear to them cannot bear to fill, and I do not know what other pain in this world can fill this hourglass."

"So I fled, and I cowardly hid this hourglass in the mines that gave birth to gold."

"After hiding the hourglass in the mines, I began to have nightmares often." A fleshly trepidation appeared on the king's face, "I would dream of that god."

"He smiled and told me that the 1,000-year appointment was coming and that he would descend upon the world, remove the shield and lower the gold production to collect our pain."

"Then let's remove the shields and reduce the gold production." The young Georgia displayed a calmness beyond reason, "We shouldn't have to trade the suffering of our citizens for this gold that doesn't belong to us, when we get over this, everything will be fine again."

"It won't get better!" The king shed tears, he became a little hysterical, his face was one of undisguised fear, "When there is no more gold, everything will be spoiled to the core!"

"We've been living a thousand years sleeping on gold, everyone is living in a fairy tale, no one can imagine what it would be like to not be able to dig for gold underground, by that time everyone would be starving and freezing to death!"

"I must find a way to fill the hourglass before the 1,000-year appointment comes." His father said with tears in his eyes.

Unfortunately, when the last moment came, the hourglass still wasn't filled.

Georgia lowered her eyes, "Go to the mine and look for the hourglass."

Meanwhile, at the other end.

The dust he inhaled caused Mu Sicheng to choke and cough several times, and he covered his mouth and nose as he brushed aside a building's notice board.

They are also running maps to gather information on the possible location of the Hourglass of Time.

The good news is that there was no enemy interference and they swept the map quickly, the bad news is that there was no enemy interference and they mostly went in the wrong direction.

But the map is so big that Mu Sicheng is a very fast mover, but even at full speed, he can't run to any side of the border for a while. With his headset, he runs forward while reporting information to the back, and he collects information and processes it at the back, so that the map can be scanned much faster.

"Saw a departmental bulletin board." Mu Sicheng choked and coughed louder and louder, "Ahem, filmed it and sent it to Muke, check it out."

Soon Muke's noisy voice came over Mu Sicheng's headset, "It's a bulletin board for the Gold Development Agency."

"The Gold Development Department?" Mu Sicheng questioned suspiciously, "What kind of peculiar department is that?"

"Not sure, but from the content of the announcement, it would appear to be the official department that manages the distribution and operation of gold." Muke explained calmly, "There were three announcements on this bulletin board."

"The first is the regrettable announcement that the country's 57 mining sites, seven of which are large, have seen a steady decline in gold mining for two years running, with the last six months even producing less than a tonne of gold in total to even keep the country running."

"The second announcement was to announce the recent suspension of the welfare policy of 600g of free gold per adult citizen per month."

"The last announcement is ....." Muke's voice became hesitant for a moment, "Hold on a moment, this one is smudged and I'm having a bit of trouble reading it."

Mu Sicheng hugged his chest and hmmed as he scanned the rest of his eyes to the last announcement on the noticeboard that he had wiped clean - it was actually understandable why Muke couldn't see this one, it was badly smudged and marked with red marker with lots of exclamation marks, dense and emotional looking.

"I've probably read the last announcement clearly." Muke's voice was still hesitant, "but I'm not sure I translated it correctly."

"The announcement specifically states that the heir to the throne of Gloren (i.e. the Grand Prince) insists on pursuing cooperation with the Heresy Authority, demanding that the Heresy Authority be stationed in the country of Gloren, sternly claiming that the gold produced in the mines is heretical, that it will have an adverse effect on people, that private mining is forbidden, that people should stay away from the mines, and that the mines are ready to be handed over to the Heresy Authority for to deal with it."

"The scribbled text on it would have been written on by an emotionally charged member of the public at the time."

"It's [Georgia traitors out of Gloren Nation!] and [the Heretic's Bureau is here to steal our gold, get out of Gloren country!] "

"[How can gold production be declining?! Has the rest of the gold produced from the mine been hidden by the traitor Georgia, give us back the hidden gold!"]

"[Georgia go to hell!!!]. ."

After a few moments, Bai Liu's calm voice came over the headset, "Looks like we've figured out the most likely place to hide the hourglass."

" Mu Sicheng, get the mental bleach ready, note the time limit for skill use and go to the mine."

"Where is the mine?" Mu Sicheng asked.

Bai Liu's voice came out of his headset, "You break into the Gold Distribution Department, which manages gold distribution and should have a map and location of the gold mines inside."

"OK." Mu Sicheng responded, turning around and violently kicking open the door, and was greeted by a huge amount of gold dust, which Mu Sicheng quickly covered his mouth and nose, but still inhaled some of it and began to choke and cough violently, swatting it away, half-smiling, and walking into the gold hair office.

The ground floor of the Golden Hair Office is very open, as wide as a stadium, and the height of the floor is estimated to be six or seven metres, with a magnificent octagonal ceiling hanging from the centre of the ceiling, crystal pendants hanging from the eight corners, with ribbons scattered in eight directions, connected to the floor, silk rosy ribbons covered with gold dust, and gold sculptures of animals in different shapes in the hall, beautiful, like some kind of celebration. The hall is also decorated with gold sculptures of animals in different shapes, as if it were the venue of some kind of celebration.

Mu Sicheng took a picture and sent it over to Liu Jiayi who tsked: "A department that manages money is so romantic, this country is really ....."

"Naive." Bai Liu's calm voice took over, " Mu Sicheng, get close and take a picture of these sculptures for me to see."

"Good." Mu Sicheng leaned in close to take a picture of the dog's golden sculpture for Bai Liu to see, but as he did so, he was keenly aware that something was wrong, "This dog ....."

The dog is wearing a collar, its mouth is wide open, its fur is well defined, it is crouched on the ground with its tongue out, looking in a certain direction, as if waiting for its owner, its eyes can be seen turning in an arc, but it just stops so suddenly, so lifelike that it is a little frightening - it is no longer like an ingenious sculpture, but like a real pet dog frozen in gold.

"Gold is not suitable for sculpture because it is too soft and difficult to carve very fine lines." Bai Liu's unhurried voice came through, "That's why the average craftsman doesn't purposely make gold sculptures either, as it's very difficult to produce fine work."

"So ....." Tang Erda asked hesitantly, "the dog is most likely ....."

"There are not enough clues or information to be sure." Bai Liu skimmed lightly, " Mu Sicheng, don't touch."

Mu Sicheng stopped his hand from touching and scratched his head, "How did you know I was going to touch it?"

"What you must be thinking is that if this dog is a real dog being solidified, then most likely it is a monster, and if you unlock the monster book after touching it and let the dog attack you, we can identify the dog, right?" Bai Liu asked calmly and rhetorically, "But have you ever thought that if the dog is really a monster, do you think there will only be such a monster in such a big hair department?"

"Be careful when you go upstairs so you don't bump into any other statues."

Mu Sicheng paused for a moment as he looked towards the stairs hidden behind him and slowly but carefully made his way over.

Behind him, the eyes of the golden dog, which had been motionless, moved slowly a little, and a drop of saliva rolled off its outstretched tongue, which turned into drops of gold the moment it landed along its fangs.

There are also some animal statues in the corridor, a squirrel and a bird on the windowsill and two cats in the corridor, all of which Mu Sicheng carefully jumped over and photographed and sent to the large group to see.

"How strange, why are there no human sculptures?" Muke ponders the question, "It's all animals."

"Maybe it's because no one is at Goldfarb." Mu Sicheng replied after looking around, "There's a lot of golden dust falling on all the stairs in the front of the place, things have been emptied, it feels like no one has been here for a while, and the dog from before had the feeling of being a stray."

"Which means that this hairdresser's office has been empty for a long time, causing many stray animals to move in." Muke pondered, "and then turned into golden eagles here."

Mu Sicheng kicked open an office door, pried open a desk drawer and rummaged through it to find a map: "I found the map of the mine, do I need to look for other clues?"

"Not for now." Bai Liu ordered in a quiet voice, "Come out first, it's no accident that animals turn into golden eagles here, don't stay in a place like this until you know for sure."

"Is there a drop in life and spirit value?"

Mu Sicheng flipped sharply out of the windowsill to check his whereabouts and tapped on the system panel: "None of them."

There was a moment of silence across the headset, and Muke's slightly puzzled voice came through, "Neither do we."

"So, it's neither mental alienation nor a drop in vitality, how did these animals become golden eagles?"

"Is there a high concentration of gold dust in the hairdresser's office?" Bai Liu asked.

"It was high." Mu Sicheng replied quickly, "I was choking as soon as I got in."

"It should be related to this thing." Liu Jiayi's voice came through, "We found some masks on our side at the hospital, but it didn't work, these gold powders seem to be so fine that they feel like they can be sucked in even with the masks on, we found some information at the hospital and summed up some information to talk to you about."

"Many of the hospital's recent medical records are of miners." Muke explains calmly, "The miners here seem to be earning a lot of money, staying in very nice wards and using the most advanced treatments, and reading the notes on the medical records, these miners have been using the best protection and technology since mining and there have been no major problems, but after a certain point in time, the gold minerals here started to decline and the Gold Development Agency introduced a series of layoff strategies and the miners lost their jobs in large numbers and the population was very upset."

"Some time after that, about ten years ago, the date on the medical records, there was a sudden explosion of declining gold minerals, an increase in demand for miners, and many mines hired miners in large numbers."

"But it was also from that time onwards that miners became much more likely to develop occupational diseases."

"From the medical records over here it appears to be a disease of organ sclerosis, at first it was thought to be the same perennial miner's occupational disease as before, but then it became apparent that something was wrong and no amount of medication could alleviate this organ sclerosis, the number of miners suffering from the disease increased in large numbers and the seriously ill miners would even cough up some sort of golden red powder."

Liu Jiayi said, "We presume it would be bloodstained gold dust."

"Exactly." Muke nodded, "It would have been around that time that Georgia, the Grand Prince here, raised the heresy that the burgeoning gold mines were due to heretical influence and demanded that they be closed down and handed over to the Heretic Three Bureau to deal with, causing outrage."

"So the day Georgia insisted on handing over the mine, all the people went to the mine to stop it." Bai Liu continued calmly, "The people of the Gloren State did not trust the heretical processing bureau and they could not understand Georgia's choice."

"Even his father, the king of Gloren." Tang Erda let out a long, complicated sigh, "went to stop him too - we found a newspaper with the biggest headline calling on everyone to stop Georgia and giving him the title [The Great Prince of Treason]."

"They said Georgia was destined to become [a godforsaken man], and he would have been sixteen at the time."

"No wonder I didn't see anyone in the streets, they've all gone to the mines." Mu Sicheng came to his senses and then asked with some distress, "But there are so many points marked on the mining map, there are seven big mining points, which one is it?"

"There should be something else recorded on the DAC map of mining areas." Bai Liu asks, "Does it say anything about the recent increase in mineral extraction in each mining area?"

"Yes." Mu Sicheng replied.

Bai Liu: "Go to the nearest mine with the biggest increase."

"Let's see ah ....." Mu Sicheng looked carefully for a rummage, "Ah! 13 mine."

"Okay, you go first, keep quiet, we'll follow you closely." Bai Liu ordered calmly, "Don't clash with Georgia's army until I arrive."

Mu Sicheng: "OK!"

13 Mining.

Georgia stood on a treacherous hill, untouched by grass and covered in gold dust, through which some black mineral soil could be faintly seen, and looked down at the derelict tracks and wagons at the foot of the hill - once the most prosperous mining area in the country, with more than three thousand wagons a day and tracks that ran all the way to the centre of the city below the King's Castle.

After a long winter break, the first mining starts each spring, with excited miners driving the ore wagons out of the caves and transporting them across the snowy plains to the King's Castle below.

Everyone would grind the first load of gold mined into gold dust and scatter it cheerfully under the castle, celebrating the arrival of another carefree, fairytale spring in the land of gold with him and his father standing on top of the castle.

What an extravagant memory that he was laughing with them at that time, his pupils reflecting the golden dust falling from the sky - for a long time he thought this was what spring would look like when it arrived.

The gold will be transported in a steady stream to the Gold Development Agency, which will plan the gold to be sold for trade. They will collect information, plan and calculate the amount of gold to be sold every month and every year, within a range that will not devalue the gold outside, in exchange for goods that will make the whole country happy.

The Gold Development Agency, the Gloren's export to the outside world, is the only place where the entire Gloren country communicates with the outside world, and is known as the [Window to Gloren] and was once the most respected institution in the entire country.

Georgia once entered the service and relied on his ability to reach the position of Deputy Director of the General Administration, he had access to many core secrets, and it was through this window that he learned of the existence of the Heretical Authority.

Georgia at the time did not approve of the GAO's approach and questioned the chief, who was older than his father and had managed the GAO for half a century: "Why was some of the gold not left as an emergency reserve when it was planned?"

"The amount of gold issued to nationals and for foreign transport can both be reduced appropriately."

"Why should we keep it?" The Chief Commissioner looked at him with a suspicious look, "Your Royal Highness, we have to make the best life possible for each of our citizens with the gold that we can extract, they can't live that well if we keep that much gold."

"But ....." Georgia clenched his fists and he bowed his head, "Gold, there comes a time when it runs out."

"Ha ha, how so?" The Chieftain laughed uproariously as if he had heard a great joke, "The waters of the Gulo Sea will dry up, the rice fields of the Gloren will wither, but only the gold-"

"- is inexhaustible."

"That day will not come." The Chieftain looked at the gloomy prince and winked playfully, "Hey, future king, cheer up, is it the gold and gold dust mined from the spring carts that didn't fall to you this year?"

The Chief Minister patted the silent Georgia on the shoulder and said with a loving smile, "Don't say such things about reducing the gold given to the people, the people of Gloren love you so much that they would all cry out in sadness if they heard that."

The Lost Land of Gold

Around the mine site.

Mu Sicheng's movements began to slow, and he looked cautiously at the gold sculptures gathered at the entrance to the mine not far away, moving his headset to his lips and reporting in a low voice, "Human sculptures in sight."

Having said that, he took a photo and transmitted it.

The human gold sculptures in the photograph are framed in various poses at the entrance to the mine, their faces and expressions very agitated and grim, some of them holding banners and appearing to raise their arms in shouting.

"The banner reads [Never hand over the gold mine]." Muke translated, "There were also some curse words, which I won't translate here."

"I'm slightly surprised, actually."

Muke pondered, "I read in the papers that after a period of decline, there had been a second burst of growth in gold, and the map Mu Sicheng found of the recent increase in gold confirmed this, that there must be something wrong with this second increase, otherwise there would not be a large number of new miners with strange organ sclerosis. It is because of this second increase that Georgia's resistance to handing over the mines has increased so much that the population, seeing the promise of increased gold, is unlikely to agree to a handover again."

"But here's the thing ....."

"It's written in the fairy tale that the god will only supply gold for a thousand years." Bai Liu picked up calmly, "If it was the god we know, he would have stopped supplying gold instantly when the one thousand year covenant was up, as per the deal, there is no way he would have continued to supply gold, this secondary explosion of gold minerals is not normal."

"And there's something wrong with Georgia handing over the gold mines to the Bureau of Heresy so decisively."

"He was a prince at the time, and even if he had realised there was a problem with the minerals, the most logical thing to do would have been to shut it down and investigate it himself, not to so easily hand over the source of the nation's dependence to an outside organisation like the Bureau of Heresy, which would also have been more likely to gain support."

"There was room for manoeuvre and Georgia's approach could have been less aggressive." Bai Liu pauses, "but it should have been some kind of third-party factor that fuelled the conflict between the two sides."

"This third-party factor must have been something that Georgia could not have prevented, a force majeure factor." Liu Jiayi ponders for a moment before continuing, "And this force majeure factor would have been introduced by someone from within, and with a lot of support, otherwise Georgia would not have chosen to work externally."

"And this force majeure factor has led Georgia to believe that only the Heresy Processing Authority can handle ....."

At this point in the inference, Liu Jiayi and Bai Liu both stop for a moment.

The specifics of this force majeure factor are called out.

Bai Liu calmly stated the answer, "There were people in the Gloren country at the time who once again sought cooperation and deals with God to keep the gold mine producing."

The 13 mines are located in the interior of the mountains, and from the blasted exit of the mountain, a long-established track is followed down by a mine train, and on both sides it looks like some kind of relic treasure, full of heaps and heaps of gold, even excavated without much effort to refine it, which is already of considerable purity.

But twelve years ago, such a scenario, which had lasted for a thousand years, no longer existed in Gloren.

After a long winter break, the first carloads of ore mined in the spring did not even fill half the wagons, and the population looked on in fear and confusion at the miners sitting in the wagons, all waiting for the first carloads of gold ore of the spring to be ground into gold dust and sprinkled high into the sky - a rite of passage for the arrival of spring at Gloren.

But that year it was cancelled, and everyone knew that with such barren output they could not perform such extravagant ceremonies.

It was a sign of sorts that spring would never come for Gloren.

The gold minerals were declining month by month, the streets were full of unemployed miners and crying children, the monthly gold distributions from the Gold Board were decreasing by half, and his father sat at the fence overlooking Gloren, which seemed to be heading into an endless winter, and couldn't sleep through the night.

But Georgia was unusually calm, knowing that this day would come eventually.

A Gloren without gold would be a disaster in everyone's eyes, but in Georgia's eyes it might be an opportunity, an opportunity to get everyone out there.

Everyone has been trapped in this gold-mining land for too long, a thousand years, long enough to fear the outside world, which of course does have things to fear, but is much better than a Gloren without gold.

Georgia, who had already made her record, said calmly, "Father, leave Gloren to me," as if she had grown up overnight, tapping her father on the shoulder the night he fell to his knees and hugged him in tears.

His father looked up with teary eyes, "Do you have the means to make Gloren produce gold again?"

"I don't." Georgia replied calmly, "But, Father, talent is a nation's most precious gold."

"We are not at the end of our tether, the mines are still producing gold, we are preserving it, opening the Gloren window, cooperating, communicating and fighting with the outside world, and in the process, the will of everyone will become strong and our country will become stable and strong. "

"..... You let me think about it again." His father said in a trance, "Think again."

Georgia guessed that there would be a lot of resistance to what he wanted to do, but it wasn't absolutely impossible, though perhaps naivety might be in the bones of every Gloren - he was naive enough to think that God would never again come to this no longer happily-ever-after, fairy-tale believing Gloren country.

It is also naively forgotten that the pain of a thousand years of gold equivalents is not covered by the howls of a child.

As Georgia tensed up and carefully pursued his filing, he heard strange noises coming from the court and some ministers began to frequent his father's dark conversations night after night, mistakenly believing that his filing had attracted the attention of these old-fashioned ministers and objecting to his father, which Georgia did not care for as the filing was well underway.

Until one day his father found him, clutching his hand in apprehension and excitement, "We have found God!"

"He's willing to trade with us again!"

Georgia's mind was blank for that moment and could only subconsciously ask in return, "God?"

"Yes!" His father was so excited he was almost jumping up and down, "Our high priest heard from somewhere in the Church that there was a guest who would sell islands suspended in the sea that resembled the god we described, and it took a lot of work on the part of the high priest and the other man was finally willing to meet with us!"

"He's coming to Gloren today, and I've got the DAC meeting him at the country gate!"

"Let's not talk about whether he's a god or not." Georgia pushed down the hand of his excited father shaking his shoulder and, holding onto the table and trying his best to remain calm, he looked up and questioned icily, "Even if he is, at this moment God is here to collect the price of our suffering, so what are you going to do? What can you do?"

His father became a little uneasy and timid under Georgia's gaze: "..... The customer said he could deal with us again."

"What's the deal ....." Georgia had to use almost all her strength to control herself from roaring so out of temper and instead asked calmly, "What is it?"

"He can supply us with gold for a while longer, through a special kind of stone [the gold point stone]." His father explained somewhat nervously, "We've tested this stone and just by burying it in the ground, the gold minerals do increase more and no clear side effects have been found, so you don't have to worry so much!"

"There's no gold in this world for nothing, Father." Georgia closed her eyes, "What does he want?"

His father said after a long silence, "Pain."

"He said he would charge us with the pain when the time came."

"When the time comes, when is it?" Georgia opened her eyes and asked the question softly, unable to contain the disappointment in his eyes.

"At least it's not today, not this year!" His father began to get angry too, pounding on the table, "At least he's bringing the golden stones so that our people can have a good spring this year! At least the children will be able to lie at home this year listening to fairy tales and sleeping peacefully! At least tonight, after the pointing stones are buried in the mines, I won't be hearing the cries of people at night who are afraid they won't survive!"

" Georgia, why do you always have to think so far ahead!"

"Can't even handle what's in front of us, so far away, does it really matter to us?!"

"What if it's another thousand years after the next one when he comes to collect the pain?!"

Georgia was silent, her fists clenched tight, while the king aggressively questioned, pointing out the window and looking directly at Georgia: "Do you want to see these people struggling outside?"

"If there is no more gold this spring, by the time winter comes, they will be starving to death; do you want them to starve alive this winter?"

"Put my strategy and your strategy together and who do you think the public will support?!"

Georgia took a deep breath, his chest heaving violently, "But ....."

"No buts!" The king sternly slapped the table, "Keeping the people in front of you alive is the most important thing, all your far-reaching concerns, wait until it's done!"

Looking at Georgia's pursed lips, the king paused and softened his tone: "Take a pause from those strategies you've been using lately."

"You're tired from doing all this too, so take some time ..... to rest and relax."

Georgia walked out of the palace with nothing on his face, as if his soul had been taken out of his body, lost in thought as he walked through the streets, surrounded by closed shops, daily necessities that had gone up in price, and people who were crossing their fingers and crying, counting how long they had left to spend their gold.

His face was so well known to many that whenever he walked past a person, one would ask him expectantly.

"When will the gold be issued, Your Royal Highness?"

"When does the mine resume?"

" Gloren wouldn't be without gold, would he?"

"God will not abandon us, will he?"

In front of eyes so innocent as to be almost a little frightened, Georgia opened his mouth and not a last word came out, his heart beating violently in his chest, his blood tumbling with some stirring emotion - an emotion he had learned to control when he was very young, before he learned to draw a bow.

The Dauphin was not to be impulsive or outwardly emotional, his every move had to be in line, elegant, decent, and capable of being nationally oriented, without any inappropriate behaviour, so to do all this Georgia trained himself almost rigorously and did not cry after he was five years old - because that would not be decent.

While Armand would cry from the fall, Georgia would just pat his bleeding knee and get up, pick up his tearful brother and walk to the palace as if nothing had happened.

"Don't run so fast next time, Armand." Little Georgia calmly reprimanded her brother, "Not a prince in sight."

Armand sobbed and wondered, "Brother, you fell down too, don't you hurt?"

Georgia paused, "It hurts."

Armand asked in a small voice, "So brother, why aren't you crying?"

"Because if even the crown prince of this country is crying over this little pain." Georgia tilted her head as he looked up at the illuminated Gloren, her voice soft, "And who will bear the cost of the deal with God for them?"

"Then, then I won't cry either." Armand said somewhat sheepishly.

"No need." Georgia paused, "You're just a little kid, you're not a crown prince, it's normal for kids to cry."

"Just don't cry in front of people, Armand."

At this moment, Georgia, the Crown Prince, who never loses his temper in front of people and who is known as the "Golden Light", took a deep breath and turned towards the palace.

He ducked his head and hurried past the crowd of people watching him expectantly, teeth clenched, eyes a little red, a strange emotion rushing through his chest.

--Why don't people want to put up with a little more winter for the sake of the country?

Georgia burst into the palace, and, without looking away from the guards who bowed to him, he rarely returned the courtesy, but went straight into his room, took a most powerful bow from the wall, and headed without looking back towards the gates of the country, which were guarded by the Golden Hair.

He clutched his longbow, his eyes cold and stern.

--whether it was a so-called god or some strange guest, he would not allow the other to set foot in Gloren's country.

This is his land, this is his people, and no matter how naive they are, it is not the turn of others to exploit their suffering in the name of gold.

Georgia gripped her longbow and stood atop the towering walls at the entrance and exit, which were unguarded, for the soldiers had gone to meet the noble guest, or rather, the gods, and even on a normal day there were only three or four soldiers here, for the gods had hidden Gloren, and no ordinary person could enter here without being shown the way by someone inside the Golden Hair Office.

And today everyone was waiting inside, which meant that there was no one to lead the way and that guest could come in on his own.

No outsider had ever set foot in the Gloren without being led, so it was no wonder that his father was certain that this strange guest was a god.

The high priest waited by the entrance with apprehension and anxiety, the king was silent, his lips white, and the guards looked expectantly at the entrance, but after waiting for about half an hour, there was finally a movement from the entrance.

The sound of a man's leather shoes on the hard ground came slowly, and he brushed aside the dense trees at the entrance to reveal a masked face, his voice laced with laughter, "I've been heading this way since I got off the Sky Island over there, and I hope you don't mind if I don't change my attire."

"I'm not late, am I?"

The man's proficiency in Gloren startled the high priest, who drew a breath and bowed in fear: "Not late!"

"Greetings, hello." King Gloren stepped forward a little nervously and held out his hand, "I am King Gloren."

"I know." The masked man, or god, had a casual, smiling tone as he took off his own gloves and held out his hand to shake the king's, "You are the main person I deal with."

"You are very much like that king of a thousand years ago."

"Yes, is it?" The king smiled reluctantly, then asked with a shudder, "And the gold ....."

"Don't worry." The man held out his palm, a shiny, mottled wedge of ore hovering above it, and he spoke in a gentle tone, "I've brought the pointing stone."

"I've given you samples before, this is the genuine article, just bury this gold point stone into the vein and the gold mine will produce a constant stream as before."

"A steady stream of gold?" The king's voice trembled as he repeated the man's words.

"Yes, with the use of this pointing stone, your future kingdom will have an inexhaustible supply of gold." The man smiled and spread his hands, "This gold pointing stone is more powerful than the one that that king buried in the vein a thousand years ago, and in time, your streets will probably be covered with gold dust at all times, gold statues will be everywhere, and each person may be able to have gold as big as himself."

"Your golden age will come again."

"But be a bit careful when you bury it in there."

He smiled and warned, "This bit of gold stone is a fragile item, and it's all I have."

The king swallowed nervously and tried to reach for the pointing stone as the man reached out too, ready to deliver it.

At the moment of delivery, Georgia on the ramparts stood erect, her gaze stern as she drew the bowstring to her ear with two fingers, the wind whipping his high light brown ponytail loose, the metallic colour of the bowstring deepening the pupils of his dark and light brown eyes.

The sharp point of the bow reflected a strange dazzle of light, and Georgia's chest rose and fell violently as he clenched his teeth - probably the most indecent and impulsive thing he had done since he became Crown Prince.

Assault on a foreign guest.

Georgia loosened the bowstring, and the arrow shot out as swiftly as a thunderbolt from the clouds, piercing between the king and the god and pointing straight at the pointing stone!

The man seemed to sense something and quickly closed his palm and gripped the pointing stone, but the arrow wind thundered through his palm holding the pointing stone and blood dripped down.

"Aye aye aye." The man turned his head with a grin to Georgia, who was once again drawing her bow on the raised platform, "It seems your country, it seems, is not very welcoming to a businessman like me."

" Georgia ?!" The king looked in shock at Georgia on the platform, her eyes red with anger, and he reprimanded, glancing timidly at the god next to him who didn't look the least bit angry, "What are you doing! Get down from there!"

"Guards! Hold the Grand Prince down!"

The High Priest almost went into cardiopulmonary arrest as he asked in a panic, "Is the Pointing Stone all right?!"

"It's okay." The man gently opened his palm, which was empty, and said with a smile, "I put it away."

"Quickly!" The high priest greeted in a hurry, "Have the city's doctor come and bandage the guest's palm."

"No need." The man smiled and waved his hand, "It's nice to get hurt once in a while, I haven't been hurt in a long time."

The High Priest stopped in amazement and looked around breathlessly.

"That ..... man's tone took on a light laugh as he turned to Georgia, who was being forced down the wall by a group of guards, "The man who shot me with a bow and arrow, was that your Grand Prince? "

The king's back instantly tightened when he heard the man mention it, and he side-stepped slightly in the direction of the man looking at Georgia: "..... is my eldest son and is not disciplined, so I ask your guest not to take it personally."

"Why would I count, he's very interesting." The man smiled with amusement and made a polite request, "Can I talk to him?"

Looking at the man's still bleeding hand, the king hesitated and could only nod reluctantly in agreement, "..... I will have him come down and confess his fault to you, and I will chastise him myself when I return, so please do not be too harsh."

Georgia was pinned down in front of the man, his hands tied behind his back by the guards, and there was a look of blazing untamed submission in his eyes that was a far cry from the elegant and gentle appearance this prince had always displayed.

" Georgia ." The King's voice tightened as he sternly squeezed Georgia's raised head, "You have committed a felony by attacking a foreign guest!"

"Apologize to this guest!"

"I'll go back and collect my punishment, I'll accept any kind of heavy punishment." Georgia was forced to keep her head down, but her voice remained icy, "But I will not apologise."

"He's not a guest of Gloren's."

The king was in a hurry: " Georgia!!!"

"No need to be so harsh, let go of your hand." The man interrupted the king with a smirk, "Your name is Georgia, isn't it?"

The king let go of his hand and Georgia slowly raised her head and looked straight at the man without speaking.

"You have a very nice soul." The man laughed lightly, "It is surprising and pleasant to me to see such a soul still in such a country."

"As your reward for showing me such a worthy soul, then here's the deal: since you insist on saving this fairy-tale corrupted kingdom from me, the big bad guy you think you are, I'll give you a chance."

"Let's play a game."

The man waved his hand and the vanished pointing stone reappeared in his hand, its palm length stained with a hint of blood, floating in front of Georgia's eyes, giving off a warm, bright lustre like gold.

"In three days." The man chuckled softly, "In three days I will come here with this pointing stone, and if you can find a way to close all the mines and keep any of them from burying the pointing stone in the vein, I will leave with the pointing stone forever and never come to this kingdom again."

"But if you don't make it."

"- whether the pain of that nod to a thousand years ago, or the pain of this one now, when that time comes, the price of all the pain will be paid by you together."

"And your answer is?"

Georgia lifted her head, her brown eyes clear: "Good."

-- just as the king a thousand years ago naively agreed to a deal with God, so he naively agreed to a game with God.

and thought they would be victorious.

13 The heart of the mining area.

Mu Sicheng carefully made his way through the dense cluster of humanoid gold sculptures on the outskirts of the mine towards the mine car, reporting into his headset as he reached the edge of the track, "There are traces of erased gold dust on the track, it's still relatively new."

"That would be the trail that Georgia and the others left down there." Bai Liu said, "This proves we're on the right track, and if Georgia and the others came here too, then it can only mean that this is indeed where the Hourglass of Time was hidden."

"The mine is in the mountain and there are many gold sculptures at the entrance." Mu Sicheng surveyed the surroundings and reported in a whisper, "There are two tracks at the entrance to the mountain with mine cars on them, one of them must have been driven away by Georgia and they drove into the mine, I saw the drag marks of the mine car."

"The mine is very deep, I shone a light on it and all I could see was a lot of shiny gold in there, it was a bit shaky, I couldn't see the rest clearly, I guess I'll have to go in the mine cart to find out what's going on."

"Do I wait for you to come before I go inside, or do I go down first by myself?" Mu Sicheng asks.

Bai Liu didn't hesitate: "Wait for us, don't move around on your own and stay away from those statues."

"But ....." Mu Sicheng was a little agitated, and when he got agitated his lungs itched involuntarily and he started choking violently, "Ahem, Georgia, what if they get to the Hourglass of Time before we do? What do we do?"

"One step ahead then." Bai Liu was unmoved, "We're supposed to be the passive position in this copy, it's normal for them to get an advantage ahead of us, don't make a move when the information isn't equal early on, and besides, what's your best skill?"

Mu Sicheng is stunned.

"If they get it first." Bai Liu said calmly, "Then you steal it back, and with your movement and alertness, there shouldn't be many people in this game who can stop a you who's just trying to steal."

"Is that so?" An extremely shallow teenage voice came from deep within the mines, "I could be one of these people."

The blue-green butterfly flutters past Mu Sicheng, whose pupils are tightly constricted, its long, thin tail dropping a fine dusting of gold, and flutters past, landing on Armand's outstretched index finger and gently shaking its wings.

Mu Sicheng jerked his head over and he jumped back twice, his breath coming to a halt - he had just scouted this mine without noticing at all that there was a man hiding inside.

Armand hangs upside down from the mine, feet together, ear-length hair pinned on one side and hanging down on the other, eyes closed, wearing a pure white and gilt uniform, back straight, like a bat hanging from a rock and resting, and at this moment, finally disturbed by the errant traveller, slowly opening his eyes.

The brown pupils of his eyes reflect in silence the monkey's paw that has transformed. Mu Sicheng, who is showing his teeth to him.

The butterflies resting on the gloves of his white uniform began to flap faster.

Armand gently gathered his legs and dropped lightly from above the mine, not even a hair out of place, as he looked across at Mu Sicheng, his tone unperturbed: "It will not end well for you to be so impulsive and irritable when things go wrong, Mu Sicheng."

"You have the tone of one who wants me to tie my hands." Mu Sicheng flung out his monkey paws in displeasure, his pupils standing up in two thin peaks as he smiled provocatively, "But last time you had something stolen from me, isn't it a bit presumptuous to talk to me in that tone of voice?"

" Golden Dawn's ace recruit?"

"That time?" Armand dragged his jaw in a seemingly enlightened remembrance, "It was just a hairpiece, you didn't steal anything very important, and I didn't need to break ranks and waste time tangling with you."

"But now-"

Armand lifted his eyes and raised his arms to the right, and the butterfly rose from his right shoulder to meet the wind, its wings fluttering rapidly.

"- you are going to steal something that is extremely important to both my brother and my team."

"You can try and see if you can get past my protective layer and escape from the middle of my hurricane as you wish."

[System Alert: Player Armand uses the skill, Summon (Chain Hurricane)]

[This skill deals continuous damage to a player bound in a hurricane by chains until the hurricane stops, skill CD is one hour].

The still air began to move, and Mu Sicheng watched as a huge storm rose from the ground, sucking in all the dust around him, and gritted his teeth as he tried to make a break for it, only to be stopped by Bai Liu's cold command in his headset: "Run, Mu Sicheng, you can't afford Armand's skill damage on your life. "

"You're our ace in the hole, run as hard as you can and live until the end when I, the tactician, let you die, got it?"

"Got it!" Mu Sicheng nodded, he took one more look at the hurricane, gave a toothy middle finger and turned to scamper away.

"Hang him up, get us into the mines, don't let him and Georgia do a skill reset on the same map, and control Armand, that's your main goal for this one."

Mu Sicheng leapt from a high building, narrowly avoiding the hurricane that brushed his legs, and wiped the blood from his mouth as he fell, smiling wickedly: "A piece of cake."

A hurricane of wind, with layers of metal chains wrapped tightly around it, pursued Mu Sicheng as he ran on.

Liu Jiayi, who was travelling at full speed, suddenly turned his head in a certain direction, his lips pursed: "There's a noise in that direction, it's ....."

"It's Mu Sicheng." Bai Liu calmly answered, "He's lured away Armand, our first head-to-head with Golden Dawn, and it's a war of attrition, so we'll have to hurry."

"That should be mine 13 just ahead." Muke glanced at the picture, looked up at Bai Liu, "Below the mine is the bulk of Georgia's force, are we still going to keep our tactics?"

"Well." Bai Liu looked up at everyone in a circle, " Georgia is a strong sub and it's a tight group, so our basic tactic is to play on separate sides, that is, one to one, each person tries to hold back one player to put distance between them and Georgia, so that Georgia can't sub them and reduce the other team's advantage."

"Here's the problem with that tactic though." Tang Erda frowned, "If it's just one stall, it's a total stalemate, then both sides want an ace in place to break the stalemate."

"I believe Captain Georgia thought the same as I did." Bai Liu smiled, "Except he had his ace on Armand, and I had mine on Mu Sicheng."

"Next, let's see how they perform."

"Now." Bai Liu turned his head to the group of golden humanoid sculptures holding banners at the entrance to the mine, his tone calm, "Let us first enter the most valuable core of this land of gold."

"Get in the mine cart."

The mine car looks small, but it's still a good squeeze. Bai Liu, Team Quan and Tang Erda sit at the front, wrenching down the bars, and the car surges forward.

Liu Jiayi took a look at the fully operational mine wagon and tsked twice: "What a decent man, this Captain Georgia, not even destroying the mine wagon."

"If Bai Liu had arrived first, he would have taken one of the mine cars himself and the other one he would have put a bunch of explosives underneath and blown it up as soon as he pulled the trigger, sending people to Team Quan to heaven."

" Georgia is a prince, it's normal to have a bit of aristocratic manners when it comes to competitions." Bai Liu spreads his hands innocently, "A commoner like me who is looking for value for money, of course I can only set up in all the places I can win, ah, due to my origins, there is no way out."

Liu Jiayi: "..... = =."

Why does this man always make underhanded tactics sound so unusual.

"But Georgia didn't do anything with the mine cart, probably partly out of the inertia of a decent man's mind, and partly because he didn't want to ruin the place." Bai Liu rubbed his chin, "This is his home country after all, and every blade of grass, every mine cart should be precious to him."

"It's certainly more likely to be."

Bai Liu smiles and says, "He thinks he's more likely to win by letting us into the mines, a map he knows better."

The car rattled along like a rollercoaster and after a few turns, finally entered the large core of the mine.

Even Muke, who has seen a lot of the world, was stunned the moment he entered the large mine, while Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi were stunned straight away, and Bai Liu, who was rarely able to maintain his composure, could not help but exclaim: "What an unimaginable size of mine."

A cave close to the size of three or four large stadiums spans the entire mountain, which has been cut open from the very top, with a large volcanic eruption-like opening running from the top to the bottom, and light shoots in beams from the top into the cave, which is criss-crossed by dozens of tracks that are not built into the mountain or some kind of surveillance foundation at all, but are steel cables suspended down from above the mountain, suspended rigidly up, so that these tracks are suspended in the air.

And on the four walls of the mine were many miners suspended in mid-air, wearing protective suits and working with excavating implements in their hands.

Or, more precisely, a gold sculpture in the style of a miner.

The miners seemed unaware that a plague was about to turn everyone into gold, and they were still working senselessly, some of them laughing and talking playfully to the miner next to him who was hanging to a position with him, and some of them with food in their hands to eat, which should have been his lunch, but had long since rotted.

Miners of all kinds are suspended in mid-air, framed in a moment of their lives, in the form of gold.

The four walls of the cave were covered in gold, not even ore, but gold, and they could imagine what a busy, bustling scene it was ten years ago when this was the land of gold - miners hanging down from the top of the mountain, mining and working all day long, mine cars The miners were running back and forth on the overhanging tracks, transporting the gold they had mined to the gold depot, and everyone's faces were full of smiles.

Rendered by the light of the sky falling from the summit, the gold miners' sculptures and the gold on the cave walls reflect a dazzling interplay of light that is magnificent.

"That would have been a very sudden change of heart." Muke quickly snapped back, "These miners hadn't come down from the situation of the operation and just hung on like that to be turned into gold."

"Those statues at the entrance, too." Liu Jiayi frowned back, "They look like they just came to protest Georgia's decision to hand over the mine to the Bureau of Heresy Processing right in front of the mine, turned into gold."

"But if it's some sort of change that turns people into gold in an instant ....." Bai Liu pondered, "it doesn't make sense with the animals there at the Gold Dispensary, the animals were there long after the Gold Dispensary closed The animals lived in it after it was closed for a long time, and slowly turned into gold."

"If what is turning the creature into gold is some sort of heresy, there should be another variable in the effect of this heresy on the creature that we don't know about."

"Personally, I'm leaning towards concentration." Bai Liu spreads his hands, "I initially speculated on the concentration of gold dust, the higher the concentration of gold dust, the faster it turns the creature into a sculpture, but once inside the mine, that speculation doesn't really hold up too well, as the concentration of gold dust here isn't actually as high as it is outside."

"So it's not supposed to be gold dust." Muke muses, "Is it possible that it is some sort of other stone dust similar to gold dust?"

"Like some kind of heretical dust?"

"It's possible." Bai Liu looked down the track where the mine car was travelling, "So something happened on the day of the protest that caused the dust from this heresy to spread and turn the people of this country into gold sculptures after they inhaled it."

"It's a bit strange. ....."

Bai Liu clicked on his system panel and lowered his eyes, "Same question as before, we should have reached the highest concentration of heretics, my lungs and body are in significant discomfort, but strangely enough, my life and mental values are normal and I don't show any drop."

"So how did this heretic influence people and turn these people into gold sculpted heretics, or monsters?"

"Want to try attacking the statues now?" Muke inquired, "You can unlock the monster book, it might have an explanation on it."

"It's better to go out and attack again." Tang Erda, who was sitting at the front of the mine cart, looked soberly ahead, "There are just too many gold sculptures here, and if it causes a chain reaction, we'll probably have a hard time escaping."

"And ....."

Tang Erda paused for a moment, "I've been through a lot of games and dealt with heretics a lot in reality, and I don't know if I'm wrong in my senses, but I don't sense heresy or monsters from these golden statues."

"There's nothing offensive about these sculptures ....."

"Yes." Bai Liu dragged his jaw in thought, "The monsters we've encountered in the game before have taken it upon themselves to attack us, the same way the sculptures, the mermaids in the town of Siren would take it upon themselves to attack the hatching players, but the sculptures here, they do seem a little too peaceful towards the players."

Tang Erda whispered a reminder, "But the processing bureau has also housed some less offensive heretics."

Bai Liu pondered slightly, "Not enough clues to draw a conclusion for now, let's move on down the road."

As the wheels of the mine wagon grunted and rolled, undulating through the treacherous cavern, the further in you went, the darker the light, the narrower the road, the greater the number of miners dangling from the walls, Tang Erda switched on the torch she had found in the mine wagon, tapped it and turned it on.

If it was the big cave outside that needed digging to see the gold, inside it was chiselling nuggets off the gold biscuit - the biscuit all around was so golden that nothing could be seen of the mineral soil, only the huge gold walls interspersed with the hard rock patterns that supported the whole cave.

"This is also ....." Liu Jiayi was staggered, "too much, right?"

"This level of gold minerals has lasted for a thousand years." Muke laments, "It's understandable why the people of the Gloren country were in that frame of mind."

"..... No wonder ....." Tang Erda lowered her voice to a whisper, "The Third Council was built at Georgia's own expense, to expand into the sea and guard a giant heresy under the sea, it cost a lot of money at the time, the financial side wouldn't report it, said Georgia overbuilt it, and Georgia paid for it themselves."

"It said it was gold that was given."

"Georgia was very generous with the money, and Su Yang complained to me for a while that the Bureau of Heresy was too strict with its finances, and that it could have been reported. Tang Erda said with a sigh of relief, "The Third Bureau is notoriously generous, and Georgia would pay for anything that could not be financed, and sometimes he would pay for hundreds of millions of dollars. "

"You could tell by the way he gave the money that he really didn't think there was anything to it." Tang Erda looks up at this mine of gold and sighs, "I've speculated before about what kind of birth would raise someone like Georgia who has no attachment to money and a lot of money reserves, and it turns out that's where he came from."

" Georgia such a literal money spinner."

Tang Erda gave Bai Liu a rare tease: "It's the opposite of you, White Tactician."

Bai Liu smiles disarmingly as he spreads his hands, "I'm a laid-off worker, I've earned every cent of my life, so it's a bit difficult to ask me to splash out, Captain Tang."

"But your Heresy Processing Authority finances are quite interesting, it feels like everything is stuck tight."

Speaking of which, Tang Erda held her forehead in pain and whispered, "Stop it, it's a demon department."

"It's not that they're bad people, they're not actually bad people, they're just very timid, like a bunch of hamsters who are terrified of the cold and want to stock up on food." Tang Erda sighed, "The way the Heretic Processing Bureau's finances work is that the Field Department collects heretics, then the Logistics Department takes in heretics, sorts them into categories, tallies them into files, categorises some of the safe rentable heretics, then the Ministry of Finance gives the go-ahead to rent heretics to countries around the world, making a profit from that, and the money earned keeps the Heretic Processing Bureau running. "

"But many high-risk heretics cannot be rented, not only can they not be rented, but they need some specific environments to house them, such as blood primroses, which have to be placed in a soil-free, bloodless and dry environment or they will spore, and the long-term maintenance of these environments also costs money."

"Not only that, but it costs different amounts of money to go out into the field and encounter heretics."

"Some heretics cost less to house." Tang Erda sighs helplessly, "but the overheads for some heretical internment are extremely large, such as the last Sunshine City, the largest sub-sea heresy Georgia took in, which would have cost billions, if not tens of billions, to take in, but had to be dealt with."

"There are some places where the officials are very good at talking and will reimburse us for a lot of the shelter costs, like Sunnyside where billions of dollars ended up being eaten up just because the officials reimbursed the lion's share, but there are some places where the officials don't care about the heretics and have to deal with them themselves by the heresy handling bureau, like Georgia's Under the Sea Heresy."

"Several of the heretics that have appeared recently have been heretics with high expenses, so that group at the Treasury will be particularly tight-fisted for fear that there won't be enough money when the next one comes out."

"I can understand Su Yang not liking the Ministry of Finance because it really is a bad department to talk to, but I can also understand the Ministry of Finance because the uncertainty of heresy is just too great."

"If you can really put an end to this era of heresy everywhere."

Tang Erda smiled helplessly at Bai Liu: "Those hamsters at the Treasury might hug your trouser leg and howl for daddy."

"I try to do my best." Bai Liu smiles.

Reality, on the Gulo Sea, branch of the Third Bureau of the Bureau of Heresy Handling.

Inside the island branch, in the processing centre of the underwater unmanned submarine reconnaissance department, a group of men sat sternly at the console, wearing signal receiving instrument helmets that covered half of his head, looking at the underwater detection radar signals coming from in front of the display and seriously reporting.

"Report sir, nothing close to Heretic 0073 at this time, end of report!"

A voice came over the headset, "Keep probing! Georgia, the captain has given orders to make sure no one gets within a kilometre of Heretic 0073 until he returns!"

The team straightened up, "Roger that!"

After the voice in his headset ended, the team member rubbed his eyes a little tiredly and he grabbed the coffee cup sitting next to the console to drink it down, only to realise that it was empty when he lifted it up.

"So tired." The team member next to him stretched his body and stretched, dragging his jaw to look at the display, "How much longer do we have to keep watch, it's been a day and a night."

"A teaser letter is just a teaser letter, is it worth the whole three bureaus raising a fuss?"

Although dedicated to his job, after reporting that team member heard this also echoed somewhat wearily, "..... Although Captain Georgia has his reasons for doing everything, I really don't know what to detect while I'm sitting here. "

"I don't know what it takes to steal a heresy that big at the bottom of the sea."

"Yeah." The team member spread his hands, his voice smiling inside his helmet, two sharp tiger teeth showing at the corners of his lips under his mask, "Been keeping watch here all day, and I don't know how to steal it."

"..... what...how did you steal it?!" Noticing something wrong with this team member, the team member who had finished reporting snapped out of his tired and slackened state, and he realised with a jolt that something was wrong with this team member - that this team member's posture was too slouchy and distinctly different from that of the well-trained Third Bureau team member, and that the board and strict uniform of the Third Bureau was somewhat ill-fitting on this team member's The cuffs and collar were unbuttoned and pulled up, turning him into a better-action outfit.

To top it all off, the guy had a little monkey logo next to the headset he was wearing - you don't get a logo that cartoonish in the third bureau!

"Who are you?!" The team member, full of fear, was about to radio in, and had just picked up the machine when the suspicious team member across the room raised his hand to punch him down on the neck, in a lazy tone, "Been waiting all day to finally learn how to read how this machine shows location."

"Thanks a lot, dedicated little brother."

A second before he fell unconscious to the ground, the team member saw with horror the other team members who were all on the ground outside.

The team member, or [Mu Sicheng], casually removed the mask from his head and set it aside, folding his feet over the console and leaning back in his chair, casually taking a sip from his coffee, his eyes half-closed as he looked at the display.

" Bai six is really going to get me in trouble ....."

"I can't believe I'm being asked to come to another timeline to steal such a big heresy, it's my official time off."

"Well, let's see exactly how extensive this heresy is ....." [Mu Sicheng] leaned forward and moved a few buttons on the console, an entire scan appeared on the display and he raised one eyebrow lightly. "Not bad for the biggest heretic of all."

He hooked his lips and his right hand turned into a monkey's paw piercing his white uniform glove, "Seeing as the theft was strong enough, let's ask for less overtime this time."

The Lost Land of Gold

Mu Sicheng ripped off his pierced white uniform gloves, pulled off the monkey headset from his helmet, and at the sight of the hip-hop monkey logo stuck through his head, [Mu Sicheng]'s gaze suddenly paused for a moment, then averted as if nothing had happened, and put it back on.

..... It's been so many years that anything his desire generates still carries this monkey symbol on it.

Is Yuan Qingqing ..... such a big influence on him?

It was just a high school classmate, and she'd been dead for years, so it was time for him to move on.

[Mu Sicheng], with his eyes averted at the fading monkey symbol on his dangling earpiece, averted his gaze and turned away.

In-game.

Chased by the hurricane, Mu Sicheng had reached the bottom of the castle - the furthest point he knew from the mine - but the hurricane was still in pursuit, and Mu Sicheng looked back twice, only vaguely able to see the golden hurricane coming towards him in the swirling phoenix eyes. Armand.

Damn, Armand, does it take that long to use?

Mu Sicheng looks at his depleting stamina bar and skill time and grits his teeth and stops - he can't run at full speed anymore and would rather stop and take a skill from Armand, lowering his life.

With Liu Jiayi giving him a life-giving antidote, he should be able to take Armand at least twice, and if he doesn't let Armand interact with Georgia, he should be able to hold Armand off for about three hours, all told.

..... three hours, Bai Liu says he should be able to push this copy through to the end if he moves fast enough.

In fact, Mu Sicheng didn’t understand why Bai Liu is in such a hurry. After seeing everyone inhaling the gold powder and not losing any spirit or life, Bai Liu, with just a little thought, doubles the speed of the fast-paced confrontation they were doing - the original pace was already fast. The aim was to finish the book in one day within the game time.

But Bai Liu later turned that time into three hours.

This speed confrontation is particularly stressful and demanding for everyone, especially for him as a roaming player who has to consistently hang the main attack.

The speeding hurricane engulfed the slowing Mu Sicheng almost in a blink of an eye. Countless chains staggered in the golden hurricane, binding Mu Sicheng's hands and feet in moments, others grazing his body, the cold metal leaving scars on Mu Sicheng's body as his life began to drop with the naked eye.

Fuck, that hurts!

Mu Sicheng's features are scrunched together.

Armand, in the eye of the hurricane phoenix, slowly walks towards him.

Mu Sicheng said loudly in a stern voice, mentally calculating the time he had to eat the skill: "How can you leave the main team so easily, you're the main attacker, aren't you afraid that your team won't be able to output and will just be sent away by our team in one wave?"

"Our main attack is a great one!"

"You do have a point." Armand, who had stepped in front of Mu Sicheng, raised his eyes, "Your main attacker is quite a deterrent, but I can't let you off the hook for stealing, your theft would cause the thought of bad publicity."

"You, who watched Yuan Qingqing die in front of you, know this best, don't you?"

Mu Sicheng's pupils shrank for a moment at the words, then he gave a vicious laugh and provoked in a mute voice: "..... What nonsense are you talking about, you're starting to talk nonsense, are you that afraid of me?"

"The very act of stealing is unjust." Armand looks calmly at Mu Sicheng, "Once you were tortured by it, and the pleasure you derive from it eventually turns to pain back to yourself."

"I will not let you steal or let my own team be governed, so I will keep you here and return to help."

"How long do you think a hurricane can hold me without your guard?" Mu Sicheng laughed out loud as if he had heard a very funny joke, "I can steal your hairpiece from the hurricane and naturally I can break free from your hurricane!"

"You know I'm not talking about me." Armand's tone was flat, "I'm talking about Yuan Qingqing."

"The logo on your headphones is still a monkey, so you should remember the name, right?"

Mu Sicheng's expression froze completely.

"I know a hurricane of chains without me holding it down can't trap you, so-" Armand lifted his hand, the butterfly resting on his fingertips, his gaze turning condensed, "[I] will stay here. "

"But I will also return to help, in another form."

[System Alert: Player Armand equips Monster Book Form - (Hurricane Butterfly)]

[Butterfly and human soul's swap. Butterfly enters player Armand's body and can act as the eye of a hurricane, continuously causing hurricanes and tracking down suspects, while the human soul enters the butterfly's body and can move freely, causing a new round of hurricanes. this form, when equipped, allows the player to cause hurricanes on multiple points in both directions].

[This form can be interrupted by a mutual exchange after the butterfly's weakness has been discovered].

The butterfly's wings fluttered away, leaving Armand's pupils with all their light lost, leaving only an inorganic, murderous, cold light, and a butterfly symbol above his throat, as colourful as a tattoo, with a sheen flowing from it.

This [Armand] raised his head and stared at the chained Mu Sicheng with emotionless eyes, making a peculiar, creepy sound as if the insects were beating their wings.

"Use the hurricane and kill, Mu Sicheng ."

More intense hurricanes are coming.

Inside the mine.

After passing through countless caves, the mine cart finally reached the deepest part of the mine. Bai Liu They jumped off the cart and looked up at the subtle sky light coming down from the very top, and following it, they could see a golden sculpture bending over and digging for something.

"This man doesn't seem to be a miner." Muke moved over to look as he examined the statue, which was crouched on the ground, looking anxious and digging for something, "Judging by his clothes, he must be a priest of some sort of high standing in this country."

"It's certainly not gold that the priests come here to dig."

Liu Jiayi followed the priest's digging movements and picked twice at the ground, which was covered with mineral soil and scattered gold nuggets: "This hole is not deep."

"It doesn't feel like digging something ....." Liu Jiayi frowned, "It feels like burying something."

"But the question is what to bury?"

"Will it be the Hourglass of Time?" Tang Erda asked.

"Not like that." Bai Liu stroked his chin, "This priest is obviously on some sort of mission to ride out the critical point where the people outside come to protest and drag out the time to come and bury something on the backs of someone who would be of such high status and unavailable that a figure of his stature would be used to do such a grunt work. "

"It makes some sense to come and bury the hourglass of time at a point like this."

"Then this person who asked him to bury something was either the king or Georgia, and only these two were qualified to ask the priest to bury something." Liu Jiayi stared at the sculpture for a moment, then suddenly reached out and pulled something like a silk scarf out of the sculpture's gold dusted coat, "What is this?"

Liu Jiayi shakes the gold dust off the silk scarf, then notices a wedge-shaped black mark on the yellowed white scarf.

"It looks like some kind of stone, traces of the explosion." Liu Jiayi looked closer and halfway through, she suddenly covered her mouth and choked violently, her fingertips spilling gold dust as she coughed and wrapped the silk scarf around her and stepped on the ground to keep it out of the others' reach, "Ahem ..... this is supposed to be the heretic that can generate gold, the heretic that was here shattered, and this silk scarf is what wrapped that heretic."

"This priest came here, too, to bury this heretic, who is supposed to be ..... ahem, the king's man!"

" Jiayi, has your panel dropped?" Bai Liu asked quickly and calmly.

Liu Jiayi coughs hard while tapping on the panel, then shakes his head, "No drop, life and spirit levels are normal."

"Don't mind me, the overall picture is basically out now, ahem, time is of the essence, sort out the information and push the line first!"

"Ten years ago, the gold production in Gloren fell, the people panicked, prices rose, the king got hold of some kind of heresy from the gods to increase gold production again, and wanted to deal with the gods again to get more of this heresy, but the then Grand Prince Georgia did not agree, and this second burst of gold caused many miners to suffer from a peculiar organ Sclerosis disease, and Georgia thought there was something wrong with this gold, some kind of heresy, and wanted to turn the mines over to the processing bureau that dealt with heretics to take them in." Muke quickly deduced.

"And the people at the time couldn't take it and came to protest at the gates of the mine on the day Georgia forcibly handed it over, stalling the Georgia faction who wanted to hand over the cave, while at the same time -" Bai Liu turned his attention to the The king took the opportunity to secretly send the high priest inside the mine with the heresy he already had, in order to bury it underground and make everything final."

"But for some reason, it didn't work out to bury it, and it made this heresy explode."

"It seems you guys have the ability to deduce things after all." A clear male voice came from above, "Since you have guessed my identity, you should know that this is my home map, so why did you follow without thinking of yourself?"

Bai Liu's voice trailed off as he spoke and turned his head to look over, raising an eyebrow at the sight of the flapping butterfly resting on Georgia's shoulder, "So that's it."

-- No wonder Armand's skill can deal such a wide range of damage with so little presence, it does it in the form of a butterfly.

The [body] draws attention to the attacker with a hurricane, and it's the unassuming butterfly that does the main attacking - a subtle skill, I must say, as if it was made to counteract Mu Sicheng, the fast roaming member of their team.

"I was going to scatter you all one by one." Bai Liu shrugged and held up his hands in a gesture of surrender, "Now it seems you've been guarding us against this for a while, Captain Georgia."

"The Hourglass of Time is in your hands too, isn't it?"

Bai Liu's eyes moved down to the hourglass looming in Georgia's hand and smiled as he asked, "But have you ever wondered, Your Highness, if anyone's tears could fill this hourglass?"

The moment he said that, his right index finger gouged downwards. With a sweep of the tail of his eye, Muke quickly understood the meaning of Bai Liu's gesture and disappeared from his spot, appearing behind Georgia's back in the next second, his sharp dagger jammed in front of Georgia's neck, pinning him backwards.

"Move." Bai Liu ordered calmly, "Follow the previous plan, scatter them one by one and confront them at full strength."

Ornamental pool.

"Bai Liu is at a disadvantage." Lu Yizhan stared at the big screen for a while, thought for a moment and then suddenly said, " Georgia's home advantage is too big, and Armand's skill is like adding another player to their team, which is also hard to handle."

Liao Ke looked helplessly at Lu Yizhan, who had avoided his previous question: "Captain, what I just asked you was not about the game."

"What I'm asking you is what's going on with Georgia's heresy under the sea, and I've called you into the corner of the viewing pool to avoid the Spades, so you don't have to keep me in the dark, do you?"

"This thing has your hand in it at first glance, Georgia was only sixteen ten years ago, how could he have handled the country he turned into a heretic when the Heresy Authority at the time didn't have the funds or the ability to sink a heresy the size of a country."

"The only person who can do this and keep this in check is you, tell me what's going on and what you've done?"

"Eh ....." Lu Yizhan rubbed his head with a sad face, "I told you; you'll definitely scold me again."

Liao Ke took a deep breath as he propped his hands on his knees, "You speak first, I'll try not to scold, weren't you watching Bai Liu at the orphanage ten years ago, why are you in charge of this again?"

Lu Yizhan covered his face for a moment, but finally, under the sly gaze of his lieutenant, he spoke helplessly: "I was indeed at the orphanage, but the identity of the first captain of the Heresy Bureau set for me by Bai six was still there, but the body I landed in this world line was only fourteen years old, so how could I go over there and take charge? "

"But before walking away, Georgia's matter was reported to me."

"He was seeking cooperation with the members of the Third Bureau stationed closest to Gulohai." Lu Yizhan said with a complicated look and tone, "But the people from the Third Bureau soon realised that it was no small matter and reported the matter to the General Directorate here, and I got the message and was ready to go over to deal with it."

"On the day of the incident, Georgia was ready to close the mines, but because there were popular protests at many of the mines, it was impossible to close them, meaning that the boy had lost the game with Bai six, but he didn't give up then, he contacted the then three boards and wanted to use our strength to hold the mines from the people and then dispose of the gold inside. "

"The members of the Third Bureau field team were led into Gloren country by Georgia, and they lurked in the mines, ready to wait for Bai six to emerge with the gold point stone and take it in."

"But Georgia had no idea that her own father had actually made a private deal with the evil gods to advance the suffering of the nation, had already gotten his hands on the Pointing Stone, and was going to have the high priest bury it in the veins of the earth ahead of time while the people held back Georgia's faction."

"The king did not want to clash with Georgia head-on and chose to do so, wanting to put an end to all the farce."

" The Gloren State was hidden by the Bai six guy, and you had to be guided by someone from the Gloren State to get in, and when I went over there, Georgia came out and guided me without knowing it."

"And at the same time, two waves of men who had both lurked in the mines ahead of time met, and a clash broke out between the priest and his party, who wanted to force a burial in the point stone, and the members of the Third Bureau, who wanted to house the heretics."

Lu Yizhan wipes his face a little wearily: "When Georgia and I entered Gloren country, basically everyone in the country, including all the field team members who were there at the time from the three bureaus, were turned into gold sculptures, except for some small animals that were far away from the mines."

"Only Armand, his brother, who was sent ahead of time to be housed by him at the Third Board, was spared."

" Georgia broke down."

"He felt that he was responsible for all of this ....., whether it was the destruction of the Gloren State or the death of these players in the Third Council."

"The gold dust was still spreading outwards, and to prevent this heretic from turning the whole world to gold, I used my heavy sword to cut the country of Gloren from the sea in front of him, wrapped it in the protective shield of the Heretic's Authority to prevent it from spreading, and then sank the country into the deep sea."

Lu Yizhan closed his eyes, "..... There were still a lot of Third Board members who knew about it at the time, and as you know, while I trusted the Heresy Handling Board members, there were many times when I had to plan for the worst."

"This heresy is so attractive to people that it is hard for anyone to resist the temptation of stealing just a little gold dust up from the heresy at the bottom of the sea and putting some small animals together with this gold dust to create a constant flow of gold."

"So, I used my skills, and I said to Georgia that I would erase any trace of the existence of this Golden Land from the memory of everyone, including you."

"..... He begged me on his knees for a long time, begging me not to erase his memory, even saying that he could stay under the supervision of the Third Bureau and that it was okay to monitor him as a heretic, as long as I didn't erase his memory."

"I ended up keeping Georgia's memory, but the kid knew his stuff and he got himself into the third bureau, made it to the director's position and basically placed himself under the supervision of the Heresy Processing Bureau and me the whole time."

"He felt sorry for the Three Bureaus and for his brother, so he has been working hard to make it up to them, turning the Three Bureaus into warehouses, turning them into the first partial doors for heretics without field teams, but charging himself to be on the front line of taking in heretics, paying for the expansion of the Three Bureaus out of his account, refusing to let his brother into the Three Bureaus, all efforts he has made. "

"Gold for the three bureau expansions ....." Lu Yizhan looked up at Georgia on the big screen and he sighed, "Originally when it was the Grand Prince of the Gloren State Georgia sold a lot of his stuff, saved from the Gold Dispensation in the changes, stored outside, and was going to be used to get the nation through the long winter that would soon be without gold."

"But in the end, this gold was not used to issue to these nationals, but to expand the three bureaus."

" Georgia moved the Three Bureaus to the side of the Gurro Sea, and he kept watch over them, over the sea, over his homeland at the bottom of the sea, forbidding himself to laugh, forbidding himself to be happy, forbidding himself to be irresponsible, wanting to keep everything protected, and slowly becoming what he is today."

"I don't know what Bai six said to him."

Lu Yizhan bowed his head wearily: "But that Georgia boy, whatever happened, hadn't cried since he was sixteen."

"I asked him about it, and he answered me that the gods had fixed his people in that moment ten years ago, that they were painless, and that if only one day he could pay off the thousand-year gold equivalent of the pain owed to the gods for all the people of the Gloren Kingdom, as promised, the deal would stop, time would be reversed, those people would come back to life, and the people of the Three Councils would not die, and The Gloren Kingdom can return to the earth again."

"Everyone will be able to be as happy as they were in the beginning."

"For this reason, he could not shed another tear because of his pain; he would store it up and put it in the hourglass."

"But the game with the evil god ..... was originally full of traps." Lu Yizhan closed his eyes as he took a deep breath, "I sometimes wanted to advise him, but after thinking about myself, aren't I also walking the path of playing games with God?"

"Perhaps he had no other choice or expectation than that, just as I did."

Game on the outskirts of the palace.

The hurricane kept on rolling and Mu Sicheng struggled to get out of the chains, but [Armand] pressed on.

The thing moved very briskly but created a sense of imminence significantly less than the real Armand before it, moving not as if after thinking, but as if it were a real butterfly rounding up its prey, hiding in its chains and constantly closing in on him.

But it's still a pain in the arse.

It wasn't that he couldn't break free, it was just that his hands were trembling.

..... Yuan Qingqing ..... how long had it been since he had heard that name and why did this Armand guy know Yuan Qingqing ?

Why did this one know, why did this one remember, why did this one remind him, when even he himself had almost forgotten?!

[Theft is an unjust thing, Mu Sicheng.]

[It's not right to steal, Mu Sicheng].

The cold male voice and the stern female voice mingle in Mu Sicheng's brain, his pupils tremble with all sorts of stirring emotions, and the scaly powder of a butterfly appears in the hurricane, caught in the gold dust that he inhales.

[System Warning: Player Mu Sicheng has inhaled butterfly scale powder and has become dizzy and psychedelic, his spirit level has begun to drop!]

The moment [Armand] approached him along the chain, a blank Mu Sicheng subconsciously reached out with his monkey paw and grabbed the golden hairpiece on the side of [Armand]'s hair, ripping it off.

The gold hairpiece fell from the midst of the hurricane and tumbled to the ground with a crisp, tinkling crunch.

--The sound coincided with the sound of the bell in Mu Sicheng's memory of the evening study session.

The Lost Land of Gold

"Mu Sicheng!" A loud, angry female voice awoke from a memory he had long avoided, "Why are you stealing again!"

Seventeen-year-old Mu Sicheng lazily raised his head from his desk, his face filled with the displeasure and provocation of being woken up from sleep: " Yuan Qingqing, what's it to you if I steal something?"

"We don't know each other very well, do we?"

"What do you mean, I'm the class president!" Yuan Qingqing slapped the table in anger, "I told you to stop playing pranks, give me what you stole, I'll give it back!"

"I won't give it back." Mu Sicheng stretched out on the table, "Who proves that I took it, show me the proof?"

"I saw it." Yuan Qingqing suddenly calmed down, "I saw you go through Ma Cailiang's bag at noon, and I saw you take his dormitory key with my own eyes."

"I know you're doing this because you hate what Ma Cailiang did before, but you shouldn't punish him in this way either."

"It's not right to steal, fellow Mu Sicheng."

"It's already half past ten, lights out in the boys' dormitory in half an hour, and Ma Cailiang has been in his dorm for half an hour." Yuan Qingqing put his hand in front of Mu Sicheng with a stern expression, "Give me his key."

Mu Sicheng's eyelids droop, and he raises his eyes to survey the squad leader with his pockets tucked in.

He transferred to the school two months ago, and as for the reason for his transfer, naturally, he stole something.

After a couple of minor demerits, he changed schools again. His parents were always ashamed of his habit of transferring him to another school, as far away from where they were as possible, when things went wrong, and it was not uncommon for Mu Sicheng to change schools.

As for the matter of stealing things ..... Mu Sicheng has this fetish, just like some children like to play pranks, he likes to steal things.

The more challenging something is, the more it can turn someone's face after stealing it, the more he likes to hide the item and admire the look on the other person's face before throwing it out slowly and watching them cry as they hug their lost and found item after the robbery.

Mu Sicheng's parents couldn't stand this habit early on and beat him up many times, but they couldn't change it, and they even took him to a mental hospital once in secret.

What did the psychiatrist say?

[..... Because parents neglect their children for a long time, resulting in this child not getting enough attention during the formative years, when they reach adolescence they will form a kind of rebellion, stealing is actually just a way for this child to attract attention, you should spend more time with him].

This doctor was actually quite right, early on his parents were out working and were leaving him in the care of his grandfather. When these two finished working, it seemed to be the stage where everyone around them started to work on their children, his parents suddenly remembered that they still had a son like him, so they took Mu Sicheng back and brought him up themselves.

Mu Sicheng didn't hate the psychiatrist and had two frank conversations with him - [I just hate it when these people don't appreciate what they have and know to look for it when they lose it, so I want to play a prank on them].

[I understand.] The psychologist was very friendly, [can you try to communicate with them in a different way?]

Mu Sicheng was ready to listen to the psychiatrist and find someone to talk to casually, not that he didn't know he was abnormal, but his parents unilaterally called off the process after a month of therapy without seeing results.

His parents argued with the hapless doctor in the treatment room: "Did I pay all that money to have him talk to you?"

"Will chatting cure him of his bad habit of being a thief? Can talking make him keep his hands to himself? Don't you have some kind of mind control drugs here, don't you have electrotherapy? It's not like we can't afford it, you put him on them all!"

"Do you know how embarrassing it is for us when word gets out that he stole something!"

Mu Sicheng waited boredly outside the treatment room playing with his video game, his eyes drooping as he watched his parents who were hysterically demanding a refund from the doctor, suddenly not wanting treatment.

It was good that he stole something to make it so difficult for these two.

Many people couldn't understand Mu Sicheng's theft because his family was not bad, or even good, and his parents had worked hard for so long that they had nothing else but enough money to give him.

But money is not given for nothing. Mu Sicheng also needs to do a lot of things, such as do well in exams, have special skills, go out with them, not be embarrassed in front of those people, and have to be a thousand times better than those people's children.

[Those people] are the one that his parents have fought so hard to finally get into, sort of an upper class circle of people who, unlike his parents who came from an average background, most of them came from very good backgrounds, making his parents who came from an average background very stifled, feeling that they couldn't compete with everything, but wanting very much to compete with this group in everything.

"If I had been given such an origin ....." were the words his father used to say when he was drunk.

"If only I could have a mother's family like that ....." were the words his mother used to say when she cried.

His parents disliked where he came from, which he was a lot like his parents - he didn't like it either.

Mu Sicheng was his parents' weapon, because he was good, or at least better than the children of many people in the circle, and that was enough for his parents to raise their eyebrows and praise him for his stamina - Mu Sicheng was sort of the only thing they had over those in the circle.

He got good grades, was athletic, was pretty smart in everything he did, had a pretty pleasant face, could walk out and be described as handsome by anyone, and could play some extreme sports, which made a lot of kids in that circle look up to him and think he was cool and handsome.

But this adulation and praise only lasted until Mu Sicheng was caught stealing for the first time and then the whole school was informed.

When he returned that day, his parents sat in the living room as if the sky had fallen, his mother was crying with her make-up on, his father had slapped him, and they asked him viciously.

"Why would you do such a thing!"

"Do you know how much you've embarrassed me!"

They scolded him, taught him and transferred him to another school while hoping that he would open up and become the [Mu Sicheng] that made them look good instead of the bad [Mu Sicheng] that he is now.

But again and again, the parents finally gave up on him in disgust and transferred him to class seven at a high school in an eighteenth-tier city - the same high school he is in now.

"Living expenses are called to you every month." His father waved his hand wearily and boredly, "Don't you come back."

Mu Sicheng transferred into this school and was a highly popular schoolboy for a while, but while popularity means someone likes him, there are also people who spy on him, and soon the things that surround him follow and his popularity is at a low point again.

But he doesn't really care, Mu Sicheng is so used to it that he gets more annoyed when someone likes him.

It's not like he hasn't been liked by a bunch of people before, and that's about it. I don't know why this group of high school kids are so after some popular guy, highly popular schoolboy or whatever.

--So thought Mu Sicheng, a sophomore, with contempt.

Although everyone unspokenly rejects him, Mu Sicheng is a bit of a delinquent, tall and athletic, so no one dares to bully him, except to hide away from him, and when someone in the class loses something, they will sneak a glance at Mu Sicheng and whisper a few words, not even in front of him.

This may have something to do with what Mu Sicheng stole; he was not the kind of thief who wanted money, but rather a bit of a [eccentric thief], or even a [grand thief].

--All the trousers of the boys in the class who like to lift girls' skirts, the wig of the teacher who scolds poor students who can only go to the desk later, the dorm key of the boy who bullies his housemates.

The last one is Ma Cailiang.

Even if they knew that Mu Sicheng had stolen it, they didn't dare to do anything to him after they found out about his family's fortune, and they were too angry to say anything.

The only person in the class who dared to take on Mu Sicheng was the class monitor Yuan Qingqing.

Yuan Qingqing is the head of class 7, with a high ponytail, round face and eyes, so her head looks a bit big.

But the reputation among the students is a little more subtle - Yuan Qingqing has a nickname [Little Official Fan].

Because she is very fond of stewardship.

For example, after she learns that Mu Sicheng has stolen something, she keeps on staring at him, and Mu Sicheng is so tired of staring that he has never met anyone who is so patient with him.

His own biological parents weren't even that patient!

Like now it was eleven o'clock and he hadn't even gone back to his dorm to avoid Yuan Qingqing - he knew she had seen him when he took his keys at noon today and knew she would surely come to pursue the matter, so he purposely didn't go back and this person would surely block him on his way back to his dorm!

Mu Sicheng was going to wait in the classroom until lights out and then go back to the boys' dormitory, thinking that Yuan Qingqing, who was such a disciplined person, would not move around after lights out.

However, Yuan Qingqing was so desperate to find him that she didn't even go to the girls' dormitory until lights out and found him in the classroom.

Mu Sicheng was really convinced, he folded his hands and pretended to surrender: "Class leader, can I call you class leader, please let me off this time, I will definitely not do it next time."

"I lost my keys somewhere, you told me to go back tonight and look for them, I'll bring them to you tomorrow."

Yuan Qingqing's eyes faltered for a moment and he began to hesitate.

Mu Sicheng tsked inwardly - he had gained experience in fighting Yuan Qingqing.

This man eats softness and not hardness.

Eventually Yuan Qingqing relented, "You can return the key tomorrow."

"I will return it!" Mu Sicheng responded falsely, "So can I go back to bed now?"

Yuan Qingqing paused and moved out of the way, her lips pursed tightly as she stressed again, "Make sure you pay it back!"

The next day, Mu Sicheng walks past the classroom office, carrying buns from the canteen, and as the bell rings for morning reading, he casts a glance and sees Yuan Qingqing, Ma Cailiang and Ma Cailiang's parents, and his class master, Mr. Ren, confronting each other in the office.

The first thing that came out was Ma Cailiang's shrill, altered duck voice: "It must be Mu Sicheng who stole it! Who else but him would be so dirty and love to steal!"

Ma Cailiang's parents echoed with fury: "Why are there such students in the class? And stealing, last night our kids were locked out for more than half an hour because they didn't have a dorm key!"

"It's okay to be locked up for half an hour or so, right?" Yuan Qingqing's strong voice came out. Yuan Qingqing's strong voice came out, " Ma Cailiang had previously locked her roommate out of the door for the night, making her catch a cold, and she is still in the hospital, isn't the nature of this matter more serious?"

"Ma Cailiang has already been written up once for this incident, so please be careful what you say and don't slander your classmates, there is no evidence that Mu Sicheng has taken your things!"

Mu Sicheng raised an eyebrow at the door and then stopped, he was sure Yuan Qingqing had seen him take the key.

Now this is ..... lying to defend him?

Ma Cailiang and her parents were weakened in the face of Yuan Qingqing.

Mr. Ren, the class master, took the opportunity to intervene: " Ma students, look again for yourself, it doesn't necessarily mean that someone has taken it, what if you forgot it and dropped it somewhere?"

Ma Cailiang was reluctant, but looking at Yuan Qingqing, who was looking at him with upside down eight vertical eyebrows and a serious crossed face, he scowled a little fearfully: "..... Then I'll look for it again."

-- Yuan Qingqing is the class president, the class representative of the class teacher, the vice-chairman of the student council, and the disciplinarian of the class.

Mu Sicheng ducked away and watched with amusement as Ma Cailiang scolded his parents and was annoyed that he could not see what to do.

Ma Cailiang's keys were missing and it could take up to half a month for a new one to be issued, so Ma Cailiang had to dabble with his roommate's keys. It would be strange if he could open the door for him.

Mu Sicheng tosses the key in his hand, admires Ma Cailiang's frenzy, wraps it in a bag of buns and throws it in the trash.

Meanwhile, in the teacher's office.

" Is Qingqing here to deliver this week's discipline check?" The class master, Mr. Ren, was very nice to Yuan Qingqing as he reached out to take the discipline checkbook Yuan Qingqing handed over with a loving smile, "How did our class behave this week?"

--Discipline check is a very boring checking activity in this school, linked to the students' prime points, counted every Monday, if the students don't have any disciplinary actions for the week, no points are deducted in advance, but since there are so many disciplinary actions, small talk in class counts, tardiness counts, not turning in homework counts, overall, it is a very troublesome The statistics are given to the disciplinarian of each class to do.

Generally speaking, discipline members of other classes will casually water, not too much will turn a blind eye, will not deduct points and give the whole class full marks for the sketchbook, because generally if there is no school leader to inspect the disciplinary behavior, it will not care about the sketchbook.

But if it is ever checked, it is a very problematic matter, especially for the class teacher, who can become a little dangerous at the end of the year if a student has a disciplinary offence that is seen by the head of the school and no corresponding points are deducted when it is checked in the Soto book.

This is why every class teacher repeatedly stresses that disciplinary checks should be done carefully, but very few disciplinarians take this task seriously.

But Yuan Qingqing is the kind of disciplinarian who takes disciplinary checks seriously, and because of this the class teacher is particularly fond of her.

"Let's see ah ....." the class teacher took the vegetarian book, put on the old-fashioned glasses and swept a glance, " Ma Cailiang last Wednesday Guan students outside the dormitory, deducted a week of small red flower, this is no problem ....."

Mu Sicheng, biting into a bun outside the door, rolls his eyes when he hears "little red flower".

Each student's name is arranged down the left side, next to the seven days of the week, crossed horizontally and vertically, and each day's performance is a small grid. This means that the student has passed this day's performance.

The disciplinarians in the other classes were blindly stamped, little red flowers all over, and finished the job. Only Yuan Qingqing would take note of each student's performance each day, and at the end of each week, one by one, they would carefully stamp them against each other.

Mu Sicheng has been secretly spiteful, thinking that the school authorities who came up with it were brain-dead, and that Yuan Qingqing, who took it seriously, was also brain-dead.

They are high school students, not a kindergarten class, and they are still getting little red flowers, speechless.

"..... eh, this this ..... Mu Sicheng classmate's little red flower is a bit problematic ah." The class teacher's puzzled voice came from inside, "Except yesterday, how did you cover it all."

"He's been given a big demerit, he can't be stamped with a little red flower."

"But the demerit is for what last month's Mu Sicheng did." Yuan Qingqing's voice was stubborn, "This month's Mu Sicheng did not get a demerit, and according to the rules, it is allowed to be stamped with a red flower, teacher."

Mu Sicheng's footsteps as he prepares to leave.

"..... But rules are rules ....." The class teacher had a bit of a bald head and tried helplessly to persuade Yuan Qingqing, "but he made a such a big deal, the school head will see him keep the little red flower and will be accountable."

"They feel that students who have a major demerit are so high up on the list, and it gives the school a bad name when word gets out."

"You can delete it when you get back, Qingqing."

"But ....." retorted Yuan Qingqing, a little anxiously, "Mu Sicheng didn't do anything wrong this month, so why can't he get a red flower? "

"You really didn't do it?" Old Ren, the class master, raised his cup of tea and looked at Yuan Qingqing, "He had something to do with the loss of Ma students' keys yesterday, didn't he?"

Yuan Qingqing is quiet.

The class teacher took a sip of tea and said, "I understand what you have in mind, but Mu Sicheng is not a person who can be delivered for life, Qingqing, you know what I mean? There is no need to shield him for some petty thoughts, teachers have seen this kind of student before and he will definitely continue to commit them in the future."

"......?" Yuan Qingqing asked, somewhat confused, "What little mind, what delivery for life?"

Seeing Yuan Qingqing's look of not understanding, the class teacher finally sighed helplessly, "Anyway, you delete Mu students' little red flower, just delete it."

Mu Sicheng, who was listening outside the door, looked progressively stranger.

He has indeed had many girls like him and has received many confessions and love letters, and is a bit self-conscious about being easily liked by girls, without being narcissistic.

But he really didn't think Yuan Qingqing would like him.

Yuan Qingqing This guy is just too strange, the way he stares at him every day is like a police officer staring at the first suspect, and the way this woman stares at everyone in the class is like this, it's really hard to see the love in this wary and serious look.

He could see the killing intent more than the love intent.

It was the greasy old man who said that off the cuff, right ......?

Mu Sicheng's chewing of the bun gradually slowed as he fell into a pensive mood - am I really so charming that someone like Yuan Qingqing can't escape?

When the class teacher saw Yuan Qingqing had found out the school rules and responsibilities and wanted to argue with him to prove that Mu Sicheng could be given a red ribbon, he interrupted Yuan Qingqing with a big smile on his face: "Here's the thing, Qingqing, there's another problem you need to solve. "

"Aren't we going to change our seats after half term? The class was previously consulted and assigned seats according to their own wishes, but there is a rather problematic matter."

" Mu Sicheng, who had just transferred in before, was sitting alone at the back, but as you know, that seat was temporary, and when the school director saw him sitting alone during his rounds, he said that it was not a good influence, and he was still allowed to sit back in the large group, but when Mu Sicheng called for wishes for a seat before, he, every day, handed in a blank up. "

The class teacher also had a bit of a headache: "..... And none of the other students in the class, and none of them filled in their wishes to sit with him."

"You think of a way, find a classmate in the class to do the work, find a table for Mu Sicheng classmates, of course if these students are unwilling, you can make it clear to them, it's not permanent, it's just sitting for a while and rotating later, after all, everyone is unwilling, this can be considered a chore, we can only say try."

Mu Sicheng listened to the silence outside the door for a moment, and the next second he snorted and turned to step in and say I don't need a tablemate when he heard Yuan Qingqing's clear voice: "I can be a tablemate with him for a long time."

"Huh?!" Now even the class teacher was a bit shocked, "But Qingqing, in the seat will you handed in, it says that he is not the one at the table?!"

Mu Sicheng takes a step inside.

"I'll sit at the same table as him so I can keep an eye on him close by." Yuan Qingqing said very insistently, "Teacher, next month if he doesn't make any mistakes, I will definitely give him a little red flower."

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Classroom teacher: "....."

Why is this little girl still thinking about it!

When Yuan Qingqing really moved in next to him, Mu Sicheng couldn't control his weird expression. On the one hand, he felt that Yuan Qingqing, the woman, was only at the table with him to spy on him, and on the other hand, a voice inside him faintly, kept saying .....

Wasn't it really to get him in person that he was being watched so closely to this point?!

Noticing that Mu Sicheng had been looking at her, Yuan Qingqing turned her head in confusion, "?"

"Three-eighty line." Mu Sicheng forcefully piled the book in the middle of the two, blocking Yuan Qingqing's view of him, "Don't come over, or I'll get cranky."

Yuan Qingqing looks on in silence at the 38th parallel, which is known as the "38th wall".

Originally, Mu Sicheng thought that Yuan Qingqing would be sitting next to him and that he would have no peace in class and would be nagged all the time, but to his surprise, Yuan Qingqing was an exceptionally quiet girl who, with her head down and her glasses on, listened carefully and took notes after class.

Unlike Mu Sicheng, who has a messy desktop, Yuan Qingqing is a student with a neat and uniform desktop.

All her books are wrapped in plain kraft paper cases, from notepads, to stationery boxes, to notebooks, all with one brand and one pattern - cartoon hip hop monkeys.

Mu Sicheng couldn't help but be curious to see what Yuan Qingqing was doing, and when he glanced over the side of the 38th wall, he saw Yuan Qingqing jotting down notes while writing rapidly in a small notebook next to him with a serious expression.

[Student xx is playing with his mobile phone.]

[Student xx is reading an extra-curricular book.]

[Mu Sicheng's classmate is deserting and peeking at his table].

Mu Sicheng :!!!

Mu Sicheng quickly retracted her head back behind the Sanbae wall, hammering her desk in exasperation, thinking - how can this woman be so single-minded, listening to a lecture and taking notes on others at the same time, and so self-absorbed!

Shit, didn't I like him! How could I think I was spying on her!

What's she got to peek at! Just a strange woman who buys a table of hip hop monkeys!

By the end of class, the quiet Yuan Qingqing from class had completely disappeared, and she chased after Mu Sicheng asking, "Where are the keys?"

"Why didn't you return the key to Ma Cailiang?"

"Didn't you say you'd return it to him when you found it today?"

"I didn't find it." Mu Sicheng spread his hands in disbelief, "That's all."

Yuan Qingqing looked at him, didn't say anything, just clenched his fist, then suddenly spoke, "I ..... saw you put the key back the other day too."

"You didn't want to take it that badly either, so why did you end up taking it anyway?"

Mu Sicheng was hammered with a muffled fist that hit him in the heart, and he said, almost viciously, "None of your business! That's what's wrong with me! I'm just going to steal it!"

"Kleptomania, ever hear of it! What else is wrong with me if you're in charge of heaven and earth?!"

Then he pushed back his own chair and kicked off.

Mu Sicheng thought that when he came back again, Yuan Qingqing would be gone, leaving an empty seat at his table, but she remained quiet, looked at him, and said, " Fellow Mu Sicheng, it's time for class."

--As if nothing had happened.

Perhaps something happened too, when Mu Sicheng peeked in and saw Yuan Qingqing write another entry in her notebook - [Mu Sicheng kicked a chair in an attempt to destroy public property, attempted to do so].

He was a little baffled.

Yuan Qingqing was a very good tablemate, she was clean, polite and helpful, she was always there whenever the class asked for her help, and she would try her best to solve any problem. Mu Sicheng understands why there are so many students in the class who complain about Yuan Qingqing, but every time the class president is elected, Yuan Qingqing is still elected with the first number of votes.

Because she is a very reasonable person, you can say that this kind of person is good to get along with or not, but she is fair to people and doesn't make any difference because of your family, grades or appearance.

Nor do they look at you through tinted glasses because of what you have done in the past.

Mu Sicheng looks at the little rewards handed out in front of him - he didn't do a single thing last week under Yuan Qingqing's watchful eye, and the student who gets a full week's worth of Su-Tao gets a small reward, really small, usually an eraser and a sticker.

But this is the first time Mu Sicheng has got one and it feels a bit amazing - it's amazing that a student like him can still get a reward for being disciplined .....

At least Mu Sicheng himself could hardly have imagined this day.

The small reward is an eraser, in the shape of a hip hop monkey.

The eraser was not issued by the class, it was probably bought for Yuan Qingqing at his own expense.

On the day Yuan Qingqing gave Mu Sicheng the erasers, she went to the office and then seemed to have an argument with the class teacher.

The erasers in the plastic pockets are all regular squares with a number - [59] - written on them in marker.

There are 60 people in Class 7 and 59 erasers, which means that one person has no award.

Who this person is is self-explanatory.

Mu Sicheng is very conscious of the fact that it would be bizarre for the university to allow him to receive an award after the big mistake he made before.

When the first period of study had passed, Yuan Qingqing went out and when he returned, there was an eraser, in the shape of a hip-hop monkey, in his plastic pocket.

Yuan Qingqing gave the rubber to Mu Sicheng as a reward for his discipline the previous week, and when she said this, her eyes were as swollen as peaches, so it looked like she had been crying again since she left.

By the second night, Yuan Qingqing was on the table again, curled up in a ball and sobbing very quietly, and Mu Sicheng, holding the rubber of the hip-hop monkey, finally asked, "Hey, Yuan Qingqing, what's wrong with you?"

Yuan Qingqing slowly parted her face, her eyes swollen a little more, and she cried very quietly, choking as she did so, "..... I don't understand, why the class master Mr. Ren just won't let me give you the red flower."

"You obviously didn't do anything last week, so why can't you cover it ....."

"I don't understand, the school rules clearly don't say that, Ma ..... burp." She hiccuped and continued to cry, "It's all written down, Ma Cailiang are allowed to cover the red flower, why can't you ah, why can't you cover it if it says you're a bad influence ....."

"That's not fair!"

Yuan Qingqing cried with righteous indignation, but Mu Sicheng couldn't help but laugh, his eyes involuntarily softening as he slumped against the Sanba wall, his tone teasing, "So you went and argued with the old man twice because of this?"

"It's not arguing, it's that it's just not right, I'm just arguing with the teacher." Yuan Qingqing slowly turned her head away again, she was puzzled, "Why is it just you who can't?"

"You're just a regular student in the class like everyone else."

"It's not like you're much of a bad person, what bad influence can you cause?"

Mu Sicheng was quiet for a moment, then tsked, "Don't cry, silly."

By the third night, Yuan Qingqing's mood had returned to normal, and Mu Sicheng watched her with her two large peach eyes, carefully noting in her little notebook.

[Yuan Qingqing classmate cries and wanders off in class.]

[Yuan Qingqing and Mu Sicheng are talking small talk.]

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Fuck, next time he comforts this guy he's an idiot.

The 38 walls began to fade sporadically, and the two men could briefly exchange glances on the wall, usually ending with Yuan Qingqing looking back in confusion and Mu Sicheng moving away indifferently, and the relationship between the two of them slowly began to become cordial, with him bringing Yuan Qingqing a glass of water when he went out and Yuan Qingqing bringing him a meal in the morning when he entered class at the hour. He would go out and fetch Yuan Qingqing a glass of water, Yuan Qingqing would bring him a meal in the morning when he was stuck in class.

Rumours began to circulate in the class that Yuan Qingqing liked him.

Mu Sicheng laughed at the rumours - it was only now that he saw that these high school students were really less observant than he was, and wasn't it obvious that Yuan Qingqing liked him?

Of course he didn't like Yuan Qingqing, although Yuan Qingqing's book had noted many times that Mu Sicheng had peeked at his tablemates, Mu Sicheng just found it interesting to observe Yuan Qingqing as a fool.

Yuan Qingqing has some very strange and stubborn habits, just like the person's insistence on rules, such as the fact that she must buy a full set of hipster monkeys for her stationery, or the fact that at the end of class on the second night, Yuan Qingqing must lie on the window next to her desk and stare at it for half a day with her eyes fixed on it.

At first glance, Mu Sicheng thought he was looking at his reflection in the window, and would have tensed up half a dozen times to strike a pose that he felt better about.

It was by chance that Mu Sicheng discovered that Yuan Qingqing was not looking at him, but at someone outside.

The seniors at their school are not released on the first and second nights. After two consecutive evening study sessions, they join the freshmen and sophomores in the large recess, which has twenty minutes, and many seniors who have been sitting in the classroom all day go for a run in the playground to loosen up and stay in shape.

The school is encouraging this behaviour, so on the second night the playground will be illuminated and four lights will be played around the whole playground to make it easier for people to see things and not run into each other.

Yuan Qingqing looked out of the window at the exact angle of one of the lamps, and from that angle, she could see the appearance of every student running under the lamp. She would clutch the pen she was writing with tightly and follow the other student until she lost sight of him or her, and then she would slump down somewhat depressed.

By the next time this person comes running over, Yuan Qingqing will be nervous again.

-- it was as if she wasn't carefully peeking out of the window at this man running, but was in the way of this man's runway, and the whole thing was overwhelming.

It's like when Mu Sicheng peeked at her.

He was the president of the student council, a senior, with good grades, good looks and, before Mu Sicheng arrived, the most popular boy in the school.

Yuan Qingqing often followed this boy to handle the affairs of the student council. The other party came to Yuan Qingqing a few times in class 7 and was very gentle, always smiling and saying, "When I graduate, the student council will depend on you to do something, Qingqing.

Whenever this boy came to Yuan Qingqing, Yuan Qingqing was always very nervous and would jump up violently from his table and come back with his whole expression blank, limp and silly on the table.

It wasn't that Mu Sicheng couldn't notice the difference, but for a few seconds Mu Sicheng's mind stopped working when he noticed the way Yuan Qingqing waited so expectantly and earnestly for the whole recess, just for the few seconds when the boy ran past the light.

"Hey." Mu Sicheng's mind was blank as he heard himself ask nastily, " Yuan Qingqing, you spy on people every night, you don't, like this guy, do you?"

Deny it.

You've been peeking for so long, you haven't even said that you like you, so you must be afraid to confess your love to each other.

Deny that you like the boy.

Deny that I ..... like you, Yuan Qingqing .

Yuan Qingqing, who was slumped against the window, sat up straight, her eyes bright and angry, her face flushed and a little shy, the kind of embarrassment and shyness that comes from having a secret poked out, but soon Yuan Qingqing straightened her expression and she leaned over the table and said, very softly and gently, "Right."

"I like him."

"Maybe I'm not good enough for a boy as good as him." Yuan Qingqing turned towards the window and muttered in a small voice, "But it's not against the rules to like it for a bit."

Mu Sicheng became furious, and his eyes turned red with anger, and he hammered his hand on the wall of the Sanbei, fuming: "What makes you not good enough for him? Your grades are so good, you work so hard, you're so enthusiastic about your classmates! This guy can't run half as fast as me! It's good that you can look up to him! You don't deserve him! Don't shame him!"

Yuan Qingqing was taken aback by Mu Sicheng's sudden outburst and gave a bewildered "ah?" He gave a bewildered "ah?

"And peeking!" Mu Sicheng picked Yuan Qingqing up and angrily dragged her out, "He's just running, if you want to watch, go down and watch, what's the point of peeking!"

"Peep how wimpy!"

Mu Sicheng pushed Yuan Qingqing to the stairway and waved his hand in two impatient go-go gestures, "He's running there just for you to see, so what's the shame, go down and see, to your face, in a big way!"

"I'm allowed!"

Yuan Qingqing went down, confused and apprehensive, and Mu Sicheng took a moment of silence at the empty stairway and walked back, his fists clenched tightly, and took his place.

Mu Sicheng didn't want to look, but he couldn't help turning his head and looking out of the window.

Outside the window, Yuan Qingqing ran to the side of the runway, and the boy actually saw Yuan Qingqing as he ran past where he was again. He seemed to think that Yuan Qingqing had come to him for something, and broke away from the large group of runners and came to Yuan Qingqing.

Yuan Qingqing waved his hands in disbelief, his face flushed red, as if to explain that there was nothing wrong with him.

The boy smiled and extended his hand, seemingly inviting Yuan Qingqing to do something, as if they were running together.

Yuan Qingqing stared blankly at the boy for a long, long time, gave a little jump of excitement, then nodded frantically and followed behind the boy, running with him, both running and talking, their smiles genuinely pleasant.

Mu Sicheng: "....."

He's going to break the defence.

Mu Sicheng's hands were shaking as he leaned back against the table, closed his eyes and took two deep breaths, even dizzying for a moment - Yuan Qingqing genuinely liked the other man.

The other side doesn't look uninterested in Yuan Qingqing .....

It's just that Yuan Qingqing, a wooden head, is so dull and tolerant that he doesn't notice it at all, and he has a crush on someone until now.

Just ..... Yuan Qingqing ..... really, really didn't have any feelings for him?

So why did she do this to him?

What kind of reason was it that made her insist that he was a not-so-bad person.

Curiosity turned into a strange itch that crawled from Mu Sicheng's heart to his palm, as if some evil desire had turned into a poisonous spider and swirled around his heart and palm, and his fingers twitched spasmodically as Mu Sicheng's gaze couldn't help but look at the small book that sat on Yuan Qingqing's desk.

He hadn't touched anyone else's stuff in a long, long ..... time.

This small book, he had seen Yuan Qingqing would write some daily tips on it, if only .....

Mu Sicheng took a deep breath as he clenched his fists and withdrew his gaze to the half-used hipster monkey eraser on his desk, his chest heaving violently as he struggled to control his emotions.

There is no need.

As the days went on, Mu Sicheng forced himself to get used to Yuan Qingqing, who went for a run every evening between classes, to the boy who came to the class more and more often, and to the fact that he was able to control his desire to steal something without Yuan Qingqing's watchful eye.

During the last part of his sophomore year, Mu Sicheng was so incredibly peaceful that he even thought he had been able to let go of Yuan Qingqing, just as he had been able to let go of his desire to steal.

Ill-timed desires and ill-timed feelings are about to be removed from his life as he grows up.

The summer after his sophomore year ended, the whole class celebrated their upcoming senior year, and arguably their last craze, by meeting up to go out. Mu Sicheng was not prepared to go, but after a strong invitation from some of his classmates, he annoyingly agreed - after he became honest, many of his classmates who had been a bit afraid of him Even the class teacher has changed her mind about him, and he has become more friendly with the others.

After a long day of fun in the park, the students said their goodbyes and went back to their homes.

Mu Sicheng looked at Yuan Qingqing, who was wearing a long skirt and carrying a school bag, paused for a moment, averted his eyes and spoke, "It's a bit late, shall I see you off?"

When Yuan Qingqing tried to say no, Mu Sicheng quickly added, "I take bus number 7, are we going the same way?"

Yuan Qingqing said suspiciously, "Your house is not on line seven as I remember."

"I'm changing places, I'm renting a house and I'm not comfortable with it so I'm changing." Mu Sicheng spreads his hands, "Rory, just say go or don't go?"

Mu Sicheng has never taken a bus, not to mention the No. 7 line. He always takes a taxi when he goes out, so he faces a very embarrassing situation.

Yuan Qingqing helped him vote, frowning and criticising Mu Sicheng: "You have to talk to your class teacher when you change your house, you live alone and your mailing address has changed, when something happens to you, you won't be able to find it."

"You remember to go back and report to your class teacher ....."

"Stewardess." Mu Sicheng snorted and interrupted Yuan Qingqing, "Mind your own business."

Mu Sicheng grabbed the ring of the bus, and with a glance, he saw a chain around Yuan Qingqing's white neck, with two initials on it, as if someone had put his name on her body to assert his sovereignty - Yuan Qingqing had never worn any accessories before. Mu Sicheng paused for a moment and said, "Did he give you this chain?"

"..... hmm." Yuan Qingqing was a little embarrassed, "He graduated and said he wanted to leave something for me as a souvenir, so he gave me this."

"Just a memorial?" Mu Sicheng asks rhetorically, without sarcasm.

"Because I'm still in high school and he said to wait until I go to college." Yuan Qingqing scratched his head, "Just be my boyfriend."

She couldn't help but giggle a little as she said, "He came to visit my parents, heh heh."

"..... attitude comes together." After saying this, Mu Sicheng fell silent.

On the crowded bus, someone approached silently and reached out a hand towards Yuan Qingqing's backpack, which was violently grabbed by Mu Sicheng next to him, who questioned with a stern gaze, "What are you doing?"

After a bit of drama, Yuan Qingqing and Mu Sicheng got off the bus early and, at Yuan Qingqing's insistence, they took the man to the nearest Public Security Bureau and then parted ways at the nearest bus stop.

"Don't send it off." Yuan Qingqing waved his hand, "My house is just around here, you should go back too!"

Mu Sicheng looked at Yuan Qingqing with his pocket in the distance and let his eyes droop.

This was taken out of Yuan Qingqing's school bag when the thief stole it. When Yuan Qingqing was clearing out her things, she was mainly clearing out her money and mobile phone, and didn't notice that this little book was missing, so Mu Sicheng hid it.

Last time.

Mu Sicheng looks at the small book with the hipster monkey cover and he takes a deep breath to control his shaking hands.

Let him know what is going on in Yuan Qingqing's head and why he thinks that about him, and he will never steal again.

He turned the first page, then stood still.

[Mu Sicheng has not broken any discipline this week, but the teacher does not allow him to have a red flower. I don’t understand why everyone can have a red flower but Mu Sicheng.]

[It's not fair.]

[As a disciplinarian, I should give a small red flower to every student who does not break the rules].

Below is a hand-drawn row of small red flowers with the name Mu Sicheng written next to them.

Every week after that, Yuan Qingqing would draw a row of red flowers for Mu Sicheng as long as he did not break any rules.

And on the last day of the record, Yuan Qingqing recorded.

[Mu Sicheng has not committed any disciplinary offence for two months. After discussing with the teacher, he admitted that his previous behaviour was biased and gave me permission to move Mu Sicheng's red flower to the Vegetarian book for the next term, and this week's informal red flower will be recorded for the last week.]

[I hope that Mu Sicheng will be serious in the future and will not make mistakes again.]

Mu Sicheng held the book and very slowly lowered his head, his breath coming in sharply, his hands clenched tightly, but suddenly he snorted a laugh, and tears dripped from his eyes.

He ..... committed it again.

He had failed Yuan Qingqing, a foolish man who trusted him.

" Mu Sicheng ....." Yuan Qingqing's puzzled voice rang out in front of Mu Sicheng's face, "Why are you still here?"

Mu Sicheng jerked his little book behind him, he looked away and forced himself to calm down, "I waited here for the bus, I didn't wait, why are you back?"

"Oh." Yuan Qingqing didn't doubt it, and she said bitterly, "I went back to look for it and found my little book missing with some of my classmates' performance from last term on it, and it's a pain in the ass to have it missing, and I'm wondering if that thief just stole my book."

"Is that so?" Mu Sicheng took a deep breath, "What if it was you who didn't bring it?"

"It's just a day out, it's not like you have to keep track of who's breaking the rules, and usually when you're not doing anything, you don't carry a book."

"..... seems to be." Yuan Qingqing was wound up by Mu Sicheng and she frowned, "But I remember I brought it with me."

"And what thief would have nothing to do with stealing your book?" Mu Sicheng scoffs, "It doesn't look like it's worth anything."

Yuan Qingqing was furious: "That book records everyone's performance throughout the semester, it's very important!"

"But you have a point." Yuan Qingqing sighed, "Maybe I really did forget it, I'll look for it in school tomorrow."

Mu Sicheng breathed a sigh of relief, but as he looked at Yuan Qingqing who had simply turned away, not suspecting him at all, the unresolved emotion in his chest suddenly came up and he spoke up hauntingly, "Hey, I'm a thief too."

" Yuan Qingqing, why don't you suspect me of stealing from you?"

Yuan Qingqing turned her head and looked solemnly at Mu Sicheng, who looked at her for a long, long time, before saying, "Don't just make jokes like that."

"You spent two months trying to get everyone in the class to trust you."

"Until you make a mistake, I, as class president and disciplinarian, will not and should not suspect you lightly, fellow Mu Sicheng."

"I'm going back, bye, and you go home early too."

Yuan Qingqing waving, ready to leave

Mu Sicheng took a deep breath as he spoke, wanting to say - [I won't do it again, Yuan Qingqing].

But before those words could be uttered, a runaway bus crashed into the station, plastering itself next to Mu Sicheng and jamming in.

Yuan Qingqing's school bag rolled to the ground, its hip-hop monkey contents scattered all over the place, the blood-stained hip-hop monkey headphones rolled to Mu Sicheng's feet as if malfunctioning, the monkey eyes on the headphones began to flash red, screams of pedestrians began to come from all around, and the bus driver climbed down from the window in horror, his face drunk and visibly smelling of alcohol.

Yuan Qingqing's arm drops helplessly from the side of the bus.

Blood splattered on Mu Sicheng's face and his pupils spread.

The little book he was holding fell to the floor, soaked in blood on the last page, the little red flower melting into the blood, no longer readable.

Ornamental pool.

Lu Yizhan looked up at Mu Sicheng on the big screen, bound within a hurricane of chains, his eyes vacant and clearly spiralling out of control with his mental values, and sighed in a complicated way as he remembered the files he had looked up.

The fate of every person chosen by Bai six is at his disposal.

He likes the souls of these people, wants to bring them into his game, and wants these people's skills to be used by him and for him, so Bai six will deliberately design the paths of these people's lives to intensify the core of their desires, to pull them to the maximum, so that the skills derived from their desires are the strongest.

Whether it was Liu Jiayi, Daniel or Mu Sicheng, each experienced this intensification of desire under the manipulation of Bai six.

Liu Jiayi, who could have reconciled with Liu Huai, was induced by Bai six to kill Liu Huai himself, Daniel killed Phoebe with the help of Bai six in the family power struggle, and Mu Sicheng's last hesitation led to Yuan Qingqing's death in front of him. The last hesitation of Mu Sicheng led to the death of Yuan Qingqing in front of him.

Mu Sicheng's desires begin with theft, with the proximity of people he likes and is close to, with the desire to break free from theft, but eventually, with the death of these people, he enters the game and wants to resurrect them, eventually falling into the game of theft and becoming a game machine called the thief, carefully forged by God.

Both times he was hit by a bus, both times because of his own suspicions, and the speed and time difference became the point at which Mu Sicheng could not forgive himself for wanting to run faster, to be more agile, to outrun all the deliberate means of transport in the world and to pull the man who was dying under the wheels.

But he didn't.

Thus, was born the worst and perfect thief in the world.

The Lost Land of Gold

Lu Yizhan closes his eyes.

Mu Sicheng's skills are born in the same way that Georgia's are born

Georgia's skill was to turn back time three hours for reasons other than Armand's - on the day of the accident, Georgia had come out of Gloren's country to find him, to show him the way in.

From the time Georgia left the gates of Gloren to the time he took himself back in, exactly three hours later, Georgia was on his knees, looking in a trance at the gold dust that littered Gloren, muttering only one word.

"..... I'm late."

"It's late ....."

In this world, sometimes human desires are not even human desires, they are just a fun way to collect the pain that God needs.

Games, mines, mines.

After Muke took Georgia down the mine with a flash backwards, Tang Erda quickly pulled out her gun and took on the control player of Georgia's team, Chrissy's eyes glazed over and threw a wall of Bai Liu's sticky flow in front of the control player.

[System Alert: Player Chrissy uses Personal Skill (Non-Newtonian Fluids)]

The volume of the fluid is extensible, but the more extensible it is, the thinner the wall it forms and the less resistant it is to blows, but it is theoretically proven to block any S-rank attack up to 10 metres, particularly effective against physical attacks such as firearms, and is 100% defensible against magical attacks.

[Available for 15 minutes, cd time 1 hour].

The bullet hit the flowing wall of liquid and was instantly swallowed up, Bai Liu stared at this wall for a moment and his eyes narrowed.

Non-Newtonian fluid, said to be the material of some kind of liquid bulletproof vest, effective against bullets and physical resistance, becoming more solid the harder you push, and almost precisely restraining their main attack, Tang Erda.

But their team has more than one player who can take the main attacking position.

" Jiayi, put on the poison, you defend against Chrissy." Bai Liu quickly ordered, "This skill won't protect against your magic attacks."

"Copy that." Liu Jiayi nodded and stepped forward, flinging his hand out, the poison landing and spraying, instantly staining the milky white non-Newtonian fluid wall a purple-black colour emitting an unsettling poisonous mist, the control bit player shielded behind the shield was instantly encased and surrounded by the stained black wall, his life bar rapidly dropping by a fraction.

Chrissy gritted her teeth as she backhanded the fluid back and glued the blackened fluid at Bai Liu who was standing tall and watching the whole scene.

The fluid possessed by the poison was just the right amount of corrosive, and she was waiting for it!

Now she'll be able to follow Captain Georgia's tactics and switch from defence to attack, taking the main attacking responsibility and surrounding Bai Liu!

Don't think that Golden Dawn's main attacker is only Armand too!

Chrissy's brown eyes burst into light: "Quit the game right here, Bai Liu!"

The black fluid erupts, and under Chrissy's manipulation it spreads out in a ten-meter flow from top to bottom, enveloping Bai Liu in a cascade!

" Golden Dawn played a good match with this offensive and defensive switch." Hearts, sitting in the audience, lazily dragged his jaw on the big screen and commented nonchalantly, " Chrissy's [Non-Newtonian Fluid] clearly restrains Tang Erda, but Jiayi's poison skill also restrains [Non-Newtonian Fluid], after her poison blackens Chrissy's fluid, the fluid becomes corrosive and will This fluid takes on a corrosive quality and will damage her own team members who are hiding behind it, which means that the [shield] is lost."

" Chrissy's [shield] is something that Golden Dawn as a team has always relied on, if Armand's Hurricane is Golden Dawn's sheathed sword, Chrissy's [shield] is like the armour a knight never leaves."

"I had expected Georgia to become very constrained in their style of play after getting [shields] grubbed by Jiayi, as teams that have relied on [shields] for so long do, with a subconscious fear of losing [shields]."

Phoebe, sitting next to Hearts, was thoughtful: "It's as soft as the Kingsmen you're staying with, isn't it?"

Hearts' commentary voice trailed off as he gave Phoebe a lazy glance, "Captain Phoebe, you're the one who offered to come into the audience and ask me, a retired tactician, to analyse the situation, so the least you can do is to be polite to me, right?"

"I'm sorry." Phoebe apologised courteously, "Please continue with your analysis."

Hearts withdrew his gaze, lowered his eyes and said softly, "But you're right, Georgia does have certain traits that are a bit like mine, which is why the two teams we've been tacticians for have produced two of the strongest shield players in the league."

"If I must describe it, I'm weak and Georgia is protective."

" Georgia is a very protective tactician who seems to be terrified of something happening to his players, even when everyone on the field has immunity from death, he subconsciously hides all his players behind [shields] to keep them well protected."

"So I'm kinda surprised he played this switch from defence to attack, it's not his style of play."

Hearts looked up at the big screen, "But it does seem like a good tactic."

"After Jiayi's poison blackens Chrissy's fluid, [Shield] does fail, but accordingly, Chrissy gets a fluid with a large range of manipulable enchanted attacks, and this fluid also has a barrier function that effectively stops the opponent from defending back since it doesn't allow aggressive people to pass through. "

"A very powerful attack." Phoebe thought for a moment, "If it were me, I'd split everyone up in Fluid and stack my own [Hell's Prayer Song] to drop all the enemy team members' life bar below fifty at once, and also focus on attacking Bai Liu, stacking all the team members' attacks in a way that would try to send him out of the game in this skill time. "

"What an aggressive tactic, no shields, using all the skills of the players to stack attacks and strongly set fire on the opposing tactician, this will cause a violent counterattack and can easily kill the players." Hearts replied lightly, he paused for a moment, "But ..... Georgia does seem ready to do the same."

"I thought you said he wouldn't use this tactic of sacrificing his players?" Phoebe asked rhetorically with a shrug of her shoulders.

"Because the tempo was pulled up by Bai Liu." Hearts pondered for a moment, "Or rather, Georgia played at a fast pace too."

"With both tacticians looking for a quick resolution to the game, it would be easy to play such over-aggressive tactics."

Hearts eyes half-closed on the big screen, "..... such a fast pace, what the hell are they running from?"

"Yeah." Phoebe cupped her face in disbelief, tilting her head in confusion, "There aren't even any monsters in this one yet, it feels like a puzzle game, just the perfect copy for [Shield] and Georgia's skills to be played, so why is he playing so fast?"

In-game.

The moment the fluid fell to wrap around Bai Liu, Tang Erda turned her gun strongly and fired repeatedly at Chrissy's fatalities as she looked defenceless, her life span dropping rapidly without the protection of her shield and having to concentrate on attacking Bai Liu.

Golden Dawn's control and roaming position quickly closes in to disrupt Tang Erda.

[System Alert: Player Belloc uses skill (Birdcage)] (Control Position)

[This skill creates a birdcage that traps the player inside and prevents them from moving. The birdcage is filled with thorns and man-eating birds that will constantly peck at the player and interfere with the player, and when pecked, it comes with a spirit drop effect].

[Skill lasts 20 minutes, CD one hour].

[System Alert: Player Moore uses skill (Shadow)] (Wandering position)]

[This skill transforms the player into a shadow, blending into the light and shadow of the object. The player's bent shadow can rise up off the ground and grab the opponent in a place without light, but in a place with light it can only stick to the ground below. The enemy's attack on the shadow attack in the ground is considered ineffective, and the attack on the shadow attack on the ground is considered effective, but the attack power is halved.]

Tang Erda was instantly trapped by the birdcage, and a number of real and imaginary lights began to appear around him, constantly attacking him and interfering with him.

But even in this situation Tang Erda was still strong in attack - and with both sides attacking at high intensity, a point less in his attack was a point more likely to cost them the game.

Tang Erda, completely oblivious to the bird that was pecking at him, was cutting his own shadow with a knife, still slipping by life and spirit levels, blood seeping from the corners of his forehead and temples, his dark blue eyes cold as his gun poked out of the bird's cage, firing one shot after another at Chrissy's heart amidst heavy interference.

With both sides giving up on defence, attack is the best defence!

Chrissy's face tightened as she had to partially cover herself with the poisoned non-Newtonian fluid she had drawn out under Tang Erda's powerful attack, creating a very thin fluid shallow shield over her body - a shield that was also poisoned and would keep her life level down, but at least it would protect her from Tang Erda's bullets.

The attack of the team's main attacker was so terrifying that even with her shield on, she could feel the violent impact of the bullets hitting her shield, shaking her chest and giving Chrissy the creeps - she knew how well her shield protected her against bullets, and to be able to hit like that through it. This guy must have a ridiculously high gun attack!

If her shield didn't happen to restrain firearms, she would have been killed by a magazine from this guy!

[System warning: Tang Erda's life value is down to 47.]

[System warning: Muke's life is down to 32].

Liu Jiayi, standing in the centre, gritted her teeth, she had used all her antidote skills on her entrance to Mu Sicheng, the hour had not yet expired and her antidote skills had not yet been reset, she had just used her poison skills, and her move was almost reset, but using the poison swamp move in a place like the mine, stacked with the opponent's [Non-Newtonian Fluid], would have been devastating to them devastating blow.

But now, if her calculations are correct, the lifelines of all the members should have dropped to safety, except for Bai Liu.

The enemy's players were also outputting like hell, nothing like the defensive team Wang Shun had told them about earlier, both sides were hitting at such a fast pace that she couldn't keep up with the healing!

It's time to start cutting back!

Liu Jiayi gritted her teeth and looked towards Bai Liu who was wrapped in a heavy poison barrier and began to choke uncontrollably, bloodied gold dust spilling from the corners of her lips, her heart began to beat at an eerily slow pace as she couldn't stop choking, her pupils spreading bit by bit, her right hand covering her lips where she kept coughing up gold dust and looking down at her left hand.

Starting from the tips of her fingers, little by little her fingers began to be coloured gold, or more precisely, to turn into gold.

Liu Jiayi's breath stopped as she quickly tapped on the system panel, but as her limbs began to turn gold, her movements began to stiffen, and it took several taps in a row to open the system panel.

No problem with life and spirit values?!

Liu Jiayi's pupils tightened.

What's going on?

Nothing out of the ordinary, she didn't trigger any key props, not a single game clue or sign, so why is it suddenly a golden statue?!

Liu Jiayi was reluctantly about to use up her last great skill, the golden distortion was already filling her heart, she was beginning to struggle to choke and cough, her fingers were almost shaking, and the moment she was about to fling out the poison bottle, six silver rose bullets fell from the highest point and went straight through her heart.

Her fingertips stopped and she looked back incredulously at the spot where the bullet had been fired and slowly collapsed to the ground, blood spilling from the side of her mouth along with the gold dust.

[System Alert: Player Liu Jiayi has zero life and is out of the game.

Tang Erda looked incredulously at the spot where the bullet had just been fired, the gun in his hand had disappeared the moment Jiayi was hit, the only person who could use his gun was .....

Chrissy looked incredulously at the six bullets that had penetrated her barrier - her barrier was impenetrable to any object with an offensive charge, but just now, the bullet with the strongest protection from her barrier, had actually penetrated six of them and killed a player?!

How did this happen?

Chrissy was stunned for a moment as her manipulation of the fluid slackened and the barrier wrapped around Bai Liu fell to the ground, Bai Liu still holding his gun up to where Liu Jiayi had fallen, looking around at all the stunned people, but he had a calm expression, not at all like the tactician who had just suddenly shot and killed a key member of his team, and said with a sense of understanding.

"So, here's the key point."

"It's time."

Ornamental pool.

The presenter was already frozen, looking at Bai Liu on the big screen with the gun still smoking from the muzzle in his hand, and could only let out a stunned, "Ha?!"

The audience exploded.

"Shit, what is this guy doing?!"

"He killed his own team's healer?!"

"Was it an oopsie?!"

"That can't be right?! He fired six shots! If this is an oops, this is fucking outrageous, isn't it?!"

"There's no way that's an ooze, Bai Liu emptied the witch's blood bar all at once! And he's still holding his gun up, looking totally ready to kill or not to kill and then add two more shots!"

"What, what's going on?!" Liao Ke in the audience was stunned, "Did Bai Liu really shoot the gun?!"

"Yes." Lu Yizhan's face clouded as he stared at the golden sculptures in the background of the big screen for a long time before he suddenly stood up, his tone and expression sinking to a frightening level, "I'm going to the third bureau."

"There's a problem with Heretic 0073."

"Wait?!" Liao Ke was shocked, "Now? But Georgia's at the game, there's no one who knows you in the third inning to pick you up, you'd be forcing your way through, something could go wrong!"

"They are very tightly defended!"

"And it's almost time for us to play, so it's not always enough time to log out and come back!"

"I'll find a way to make this quick." Lu Yizhan clenched his teeth and closed his eyes, "I've done something terribly wrong ..... I've taken in the wrong heretic."

Liao Ke was stunned: "The wrong kind of heresy?"

"I shouldn't have taken in heretic 0073," Lu Yizhan breathed deeply, "because it wasn't a heresy at all!"

Liao Ke wonders, "0073 is totally heretical."

"No." Lu Yizhan shook his head slowly, "Bai six, that guy, tricked Georgia, played us all."

"He deliberately induced me to take in the Gloren Kingdom in order to collect the pain of its thousand years of gold, which he had set up long ago in order to collect the pain!"

Liao Ke got up, patted Lu Yizhan on the shoulder and sighed, "..... I'll go with you to the third inning."

"Let's pick the closest point to the Gulo Sea and log out."

By the Sea of Gulo, three innings of heresy treatment.

After Lu Yizhan logged out, he calmly instructed Liao Ke: "Contact Cen Buming and ask him to expedite the approval for me to enter the Third Bureau."

"Yes, Captain." Liao Ke answered dryly, and a few minutes later he handed the phone to Lu Yizhan, " Captain Cen's on the phone, he's asking what you want to do?"

"It's a long story, the situation is urgent, so I'll keep it short." Lu Yizhan replied calmly, "Senior, I need this paper approval from you to save the world."

Cen Buming was twistedly silent for two minutes: "..... waits."

He hung up and after almost a minute Cen Buming's call came back, his tone becoming somewhat condensed, "Something's happened to the Third Bureau."

"Two days ago, they received a strange teaser letter which said they were going to steal Heretic 0073, and the entire Bureau of Three is now under martial law, prohibiting any outsiders from entering or leaving, and the temporary approval couldn't come down."

"Sounds familiar, doesn't it? It's that monkey stealing style, but oddly enough ....."

"The Mu Sicheng of this world is playing in a league right now, and cannot possibly come out to steal Heretic 0073." Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, "If this teaser letter is true, it must be a Mu Sicheng from another world line, and to have a Mu Sicheng, that can only mean one thing."

"- the evil god Bai six intervened in the matter, and he wanted to move heretic 0073."

"I got some special channels to give you another approval, using prophet authority, saying you were a special agent here to investigate the matter." Cen Buming spoke in a cold tone, "But it's hard to say if the Third Bureau eats prophet authority, after all, it's a special product of the First Bureau, and the Third Bureau has no such position."

A special product of the game Lu Yizhan: "..... Thank you Sifu."

Cen Buming laughed coldly and ungratefully, and simply hung up the phone.

"Go!" Lu Yizhan trotted, " Cen Buming should have sent the approvals through, let's try and get into the third inning."

"No." The investigating member of Bureau 3 shook his head solemnly, "The approval we have verified is genuine, we can give you access to Bureau 3 for some information, but I am sorry, we do not give you access to Heretic 0073 as a special agent."

Lu Yizhan softened his tone and spoke with supplication: "The documents have been allowed to pass before, why not today?"

The investigating team member hesitated for a moment and looked at Lu Yizhan who looked pleading, but still spoke up to explain, "Because Captain Georgia said he wanted to be on strict guard today, he pulled the alert of the three bureaus to the highest level and gave a deadly order that no one was allowed to touch heretic 0073 until he returned."

--This is what that teaser letter led to.

Lu Yizhan closed his eyes and took a deep breath, "..... From what I know about Captain Georgia, he wouldn't be so easily alerted to a teaser letter from Cen Buming."

Georgia in this world line had no contact with the thief Mu Sicheng at all and had always been too steady in her work to be so up in arms about a teaser letter before she had even investigated where the other side was coming from, doing a Dora to Red Level 2 alert, not likely the highest.

--Georgia has never used this level of alert in her time as head of the Third Bureau.

The investigator paused, "Since you have the approval of the prophet's authority, you should know that there are people in this world who can dream, or foretell, things in the future."

Lu Yizhan opened his eyes as that sense of foreboding grew in him: "..... you mean?"

" Captain Georgia and Captain Armand both had precognitive dreams a few months back." The investigator looked up at Lu Yizhan, "You should be aware that those of us who watch over the heretics are the most heavily influenced by them, and sometimes we do get some vague revelations from them through this influence, some of which will take the form of dreams."

" Both Captain Georgia and Vice Armand had dreams of such a teaser letter and they thought the person sending it would be a big threat to the three innings, and after we discussed it, we felt it was informative that such a dream was reflected in both captains."

Lu Yizhan's heart sank to the bottom.

..... Dreams, Bai six's favorite way to induce.

It was a seamless set-up that Bai six had been working on for months, unnoticed by the man who had left the Heretic's Bureau.

"One last request, can you ascertain the current status of the crew guarding Heretic 0073?" Lu Yizhan looked up.

"Just contacted, no problem." The investigator nodded, "We'll make another contact now."

Less than a minute later, the investigator returned with a pale face, "The team from ..... guarding Heresy 0073 is lost."

Lu Yizhan exhaled a breath of air from his chest, "You are sending a new team to the island immediately, I can wear the surveillance ring, can I be allowed to follow this new team to the island as an exception?"

..... If the thousand-year gold deal with the Bai six and Gloren nations is not suspended, and [Mu Sicheng] is allowed to actually open 0073 in reality and spread the powder of the gold point stone throughout the world, then all creatures will be turned into gold sculptures in time.

Heresy spreads across the world, the race between the prophets and the evil gods ends in defeat, and Bai six will collect endless pain in this last world line.

And the moment the heresy opens, the Gloren State .....

The hourglass of time must be filled before the transaction can be terminated.

Lu Yizhan looks down at the coin hanging from his heart and holds it tight - new prophet Bai Liu, do you have an idea?

Where do the tears that must be worth a thousand years of gold curdled into pain come from?

In-game.

After Liu Jiayi exited the game, Bai Liu calmly turned his gun around and aimed it at Belloc and Moore, who had trapped Tang Erda, and fired again.

Chrissy gritted her teeth and covered the shield made of non-Newtonian fluids to get in front of Belloc and Moore.

Shortly after Liu Jiayi exited the game and her Poison skill ran out of time, Chrissy's non-Newtonian fluid turned white again without the Poison enchantment, i.e., the [Shield] function was restored.

But Bai Liu continued to fire, unperturbed by the sight of the shield in front of Belloc and Moore, pulling the trigger one after the other and emptying an entire magazine at the flowing solid shield.

Chrissy is confused - her shield is 100% immune to offensive actions such as bullets, so why is Bai Liu wasting skills attacking her shield?

And this guy ..... just killed the most precious member of his team, right?

Even when Bai Liu was doing something to benefit her team, it wasn't just Chrissy who was confused and questioning - what the hell was Bai Liu doing?

Tang Erda, who is trapped in a bird cage, also frowns.

He had hit this [non-Newtonian fluid] shield of Chrissy's and was basically sure that the bullets couldn't get past it, even if they were pulled up to his maximum attack power, and he didn't understand why Bai Liu had to hit it once when he knew that.

Everything Bai Liu had done from earlier to now was incomprehensible to him, but on the field, he, as a main attacker, would never question Bai Liu's actions - even if the opponent had done something as outrageous as killing a healer.

The silver bullets spiral, as if in slow motion, into the milky white liquid shield -

--Then, as if it had hit the air, it sailed through, hitting Belloc and Moore, who were hiding behind their shields and looking stunned.

The bullet entered the chest and splattered a shower of blood that melted into the fluid, creating a bloody red streak.

Chrissy: "?!?!"

Chrissy's mind went blank for a moment as she subconsciously opened her system panel to see if there was a mistake in her skills, and after double-checking, confirmed that her skill description had not changed at all - she had a shield effect against all offensive actions, especially against firearm-based physical attacks.

As long as the act is offensive, or even a normal act with an offensive mentality, her shields are able to provide some protection, and there has never been this weird situation where a bullet goes through and the high thickness of her stacked shields act as if they don't exist.

It was the same as if this guy had just shot past her shield and killed her own healer ..... It was as if the shield she had protected her players from countless times had completely failed in the presence of this man, in the presence of this strange tactician.

Why would a top-notch shield that clearly defends against even psychological aggressiveness fail in the presence of this man?

What would happen to her [shield] if it failed completely ..... in the presence of such a tactician who would brutally and brutally kill even her own team members...

Chrissy shuddered, feeling a twinge of uncontrollable fear.

Moore and Belloc, already bruised and battered from their confrontation with Tang Erda, were also showing signs of the sculpting of their protective gold, moving slowly and stiffly, and were now completely incapacitated by Bai Liu's shots, as they lay on the ground, holding their legs from Bai Liu's blows, screaming at Chrissy at the top of their lungs They screamed at the top of their lungs at Chrissy: "Run! Chrissy! Run away!"

Chrissy gritted her teeth and ripped off the last layer of light shield fluid protecting her body, doing her best to stack the shield to its thickest circle, completely encasing both players.

With blood pouring from the corners of her mouth, the unshielded Chrissy stood in front of her shield, her eyes fixed on Bai Liu high above.

If [Shield] fails, she is the last shield for the team - this is the awareness and duty of the [Shield] position.

Bai Liu slowly and leisurely changed the magazine as he took a step down from the heights of the mine, the shell casing falling with a crisp clatter under his feet, and after replacing it, he raised his hand again and aimed the gun at the two members of his team in the shield.

"Bang Bang Bang Bang Bang Bang-!!!"

The bullet grazed the side of Chrissy, hit the shield behind Chrissy and then, as before, passed through as smoothly as if it had hit the air, and the Belloc and Moore inside stopped breathing.

Chrissy's pupils fluttered.

[System Alert: Player Belloc has zero life and is out of the game.]

[System Alert: Player Moore has zero life and is out of the game.]

Blood flowed from the underside of the shield and her fluid shield was completely stained red.

"Why ....." Chrissy fell to the ground in a trance, her fingertips and ankles starting to turn gold, tears falling from her eyes with a glittering sheen like gold dust, she looked at her head with a choked sob as she walked up to her and pointed her gun at Bai Liu, "Why is the [shield] not working?"

"[Shield] is for guard, for protection, [Shield] exists to protect those close to it from harm."

"My desire to protect everyone has not changed one iota, so why does my [shield] fail?"

Chrissy's tears turn to scattered gold dust as she cries, " Golden Dawn exists to protect."

"As Golden Dawn's [Shield], my desire to protect is not to be invalidated! Why can you penetrate my [shield] and kill the one I want to protect!"

"Your desire to protect has never failed, or more precisely, it is because your desire to protect has never failed." Bai Liu raised his gun and smiled up, "It was my bullets that penetrated your shield and managed to kill them."

Chrissy looked up in a daze, the goldenness of her torso had spread to her heart, which made her exit words jar and hard: "..... Why?"

"Your desire to protect is very strong, as strong as your captain Georgia's." Bai Liu lowered his eyes, a very light layer of gold dust hanging from them, "Your shield would deter even a person with malicious intent from committing a non-aggressive act, a very powerful shield indeed."

"But accordingly, if a person commits an aggressive act, but he has no intention of harming you, your [shield] cannot stop it."

"Like right here and now." Bai Liu laughed softly and aimed the gun at Chrissy's temple, her lips starting to turn gold, "I'm going to kill you, but what I'm thinking isn't that I'm going to hurt you at all."

"What I'm thinking is that I'm not killing you-"

"-rather in saving you."

"Bang Bang Bang Bang Bang-!!!"

Chrissy collapsed to the ground just before she was about to be transformed into a golden statue.

The birdcage that had trapped Tang Erda disappeared and Bai Liu handed over the gun with a smile: "It was an emergency and I needed a long-range weapon, so I borrowed it for a while, thanks to Captain Tang."

Tang Erda, who had been forcibly borrowed, took over helplessly, "Go on, what have you found out again."

"I can't believe Jiayi was sent out of the game with a sudden shot... that was messed up too ....."

"And what a non-aggressive killing theory." Tang Erda tucked her gun behind her waist, turned and choked out a couple of coughs with clenched fists and sighed, "..... What and what is all this, in all my years of using guns I've never seen anyone kill without being aggressive, how do you kill without being aggressive?"

"You're fooling people again, aren't you?"

"No oh." Bai Liu shrugged innocently, "I'm really not lying this time, I really did kill them to save them."

He smiled a gentle smile, "Just the same reason as killing Jiayi."

"Later I might kill you to save you too, Captain Tang."

Tang Erda paused and looked over with a raised eyebrow, "So White Tactician, what do you know again and can you explain it to a confused attacker?"

Bai Liu was just about to speak when the system alert rang.

[System Alert: Player Muke has zero life and is out of the game.]

Bai Liu's eyes narrowed as he pulled out his communication tool and saw the last message Muke had sent him - [Palace, gold dust, tears.]

"True enough." Bai Liu stroked his chin thoughtfully, "It agrees with what I deduced."

Tang Erda waved her hand helplessly in front of Bai Liu's face, "Seeing as how you're not surprised, you set Muke up to be cleared from the game now, didn't you?"

"Yes." Bai Liu replied with a small smile, "I told him to clear the brothers Georgia and Armand out of the mine, at all costs."

"One for two, or the two most favourable people on the other side." Tang Erda frowned, "It's remarkable that Muke has managed to drag it out so far."

"You're trying to say Muke isn't the best person for the job, right? Because there's a key thing that only he can do, let him go." Bai Liu smiles and says, "I told Muke to tell Georgia that he had a way to fill the hourglass."

Tang Erda was stunned: "You knew how to fill an hourglass that early?!"

"Of course not." Bai Liu shook his head honestly, "I lied to Georgia."

Tang Erda frowned: " Georgia should have brought lie detector props into the copy, and as a person of three ..... Golden Dawn origins, the lie detector props in his hands should not be something as cheap as scales, how did you fool him? "

"Oh, this." Bai Liu said calmly, "I lied to Muke too."

"I told him I really knew how to fill an hourglass and he believed me, he really thought I knew, so he went ahead and trusted me enough to tow Georgia, and because Muke really believed I did, so that abject belief, I thought it was possible to fool Georgia's lie detector prop and let him go."

"Because out of a few players, if I came into a game and told you guys I knew how to fit an hourglass, you'd all be asking questions and if I didn't tell you, you'd all suspect I was lying, but Muke doesn't do that."

"All I have to do is tell him that I know, but now is not the time to tell you, and he will believe it completely and carry out his mission without asking a word more."

" Muke would be 100 per cent blind to me and blind to me, so he was the only one who could do the job and the best person for the job."

Bai Liu rubbed his chin, "He should have been faithful to believe that I really knew how to fill the hourglass when he was interrogated by both Georgia and Armand until his life level was zero, which is why Georgia chose to spend time with him until now."

"....." Tang Erda sighed from the bottom of her heart, " Bai Liu, you are such a beast."

" Georgia they're at the palace now, the location Mu Sicheng reported to me earlier is near there too, we'll go there first." Bai Liu tilted his head and looked towards the top of the mine, "Go out through the mine, I'll tell you about the clues I found while I'm there."

Bai Liu looked down at the time he had recorded and looked up at Tang Erda: "In short, make sure you get out of this game before the gold sculpts."

"If either of you and Mu Sicheng start sculpting gold, I'll kill you myself and send you out."

Tang Erda took a deep breath: "..... I know."

Gloren Palace.

The palace of this long-established golden kingdom is an elegant and dignified white domed complex, with small and large sub-pavilions scattered around the interior of the palace, lined with spacious garden beds and beautifully spaced iron street lamps, the plants in the beds all withered and littered with fallen leaves, a palace that should have looked quite dilapidated, but with a thick layer of gold dust on it, the The palace looked mysterious and luxurious.

Perhaps from an instinctive human desire for gold, this gleaming palace has a mysterious, magical quality that draws people in.

In the middle of the palace, up the largest and longest white staircase, is the largest hall in the palace, where the King of Gloren once received his ministers, priests and messengers, and celebrated with the people the springtime of Gloren's annual mining season, welcoming the golden dust of joy that fell from the sky.

As Bai Liu steps up the first steps to the main hall, Georgia gazes in silence from the king's sitting room in the high building behind the main hall at the golden statue of the king sitting on a long table, his head propped up in his hands and eyes half-closed in exhaustion.

--This was the king at the moment of Gloren's demise, his father.

The butterfly on Georgia's shoulder looks at the Quan family photo on the long table, which is the same as the one on his bedroom cabinet, and its flapping gradually becomes extremely slow.

"This is you as a child." Georgia dropped her eyes, her voice so soft that only the butterfly could hear, "..... This is where you grew up."

"..... Sorry Armand, for modifying your memories and deceiving you, we are not some poor brothers in a distant town, we are the princes of Gloren and it is our duty to save and protect this place."

"I just got a little emotional in my insistence on getting a way to fill my eyes with tears from Muke, and not just because it's a game, but also because of that."

"You think it was an emotional tactical error that I wouldn't save Chrissy and the others without regard for my team," Georgia explained calmly as he lowered his head and he removed his own uniform glove from his right hand, "You think I should have gone back to their aid and provided them with assistance, don't you? "

The butterfly flapped violently the moment it saw Georgia's right hand and flew down to rest on Georgia's fingertips, which were already beginning to turn gold.

"The game is fair to both sides, our team gets the home game and is first to get the hourglass, so naturally, there will be something that limits us accordingly." Georgia took out that hourglass and lowered her eyes to look at the golden sands flowing in it, "These golden sands in the hourglass are actually turned into gold from the pointing stones."

"No wonder Father buried the hourglass in the vein; he should have known that the sands in the hourglass would continue to affect the vein and keep the gold producing."

"From the beginning, he never gave up on the idea of God Xiang seeking a deal."

Georgia paused, then continued.

"Having got the home advantage and being the first to get the hourglass we would naturally be more susceptible to the golden sands of the pointing stones in the hourglass and more likely to gold sculpt, which was our first limitation, and I wouldn't take it lightly to prolong the game at the expense of my teammates' lives when it wasn't clear exactly how this gold sculpt, which doesn't reduce life and spirit values, would affect the players. "

"A victory at the expense of Golden Dawn was meaningless, so I chose to let Bai Liu off the hook to clear them out of the game."

"I still can't understand what happened to Gloren at that moment, and didn’t understand what this gold sculpting really means." Georgia raised his eyes, he flicked his left hand and a gleaming golden golden leaf bow appeared in front of him, he held it gently and whispered, "..... I can't drag these innocent players down with me and leave them in this deserted Gloren to go through the same thing that the players of the Third Bureau did back then. "

"But I chose to leave you behind, Armand."

"It's not Golden Dawn's mission to win this game and win the league at the end of the day, but it is yours and mine."

" The Gloren Kingdom has been sinking under the sea for ten years, and I have been guarding it by the sea for ten years." Georgia looked at the butterfly in her palm and nudged its wings very lightly with her left hand, "A human life is but a short moment compared to this ancient land of gold, I am not sure how much longer I can guard it, what painful tears would it take to be worth a thousand years of gold to fill this hourglass of time and end my father's deal with the evil gods. "

"[The Seer] told me that copies of heretics corresponding to reality can all be found within the game, and I have sunk to this point in the game in order to find the copy corresponding to Gloren and get a clue to the solution to the [Hourglass of Time] in this copy."

"I have now finally found this copy."

Georgia looked up at his father, who was sitting at the long table with a sad and bitter look on his face, "But in this copy, apart from looking at the people around me again and watching myself sculpted in gold, I actually look the same as I did ten years ago -"

"-without the ability to protect them."

"I still can't fill this hourglass with my pain."

The butterfly flaps its wings, and the wind blows past Georgia's ears, ruffling his long, light brown hair, but he doesn't hear it, he just whispers.

"..... I can't even shed a tear now."

-- like the tears he shed the moment he saw Gloren sinking to the bottom of the sea ten years ago, having shed all his pain.

The sound of unhurried footsteps came from behind Georgia as he gripped his golden leaf bow, turned and drew it back to full strength, raised his eyes and shot an unhesitating arrow at Bai Liu who had come up behind him.

The arrow crosses the air and is grasped in Bai Liu's right hand as he smiles at Georgia, high above the dais, and raises his hands to show he is harmless, teasingly.

"It seems that the prince of this country does not welcome me as a guest."

"I'm just here to talk to you about a deal, not to start off with a knife fight against me, right?"

[It seems that your country, it seems, does not welcome me as a businessman].

Georgia's pupils contracted very lightly as he gripped his golden bow, his right hand, which was about to turn into gold, slightly releasing the arrow.

..... The same commanding view, the same smiling voice, the same black-gloved hands, the same arrows wrapped in harshness and murderous intent shot from within Gloren's high walls.

The same uninvited guests who have come from afar with mysterious powers.

Lu Yizhan's complex attitude towards this man, the ability to trade souls for rules skills, poor tactics, about the same size and height .....

The golden arrow travels through the space between Georgia and Bai Liu as if through time, taking him back ten years in a flash.

If Bai Liu hadn't looked so bad, but had acted with such principles and done so much good, so different from even the Bai six in Georgia's dream, so unlike the God at his core, Georgia would have questioned Bai Liu the first time she met him: "What is your relationship with God? ?"

"That keen?" Bai Liu maintained his hands high in the air and grinned, "As much as I personally don't want to admit it, I'll answer you honestly as a good faith gesture from the trader."

"I should be considered the unilaterally chosen heir of that evil god who is so idle that he wants to die."

"The Heir ....." Georgia lifted his eyes, his long pale eyelashes gilded with gold dust, the bow lowered in his hand lifted flat once more, the head of it aimed at Bai Liu's heart, "So you've come to fulfil the bargain and collect the nation's pain?"

"No." Bai Liu smiled, "I'm here to end the deal."

"I know the way to fill the Hourglass of Time."

Tang Erda, who was standing guard in front of Bai Liu, was shocked to hear Bai Liu continue to lie in front of Georgia and whispered, "Georgia is the Director of Bureau 3 from interrogation and investigation, she can definitely tell when you are lying!"

Georgia's narrow eyes narrowed very lightly as his raised arrow stalled.

..... This guy doesn't look like he's lying.

The butterfly on his shoulder flapped its wings very lightly, the wind ruffled the long hair at the back of Georgia's head, and Georgia's halting arrow lifted again, the tiny ripples of emotion in his eyes returning to calm and unmarked: "I know, Armand."

"I will not fall back into the trap of an evil god's heir who is full of lies."

The Muke thrown out by Bai Liu earlier passed his lie prop test but never spilled any useful information until the last moment, that could only mean one thing - Bai Liu, the shameless tactician, had deceived along with his own team members, just so he could stall them for time.

"Tch." Bai Liu looked regretfully at Georgia who had drawn her bow to full strength and the butterfly that had begun to flap its wings, "You don't trust me after being tricked once, huh?"

"No one in their right mind would be fooled twice by the same trap, right?" Tang Erda helplessly stepped in front of Bai Liu, " Georgia should have quickly reacted to the fact that you were tricking him with Muke before, but since he was tricked, he might as well clear Muke out before it took so long."

Bai Liu rubbed his chin and sounded innocent, "But I'm really not lying to him this time, Captain Tang."

"I really know how to fill an hourglass this time."

"..... what?!" Tang Erda turned back in consternation.

Bai Liu looked up at Georgia from high above and said calmly, "Lying does pay off, Georgia won't believe us this time."

"It's going to be a fight before we can have a proper chat."

Tang Erda's temples popped: " Bai Liu, if you're ready to tell the truth next time, don't play this wolf game!"

"Okay Captain Tang." Bai Liu smiled and drew the whip pinned to his waist, "Next time for sure."

Georgia's eyes dropped and the moment he let go of the arrow, the butterfly flew off his shoulder and landed on the edge of the golden leaf arrow shot, instantly being attached to a layer of golden light as the butterfly flapped its wings quickly and the arrow shot over at Bai Liu below in a blazing stream.

[System Alert: Player Georgia used the skill to reverse the time of (Hurricane Butterfly), and the (Hurricane Butterfly) skill was reset.]

[System Alert: Monster Book Form player Armand uses skill (Chain Hurricane)]

Numerous twisting golden hurricanes rose up into the sky, chains surging wildly within them, intertwining in a great flowing net that blocked the front of the palace, the winds covering this great net flowing furiously to churn and twist the predators that entered the hurricane.

The hurricane winds swept the leaves and debris from the ground so high that it formed an inward wind vortex, sucking all the gold dust in the entire country and starting to suck it this way, forming a huge and sticky golden storm that rolled around almost like some kind of solid body. In such a dense golden storm, visibility was horribly low, and one had to be constantly alert to the chains that would come at any moment from all sides, like a heavenly net, and one had to Keep moving...

-- Tang Erda trotted, gripping the gun with her teeth clenched.

Low visibility, moving targets, high interference, distraction for the shooter and the need to keep moving at high speed - it's simply the worst situation for shooting.

Almost instantly, the entire huge open space in front of the palace was swept away by the hurricane, and nothing at all could be seen.

In the meantime, the large screen of the viewing pool.

All that could be seen on the screen was a rolling golden storm, almost like some top-strength sandstorm, and only vaguely visible was an occasional, snake-like twisting chain flying out, and some of the items being rolled up, so that not even the player could be seen in person.

The audience, in such a tight situation, kept their eyes wide open, trying to find out the exact figures of the two players from the big golden screen, but they didn't see anything.

The moderator even requested the use of a magnifying glass to try to find a hint of both players on the big screen for commentary, but eventually had to give up and dryly analyse the battle on the big screen.

"After Bai Liu had sent one of his own players packing, he struck again and again, sending three players in a row, and just when we thought Golden Dawn, a veteran team, was down to two players and about to fall behind, their newcomer Armand struck!"

"Look at this golden storm all over the screen!"

"Armand's skills are high cover, high attack and can actually be used on two fronts, with Georgia's strong support, Armand's skills are infinitely CD-able, which means that one player can be used against two players. That means that on the surface Golden Dawn are down to two players, but in reality, because of Armand, they still have the equivalent of three players and are not at a disadvantage."

"- and that's exactly what happened, as Bai Liu's roaming player Mu Sicheng was held up by Armand's body and is now unable to return to his team, while Armand himself held on to Tactician Georgia and continued to fight, with Georgia He was able to stop the main attacker and tactician on the circus side, with the cooperation of Georgia, and put a lot of pressure on his opponent."

"Golden Dawn's newcomer Armand, who has come to this point in the playoffs with a reputation as a vase for his overly flashy butterfly skills and lack of strong league play, finally cleared his name as a vase in this battle, so to speak!"

The host wiped a cold sweat from his forehead as he looked at the golden storm that had not yet subsided on the big screen and continued to commentate, "The circus side is in a different situation, they are not in a good position!"

"First the tactician goes nuts and sends his side's healing room in a bizarre maneuver, then the main gunner hunter, who has absolutely no way of putting up a fight in such a storm, and finally the roaming players who are being held up - it's clear from watching the tactician's attitude on the field that he's so attached to the roaming players, but up to this up to now, none of the roaming players have shown any effect."

"It's fair to say that in this game, the tactician's play calling and the coordination between the players can only be described in four words - that's [a mess]."

"The Golden Dawn side, although down to two players, worked well together, as brothers, as if they had a connection, and with the help of some simple communication tools, Georgia was able to pinpoint the position of Armand's butterfly in this blind golden storm and shoot It was a delightful combination of arrows to reset each other's skills and keep the hurricane attack going. ....."

The host was still blathering on, but Wang Shun couldn't hear a word of it, he was like an ant on a hot pan, circling around Muke and Jiayi who had withdrawn from the match: "Did Bai Liu tell you the next tactics?!"

Muke and Liu Jiayi looked at each other and honestly shook their heads, "I should have been fooled by Bai Liu."

"But deceiving me is supposed to be part of Bai Liu's tactics, but the rest, I'm not sure."

"Bai Liu won't tell you the rest of the plan so that you can get past Georgia and their interrogation." Liu Jiayi's tone was deep, his arms crossed against his jaw, his eyes looking straight at the big screen as if he knew everything, " This Bai Liu guy's tactics are still as messy as ever."

Wang Shun's eyes lit up, "So little witch, do you know Bai Liu's next plan?"

Liu Jiayi gave a pause: "..... don't know."

Muke: "....."

Wang Shun: "....."

If you don't know, say you don't know! Don't act like you know everything!

"But the host is right, we are at a disadvantage." Liu Jiayi shrugged. Liu Jiayi shrugged, "It's not just that Tang Erda's skills are limited and Mu Sicheng hasn't returned, there's a more deadly point, if I'm right, Tang Erda's attacks will be limited soon."

"Bai Liu would have ordered him not to hurt Georgia."

Wang Shun's eyes widened: "What? No, Captain Tang hurt Georgia ?!"

During the game, Tang Erda's eyes are red from the blast of gold dust as he raises his gun and stares into the storm repeatedly searching for targets.

Armand is almost invisible in this storm as a butterfly, and there is only one target Tang Erda can find, and that is Georgia - as soon as he clears Georgia out of the game, Armand will go into CD without assistance, and then it's just a matter of getting Armand, the last player out of the game and they'll win!

" Captain Tang ." Tang Erda's communication device went off and Bai Liu's calm voice came through, "I know what you're thinking, but Georgia can't be cleared from the game."

"I can honestly tell you that he is the core of this copy, the solution to this copy has to be found from Georgia's body, we both know that the copy will land in reality, if the solution is not found in the game, the copy will cause a lot of casualties when it lands in reality, I promised you when I traded souls with you that I would try to solve every copy and keep reality safe. "

" Captain Tang, calm down, there is scaly powder in this storm that lowers the spirit value."

Tang Erda instantly came to his senses, he took a deep breath, dropped the gun, tapped the system panel and pulled out the mental bleach, only after restoring his endangered mental levels to above the safe line did Tang Erda reply, "I got it, I won't touch Georgia."

"Is there anything you need me to do?"

"Yes, and it's still a very difficult thing to do." Bai Liu paused, "Can I ask Captain Tang to shoot the butterfly Armand turned into in fifteen minutes during this storm?"

Tang Erda is stunned.

--To shoot a fragile butterfly, only a few centimetres in size and still using the storm to constantly cover itself, in such a completely abnormal, artificially manipulated storm, with less than a metre of visibility, would be arguably impossible for any shooter in the world.

Georgia's ability to shoot arrows at Armand's location during the storm, resetting Armand's skills, is a completely bizarre operation that could be called brotherly telepathy - and that's if they were teammates, could communicate, and Armand cleared out the back completely. maintaining the visibility of Georgia's shot.

Tang Erda is striking from the front, facing the highest concentration of gold dust, with arguably no visibility, having to watch out for Armand's chains and scale dust, and having to shoot the butterfly with a more precise implement like a bullet, which is arguably ten times as disruptive as Georgia's.

And still within fifteen minutes.

Hearts, who was looking at the big screen, rested his jaw and spoke in a lazy tone: "I don't know anything about shooting, but I was blown away when I heard the request."

" Phoebe, you are a professional, do you analyse the possibility of this request being completed?"

Phoebe's face went numb the moment she heard Bai Liu's request: " Bai Liu's request for a hunter to be able to shoot a butterfly in a storm of this magnitude is the equivalent of asking a fisherman to kill a fish no more than thirty centimetres long with a needle in his boat in a stormy sea, with a time limit. "

"There's no way a fisherman, no matter how precise, can fulfil the requirements, at least not for me."

"I have a number of marksmen in my family." Phoebe spread her hands, "If they get a request like that, they are going to be angry enough to assassinate the head of the family in turn - it's teasing them now."

"Instead of going through with this unreasonable request, I think it would be simpler for Mr Hunter to simply kill Bai Liu, the nasty tactician, and change the door."

Phoebe smiled sweetly as she cupped her face and looked at the deep-eyed Tang Erda with a wistful look in her eyes: "The King's Guild would welcome such a powerful attacker."

"Empress, how much do you think I'd offer to potentially poach Jiayi along with Hunter?"

Hearts is delicately silent for a moment.

He could understand Phoebe's thoughts on the matter. After his departure, the King's Guild had lost one of its aces and was in need of someone, while Tang Erda's high-intensity main attack suited Phoebe's strong tactics.

"It depends on how much Bai Liu is willing to sell to you." Hearts eyes smiled, "It's unlikely that you expect the Wandering Circus people to switch to another guild on their own."

"But if you ask a little higher, Bai Liu should be perfectly willing to sell his players to you."

"I suppose you contacted them privately on the island? No one wanted to go, did they? I've made the connections and created opportunities for you."

Phoebe fell into an eerie silence as she pounded her leg with a grimace: "..... I just can't figure out how a no-nonsense and egotistical tactician like Bai Liu can get these people to follow him so much?"

"Hunter has several guilds poaching, and I know the highest guild, Kabala, has already offered six million points a month and the highest access to the prop vault - this is basically the equivalent of poaching with the authority of the vice president level, and it's not asking the other party to leave now, but is willing to wait until next year That's a lot of goodwill."

"The hunter rebuffed it on the spot!"

"..... and Jiayi ....." Phoebe took a deep breath to control her gradually grimacing expression, "as long as Jiayi is willing to come, I'm willing to be her sub control position and main attacker. She'll be the tactician."

"She's clearly no worse than Bai Liu and has the ability to dominate a team, but she just turned me down!"

Hearts looks thoughtfully at Jiayi, sitting on a bench next to the big screen.

..... guilds that have a feeling they are going to lose this year, and those that have already lost, are starting to prepare for next year's league, and these guilds are like hungry wolves that are starting to fixate on the fat meat that is the Wandering Circus.

The Wandering Circus guild does not have enough members, has a special structure and an average inventory of guild props, so there is nothing worth grabbing. The most valuable thing in the whole guild is the members of the tournament, especially Liu Jiayi and Tang Erda, who not only have valuable skills, but also their performance in the tournament is so outstanding that many teams who feel they are just one good player away from the championship are coveting them. The team was in awe.

These guilds are eyeing up the wandering circus and are just waiting for the moment it is eliminated to divide up the players inside.

--Sometimes these guilds will strike before they are even eliminated. Last year's killer sequence saw a number of changes in the middle of the sequence, all of which were poached by other guilds.

I wonder if Bai Liu, the ego guy, can hold his members steady .....

"I think it's strange though." Phoebe quickly calmed down after venting her frustration and anger, she looked to the big screen and inquired thoughtfully, " Bai Liu This guy has a pretty good eye for picking his players, highly in line with you."

"But this thief, Mu Sicheng, I remember when you did the measurement when you dug him up, it was medium to high, right?"

" Bai Liu actually let this guy be the ace in the first game of the playoffs ....." Phoebe frowned, "He doesn't have the ability to be the ace, does he?"

Hearts lifted her eyes and gave Phoebe a quick glance: "Why do you say that?"

"Because not many guilds are looking for him." Phoebe spreads her hands, " Muke though not many guilds dig him, but this I can understand, as an assassin, he seeks to have a low presence and kill in one hit, so it's normal for him to have low popularity and not much guild attention, and indeed not many guilds can eat this particular skill."

"But Mu Sicheng is a roamer and by definition the player who should be attracting the most attention, but still no one is digging him up, which can only mean one thing -"

Phoebe hit the nail on the head: "He's not good enough to get people's attention."

"As a rover, he is not an advanced match with his teammates, and his instinct to hang away from the main attack is a bit green, because his intelligence panel is not high, so he relies on the rear for all the analysis of intelligence when running the map, as a rover, his basic qualities are overall mediocre to low, the bright spot is not much other than high attack speed and high movement speed, there are not many other points. "

"And in a key event where he carried a significant part of the load, high attack speed and high movement speed, two of his rare traits, didn't come into play in either one."

"The same rookie was hung up by Armand, who signed up for the league almost at the same time as he did, and the same opponent who restrained his skills. Mu Sicheng has not escaped from the chain storm until now, causing the pressure to move all over to the main attacker and Bai Liu."

"I don't understand why Bai Liu has given him the ace position, Jiayi with his double-sided monster book and the strong Mr Hunter are both better suited to be the ace of this game, he's not exactly a quality roamer."

"And you were in the last game." Hearts returned nonchalantly, "It was hanging on to three players by such a not-so-quality roam and wearing down Liu Ji."

Phoebe was stunned.

"Watch the game not only for the result, but also for the process." Hearts looked up as he said calmly, "Don't be so impatient in your work, Phoebe, and don't judge an enemy so easily until the last minute."

"I did give Mu Sicheng an upper-middle rating, but that was before Mu Sicheng met Bai Liu."

"The Mu Sicheng that we have now is not the Mu Sicheng of three months."

" Bai Liu has brought out the innermost desires of this thief and inspired them."

In-game.

Inside and outside the palace was a raging, brutal hurricane, and the twisting chains inside almost trapped Tang Erda, who gritted his teeth and tightened his grip on his gun.

In such a storm to attack a butterfly with a bullet ..... Bai Liu can really give him a hard time.

But the tactician gives a difficult problem and the main attacker has only one option - to do it with all his might.

Fifteen minutes, which is just about the time it takes for Armand to run out of skills, during which time there is bound to be a break in skills, and Georgia will shoot arrows to renew Armand's skills, but there is a very slight gap between the two skills.

Within this void, the hurricane will break for a moment, will weaken, and if there is a moment when it is most likely to hit a butterfly hiding in the midst of the hurricane, it is at that moment.

There is only one chance.

Fifteen minutes had passed since the last break, and it was almost time for the next one. Tang Erda slowly clutched the gun in his hand and raised it smoothly, aiming it somewhere in the air, he took a deep breath, resisted the itch that rose from his throat and the urge to choke and cough, and counted down silently -

Ten, nine .....

Tang Erda's palms were oozing with sweat and his back was tense as he looked in some disbelief at the wall of gold dust in front of him - the last time he had shot this nervously was the first time he had been in the third game of that target test.

What grade did he take that time ......?

It seems to be--

First.

Outside the palace.

Mu Sicheng, trapped in the hurricane by his chains, kept his head down, relying on the antidote Jiayi had left behind to keep him going until now, but instead of slowing down, the doll's attack had been getting stronger, and the hurricane had continued - that could only be because the guy's being had gotten a skill reset.

But now he has run out of antidotes and is basically at the bottom of his life.

It's not that you can't actually resist, it's just that ......

It hadn't waited for the command to resist.

There was a raucous murmur of electricity in the headset and Bai Liu's calm voice came out of it, "Good work."

"It's time for us to reap the harvest."

"Wait until Captain Tang hits the butterfly, which will briefly interrupt Georgia's match with Armand and stop him from resetting his skills, and the butterfly on this side will disappear, at which point Armand on your side will revert to being a normal player."

"Remember your mission before the game started?"

Mu Sicheng looked up slowly, covered in blood, his hands and feet trapped by chains in the wind, and snorted, his voice hoarse: "No need to remind me, my memory is not that bad."

"- Killed Golden Dawn's ace recruit, lead attacker Armand, didn't he?"

"Hmm." Bai Liu's voice was tinged with laughter, "Go on, ace thief of our team."

Tang Erda slowed the rate of his breathing, gripped his gun with both hands and raised it to his ears, the pupils of his eyes stopped somewhere as if frozen in time, and with his heightened concentration hitting him, everything in Tang Erda's field of vision became frozen as if in slow motion replay, the golden shards in the wind became audible, the sound of chains interlocking and rubbing rhythmically in his ears, and his afterglow passed through The golden storm that was coming to a halt, the sight of Bai Liu, who had lashed out his whip and was moving quickly towards Georgia above the palace, the butterfly that was hidden in the slow fall of gold dust, flapping its wings.

He could almost see the butterfly's wings flapping in the air, spreading out in ripples of gold dust.

The hurricane is about to stop.

Four, three, two .....

Georgia drew her bow to full strength; he looked straight ahead at Armand and was about to let go when the butterfly that Armand had turned into flew back sideways and drew closer to the direction Georgia's arrow had been fired. -

--hit it.

If he misses Armand, allowing Armand to renew his skills, Bai Liu, who is close to the centre of the eye of the wind to stop Georgia, will be instantly killed by Armand's chains.

He has to hit it!

One!!!

The hurricane has stopped.

"BANG--!!!"

"Shoo-!!!"

The moment Tang Erda pulled the trigger, Georgia released the arrow and the silver rose bullet and the golden arrow left the string almost simultaneously, the bullet and arrow spiralling through the falling wind field towards the butterfly, cutting two strange trajectories through the air.

Hit it!!!

Tang Erda gritted her teeth and Georgia's eyes condensed.

The bullet struck the arrow that came at the same time, grazing the butterfly's nimble feathers by only a faint margin and sending it flying.

No hits!!!

Neither side hit!

The moment they saw their opponent's attack failing, both Georgia and Tang Erda wasted no time in taking a follow-up shot, with Georgia drawing his bowstring again and aiming it at the butterfly flying closer and closer to him, while Tang Erda aimed her gun at the butterfly, ready to fire another shot.

This time, it will be a hit!

--In the eyes of Georgia and Tang Erda, such strong and determined conviction can be seen.

"It can't be delayed any longer." A soft male voice came from the palace, "Our wandering crew can't wait that long."

All his attention hit on the arrow and Georgia's pupils flinched, he jerked his head back to look above the palace behind him, Bai Liu whipped out his whip with one hand and stood smiling on the pointed eaves of the palace, " Captain Tang said it was hard to notice your surroundings when you were shooting, so it really was."

Bai Liu, while he had just been concentrating on fighting Tang Erda and aiding Armand, had silently used the cover of the storm to jump on top of the palace!

The arrow in Georgia's hand went up with a roll of the whip, and he quickly disarmed it, summoning it again to aid Armand in his pursuit, but it was too late.

This gap is enough for Tang Erda to fire.

"Bang, bang, bang, bang, bang-!"

Tang Erda emptied her magazine in one go and five bullets were fired at once. The butterfly could not avoid it and was hit on the tail, shuddering in the air and dissipating into a gust of wind.

Hit it!

[System Alert: Player Armand's Monster Book form is disabled.]

On the other side, outside the palace.

The hurricane ceases abruptly, and Armand returns to his body. The butterfly lying on his shoulder closes its wings and wraps itself in a cocoon, falling into a deep sleep, only to reawaken and summon the hurricane after an hour of CD.

Oh no!

Armand grimaced and gritted his teeth as he landed and turned to run in the direction of the palace - without a main attacker, his brother was just a support, and in the hands of that Bai Liu guy, there was no way that would end well!

Everything that had happened in the last world kept replaying in front of Armand's eyes, and the Georgia who had been captured by Bai six and then released, without a trace of emotion in her eyes, after her mental downfall, kept flashing in front of Armand, making him almost lose control of his emotions.

"I saw [the future], Armand." The Georgia of the last world sat with hollow eyes in front of Armand and muttered, "..... Bai six turned the heresy 0073 on, he spread the word to the world about the existence of a bit of goldstone here and he started smuggling the heresy to the world ."

"And so many, many people in the world, like the Gloren nation at one time, chose to be on the side of God and chose the [future] they wanted."

"I knew what was going to happen, but there was nothing I could do to stop it."

"So I'm really wrong?"

"Because God exists, because human desire exists, everyone will always choose gold, and gold is inexhaustible, right?"

"..... And for what have I done all this, all these ten years that I have held on to and guarded?"

He had been erased from his memory and did not understand what Georgia was saying to herself at that time, but kept on comforting her brother in a pale and clumsy way, hoping that he would get strength from here and get better.

But how could his brother, who bore an entire overthrown nation, who bore that [future], be well?!

Tears leaked from Armand's eyes as he ran as hard as he could towards the palace, and as he did so, Armand realised what was happening and quickly ducked his head to avoid a sharp monkey claw that grazed the side of his neck.

Blood instantly gushed out.

"Finally, you're back, been waiting for you for ages." Mu Sicheng grabbed the ground, his whole eyes were red, his ears became sharp, there was a tail wagging behind him, his hands dragged the ground and shook, his body drew longer than a metre, his whole body gave a strong sense of oppression, he licked his mouth in an evil way, cracked his sharp teeth and laughed, "Trying to escape in front of me is really out of your depth."

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng equips Monster Book form.]

[System warning: Player Mu Sicheng's spirit level has dropped below 40, entering the Berserk panel.]

"I'm surprised you're not dead?" Armand's eyes narrowed.

Another hurricane, another scaly powder, and this guy actually lasted this long ..... Bai Liu actually gave this guy all the antidotes that the witch refreshed?

"Trying to kill me?" Mu Sicheng snorted with a sidelong glance, "I have you to thank for helping me lower my spirit level, otherwise I wouldn't really know how to access the berserk panel before following Bai Liu guy's orders-"

The pupils in Mu Sicheng's eyes snapped up and his five fingers merged into clothed claws and stabbed at Armand's neck with ferocious coldness, "-Kill you quickly!"

Armand dodges left, a trail of blood appears on the side of his face, his hair slowly falls to the ground and when Armand looks up again, his eyes change completely and Mu Sicheng is stunned by the look in his eyes.

-- a completely different look from the guy's previous calm, bemused look that looked exactly like he'd seen him through and experienced everything; it was the kind of look that only a beast that had been violated into its domain, hurt its important family members, and was therefore aroused to ferocity could have.

Armand's expression was fierce, twisting his pretty face as he shook his arm with his right hand and flung it to the left, throwing out a huge set of arrows, a heavy set almost as tall as a man - if Georgia had been here, she would have recognised it as Armand's previous skill weapon.

As children Georgia and Armand practised archery, Georgia with an elegant and light bow and Armand with an inaccurate one, but in order to learn archery with his brother and be as good as he was, he tried to be brave and forced himself to take up the longbow - a bow about the same length and width as young Armand's body.

When Armand was a kid, he suffered a lot practicing this bow, he cried after every practice, he was so bruised that he couldn't even walk, but he didn't give up, and when Georgia would carry him back, she would ask him, "Why do you have to do something you're not good at and make such a mess of yourself?"

"Because my brother is doing it too." Armand leaned over Georgia's back and said very quietly, "Brother isn't very good at bow and arrow either, is he, with wounds all over his hands, so why is brother practising it?"

Georgia was silent for a moment: "A king practices martial arts to guard."

"I practiced so that I could keep you from practicing, you don't have to push yourself."

But Armand persevered, and later, when Armand's first skill was derived, even though he could not remember anything, his skill weapon was built, and it was this exaggerated wooden longbow.

Armand gripped his longbow with fury and looked coldly at the Mu Sicheng before him: "Get out of my way!"

" Mu Sicheng, get out of my way, if I can kill you the first time, I can kill you the second!"

"And a second time?" Mu Sicheng laughed coldly and turned his hand to strike the monkey claw with a biting attack, "What kind of daydream is that? You can kill me the first time before you say so!"

Armand spun out of the way, dodging Mu Sicheng's sharp monkey claws coming at his face, pulled back, turned around and stepped on the string of his longbow, gripping it with one hand, a thick arrow the size of a small tree appeared in the air, his face spewing with anger as he aimed the head of the arrow at the speeding attack, a monkey claw grabbing the top edge of the longbow at Mu Sicheng's heart.

"Go to hell!"

Armand lets go of his foot and the full string of the longbow jolts, sending a jolt through Armand, who is stepping on it, and Mu Sicheng, who is holding the top edge of the longbow with one hand.

The arrow left the string and Mu Sicheng was caught off guard and was toppled straight out by the thick, heavy arrow, which hit the ground hard and exploded into a huge cloud of golden smoke.

Armand looked at the spot, clenched his longbow, and turned without hesitation towards the palace, and the moment he did so, the smoke was like a bombardment, and the huge arrow that had struck Mu Sicheng through was thrown back, the bloodstained arrow grazing Armand's shoulder, and Armand whirled around to dodge it, then he paused and looked almost in astonishment at the bottom of the arrow He then looked, almost in shock, at Mu Sicheng, who had almost run like lightning, who had appeared in front of him in a flash.

Mu Sicheng's abdomen was a large bleeding hole, caused by Armand's arrow, and Mu Sicheng's eyes were fierce as he struck Armand in the abdomen with a claw: "Who gave you permission to go? You're so proud of yourself!"

Armand's pupils and body jolted from Mu Sicheng's punch, vomiting a mouthful of blood as he was sent flying over ten metres away.

"I'll never let you ....." Mu Sicheng wiped the blood from the side of his own mouth, "Ahem, one step back to the aid palace."

Armand staggered to his feet, propping up his longbow, his uniform in tatters, his description a wreck, his pretty face, which he had himself critiqued as a vase, scuffed and bloodied on the ground, his light brown eyes bursting with a light of a kind never seen before as tears fell from them, and he stomped on his longbow, using his bloodied hands to aim it full of arrows at Mu Sicheng, who was charging this way Heart.

"I must go back!!!"

"There's the last of my family there!!!"

"Get out of the way!!!"

In the viewing pool, the host watched the gruesome battle on the big screen, saw Armand's hands strangled to the bone by the sharp bowstring, and was speechless for a moment, finally sighing tersely: "..... believes that after watching this battle, no one will ever describe Armand as a vase again. Armand ."

"This is a lead attacker who gave everything he had to guard the tactician, and he did everything he could."

"It was a wonderful confrontation!"

"It's not just that." Hearts flicked a glance at Phoebe, who hadn't spoken since earlier, "This presenter's view is still a bit shallow, you analyse it."

"And Mu Sicheng ." Phoebe finally spoke, her head down, her brow furrowed and her tone a little heavy, "To fight Armand to this extent ..... this guy ..... isn't even on the regular roaming path. "

"You've finally found it." Hearts raised his eyes as he looked at the big screen, "The normal roaming is based on the idea of attracting the attention of the opponent's main attack, distracting the main attacking fire, reducing the pressure on the team's defense, and at the same time being able to go back to the team's support at any time, keeping up with the team and taking the opponent by surprise."

"But Mu Sicheng is not a wanderer cultivated along those lines."

"Mu Sicheng is a player with clear strengths and weaknesses." Hearts calmly analyses, "His skills are stealing, he has high movement speed and is very good at disrupting the enemy, from that point of view he is a very good player to be a roaming player, but accordingly, because of his own experience, he is not very cooperative, he is impulsive and he is less analytical when running the map, these are all minuses for him to be a roaming player, so I give Mu Sicheng a medium to high rating."

"But Bai Liu has given Mu Sicheng a whole new roaming route based on his own personality and skills."

Hearts looks to Phoebe: "What do you think is the most important attribute of wandering?"

"A disruption to the enemy's main attack." Phoebe replied quickly.

"Hmm." Hearts intones, "What do you think is the best kind of wander, in terms of this head trait?"

Phoebe pondered slightly, "A wanderer who can always interfere with the enemy's main attack."

"Wrong." Hearts laughed very softly, "It's the roaming that kills the opponent's main attack."

Phoebe was stunned, then she blushed, "So last game Mu Sicheng that guy was the one ....."

"You realise that." Hearts lowered his eyes, "That's what happened last game, you think that according to the normal tactical flow, Mu Sicheng, the roamer, would have quickly retreated back to defend the big unit and you would have been able to take advantage of the situation, that's why you chose to spend time with him, but he died and wouldn't retreat until he switched one for one and replaced Liu Ji, the main attacker in our team. "

"You think it was Mu Sicheng getting out of control, a fluke, but then you look at Golden Dawn this time."

Hearts rested his jaw and looked at the two men fighting on the big screen with a smirk on his face.

" Bai Liu's orders to Mu Sicheng were presumably not to stall the main attack at all, but to kill it."

"That's extreme." Phoebe was speechless, "What kind of wanderer does that?"

"But don't you think that's a very useful solution?" Hearts spreads his hands as he smiles, "The biggest thing wandering does is distract the main attacking fire, so isn't killing the best solution?"

"And now it looks like Mu Sicheng is close to successfully implementing this programme twice."

Phoebe fell into an eerie silence, and soon she was staring at the big screen with a deep expression, as if she had an understanding: "How much do you think I'd offer Mu Sicheng for him to jump our guild?"

"....." Hearts sincerely suggested, "Why don't we switch guilds and dig in?"

In-game.

Mu Sicheng leapt at the arrow, and with a few quick dashes, his silhouette flashed in the air and appeared in front of Armand, holding the longbow in his left hand, using it as a fulcrum, and using the force of the dash, his body turned into a stump with his waist, and kicked Armand in the jaw with his right foot.

"Ka-ching-!"

Mu Sicheng's eyes were red with rage as he shouted, "Take another step!"

Armand's entire face was deformed by the kick to the left, the shattered bone fragments in his mouth dry heaving as his body went slack, letting go of the longbow with a loose hand, his body flipped back and looked like it was going to fall to the ground, but the next second Armand summoned his longbow again, he landed on one hand, his right eye glancing to the left in the blood, his eyes full of monstrous fire as he propped up the longbow and his body on his left knee, his right foot on the bowstring drawn to its maximum.

"Do you think you can stop me?"

Armand raised his voice hoarsely, "You're just a thief who died under me!"

Mu Sicheng's face changed.

The string clanged tautly and the longbow emerged, its tip aimed at Mu Sicheng's head above the bow. Armand rolled over and let go of his foot, the string sent the arrow out, and the bow nailed the dodging Mu Sicheng in the shoulder blade with a powerful force that carried him straight backwards for dozens of metres.

He let out a muffled grunt of pain, and the gold dust on the floor grazed two whitish drag marks on both feet.

[System warning: Player Mu Sicheng's life value has dropped to 9, and will soon be zero!]

Armand propped up his longbow and staggered to his feet, blood dripping from his jaw, his voice broken and cold: "You're at the bottom of your life."

"Give it up, Mu Sicheng, you are no match for me."

"Beg for mercy now and I can still give you a piece of my mind."

"..... ahem, painful?" Mu Sicheng lay on his back, a large hole in his right shoulder and a large hole in his abdomen, both oozing blood, but he laughed out loud, "You're a man who grinds his way through things, and only just going crazy and fighting me is considered painful."

Armand didn't say much, he calmed down the moment he saw that Mu Sicheng couldn't move, stamping his bow on one foot and drawing it full: "After this game, we won't see each other afterwards either."

"One last piece of advice before I send you out."

"Stop stealing things."

"Tch." Mu Sicheng reluctantly propped up his upper body and tossed a bloodstained cocoon ball in his hand, raising an eyebrow, "Sorry about that."

"And I just stole this from you."

Armand's pupils flinch - that's a cocoon ball of CD skills formed by his hurricane butterflies that can't be taken into the panel!

If Mu Sicheng steals it, even if he sends this guy off, he won't be able to use the [Hurricane Butterfly] skill in the second half!

"Give it back!!!"

"Wasn't that just righteous ..... ahem." Mu Sicheng propped himself up on the ground and stood up shakily, his tone harsh, "Said he had some advice to give me?"

"Now it's my turn to give you advice."

Mu Sicheng took the cocoon ball between two fingers and waved it from side to side, snickering, "Never let your guard down against a thief you've been in close combat with."

Armand's face finally went completely cold: "At a time like this, you are pursuing such unjust acts to determine the winner ....."

He had really looked away before to believe that the other side wasn't that bad either.

Mu Sicheng is indeed a born thief.

"You'll never stop hurting people with this childish behaviour to please yourself, so many hard lessons that you don't remember all of them."

Mu Sicheng clenched his five fingers together, clutching the cocoon ball in his hand as he looked up, blood dripping from his jaw, his eyes narrowing slightly as if he had heard a big joke and snorted very softly, "Pleasing?"

"You think I steal to please myself?"

"What do you know, to judge me like that ....."

Armand paused, struck for a moment by the look in Mu Sicheng's eyes - the man was smiling, but his eyes were very silent.

-- it was like the look in his eyes when he was killed and killed him too in the last moment of his last life.

The day before, pre-match pep rally in the Guild Room of the Wandering Circus.

" Mu Sicheng ." Bai Liu looked down at the paper without raising his head, "You stay for a while."

The back of Mu Sicheng's neck froze as he was about to leave, then he slumped to the table in dismay and shot a look of help to Tang Erda and Muke, who shook their heads with a smile, while Tang Erda showed her hands helplessly, saying there was nothing she could do.

Only after everyone else had left did Mu Sicheng come up next to Bai Liu and whispered, "Have you really thought about it and want me to be the trump card down the field?"

"Aren't you the one who's been screaming about being an ace all day?" Bai Liu glanced up slightly at Mu Sicheng before dropping his eyes back to the papers, his tone natural, "Are you scared now that you're really being asked to play?"

Mu Sicheng sat up straighter in an instant and waved his hand in a serious manner, "That's bound to be impossible!"

Bai Liu gave him a look, "Then why the reluctant look?"

"Just ..... my skills as you know, well of course they are." Mu Sicheng slowly slumped back down again, "But it's the playoffs, and it's the first game of the opening season."

"..... Everyone's skills are so cool, I'm just a stealer, if I become an ace, will people see it and say that our guild is underhanded?"

Bai Liu stops flicking through the papers, his eyes half-lidded, his fingers unconsciously twirling the coins - a thoughtful gesture.

Mu Sicheng's heart lifted with Bai Liu's thoughtful movements, his fists clenched in a dry jest, "Right? Haha, you don't think it's appropriate either, do you?"

"It's true that you're a bad player." Bai Liu nodded, "But I don't think it has anything to do with your skills, my tactics have always been known for being underhanded, which is kind of what our team is known for."

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Why can this man say such things about himself with a straight face!

"On the contrary, it's you." Bai Liu stares thoughtfully at Mu Sicheng, "Why do you have a negative attitude towards stealing when it is clear that the core of your desire is to steal?"

"....." Mu Sicheng feigned composure and averted his eyes, "stealing is a wrong act in itself, isn't it?"

"Doing the Wrong Thing ....."

Mu Sicheng's tone slowly sank: "..... has a price to pay."

"To judge whether an act is right or not, we should not look at the act itself, but at the result of the act, right?" Bai Liu spoke in a calm tone, "It's a little too biased to judge good or bad just by what the act itself is perceived to be in the public perception."

"For example, in the eyes of many people, an existence like [the orphanage] is good, an existence like [the house] is good, and an existence like [the church] is good."

"But The Loving Home is bad, as are Five Buildings and The Witch."

"Actions in themselves are not good or bad; it is the actions that lead to the results that are good or bad."

Mu Sicheng looked at Bai Liu, his voice trembling very softly, "What about, what about the theft?"

Bai Liu looked at him levelly: "In reality, it's bad."

"But here, it's just a game."

"No one would condemn a thief in a game, just as no one would condemn a dragon in a fairy tale."

"Because you didn't do any damage."

Mu Sicheng stared blankly at Bai Liu.

[Hey, Yuan Qingqing, people like you should hate thieves like me, right? Why are you at the table with me?]

The girl with the round face and long ponytail looked up from the mountain of homework, looked at him seriously and replied.

[Because it's not like you've really done anything bad].

[Your stealing from those people is like playing a game, a lot of times you end up giving it back, you don't look like a really bad person, fellow Mu Sicheng].

[Bad guys don't like hip hop monkey rubber.]

"There are other strange questions you can ask me all together, no charge." Bai Liu put his head down again and flipped through the papers, "I kept you down because I thought you had a lot of questions you wanted to ask me; I don't have too many questions per se about you you being an ace."

"What if ..... if my theft has caused a very bad effect?" Mu Sicheng asked, head bowed and very softly.

"Can you make up for it?" Bai Liu asks calmly and rhetorically.

"I'm doing my best to make up for it." Mu Sicheng replied in a trembling voice.

"Then go and make amends, wait until the amends are done, and apologise to that person properly." Bai Liu replied flatly, "If the person can forgive you, then you've made amends, if not, then just keep making amends."

"You should be aware of that, shouldn't you?"

Mu Sicheng took a deep breath, "I did."

-- It was with this awareness that he entered the game, fled from those players, and stayed dead on the run, surviving to this day.

He wanted to resurrect the people who had died through his fault.

Bai Liu hmmm'd and asked, "Any other questions?"

Mu Sicheng leaned over the table and looked up very shallowly, the pupils of his eyes seemed to have tears in them and his voice was a little muffled: "..... Bai Liu, will you always be my friend?"

"In a broad sense, I should be considered your soul-bonded person, and I will remain in this relationship with you for as long as your soul exists, which you personally consider to be a friend." Bai Liu replied lightly, and he paused for a moment, "In a narrower sense-"

"Well, I'll always be your friend."

The Lost Land of Gold

The sticky red blood dripped from the tips of the blackened monkey's paws, and Mu Sicheng looked up, his expression never so calm: "I don't know where you guys come from with all your strange assumptions about me."

"But I'm not stealing to please myself."

Mu Sicheng closed his monkey paws and rolled his knuckles inward, the butterfly cocoon jarred restlessly in his palm, then was crushed, shattered into a wind that dissipated from his fingertips, his eyes haloed with a vigorous emotion -

-- Killing intent.

"It's just a game, and people's actions can lose their meaning."

"I am stealing to atone for my sins."

"- it's like, you kill to protect."

Mu Sicheng clenched his fist into a claw and came straight at Armand's heart, Armand's pupils clenched, he drew his longbow and gritted his teeth on the string.

"Go to hell, Mu Sicheng!!!"

"Go to hell, Armand!!!"

The smoke clears, and amidst the bloodstained wooden longbow and the scattered cocoon of silk, two men have fallen, bereft of all life.

Mu Sicheng's monkey claws slit Armand's throat, Armand's bow and arrow pierced Mu Sicheng's heart, and they fell in a pool of blood, choking and coughing as they moved towards each other, reluctantly trying to attack again, but eventually falling to the ground, clutching their weapons in their hands in disbelief.

Never gave up protecting his tactician until the last moment.

--The most important person in your life.

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng has zero life, exit the game].

[System Alert: Player Armand has zero life and is out of the game.]

Ornamental pool.

" Golden Dawn is down to Georgia." Phoebe mopped her face with one hand and tsked regretfully, "It's a foregone conclusion."

"What a loser, obviously a veteran tactician, but actually lost to a newbie team."

Hearts squints: "If you have time to connote me here, why don't you go watch another match, the killer sequence match has started, right?"

"Yes, to the invisibility cloak." Phoebe patted her knees and sat up, she glanced at Hearts, "I'm going to go over and check it out, do you want to come along and watch? You've watched every Slayer Sequence match before."

Hearts brought his gaze back to the big screen and was quiet: "..... I won't be going over there."

Ornamental pool number one.

Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu's eyes were hollow, sweating coldly, their souls rising to the heavens: "Shit, shit, shit! The God of Reverse and Liao Ke are not here! "

"It's almost time for us to play! What are we going to do? How can we play a team game without a tactician!"

"Oh." Spades suddenly looked up as he turned his head, looking to Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu, his tone indifferent, "I was approached by the Reverse God earlier, saying that I should play a single match first, and you guys should play a double match, playing a quick match to get double points, the Reverse God said that we were now capable enough to kill the match early when we played against the Invisible Cloak. "

"He said there was an 80 percent chance the other team would forfeit the corps game because they didn't want to play extended overtime, and we won."

"If unfortunately, the other side didn't forfeit, then he should be back by that time too, so we don't have to worry."

Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu look slyly at Spades: " Spades."

Spades nodded, "It's me."

"You lizard dog!" Bai Yi was furious and punched Spades with his fist, "The gods have told you about tactics, why didn't you tell us? Wasn't it fun watching Bai Jiamu and I almost cry in fear while you dozed off by yourself! Ah!"

"You are so nasty! Who the hell did you learn to be bad with! And playing with your teammates' feelings now!"

In-game.

Tang Erda and Bai Liu only stopped taking control of Georgia when the system beep sounded for Armand to exit the game.

Tang Erda let out a long breath as a cold sweat broke out all over his body - Georgia had been rushing desperately out of the palace for the last ten minutes, and he and Bai Liu had barely managed to defend themselves against it.

If Bai Liu's weapon hadn't been a whip that excelled in multiple defences and had such strong mechanics to judge, Georgia might have actually been able to run away from them, which would have been a problem.

"Well, you're the only one left on the team now, Georgia's captain." Bai Liu smiled as he sat down on the bench and held out his hand to Georgia across the table, "Now that the game is won and lost and we are no longer in any kind of adversarial relationship, perhaps we can sit down and talk in a friendly manner?"

Tang Erda looks subtly at Bai Liu across from Georgia who is tied solidly to the bench with his whip: "....."

That's not exactly a friendly attitude, is it?

As expected, Georgia turned her head indifferently, "You can kill me to win the game, there's nothing to talk about between us."

"How can you say there's nothing to talk about if you haven't talked." Bai Liu uses three fingers to conjure up a small hourglass from his glove as if by magic - something Tang Erda has just retrieved from Georgia's body, a disastrous search as evidenced by Georgia's now dishevelled clothing.

Bai Liu smiled amiably, "What if I said that I did have a way of filling the hourglass of time?"

"As you know well, there is no point in lying to you at a time like this when you have already taken the victory, so I do have a solution."

Georgia's expression moved slightly, but she kept her lips tightly pursed and did not speak.

Bai Liu turned his head to look at Tang Erda who nodded, "I used a prop to turn on the sound shield, so for ten minutes the audience couldn't hear your conversation."

"So that we can talk safely." Bai Liu smiled, "First of all, Captain Georgia, what I want to say to you is that you know that your nationals-"

"-are all still alive?"

Tang Erda was stunned, and Georgia paused, "I know they are not dead, they are just golden statues waiting for the moment of reawakening."

"No, no, no." Bai Liu shook his head, "They're still alive."

"Alive ......?" Georgia's mind was slow to realize something, but he quickly self-denied the answer, "..... No way, the Heresy Processing Bureau called in special equipment to scan them and they really are just golden statues with no human physical activity."

"Yes, physically, all their organs have been completely hardened and are indeed gold." Bai Liu looked up, "But on a psychological level, they are still human."

"Because they have a soul, they can feel."

Georgia's expression froze completely.

Outside the game, on the surface of the Gulo Sea, the three sub-islands of the Bureau of Heresy Handling.

Lu Yizhan and Liao Ke had their hands and necks put on surveillance rings and then followed the newly-assigned Third Bureau crew on board the boat, making their way towards the floating island in a calm and dangerous sea.

" Mr. Lu ." Liao Ke and Lu Yizhan piled into the stern of the boat, he spoke with concern, "You said heretic 0073 is not a heretic, what is going on?"

"The people inside are just turned into gold, but they're all still alive." Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, then said, "If I let [Mu Sicheng] open the shield I set up ten years ago, and the waters flooded into the Gloren, all those Gloren who were still alive would have drowned."

"Still alive?!" Liao Ke was amazed, "You couldn't have taken this kingdom in without checking at all, they're still alive, why didn't you notice?"

"Because these sculptures are really completely gold in terms of examination, in terms of weight, density, and electromagnetic wave detection." Lu Yizhan closed his eyes as he clutched the guardrail, "..... And I was also baited by Bai six under Georgia's narrative."

"You remember when I said that Georgia and Bai six played a game that said if he won, he could suspend the deal and if he lost, he would have to pay for the pain of all the nationals."

" Georgia, understood by normal logic, took it for granted that he would pay for all the pain, and Bai six played a play on words with him, and the original words he said were - [Whether it was the pain of that nod to a thousand years ago, or the pain of this nod to now, at that time, the price of all the pain is paid by you together.]"

Lu Yizhan's tone is sullen: " Bai six was talking about the result and Georgia thought it was the process, he was fooled by Bai six."

" Georgia thought the deal stood, then it meant that the nationals would not deliver pain, the nationals' time was fixed, they would not suffer or have a hard time, they would just wait for the moment Georgia completed the deal to wake up and then they could go on with their lives as normal."

"But if, according to Bai six's consequentialism, the present Georgia did not pay for a thousand years of suffering, then the bargain naturally does not hold, and he can rightly charge those nationals for their suffering. "

"..... It was an oversight on my part to not anticipate that Bai six could actually keep someone alive in the form of a golden statue to collect pain."

"You shouldn't be too hard on yourself." Seeing Lu Yizhan's shoulders tense up, Liao Ke let out a long sigh, wanting to say a few words of advice, but in the end he didn't say anything.

At that time, Lu Yizhan had to deal with Bai Liu's affairs and Bai six, and it was not enough to break him into eighteen pieces.

The more everyone tries to save, the more likely it is that no one will be saved, Captain Lu.

" Bai six lied to you." Bai Liu's tone was placid, "Your nationals may have turned to gold, but they are all still alive."

So when it turns gold, neither the life nor the spirit value drops - because that is just another gesture of survival, not some heresy.

"Don't you think it's strange, Georgia ?"

"Ten years have passed since this place sank to the bottom of the sea, and ten years have passed since that explosion, it should be dead and silent, but here gold dust still falls from the sky in a steady stream, as if something is still alive and sprinkling gold dust from the sky to the ground in a steady stream."

"Have you ever wondered where all this gold dust comes from?"

Georgia looked up, his eyes hollow as he murmured softly and asked rhetorically, "Where ..... did all this gold dust ..... come from?"

Bai Liu flicks two fingers and clips out a piece of paper - a message Muke sent him before he left - and he repeats the words softly, "Palace, gold dust, tears."

"This is what my team member left me before he left, what he thought was the key decoded information."

"My guess would be that he started going gold in the middle of your interrogation of him, and he left tears behind during your interrogation, which he then found turned into gold dust, and I saw this in your player Chrissy - she turned into a gold heretic when I shot her in order to send her out of the game."

"She broke down in tears, and her tears turned to gold dust."

" Georgia." Bai Liu said calmly, "This golden dust is the final solution to the hourglass of time you have been searching for."

"These are the tears shed by these citizens who have been trapped here for ten years and have been looking forward to your return day and night."

Behind Georgia, a drop of gold slowly falls from the eyes of the golden statue of the king, leaning on a tabletop and sitting on a bench, diffusing into the air as a golden powder, turning into a trajectory that slowly disperses through the long-silent kingdom.

"They are waiting for me to return ....." Georgia rhetorically asked in a daze, "I have trapped them here for ten years, immovable and untouchable, and it is my single-mindedness that has tortured them to this point."

"How could they wait for such a treasonous grand prince?"

"People shed tears because they have feelings." Bai Liu raised his eyes, "They stay under this sea like statues for ten years, waiting until the ground is full of gold dust, their hearts are like yellow stones, and there is no more golden sand swirling in the air, but the moment you step into this place, the gold dust that fills the sky begins to flutter again and fall on you in droves."

"They have feelings for you, Georgia."

"You're the only person in the world who would make himself as hard and indestructible as a statue to protect them, stubbornly guarding them for ten years on the beach, who else could they wait for but you?"

Georgia slowly drops her gaze to the hourglass in Bai Liu's palm, lost in memory.

Gloren In the spring the innocent children and townspeople would grind the gold mined from the first mine cart into gold dust and sprinkle it into the sky on those they wished to bless.

In those days, a young Georgia would walk down there and his hair and shoulders would be covered in a thick layer of gold dust, sometimes more than his father, who would mutter and complain that Georgia was just too popular with the nation.

The men laughed and joked and shouted in jest, letting the gold dust fall over the hem of his coat and long hair: the " Georgia!"

" Georgia!"

Georgia looked back at them and thought to herself - if only this scene, under his protection, could last forever.

Ten years later, his body was once again covered in gold dust, and Georgia turned her head to look out of the window platform, where the nationals who had waved gold dust at him from the stage had long since ceased to be, and the banners they held outside the mines to drive him away had been transformed into gold statues, while the king, whom he would have laughed and complained was too popular, was now standing beside his chair, sorrowfully contemplating how he could conceal the pointing stone from him and bury it in the ground.

He had, after all, failed to protect it all.

Georgia closes her eyes.

A tear falls into the hourglass in Bai Liu's hand, and the golden sand in the hourglass begins to flow, the thick gold dust floating throughout the kingdom turns into a visible golden track that drags the hourglass wrapped in Bai Liu's hand and pours into it.

In the midst of the golden sands flowing, Georgia opened his eyes wordlessly, his golden sculpturing having pervaded his heart, so that even his voice became soft and harmonious: "..... Is it here, at this moment, that my bargain with the gods has finally begun to be fulfilled?"

"I suppose so." Bai Liu looked at the hourglass that was about to start rewinding in his hand and smiled, "Better to make a deal with God than to make a deal with me."

"Heir to the Gods?" Georgia raised her eyes and asked back in a soft voice, her eyes all but lightly resistant, "..... As the Grand Prince of Gloren, I am grateful that you told me all this and aborted the deal, but I will not make any more deals with you at the cost of the nation's suffering. "

"No." Bai Liu laughed softly, "I don't want you nationals or your pain."

Georgia asks, "What do you want?"

Bai Liu looked at him: "Your soul."

The moment Bai Liu's words fall, the hourglass suspended in Bai Liu's palm fills up and reverses.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has collected all the Tears of the Hourglass of Time, the hourglass is full, time will start to rewind back to ten years ago, please be ready to travel back in time!]

The golden sand in the hourglass, wrapped in the gold dust turned into tears, began to flow in reverse and everything around it began to reverse as gold dust everywhere flew into the sky and the gold leaf on the statue of the king sitting at the long table began to fall off, revealing the man inside.

Tang Erda reached out to grab Bai Liu, whose eyes had suddenly dissipated, but the moment she did, she only caught a handful of golden sand.

Georgia also turned into golden sand and disappeared into the copy.

[System Alert: The Lost Land of Gold game is cleared, player Tang Erda exits the game, player Bai Liu, Georgia triggers the plot and enters the DLC - The Land of Gold Ten Years Ago]

Tang Erda opened her eyes again and was already in the viewing pool, which Muke instantly surrounded.

"What's going on?" Muke asked, forcing himself to be calm, "The big screen has gone black, which means there's a game over and I saw you guys' pass, why are you the only one logged out?"

" Where's Bai Liu?"

" Bai Liu was left in the game." Tang Erda took a deep breath, "He triggered the spur."

Across the viewing pool, Armand stares deathly at the extinguished screen as he rises to his feet, clenching his fists in resignation - What about Georgia?

Why didn't his older brother log out?

" Armand!" The team member next to him looked at Armand's bruised hands and shoulders and panicked, trying to pull Armand back, but Armand was so bruised that he had nowhere to go but to shout, "You're not even strapped in! Where are you going!"

"The game's over, the captain will be fine! You're so badly hurt, don't go anywhere!"

The thought of Georgia spending time with that Bai Liu guy was too much for Armand to keep his cool, and he braced himself to stand up and walk towards the big screen, despite his half-tied, exposed shoulders.

"Hello." Armand barely maintained his politeness to talk to the employee by the big screen, "The game is over but our team's tactician is still in there, can you keep the little TV on so we can see what's going on inside?"

"I'll pay for that part of it."

"Or be able to open the portal again to allow us to access ....."

No sooner had Armand's words left his lips than an arrogant, threatening voice came from beside him.

"Hey! Our president is still in there! Open up and let me in and bring him out!"

Armand pauses with a sense of urgency, and Mu Sicheng seems to hear a sound coming from this side of the room and stops, both turning their heads at the same time and looking at each other across the big screen.

Mu Sicheng, blood still dripping from the large hole in his right shoulder, grabbed his employee by the collar with his left hand in a vicious and threatening manner, and saw Armand snort and tsk in a moment of displeasure.

Half of Armand's face is a bloody mess, and he gives Mu Sicheng a cold glance, as if he didn't exist, and turns his head to continue his conversation with the staff.

The voices of the two men overlapped again.

"Is there any way I can get in?"

Mu Sicheng exploded and rolled up his sleeves to fight Armand: "What are you doing in there! You want to fight Bai Liu?"

"Come on, let's fight again right here! You Little Bai face are my loser!"
-

"You are no match for me." Armand looked calm, with an expression that looked like he was speaking calmly, but with his backhand he summoned his longbow, "I advise you not to go in there again, if I can kill you a second time, I can kill you a third."

"Ha?!" Mu Sicheng seethed, "I'll show you who really killed who!"

The players from both sides arrived and were very helpless.

" Armand, you calm down, we are not allowed to log back into the game ..... nor are we allowed to fight in the viewing pool."

Wang Shun pulled Mu Sicheng, who was about to run at him, with his head in his hands, and he was in tears: "God Mu, don't make a scene, our team will get a yellow card!"

"But Bai Liu isn't out yet ....." Mu Sicheng clenched his fists as he lowered his voice a bit, "..... If I clear main attack a little faster, then ....."

"I'm still too slow."

" Georgia's still in there." Armand's lips tightened, tears shifting in the pupils of his eyes, "I can't leave him in there alone."

"He never leaves me alone."

There was a moment of silence from the players on both sides.

" Armand ." The team handed Armand the bandage, sighing, " You've done a great job, it's us who haven't, trust the captain, he's a strong and awesome guy."

" Georgia will definitely finish this game in the Land of Gold properly and come out to meet you."

"He won't leave you alone."

Wang Shun helplessly and amusingly picks up Mu Sicheng, who is already unsteady on his feet: "If you're slow and slow, then what am I?"

"You've done well enough, you should have looked around before, before when you logged out of the game with Armand, the whole viewing pool was filled with spectators cheering for your great performance."

"You proved Bai Liu's choice was the right one."

"President he will be able to wrap it up properly." Wang Shun picked up Mu Sicheng, who had his head bowed and his jaw dropping blood, or whatever it was, to the floor, and patted him on the head with a smile in his voice, "then came out to meet you and compliment you on a job well done."

The desire to protect something and someone is probably common to people who have something they want to protect.

Why do people shed tears?

Is it because of the pain?

Armand covered his face with a bandage and clenched his fists very hard, but his shoulders still shook from his vocal sobs.

Is it because you resent your own incompetence?

Mu Sicheng's face was so screwed up that his features were contorted, but he could not control the water that fell from his eyes, and he gritted his teeth and wiped it away with his monkey paw, not wanting to face himself like this.

Is it because of weakness or loss?

Sitting in the audience, Hearts lifted his eyes, surrounded by a fading crowd, all of whom had gone to catch the next round, while Hearts sat quietly in place, like a movie audience waiting for a non-existent egg.

"Can you give me an answer?" Standing at the gates of Gloren, Bai six smiles and holds out his hand, an hourglass filled with tears that can reverse time, while he smiles and asks Bai Liu, who suddenly appears in front of him, "Why do people shed tears?"

"The reason people shed tears." Bai Liu raised his eyes as he looked across at Bai six, "It's because of feelings."

The Lost Land of Gold

Next to the panicked king and priests, the guards of Gloren looked blankly at the Bai Liu who had suddenly appeared at the entrance to Gloren and asked, "Is this your guest?"

--The hourglass of reversal brought Bai Liu to this moment, ten years ago, when he met Bai six, who was trading with the King.

"No, he's not my guest." Bai six explained with a smile, "but I do look forward to his visits."

"I've been looking forward to this visit, for ten years."

"The moment you came here ten years ago and made a deal with these people, you knew that ten years later I would enter the game, get the hourglass, and reverse time to come to you?" Bai Liu's tone was unruffled as he asked, "That's a lot of work."

Bai six laughed softly, he shrugged his shoulders as if helpless, "There's nothing I can do about it, I have an appointment with Mr. [Prophet] and I can't interfere with you on my own initiative."

"But when you enter the game and come to me voluntarily in time travel, you can't call me interfering."

"When did you guess that the monster in this copy was mine?" Bai six inquired with a smile as he opened his hand to block Bai Liu's whip, "How hostile, to hit me with a monster book as soon as I come over."

There are monsters in every copy, but in this copy of The Lost Kingdom of Gold, Bai Liu did not find any.

Neither the gold dust all over the ground, nor the goldified animals everywhere, nor the goldified people at the entrance to the mines, belong to the category of monsters, but a copy, it is impossible to have no monsters - then the answer is obvious.

"The key is time." Bai Liu raised his eyes as he looked at the monster book panel that surfaced on his system panel, "Monsters don't exist in the Land of Gold ten years from now."

"- but rather the Land of Gold ten years ago, after the hourglass was reversed."

[System Alert: Congratulations to Player Bai Liu for unlocking the Monster Book - The Lost Land of Gold (1/2)]

[Monster Name: The Evil God of the Land of Gold]

[Attack Value: ????? (Undetectable, can be unlocked)]

[Attack Method: ?? (cannot be fully detected, may not be unlocked)]

[Weakness: ?? (undetectable)]

"Quick reaction time." Bai six caught the long whip Bai Liu flung at him between two fingers and cocked his head with a grin, "I've cooperated with you to unlock the monster book, in return can we talk peacefully about something else?"

"- like the Prince of Georgia who is about to shoot an arrow at me now on the walls?"

A golden arrow shot through the air, piercing between the two men, Bai Liu withdrew his long whip and looked sideways at the young Georgia on the wall with her bow drawn full.

Bai Liu's arrival is a clear distraction from the prince's hostility towards Bai six - Georgia, now only sixteen years old, is frowning and pointing her bow and arrow warily at Bai Liu, the unexpected visitor who has appeared outside Gloren's gates.

"You can't have two of the same soul in one dimension." Bai six's voice contained a smile, "You bring Georgia back from ten years ago, and he becomes what he was ten years ago."

"It seems that your efforts to acquire this prince's soul are going to be scrapped."

Bai six spreads his hands and laughs, "- Georgia ten years ago doesn't remember that you helped him guard Gloren and were uniformly hostile to both you and me."

"This copy has two pages of the monster book." Bai Liu shifted his eyes from Georgia to Bai six, "There's another monster besides you, it's a dotard, right?"

"Hmm." Bai six sighed, "Apart from the fact that you don't want to, you're really the perfect candidate for the successor to the evil god."

"This is the hourglass filled with tears." Bai Liu held out his hand and raised his eyes to Bai six, "In accordance with the bargain you made a thousand years ago, the deal between Gloren, the Land of Gold and you is terminated, I give you the hourglass and you give me the goldstone."

When Bai Liu opened his palm and the hourglass filled with tears was revealed to everyone, everyone was stunned, even Georgia, who had once again filled her bow on the wall, stopped and slowly lowered it.

"This is-!" The king exclaimed incredulously, looking at the hourglass with a look of anticipation or resistance that he didn't know whether to expect, and cautiously looking closer, "The Hourglass of Time!"

"I can certainly suspend the deal." There was a lot of indefinable meaning in Bai six's smile, and with a glance at the somewhat pale priest next to him, he said with a soft smile, "But after the deal is stopped, if anyone still wants to continue trading gold with me for the next thousand years, I naturally won't refuse."

Bai six opened his palm and on top of it was the hovering Pointing Stone, he smiled and asked, " King of Gloren, would you like to choose [Hourglass of Time], or [Pointing Stone]?"

The king looked at the two objects with a struggle in his eyes - an old, worn hourglass overflowing with tears and having survived countless storms, and a shiny, golden and opulent, brand new pointing stone.

When being thus clearly revealed to him, everyone who has grown up in the land of gold will, out of an instinctive desire to grasp the nod to the stone that can bring gold.

"Your Majesty!" The priest raised his voice as he looked at the king who was caught in a state of indecision and was on the verge of jumping up and down with anxiety, "The amount of gold mined this spring is less than a tenth of what was mined last year, and without more gold, many people will starve to death!"

The guards also exhorted urgently, "Your Majesty, choose the golden stone!"

"Father!" Georgia tumbled from the walls with a leap, rarely had he acted so inappropriately, but at this moment the young prince could not care less about royal etiquette, he ran over and spoke with a calm but gasping look, "Please do not choose the pointing stone."

"Select Hourglass."

Georgia looked insistently at the king with those brown eyes: "You knew how terrible it was to fill this hourglass on the night you lost your mother, do you want to make all the citizens of Gloren go through this pain once more as a way of paying God for the pain he wants?"

"Your Royal Highness!" The priest was anxious and helpless, "Don't make trouble, without this golden stone, many people will starve and freeze to death in Gloren this winter!"

"But if you take this golden stone." Georgia's eyes did not avert, he looked straight at the king, "and the winter of Gloren, after a thousand years, will never pass."

"Will Gloren still exist then?"

"Will it become a land of nothing but misery, buried at the bottom of the sea and disappearing into thin air because it has to pay back the thousand years of gold it owes?"

The priest was stunned, and even the guards paused numbly in their exhortations.

The king's eyes were complicated and struggling as he said feebly, "But Georgia, that too is a thousand years away ....."

"For King Gloren, who set the deal in the first place, we are also a thousand years away." Georgia looked up and he whispered, "But for us, this moment, this time, there is no millennium; winter is winter."

"So for a thousand years after this moment, when the Gloren nation faces a thousand years of gold to be repaid, will their winter not be winter?"

"Father, you taught me to be a responsible monarch to the nation and to exist for the happiness and joy of the people of Gloren."

Georgia gripped the bow in her hand: "The nationals here, not only of the present, should also include the future, should they not?"

The king fell into a long silence.

The priests and guards also ceased to speak, and all were silent.

Eventually, the king took a long breath and he looked up, his eyes a million complex tangled emotions dissipating into sand: "I choose Hourglass."

"That was unexpected." Bai six smiled lightly as he collected the gold stones and turned to Bai Liu, "Did you expect Georgia to be able to convince her father?"

"No." Bai Liu replied calmly as he handed the hourglass to the king and lowered his eyes, "I just believe that human tears can have some unexpected effects."

"I was able to beat you the first two times on unexpected emotions, so-"

"- so you still made the same choice this time, you chose to trust in human emotions and then you won me a third time." Bai six smiled amusingly as he handed Bai Liu the gold point stone, "I don't understand it, but it does seem interesting."

"As a reward for your win over me, the gold point stone is for you, and of course there is another gift for you, which you will find out when you leave the game."

"But for now." Bai six looked to Georgia, who was staring at him hostilely, gave a courteous off-hat salute, then said goodbye to the king before finally looking to Bai Liu and smiling, "It seems I'm not very welcome here as a businessman."

"I'll just go ahead."

With a casual swipe to the left, Bai six creates a silver-blue swirling door, he smiles and waves to Bai Liu, turning away, "I look forward to our next meeting."

"-that would have been in ten years."

Bai Liu watched the silver-blue door close, then slowly released his hand from clutching the whip - the sense of oppression Bai six brought was too strong, and if he didn't follow the other man's steps, the god who was so idle that his brain grew a bag might do something to force the deal, and then there would be nothing he could do to stop what had happened to Gloren.

But now ..... Bai Liu drops his eyes to look at the nugget in his hand, grips it, and turns around to prepare to log out of the game as well.

[System Alert: Congratulations to player Bai Liu for collecting the Monster Book - "The Lost Land of Gold" (2/2)]

[Monster Name: Pointing Stone]

[Players can exit the game and receive a special prop reward for collecting the Monster Book of the Land of Gold].

Although he hadn't gotten Georgia's soul, he had worked hard and hadn't gotten anything - but he had expected that he wouldn't get Georgia's soul, and the man was very defensive and wary of him, and when he made that request, Georgia looked at him with a look of scrutiny and murder. and murderous intent.

How should I say, should I say worthy to be the director of the interrogation three bureau, obviously he has made it this far, but still did not relax his guard, look at him still like looking at a prisoner.

-- obviously he's really just an enthusiastic citizen who likes to collect souls.

Bai Liu sighed regretfully in his heart.

..... Georgia Soul's skills, so good, it's a bit of a shame he can't get it, but it can't be helped, he doesn't get everything as he wants it.

Outside the game, his teammates should be waiting, and there's no point in wasting any more time, so Bai Liu gathers himself and is just about to exit when a somewhat raw male voice calls out to him, "Wait."

Bai Liu turns his head and raises an eyebrow.

The young prince, barely maintaining his poise in his presence but with a slight blush on his face, held out his hand and apologised sincerely, "It was not my intention to attack you just now, I am sorry."

"Although I do not know where you came from, your arrival did save Gloren and I should not have done such a rude thing to you."

Bai Liu maintained a subtle expression as he looked at Georgia until he had the feignigly composed prince flushed and his eyelashes trembling as he pleaded, "If you cannot accept my apology, I will ask for a penalty when I return, the amount of which can be determined by you until you are willing to accept my apology!"

Bai Liu: "....."

It's not necessary.

It's been a long time since he's cheated on a child, and he's a little out of practice. Maybe Lu Yizhan's comment [Don't cheat on children] really got into his head, and he didn't even remember for a moment that there was a way to cheat on young Georgia.

To be more precise, he really didn't expect that Georgia, the serious and aloof-looking head of the Third Bureau, would be so ..... young Innocence.

In Bai Liu's case, the word naivety is usually associated with being a good liar.

"I accept your apology." Bai Liu quickly puts on a humane and friendly smile as he takes Georgia's hand and gives it a firm shake, "No need to be so polite with me and say salutations, we're not so rusty after ten years."

"I can say that it is at your behest, ten years later, that I have come here to bring you the hourglass."

"Me in ten years ....." Georgia's expression was a little puzzled, "What does that mean?"

Bai Liu smiled softly with downcast eyes, "You can understand that I am someone from [the future], and that you are a very remarkable person ten years from now, who filled the hourglass with your own tears to save your kingdom, and entrusted me to send it ten years ago, wanting to abort Gloren's deal ten years early."

"And you really did succeed."

"Is that so?" Georgia looked at Bai Liu for a quiet moment as he took a deep breath, "Then I'm really in trouble with you ten years later."

"It's not really a problem, is it?" Bai Liu was all business, "We're soul buddies, it's normal to do you this favour."

"Soul ..... best friend ....." Georgia pursed her lips calmly for a moment, her ears reddening a little, "Are you and I, so intimate ?"

Georgia, who comes from the Crown Prince, has been very hard on himself since he was a child and has almost no friends of his own age, because before friends are friends in his eyes, they are his nationals and he has a responsibility to them, that cannot be too close to them, which is not in keeping with the code of conduct of the Crown Prince.

His only close peers were his brother, Armand, who worshipped him blindly.

It was the first time he had ever met someone with an hourglass, risked time travel to save Gloren from a disaster, his future friend, and it was at the level of soulmate ..... Georgia took a deep breath and even became a bit overwhelmed: "I can trust you with Gloren's affairs to you, you ..... you must be someone I trust."

Bai Liu nodded fervently, "Exactly."

"You invited me to play a game with my team at Gloren ten years later and we won, and your brother cried so much because he lost the game that we comforted him for a long time."

Bai Liu is a nonsensical, unchanging blatherer.

" Armand really ....." Georgia laughed helplessly, his eyes softening considerably, "Ten years on and still so childish."

"But even as a friend, I can't let you make this trip to help me for nothing."

Georgia sincerely asks, "Is there anything you need?"

"Although the Gloren is in a difficult position at the moment, there is no sense in leaving the man who saved us all empty handed, I have a resource of gold stored away in advance and can draw some of it to you, of course it is mundane and you may not like it." Georgia quickly explained, "It's just Gloren custom that we give gold to our best friends as the highest form of valuing and courtesy."

Bai Liu let out a long sigh in his heart - Georgia, from now on you and the whole Gloren crew are my good friends.

May you bring gold to treat me often with courtesy.

"No need for gold." Bai Liu raised his eyes, "I want your soul."

Georgia was stunned: "A soul?"

"If trading for gold is Gloren's highest standard of friendship." Bai Liu smiles, "Then trading my soul is the highest standard of friendship I can have for my best friend."

"Best friends of the soul is not just an empty phrase, it's a real connection that exists."

"So Georgia." Bai Liu looked up, looked at Georgia, held out his hand and asked softly, "Will you sell me your soul?"

Georgia was stunned for a long, long time before she reached out her left hand and gently placed it in Bai Liu's palm: "..... If it is only my soul alone and not the suffering of all the nation, then as a thank you for saving Gloren."

"I can deliver my soul to you."

"But you can't use it to do harm to others and cause pain."

"I usually only do bad things that make people happy." Bai Liu smiled, "Thanks for the trust, Captain Georgia."

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu trade successful, exit the game].

Meanwhile, the real world.

On the isolated island, Lu Yizhan rushed into the control room with the team, who were strewn across the floor, the investigators' faces white with fear, Liao Ke quickly crouched down and reached out to check the sides of their necks and looked up to Lu Yizhan to report, "Just fainted, all alive."

Lu Yizhan is relieved.

Luckily it was [Mu Sicheng] who came, if it had been any other circus members, they would have been met with a trail of corpses.

"The console was unplugged, and coffee was spilled, but the damage was minor." A member of the team looked up as he checked the instrumentation and said, "I'm overhauling it right now and it'll be working in no time!"

"All right!" The team member was pleased to see the operating screen light up, "I'll see if the robot on the underwater patrol is working properly!"

The screen spreads out in a circle of radar waves.

"On!" The investigator let out a long breath as he braced himself against the console, "Check out Heretic 0073!"

"The energy shield is still intact, it hasn't been damaged, we've caught up!" The team member's face was full of elation, "He shouldn't have dived to 3,000 metres underwater yet, the robot didn't detect it!"

"I told you." The team member next to him covered his thumping heart and gave a reluctant smile after the robbery, "We can only bob around underwater at 800 meters in our submarine, how can a thief, without the help of tight equipment, just dive down to 3,000 meters and steal a ..... "

"Beep-! Beep-!"

A disturbing red dot appeared on the large screen being detected, flying close to 0073's shields at a speed visible to the naked eye.

The smiles of all the team members froze on their faces, the hands and voice of the team member who was operating trembled, his face was one of uncontrollable fear: "Investigation Captain, check, a object is detected approaching 0073's shields at high speed!"

"If the other side keeps going at this rate, it will hit the shield in less than a minute!"

"What kind of monster is this ..... that's 3,000 metres under the sea and it can still move at such a high speed, won't it be affected by the water pressure?!"

"What the hell kind of creature is it?! Is it a heretic?!"

"Never let this man break the shield and take the heretic!" The investigator's eyes were red as he looked at the fast moving red dot, his breath catching and his chest heaving, before turning his head sharply to the operations team, "As I recall, when Captain Georgia built this island guarding Heretic 0073, the funds were mobilised on a military scale and were based on a standard of protection against a nation. "

"This island, stocked with missiles and underwater tracking torpedoes, is big enough to blow this guy to smithereens!"

"What?!" It was Lu Yizhan's turn to turn white with shock, he was so stunned that he couldn't stand it, "Does Georgia still have this stuff for the island?

When did it happen!? The missiles are there?! That's too much!

But the other Tribe members were not surprised:" Captain Georgia has always armed the Tribe's repository on this scale."

"We have those in this Council too."

Lu Yizhan was dizzy and weak in the knees - he wondered why Georgia had been so calm after receiving the advance letter and hadn't even reported it to the General Directorate, when it was the General Directorate and the sub-islands armed on such a scale!

Rebuilt the three bureaus, built floating islands, and armed the storage room with them, and previously helped Su Yang report part of the funding for the five buildings, but Georgia never applied for funding reports to the General Directorate, and never paid for them himself, leading him to know nothing about them .....

Georgia, how much money does this guy have on his hands!

No, no, no, this is not the time to think about that!

"It's still outrageous to use these!" Lu Yizhan shook his head frantically as he tried to hold down the investigator's hand that was trying to push the button to launch the missile, "The other side has no intention of hurting anyone, maybe we can negotiate properly!"

The investigator replied coolly, "It's too late."

"Let's blast him first and then negotiate!"

Lu Yizhan: "!!!"

How do you negotiate when you've blown it up! Let God negotiate with him after the bombing!

What's going on? Isn't the Third Board in charge of storage! Why are they all so aggressive!

Lu Yizhan tried his best to stop it, cold sweat was breaking out on his forehead and he was screaming in his heart - Bai Liu, hurry up, I can't stop you anymore!

A torpedo blast might not really kill [Mu Sicheng].

The circus players in the other world lines are all monster panels in reality now, with the monster book on, [Mu Sicheng]'s movement speed is very fast, if the torpedo flies over and [Mu Sicheng] dodges it then, allowing him to notice that someone at sea is sniping at him, he must be enraged, and with this man's impulsiveness, he might actually do something irreparable!

Normally, [Mu Sicheng] doesn't destroy stolen items when he steals them, but get pissed off and this guy might just poke the shield under the surface, and that would be a disaster!

"Five hundred more meters and it's going to hit the outer edge of the shield!" The team shouted anxiously, "Survey leader, what do we do?!"

"Please don't get in my way, Your Excellency." The investigator raged as he pushed Lu Yizhan out of the way and went to the operating panel, raising his hand to press the red button that symbolised the emergency.

Meanwhile, below the surface of the sea.

[Mu Sicheng] hovering at the bottom of the sea, he looked at the golden country in front of him and raised an eyebrow - no wonder that Bai six guy had to steal this, it was such a valuable thing.

..... But how do I take it away?

[Mu Sicheng] After a moment's thought, he looked towards the golden glowing shield on the outside of this golden house - in any case, whether he cut it up and took it away, or used a prop to pack it away, this obstructive shield should be broken.

But ..... Bai six the guy was so busy, he shouldn't like to make a mess of stolen goods, if he broke the shield, the contents would be a mess and he would be accused of stealing recklessly, the last time he got a famous painting back he scratched a corner, the man smiled at him for two days and he got a chill down his spine.

Tsk.

So annoying.

After thinking about it, Mu Sicheng decided not to pierce the shield and used his largest space prop to fit it back in - but unfortunately, the space prop did not have enough extension to fit in the upper space encased in the shield.

Then this can't be helped.

--To be reluctantly accepted as a soggy trophy by the eventful Bai six.

Below the surface, Mu Sicheng rubbed his fist, threw out his monkey paw and advanced against the shield. On the island, the standoff between Lu Yizhan and the investigator went into a fever pitch, but Lu Yizhan's face sank as he saw the small red dot pause slightly and then move forward against the shield, saying something bad.

Probably because it wouldn't fit, [Mu Sicheng] decided to poke through the shield after all!

Just as Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, ready to draw his heavy sword and tell the investigator that he was ready to go down and forcefully stop [Mu Sicheng], the voice of the operator next to him began to grow confused and alarmed, "Investigation Captain ....."

"Heretic 0073's sea depth figure is decreasing ....."

"It seems to be ....." the operator looked dully at the survey leader, "coming up on its own."

Mu Sicheng, who was about to make his move on the sea, watched as the soon-to-be-stolen kingdom slowly rose from the ground, and the scene inside, which had been dead and silent, began to change rapidly as if time had been turned backwards, and the gold on the people who had been transformed into gold sculptures fell away in pieces, and the gold dust fell from the ground to the sky like rain recovered by the gods.

Time is turning backwards, gold is melting, islands are boiling, and the kingdom that has lain dormant at the bottom of the sea for ten years awakens at the moment when the deal with the gods is over.

Both of [Mu Sicheng's] eyebrows were raised slightly, backing away from his figure and letting the island rise upwards from in front of him without making a move as he looked irritably at the Gloren nationals who were alive and well in the shield, hugging each other and howling loudly.

It's all alive?

What the hell, Bai six, didn't he say he didn't steal from the living?

On the island, Lu Yizhan lets out a long, deflated breath and sits down in a chair, shakily holding a cup and pouring some hot water to slow things down, while the team next to him looks at the rising heretic 0073 with a completely dazed expression.

" Captain." The operations crew snapped dully, "Heretic 0073 is going to rise to the surface, do we fire the missiles to shoot it down?"

Lu Yizhan, who was drinking water, choked on his lungs and trachea: "Ahem!

The investigating team member shook his head in a trance, "..... or not."

"I always felt ..... if we did that, tomorrow Captain Georgia would sink us in the sea."

"Captain ....." the operations crew member stared at the display and eh'd strangely, "The red dot under the sea that was near the heretic 0073 shield is missing."

Lu Yizhan looks over as he chokes and coughs, then turns his head to look at Liao Ke, both of them with a look of relief at last.

Mu Sicheng] does not steal from the living, nor does he like to steal [living things]. Seeing the scene of Gloren's revival, this rebellious thief by nature would never obey Bai six's orders.

Although [Mu Sicheng] did something wrong, in Lu Yizhan's case, it was not a crime worthy of death.

Liao Ke looked at Lu Yizhan, who was slumped in his chair, holding a cup with empty eyes and drinking water - so even in that emergency situation, Mr. Lu tried his best to keep [Mu Sicheng] alive.

Even if they are enemies, Lu Yizhan will not pronounce the death sentence until they have made a fatal mistake.

--because [the Inquisitor] needs to stay awake and sane.

This is an absolute standard that cannot be overstepped as a [judge].

Lu Yizhan, the absolutely sober and sensible judge, was helped out of the third bureau by Liao Ke, who, after thanking him for coming to his senses, was then investigated by Liao Ke and Lu Yizhan in earnest - an investigation that lasted all night. More than 3,000 questions were asked.

By the end of the questioning, Lu Yizhan felt that his privacy and dignity as a human being had been completely lost.

Lu Yizhan stayed up all night, seeing the next day's sun was dizzying and walking with his left foot tripping over his right.

Liao Ke was helpless and amused again and sighed, "..... you were so badly injured in the last game, your soul is only half full, you should have rested well, but you have to go to work during the day, take Spades and the others to practice at night to prepare for the playoffs, and at the same time you have to deal with Bai six, and now you are still You're made of iron and you're rotting on your own."

"But it's good to see that everything has come to a safe end." Lu Yizhan let out a long breath and shook his head and smiled too, "..... has been pretty good lately."

"In the league Spades has been able to hold his own and is working well with his teammates."

"That's true." Liao Ke also laughs about this, "It's always nice to be able to stop and wait for your teammates."

Lu Yizhan and Liao Ke logged into the game once quickly after disembarking, making sure the Killer Sequence match was over before moving on to the three-game investigation process.

"The match turned out exactly as you expected." Liao Ke said, "The Invisible Cloak forfeited in the middle of the double, we killed the match early and now the whole game is talking about the killer sequence, saying it kind of set a precedent for killing a match early in the playoffs, the betting odds we were already the lowest."

The lowest betting rate means that this guild is most likely to win, so betting on this guild to win to is not a big return - which means that in the eyes of many viewers, the most likely team to win this year's championship is the Killer Sequence.

"It's really high profile ....." Lu Yizhan headache, "I would have liked to have practiced properly for the team competition."

"It can't be helped." Liao Ke reassures him, "It happened out of the blue and there's nothing you can do about it, but you don't have to worry about us being too high profile, our buzz is high but it's not the highest."

Lu Yizhan asked, "Bai Liu, their team?"

"Hmm." Liao Ke laughed, "I heard Georgia got out and approached Bai Liu and pressed him about what he'd done to him, said he seemed calm but sounded annoyed and said Bai Liu had lied to him about being his best friend or something."

"Saying that he stole his soul, the whole meeting was in chaos and the two parties almost fought."

"And then what happened?" Lu Yizhan listened with great interest, "What happened?"

Liao Ke nodded: "Then Bai Liu took his Team Quan and logged out of the game, leaving Georgia with a cold face as if something terrible had been done to him, saying that Bai Liu must pay him back, and then logged out of the game as well, probably to find Bai Liu in reality. "

"Now there are already rumours that Bai Liu made light of Georgia during the game's, and Georgia is holding him responsible."

Lu Yizhan: "..... = = What kind of outrageous rumour is this?"

"But there are quite a few people who believe it." Liao Ke spreads his hands, "We have a member of our guild who is convinced of this rumour."

"Spades was gone by the time we logged into the game and Bai Yi said he logged out to look for Bai Liu, so if he ran fast, he might have collided with Georgia who was looking for Bai Liu."

Lu Yizhan: "....."

It's over!!!

Bai Liu's rental house.

"There's really nothing between me and him." Bai Liu held up his hands calmly, "I just played a normal game and won him."

"But you're looking at him with lust." Spades clenched his fist in expressionless condemnation, "You're gluttonizing him."

Bai Liu averted his eyes, his tone subtle, "..... Don't sound so strange, I just crave his gold."

Usually aloof, why are you so perceptive at times like this?

Playoffs

" Bai Liu ---!!!"

The door slammed open, and Mu Sicheng burst in with a flourish, lifting Bai Liu up to make sure he was okay before he let out a long breath and collapsed onto the sofa: "..... I'm glad I'm not hurt."

"I told you Bai Liu is fine." Tang Erda, who followed, explained helplessly, "You were the only one of us who came out with an injury."

Noticing Bai Liu's questioning gaze, Liu Jiayi gave an OK gesture, "Don't worry about this guy, he's already been healed in the game, he's alive and well."

Muke closed the door with a smile, paused for a moment when he saw Spades sitting in front of Bai Liu, and then sat down as usual: "What about Georgia?"

Bai Liu explained the whole process of getting the soul note to the team.

"So that's it." Muke seemed to understand, "No wonder Georgia reacted so strongly."

"That's totally a tricked out soul note, isn't it?" Liu Jiayi was speechless, "And Bai Liu you really like to cheat children, cheat Georgia who trusts you so much, doesn't your conscience hurt?"

"It was a bit." Bai Liu honestly spreads his hands, "but at the point where he said he'd send his best friend gold, the conscience suddenly disappeared and there was no way it could hurt."

Liu Jiayi: "....."

What a frankly shameless man!

"But that's not an option." Tang Erda's temples popped as he listened, his head hurting as he rubbed them, " Georgia is the head of the Third Bureau, his soul notes aren't that easy to get, Bai Liu."

"What's wrong with that?" Mu Sicheng didn't feel anything at all, he leaned back on the sofa, relaxed, took an apple, tossed it twice and held it in his mouth, crossed one foot on the coffee table and spoke arrogantly, "If he took it, he took it, what else can he do to us!"

Bai Liu swept a calm glance at Mu Sicheng's feet resting on his coffee table, "Put them down."

"..... Oh." Mu Sicheng put it down honestly, holding an apple and eating it, his tone arrogant, "Big deal, we'll just fight, we're all just defeated!"

"It's okay in the game." Tang Erda looked up and explained seriously, "But not in reality."

"In addition to the power of the Third Bureau of the Bureau for the Treatment of Heretics, Georgia was also a former prince of Gloren, and although Gloren is now sunk, he still has a lot of political power in him that he can call upon, and as far as I understand, he can arm the Third Bureau with the standards of state protection, and he trains members of the Third Bureau in the same way that he trains confidential informants. "

"To have gotten all this armed equipment and cultivated this airtight heretical storage depot of the Third Bureau in a world where news circulates speaks volumes about his ability."

Mu Sicheng's expression grew heavy as he listened, his chewing mouth slowly moving: "Is ..... so horrible?"

"It's not just that." Tang Erda sighs helplessly, " Georgia has money on her hands, even we in the Heretics Authority are not sure of the amount."

"I had only heard that Georgia was rich and that he had a very substantial amount of gold on hand at first, but we all thought that refurbishing the three bureaus, building the floating islands and arming them was enough to spend all his savings, but from the recent feedback from Su Yang, that wasn't the case."

" Su Yang said that Georgia also helped to reimburse a sum of money for five buildings, which is not a small amount, and the fact that Georgia could easily take it means that he still has savings."

"How can he be so rich?!" Mu Sicheng wondered, "He's only a few years older than me, right, does it make sense to be so rich?!"

"Few people can come up with such a huge amount of money at any time, even my family can't take it easily ..... " Muke wistfully said, "The amount of money makes me think of an institution. "

Bai Liu looked over: "What institution?"

Muke replied, "The Land of Gold Trading Bank."

"Thanks Uncle Xie, ah, asking about this bank because I've suddenly become a bit interested in the president of this bank, I've heard he's a young and talented man and would like to meet him if I get the chance." Muke said with a smile on his face to the phone, "I've been thinking about starting a business lately, so it would be good to develop my contacts."

There was a hearty laugh from the other side: "It's good that junior has an idea, but the founder of this bank is not even available to us, so I'm sorry I can't help introduce you."

"Nothing, nothing." Muke smiled, "Just getting to know each other, too."

"To be clear, I do know something about it." The other side pondered for a while and spoke with a sigh, "A young man with a big background, I'm told."

"Ten years ago, there was a mysterious gold trading organisation, near the Gulo Sea, this organisation traded large amounts of gold outwards, with reasonable gold prices and pristine gold mines, and was considered a big trader of gold exports all over the world, but no one ever found the exact location of this organisation, and then one day, this organisation suddenly disappeared."

"Then shortly afterwards, a young man appeared at a bank who brought in a large amount of gold and used it as collateral to buy up many banks that were about to go bankrupt, and then used the gold as bank stock to set up the Land of Gold Trade Bank - a bank that only accepts gold as the general equivalent for everyone for trade, and the security was so ridiculously tight that there was never any loss of trade goods, so many of the great men were fond of using this bank as an intermediary office, and would also store all their family fortunes here."

"It is also one of the largest and most famous trading banks in the world."

"But with your family's business, it seems that few go through this bank, so why the sudden curiosity about this?"

Muke smiles and snorts: "I'm going to develop the overseas trade market recently."

"Quite all right." The other side smiled cheerfully, "I'll be waiting for your good news then."

Muke hangs up the phone and turns to the group of people waiting next to him: "It's almost certain that Georgia is the one who founded this bank."

Tang Erda looked a little strange as he glanced at Bai Liu, who was in deep thought next to him.

..... It turns out that this bank was established by Georgia.

The world line where Georgia became part of Bai six's team also had a bank that worked with Bai six to smuggle, also using gold as a general equivalent as collateral, and Muke used this line to move the smuggled heretics - Bai six collected the heretics, Muke sourced the merchants, Muke provided the protection. Georgia set up the bank to provide the medium of exchange and Daniel provided the protection of the arms along the way - it was a one-stop shop!

No wonder it's growing so fast!

"Is the head of such a bank ....." Bai Liu rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "very rich?"

"Yes." Muke nodded, "If Georgia really is the founder of this bank, then I can totally understand him coming up with that much money."

"And if I have his soul, won't I ..... " Bai Liu's tone gradually became meaningful.

Spades eyed him sharply, "Your lust for him is spilling out again!"

Bai Liu: "....."

Two days later.

The moment the phone alarm went off, Bai Liu reached out to press it, but was held down and pinned back by Spades, who hadn't opened his eyes yet. He held Bai Liu's hand and took the phone away, his voice a little lazy: "..... No game today, sleep."

Bai Liu struggled to get up from Spades' arms and reached for his phone, but was rolled over by Spades, who buried his head in Bai Liu's shoulder and bit him, causing Bai Liu to hiss.

Spades voice is muffled: "..... It's cold, don't get up, sleep some more."

Bai Liu's chest tightens as he nudges Spades, who doesn't move, and he realises that if he doesn't lounge in bed with the lizard, the lizard won't let himself get up easily.

"If you want to stay in bed, say it properly." Bai Liu eventually gave up the motion and looked at the ceiling, his tone calm, "Who taught you that you can say you're cold and stay in bed?"

Spades, a lizard whose body temperature is on the cold side, has sometimes rolled onto the floor and slept through the night before, he is more used to the cold.

This is usually what this lizard uses to trick Bai Liu into staying in bed after seeing some of the people around him and learning it.

Spades pauses: "..... Lu Yizhan says you don't have to get up early if it's cold."

Bai Liu understands.

It is indeed Lu Yizhan.

This man is so spoiled with the people he has taught and brought up, what a mess he has been teaching.

--Bai Liu, who has also been spoiled to the point of not liking to get up early at all, thinks calmly.

Bai Liu's job is in the gaming industry with relatively relaxed working hours from 8:30 to 9:00, but Bai Liu's rented house is remote, so he has to spend an hour and a half on commuting by underground or bus every day, and Bai Liu is a person who does not like to be late and buy breakfast outside. Bai Liu is also a person who doesn't like to be late and doesn't like to buy breakfast outside (mainly because he is poor and eating out is expensive), so he usually has to get up at 6 or 7am, make breakfast, catch the underground and arrive at 8:30am.

In summer, it's fine, but in winter, the moment you leave the blanket and all the heat is gone, even a person like Bai Liu, who would risk his life for money, would ask himself at that moment...

--Do I really want to get up now for a few hundred dollars for full attendance?

Winter always comes extra early and cold in Mirror City.

Sometimes Bai Liu will take a shared electric bicycle in the morning instead of taking the underground to print out some documents or files.

The tiny bits of snow falling on Bai Liu's face, his scarf and black coat, the slightest puff of white air, the snow hanging from his eyelashes, with his face, is actually quite a beautiful scene, to the extent of attracting some college girl to ask for his contact information in a print shop.

But usually by that time, Bai Liu has lost all desire to go back to the office tomorrow without any desire to buy a pair of discounted cotton hats and socks.

The supervisor who has a lot of things to do will most likely not pay him anything for his work injury.

During his first year at work, before Fang Dian's accident, Bai Liu had a less cold time.

When winter came and the temperature dropped, Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan would send clothes and electric blankets, telling him to sleep with the air conditioner on at night, and to buy a small electric hot water bag for his office (which was later investigated and punished by his superiors for violating the rules on electrical appliances).

Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan both had the keys to his rented house, and in Bai Liu's words - the company had bought him personal accident insurance, and you, as beneficiaries, would be the first to come and collect my body if I died in the rented house.

The tone of voice was as if he had frozen to death in his rented house.

Fang Dian laughed at his bad luck, Lu Yizhan often opened the stove at Bai Liu's side, usually when Bai Liu came back at eight or nine o'clock after work, and when he opened the door there was a hot meal and a warm room, with the sound of people and talk, Fang Dian sat behind the table and watched him. shoulder and yell at his stupid boss for checking out his electrical violations.

Because no one else was investigated, but Bai Liu's was.

But after Fang Dian's accident, this not-so-cold winter came to an abrupt end when Bai Liu would not allow Lu Yizhan to come over.

After Bai Liu was getting used to the cold winter alone, Spades began to appear every night, taking over his bed and sleeping with him in his arms.

Sometimes Bai Liu would have to use adult methods to exhaust Spades and then push him to the side of the bed to sleep by himself.

But usually Bai Liu's own energy has been completely depleted by Spades the day before, and Spades is still full of energy, so he still wakes up the next day frozen to Spades holding him.

So even though Bai Liu doesn't work anymore, he still wakes up every day after 6am.

"It's not the alarm clock." Bai Liu tapped Spades on the shoulder and motioned for him to move aside, "It's Lu Yizhan, let me take it."

Spades paused and dawdled away as Bai Liu propped himself up to get the phone - by this time it was the third time Lu Yizhan had called, and if it wasn't an emergency Lu Yizhan wouldn't have called so early to wake him up.

Bai Liu was wearing loose pajamas, and as he passed over Spades the neckline wavered a little, and the marks left inside were clearly visible. "

Meanwhile, the call came for the fourth time and Bai Liu picked it up: "What can I do for you?"

"Are you just up?" Lu Yizhan spoke apologetically, but soon became anxious again, "Have you seen the news on TV?!"

Bai Liu gave a warning glance at Spades, whose hand was still reaching into his shirt, while replying to Lu Yizhan, "No, why?"

"Eh, it's the Gloren thing, didn't you help them sort out the deal, then they floated up from under the surface and came back to the surface." Lu Yizhan explained headily, "The good thing is that no one saw this incident apart from a few people from the Bureau of Heresy Handling, the previous Gloren had been a very secretive and low key country because it had been hidden by the Bai six, everyone knew about the existence of the country but few knew the geographical location of the country."

"But after getting back above the sea yesterday, because the deal was suspended, Gloren could no longer hide it and just face it."

Bai Liu was dressing with one hand while holding up his phone, his tone calm, "Well, and then?"

"Then now all the international news media are reporting on this country that has suddenly appeared and there are already quite a few people linking it to the country that supplied the gold before." Lu Yizhan sighs, "They realise that Gloren is rich in minerals and because of that, a lot of countries are trying to establish diplomatic relations with Gloren."

"There is no gold in Gloren now, but there are still plenty of rare minerals, and Georgia behind them, still a worthy befriender."

"And Georgia's soul is in my hands." Bai Liu had an epiphany, "He's come to the country I'm in?"

"Yes." Lu Yizhan had a headache, "Although it's a private visit, Georgia is a prince and the head of the three bureaus, and I heard he's also the founder of some bank, I can't stop either one of them, and he asked you by name to receive him, he should be arriving this afternoon."

"Even if he's a prince, he doesn't have the right to ask me, a laid-off employee, to entertain him, does he?" Bai Liu was justified, "I'm just a laid-off employee."

"Right." Lu Yizhan spoke in a sultry tone, "But who made you say you were someone's best friend?"

" Georgia said he had travelled a long way to meet his soulmate, so it was a private outing, which only some insiders know about at the moment."

"It's normal to be hosted when you're all soul-best friends, don't you think so, Bai Liu ?"

Bai Liu: "....."

..... since Georgia has said so, will he bring gold over to him .....

Spades sat up in bed as he locked eyes with Bai Liu, the sleepy lizard's eyes instantly went cold: "Your eyes ....."

"There is desire."

Bai Liu calmly hung up the phone, "Because I just got touched by you and kind of want to do it."

Spades had been doing a bit of work in the morning and he seemed to realise what was going on, following Bai Liu around very coolly all morning, as if he was going to play in a league match.

"What's going on??" Mu Sicheng looked incomprehensibly at Spades who was standing at the door with a murderous look on his face like he was ready to assassinate someone, his head was filled with questions, " Spades, what's the point of guarding the door?"

Liu Jiayi stares at Spades with amusement for a moment: "We're in for a treat."

Tang Erda and Muke are discussing matters with Bai Liu in the study.

" Georgia came looking for me." Tang Erda says helplessly, "I knew it was only natural, but I really didn't expect it to happen so quickly."

"Do you have a strategy for dealing with it?"

Bai Liu was calm: "There's nothing to deal with."

"He's not going to do anything."

"Also." Muke pondered seriously, "The soul is already in Bai Liu's hands, the initiative is on our side, the other side should not dare to do anything rash."

"Of course the other side if they really want to do anything against Bai Liu." Muke smiles gently and jokingly, "- otherwise we could still tear up the ticket."

Tang Erda: "....."

He always had the impression that Muke was not joking.

"It won't come to that." Bai Liu lifted his glass and took a sip of water and said slowly, " Captain Georgia is a good man, he wouldn't do something that crossed the line."

Tang Erda looked at Muke and Bai Liu, the two riddlers, and sighed, "Count me in for overthinking, it's best if nothing happens."

"But Bai Liu, Spades, what do you do with him, he's so hostile to Georgia and doesn't act as disciplined as the norm, if he does anything and is taken as an assassin of the Crown Prince, the guy will be wanted."

Bai Liu's hand stopped as he picked up his glass, and he spoke with some rare bitterness, "..... I don't actually quite understand why he's hostile to Georgia."

"I don't really like Georgia, or to be more accurate, I only like him as a person."

"But Spades might not feel the same way?" Tang Erda inexplicably felt like he was choking on a mouthful of dog food as he painstakingly offered advice based on his barren relationship experience, "You talk to him?"

"But I don't know how to talk to him either." Bai Liu stroked his chin with a learning expression, "Is that what you call, not giving each other enough security in a relationship?"

Tang Erda struggled to answer, "Maybe?"

"But usually there's a trigger for this kind of situation." Muke, who also has no experience in relationships, calmly analyses, "Did you do something to make Spades uncomfortable?"

Bai Liu was deep in thought, "Let's see ....."

A terrible scene formed in the house!

--Two people with no relationship experience are teaching relationship tips to the only person in the room who has relationship experience.

And the man actually listened!

3pm.

Spades and the others sat in the house while Bai Liu went to the airport to pick up his people.

The expressions on everyone's faces were stony, especially Spades, expressionless and murderous, sitting upright on the sofa, wearing the formal clothes Bai Liu had changed him into before he went out, looking quite in keeping with the name of his guild - Killer.

Even Muke, as calm as he is, was a bit fidgety by the end.

In the game, the feeling is there, but in reality, the oppression of Georgia status is several times more oppressive.

The Crown Prince, a real Crown Prince, even one who had seen as much as Muke, was meeting the Crown Prince for the first time in person, and he had no idea how Bai Liu managed to keep his composure.

Bai Liu went downstairs for a bowl of beef noodles before leaving, called Lu Yizhan to ask if Georgia would reimburse him for the taxi ride to the airport, and then took the taxi after he was sure it would be reimbursed.

Mu Sicheng slumped on the sofa absentmindedly swiping his phone, which he threw away in annoyance after a while.

On my phone, no matter what app, it's full of news of Gloren's current life.

This ancient and uncontested golden kingdom has finally emerged, and their prince has of course rightly become the biggest focus of attention - young, handsome, from a distinguished and noble family, understated and mysterious, all the media are frantically seeking pictures of the prince, and everyone is talking about the pair who have not emerged until now.

And no one knew that the prince was about to appear in Bai Liu's rented house.

Mu Sicheng annoyingly turned the phone over, face down - what a prince, a prince, just one of his losers!

And even with that thought, that weird feeling of irritability lingered - the guy he had fought to a standstill, that high and mighty guy, was really a prince?

This is outrageous!

Can such a man be a prince!

"Ding dong-!"

The door slammed and Bai Liu's voice came from the door, "Come in and change your shoe covers, the floor has just been mopped."

There was a long interval before Armand's voice came through gritted teeth, "..... knows."

" Armand, don't be rude." Georgia's cold rebuke came, then there was a moment of silence before Georgia's softly inviting voice came in,

"Excuse me Mr Bai Liu, shoe covers, what are they?"

The group waiting inside the door to greet them: "....."

I don't know why, but the tension has suddenly disappeared.

The door was opened from the outside and Lu Yizhan's helpless face appeared: "Don't bully the prince of another country, Bai Liu, the other party is a guest at the house, behave like a host, will you?"

Bai Liu averted his eyes without moving, "..... It's not like I invited them to be my guests."

The implication was that since the other party was not a guest I had invited, it was fine for me not to do my best to behave like a proprietor.

Lu Yizhan: "....."

Bai Liu, you could be a bit more childish.

Lu Yizhan, fearing that Bai Liu would cause trouble, sacrificed his only day off for the week to accompany Bai Liu to the airport.

But why ..... why this is the day!

Lu Yizhan wept in his heart - today was the day he and Fang Dian had agreed to go and pick out their wedding gear, a day he had been looking forward to for a long time, and then Georgia suddenly arrived and it all went to pot.

Fang Dian was very understanding and went off to help with kindergarten duty with a big smile, but Lu Yizhan had a heart attack and was still having trouble getting over it.

I don't even want to host some prince or save the world, I just want to get married!!!

Let me get married!!!

Lu Yizhan is in tears.

The venue for Georgia's reception was initially set to be the Heresy Bureau, but after Georgia pointed out that he was visiting on a personal basis and just wanted to see the local area, something had to be avoided - it had to be a visit to a friend's house.

One might even say that Georgia came for Bai Liu.

Lu Yizhan can actually understand Bai Liu's displeasure. Bai Liu is a very territorial person, and people who are not well connected are very resistant to being visited, or visited without being greeted, but who told this guy to cheat people out of their souls? Lu Yizhan can also understand Georgia coming straight at Bai Liu. He carries too much on his back, and after having his soul taken away, he can't just quit the Heretic's Council like Tang Erda did, or give up his guild like Hearts did.

Nor can they entrust their responsibilities to Bai Liu as they have done.

Georgia is, after all, a crown prince.

Lu Yizhan sighed as he thought of the Georgia who had knelt in front of him ten years ago, tilting her head and begging for her memory not to be erased, and looked at the back of Bai Liu as he walked through the door.

..... Georgia is not a bad person, let's hope both sides can talk it out.

Lu Yizhan followed Bai Liu through the door and he turned, reaching out kindly to gesture for the two men behind him to come in, "No need to be formal, please come in."

"I beg your pardon." Georgia looked down slightly, dressed in an obviously well-chosen outfit with embroidered patterns on the cuffs and waistband that didn't clash too much with his own style, and the gold hairpiece on his head had been replaced with a light tassel-textured knot, showing that he had made an effort to understand the culture of the place, looking noble and polite.

"Where are the shoe covers, please?"

Georgia asked, and Armand followed, looking a little tighter than Georgia, dressed in a suit a little less youthful than Georgia's, his arms and legs gathered like some kind of chivalrous martial arts trousers, his hairpiece a small dangling jade fan on his head, his eyes repulsed, his lips pursed.

"Excuse me."

"No shoe covers." Lu Yizhan wept and laughed at Georgia's serious look down at her shoe covers, "There are slippers for you."

Bai Liu's eyes glanced over his shoulder and noticed that Armand and Georgia, the two customers, had neatly arranged their shoes after changing them, and Georgia had even helped him to arrange the others' shoes as well.

That's a very polite attitude, to say the least.

Isn't ..... a bit much?

Noticing Lu Yizhan's condemning gaze, Bai Liu finally straightened up and showed some proprietorship, coughing lightly, "What would you like to eat tonight?"

Georgia and Armand sat down on the sofa in an orderly fashion, Georgia looked up at Bai Liu with her hands on her knees and said in a serious and solemn voice.

"No need to break the bank."

"I've looked up the common foods here and learnt some recipes, so if you don't mind, please let me cook."

The whole room was silent, everyone was frozen.

Even Lu Yizhan's expression turned into, "..... = mouth = ."

How can you put up with such humiliation, Georgia!

Lu Yizhan explains, somewhat awkwardly, " Georgia, we don't normally let guests cook on our side."

Noticing the stares of the others, Georgia coughed very slightly and seemed to be embarrassed to tighten his grip, but explained coldly.

"..... At Gloren, when we go out to a friend's house, it never makes sense to have a friend cook, it's the guest who cooks."

" Gloren is a closed place and few people can get out and as a result, Gloren people rarely make friends outside and those that do are very happy to have friends who can get good food from them, bright gold, anything good in the world, Gloren people are willing to share it with their friends. "

Georgia looks up at Bai Liu.

"-including the soul."

"I have come here with no hostile intent, just to meet you and negotiate some matters."

"I have not been informed before I came, so I ask for your indulgence."

Bai Liu leaned against the door with his arms around his chest, he looked down at Georgia calmly for a moment and then spoke, "What kind of cooking do you do?"

Georgia's manner became slightly constrained as he straightened his back, coughed lightly, and reported as softly as if he were talking about some list of dangerous red heretics, "..... ma po tofu, boiled pork slices, steamed sea bass, and some vegetarian dishes."

"..... are all learned from reading recipes in the past two days, not too much."

Armand adds stiffly, "I can make scrambled eggs with tomatoes."

Mu Sicheng snorted a laugh and Armand's hateful gaze followed as he said, irritated and vicious, "-and fried rice with eggs!"

Bai Liu gives Mu Sicheng a faint glance and warns him to behave himself, but Mu Sicheng turns his head away and covers his mouth to stifle his laughter.

Help!!! How can someone announce fried rice as a dish!

When Bai Liu heard the name and didn't say anything, Georgia lowered her voice and asked softly, "Don't you have anything you like?"

"I don't hate it either." Bai Liu finally showed a little smile, "Thank you for coming as a guest, it's also my first time hosting a friend and I'm not in order, I hope you don't take offence."

Sensing Bai Liu's softening attitude, Georgia's face lightened and his light brown eyes inexplicably softened: "This is my first time visiting a friend's house, so I hope you won't take offence."

Bai Liu spreads his hands, "We don't make our guests work all afternoon to cook a big meal here, our hosts usually cook."

He smiled, "Ever had a hot pot?"

"Fondue?" Georgia asked suspiciously in return, "It seems to be a difficult dish, I'm told you have to boil the base two or three days in advance."

"No need to go to all that trouble, it's all ready-made hotpot base products now." Bai Liu shrugs, "But even so, I'm not good at making it, I usually go out to eat."

"But it's not very convenient to go out for hotpot because of who you are, so let's do it at home."

Armand's suspicious and wary gaze went to Bai Liu and he narrowed his eyes, "You know such complicated dishes?"

-- Bai Liu This guy doesn't look like he knows how to cook, and the food in their country is so hard to cook, is this guy's hotpot really edible?

He's been learning how to scramble tomatoes and eggs for two days!

Bai Liu smiles: "I didn't do it."

Noticing Bai Liu's sweeping gaze, Lu Yizhan: "....."

Playoffs

Lu Yizhan stood up helplessly on his knees and took up the task with a smile, "I know, I'll go out to buy food, what do you want to eat?"

"I'll have the yellow throat!" Mu Sicheng was the first to actively raise his hand, "And tripe!"

"I don't know if there's anything fresh left at this hour." Lu Yizhan takes out a note and looks up at Georgia and Armand, "You two are the guests, so you order first, anything you don't like or want to eat?"

Georgia shook her head, "There's nothing I don't eat."

"What's a yellow throat .....?" Armand frowned, "What's tripe again?"

Mu Sicheng clutches his chest in contempt, "You don't know what you're talking about, this is what you have to order at a hot pot!"

"And what are those things?" Armand questioned, "You don't look like you know exactly what these are either."

Mu Sicheng's expression of contempt froze on his face.

He didn't really know what they were, he just knew they were tasty.

"The yellow throat is the aortic vessels of the cow, cut from the heart and then turned over and washed over and over again, turned over and torn off the membrane of the vessels inside, reshaped into sections, blanched for a few dozen seconds and ready to eat, it's crunchy and has a vascular crunch to it." Muke explains with a friendly smile and a gentle tone, "Tripe is the stomach of a cow, turned over and washed three times, there are lots of tentacles layered inside, all of which are used by the cow for digestion."

"And yes, we eat brains, they're delicious."

Armand: "!!!"

What horrible parts are these! What a horrible thing for people to eat here! Is it heresy!

Armand's face instantly went white with shock as he pointed at Mu Sicheng and stated in horror, "I don't eat anything he eats!"

Mu Sicheng: "....."

There is an inexplicable feeling of being offended.

When Lu Yizhan left, Bai Liu turned his head sideways to Georgia: "Go to the study, we'll talk about your soul."

Georgia let out a long breath as he stood up and sincerely thanked him, "Thank you."

When Bai Liu and Georgia went to the study, Spades, who had been in a murderous mood before, was calm after seeing Georgia and didn't intervene or stop them from the beginning to the end. Are you afraid Bai Liu and Georgia will run away?"

Spades looked up at Mu Sicheng for a moment, his tone flat: "It won't run."

Mu Sicheng was full of interest: "Why? You were so alert before."

"Before Bai Liu talked about him, there was desire." Spades lowered his eyes and answered seriously, "But after meeting, there was no desire."

Mu Sicheng was filled with questions, "What does ..... mean?"

Liu Jiayi, who had been watching the drama in silence, couldn't help himself = =.

The previous talk about Georgia Bai Liu having desires was not about Georgia as a person, it was about his money, and seeing Georgia face to face, not seeing money, Bai Liu certainly did not have desires.

Spades' perception of Bai Liu is amazing, and although he doesn't understand it at all, he can feel it, and Bai Liu's personal feelings are invisible in front of Spades.

Liu Jiayi silently sipped his drink from his cup and sighed - if Bai Liu ever had second thoughts, he would probably be discovered by Spades as soon as he stepped through the door.

Tang Erda looks into the study and the breath she had just let go of is lifted again.

..... wonders how Bai Liu will negotiate with Georgia.

Inside the study.

Bai Liu sits on the sofa in front of the bookcase, and Georgia sits in the chair, a little repulsed at first by the slightly dark atmosphere of the study, and the layout - it reminds him of the dream.

But the moment Bai Liu turned to his side and switched on the floor lamp, the warm orange light flooding the room, Georgia was stunned.

On the sofa in this room are two coats, one of Spades' and one of Tang Erda's. On the floor are a few books that have been opened and not cleaned up, with Muke's handwriting on them, a fruit tray on the desk with fruit candies, mandarin oranges and melons, a half-peeled orange next to it, and a small pile of melon shells, which it is obvious that Liu The pile of melon shells, which can be seen at first glance, is the work of Liu Jiayi and Mu Sicheng.

A lively and messy atmosphere of life comes over you.

"Sorry, I haven't had a chance to clean up the study." Bai Liu gestured for Georgia to sit down, "Is that okay?"

Georgia relaxed completely and he smiled very softly, following Bai Liu's gesture to sit down, his tone even a little wistful, "It's fine."

"..... When I was younger and took Armand to do things in the Third Council, there wasn't much time and the house was cluttered like this."

"It is true that I was wrong to have cheated you out of your soul notes on the pretext of being a soul best friend." Bai Liu admitted his fault with a good attitude as soon as he sat down, "..... if you ....."

"Did you lie to me?" Georgia laughed in a rare flirtatious way, his eyebrows softened in the warm yellow light, the seriousness of the stereotype was diluted in this atmosphere, "Aren't you the best friend of my soul?"

Bai Liu paused, and he smiled back, "Indeed."

"You have memories of that time when I traded souls with you?"

"Hmm." Georgia lowered his long eyelashes as he recalled, his tone dazed, "Though it did start out angry and even alarmed, I was terrified that you would use my soul to hurt someone I cared about once you had it."

"But you've actually been protecting them, even better than I have."

Georgia looks up at Bai Liu: "- either Gloren, Armand, or Mr Lu Yizhan."

" It is true that Gloren cannot have a crown prince whose soul is controlled by others." Georgia's tone was calm, "But I have often wondered, am I really fit to be the monarch of this kingdom?"

"The path they chose, the naive aspirations and the courage to face the world now full of apprehension, I have worn out in the intervening decade."

"..... went back to Gloren before and people welcomed me with joy, hugged me and cried bitterly praising me for doing the right thing in the first place, that they shouldn't close themselves off and huddle up and live a life of indifference, but go out and face the world and take on everything that was thrown at them. "

"I should have been relieved by that."

Georgia was quiet for a long time before she continued in a soft voice: "But I only felt fear."

"The more heretics I experienced and the more tragedies I saw during these ten years, the more I became afraid, and I slowly became what the Gloren nation was when I wanted to protect them completely from the dangers in the world."

"Even Armand, who stands next to me and fights with me, makes me uneasy."

"I know it's not right." Georgia dropped her eyes to her empty palms, "But what kind of right can last a thousand years?"

"There is no right that lasts a thousand years." Bai Liu spoke plaintively in reply, "And why chase after a right that lasts a thousand years?"

"One can only survive for a hundred years, and to be able to trace ten years of being right is a very great thing."

Georgia was stunned.

"There is only one thing that I know of that has survived for a thousand years -" Bai Liu said calmly, raising his eyes, "- and that is the evil god. "

"But as far as his existence is concerned, it's a mistake for everyone now."

"It's just surviving for a thousand years, in pursuit of some kind of right being, and then to put it another way, maybe the pursuit of some kind of survival for a thousand years in pursuit of some kind of right being might all end up going to the same extreme as the evil gods."

"- it's like if you go after protecting your nationals for a thousand years from all harm, that protection will end up being a harm."

"It's like the Gloren of old."

Georgia lapsed into silence.

There was the noisy sound of Lu Yizhan returning from his sale outside the door, and Bai Liu turned off the light and got up to go out: "From my personal point of view, I think you're still fit to be king."

"..... why ....." Georgia asked in a very soft voice in the darkness.

Bai Liu replied calmly, "Because you're a good person with a brain."

"Your decisions are not always absolutely right, but you certainly try to avoid mistakes that hurt people, and that's enough."

Lu Yizhan knocked on the door, "Are you ready to talk? I'm ready to cook!"

"All right." Bai Liu pushed open the door and swept Lu Yizhan, who was poking his head around, "Negotiated."

Lu Yizhan looked at Georgia's normal face as she walked out behind Bai Liu and breathed a sigh of relief: "It's good that the negotiation is done."

Georgia takes off her coat, hangs it on a hanger and takes the dishes from Lu Yizhan's hand in a very natural gesture: "I'll help with the cooking."

Lu Yizhan was startled and subconsciously tried to snatch it up: "No need Georgia!"

Georgia looked pale, but held it in her hand, seemingly without force, but the bag of vegetables deflected silently his way: "Since I am here as a guest, there is no reason for the host to do it entirely by himself."

"..... It is rare for you to be our guests here." Lu Yizhan face with a smile, under the hand secretly make, not moving to pull the food bag this way, "always is I cook, also no guests play hands, you guys have a good rest, wait to taste my hand can be."

The bag of vegetables was moved back.

Georgia's tone was condensed: " Mr. Lu, I've studied the food here carefully, and Armand can testify that I'm very good at it too, so why don't you take a day off and try my work?"

Lu Yizhan smiles and snorts, "Really? I don't believe it."

" Bai Liu also complimented me on the home-cooked taste of my food, and there's no reason to make a guest cook when they've come from afar."

The bags went back and forth, and Georgia and Lu Yizhan politely fought a dozen rounds, with the bags going back and forth like tug-of-war ropes between them, but not in anyone's hands.

"Is this what the top tactician pulled before?" Muke seemed to understand, his gaze staring solemnly, "Pulling for so long without hurting a dish."

Mu Sicheng's eyes widened as he watched, his mouth open wide: "..... What is this?"

Liu Jiayi examines it half-heartedly and comments seriously, "..... cultural exchange it might be."

Playoffs

Eventually both parties reconciled (on the surface) and went into the kitchen to cook together, and as they walked past Bai Liu with their bags of vegetables, Georgia's faint voice came through: "If I ever decide I want to be king of Gloren."

"I will seek you out to redeem my soul."

"Until then, I'll leave it to you to take care of it for me."

Bai Liu spreads his hands: "Then you can get the money you need to trade the soul of King Gloren. "

Georgia's eyes smiled: "Naturally."

Spades, who had been calm, suddenly turned his head towards Bai Liu, his gaze fixed on Georgia, the knife he was peeling an apple with clenched in his hand, and Tang Erda, who sensed that something was wrong with him, was quick to hold Spades down, while Mu Sicheng, who was next to him, was frightened by Spades' sudden outburst of aggression: "What are you doing? "What are you doing?"

"The way Bai Liu just looked at Georgia ....." Spades said gruffly, "had desire."

Mu Sicheng: "There is, there is desire?!"

Liu Jiayi: "....."

Gee, it's really because of the money!

Bai Liu, who was unaware of all this, walked over and sat down next to Spades, and naturally took a bite from Spades' pitted apple, noticing the subtle looks he received from the group, Bai Liu raised an eyebrow: "This apple, am I not allowed to eat it?"

"..... You can't do something like that!" Mu Sicheng came over to Bai Liu, glancing at Armand, who had been sitting on the sofa without saying anything, while whispering to Bai Liu, "You've got Spades, how long has it been since you've fallen in love with Georgia!"

" What's so great about Georgia! Ah! Just good looking, rich, a good cook, and a prince of some sort!"

Mu Sicheng himself was saying that Georgia seemed nice enough, and couldn't help but make a hard turn: "But look at his brother, he's a pain in the ass! Spades doesn't have such a nasty brother!"

Armand, who had been warned a million times by Georgia not to act on impulse before leaving the house, took a deep breath and clenched his fists.

..... cannot cause trouble for its older brother.

"Look at his brother, he doesn't know how to do anything, and he speaks badly ..... " Mu Sicheng doggedly pushed his ear, "I feel like he doesn't have good ears either, he doesn't even hear me when I scold him like that. "

Armand's forehead is bruised.

"And my defeat!" No sooner had Mu Sicheng's smug remark been uttered than Armand sprang to his feet, and in an unbearable rage he pleaded, "Who is your loser!"

"Eh ah still not convinced!" Mu Sicheng also stood up, rolling up his sleeves and pointing at his opponent's nose to scold him, "Didn't you? I cleared you out of the game!"

Armand retorted angrily, "Nonsense! I'm the one who cleared you out of the game!"

"I'm the one who cleared you out of the game!"

"It's me!"

When Bai Liu takes a bite of the apple and says [Mu Sicheng], Georgia comes out of the kitchen with her cuffs on and looks at Armand with a warning [Armand], and the two angry men freeze like a child with its collar pinched.

Mu Sicheng grunted coldly and sat back with his chest clasped.

Armand turned his head in anger, his fists clenched to death.

The two of them remained in a cold stalemate for a while, when Mu Sicheng suddenly spoke out of the blue: "I was the one who asked you to leave."

"It's me-" Armand turned his head quickly, fuming with rage.

"Well -" Muke rounded off with a smile and he grinned, "since no one can convince anyone, why don't we have another match?"

Mu Sicheng was quick to accept: "Than what!"

Armand looked at Muke with some caution - he had a feeling that there was something unpleasant about this smiling fellow, and he was about to refuse when he heard Mu Sicheng say provocatively, "Or what a prince, you wouldn't dare to compete with me, would you?"

Armand felt the string in his head snap.

"Whatever the comparison is." Armand looked over calmly, "I'm up for it."

"Whoever loses." Mu Sicheng raised an eyebrow and added nastily, "Just draw a kingpin on the face of whoever does!"

"Playing so big." The smile on Muke's face grew milder, "A bit of friendly, normal play, then."

"Playing with the hands? The rules are simple - one hand on top and one on the bottom on both sides, and the person below reaches out and hits the hand above, rotating after the hit, purely on reaction."

Mu Sicheng simply responded, "Play!"

Armand sensed that something was wrong, but if he gritted his teeth, he answered, "Let's do it!"

Half an hour later.

Lu Yizhan was surprised by Mu Sicheng and Armand when he came out with the pot in his cotton gloves: "What are you two doing?"

Mu Sicheng and Armand turned away from each other with hostile faces, and neither spoke up.

Georgia looked at Armand with his little turtle face and took a deep breath, " Armand, do you have the manners of a prince?"

"Let them play." Bai Liu was fine with it, he was looking down and clipping Spades' nails when he looked up and smiled, "You don't have to worry about etiquette when you're playing with friends."

Armand and Mu Sicheng are both a meal.

Mu Sicheng muttered irritably, "Who's friends with him ....."

"I'm not going to be friends with him." Armand turned his head coldly, "Just a loser."

--This is a real learning curve.

Mu Sicheng instantly exploded, "Who's the loser! You only won once more than me, come again if you dare!"

"Again, then again." Armand shot back indifferently, "It's just the difference between winning you once and winning you twice."

"I ....." Mu Sicheng rage.

"All right." Lu Yizhan helplessly interrupted the two men's endless argument and said with a smile, "Sit down and eat."

But by the time they sat down to eat, the two, who had just been bouncing around, fell into an eerie silence, holding their chopsticks, the backs of their hands so red and swollen they were blistered, like two giant steamed buns, and it took all their strength to shakily squeeze their chopsticks as others used them to pick up the food, let alone reach into the hot pot to fish it out.

The table was full of aromatic dishes, eaten steaming hot, but the buzz was all for others, not them.

Mu Sicheng: "....."

Armand: "....."

..... misses the mark.

"Ding dong-!"

Lu Yizhan stood up to answer the door and explained with a smile, "It's my lover, I asked her to come straight here for dinner after work, do you all mind?"

Of course no one would mind, Lu Yizhan had spoken to Georgia before and Fang Dian was already an old acquaintance to those on Bai Liu's side.

"Shit, shit, it's cold outside!" Fang Dian jumped into Lu Yizhan's arms as soon as she entered the door and put her hand on Lu Yizhan's chest to keep him warm, making Lu Yizhan shiver, but she laughed out loud, "Look at you!"

"Stop it." Lu Yizhan helplessly covers her hand tightly in her palm, intending to say something about Georgia, only to frown at the touch of her hand and say, "Your hand is so cold, and you rode here again?"

"Didn't I tell you to get a taxi on such a cold day?"

"How expensive is a taxi, how cool is a bike ride!" Fang Dian smiled and gave Lu Yizhan a hug, she felt the hot smoky air on Lu Yizhan's body and squinted comfortably, "..... It's not worth spending money on a taxi, why not have more delicious food tonight! "

Lu Yizhan paused and opened his mouth to say something when Fang Dian looked over his shoulder curiously, "Didn't you say there were foreigners here today? Where is it?"

--She was clearly a distinguished guest, and when she said it, it sounded like she was visiting a tiger in a zoo.

Lu Yizhan nodded at her with a tearful smile and turned to introduce her, "This is Georgia, and this is Armand, a new friend of Bai Liu's who has come to stay with us."

Georgia and Armand stood up and nodded politely, "Hello."

"Hello, hello! Bai Liu's friends are my friends!" Fang Dian shook Georgia's hand warmly, "You're very welcome to come and stay with us! Eat and drink well!"

Fang Dian even pulled Bai Liu, who was eating, from the table and scolded him with a smile, "You're not eating anything! Your friend is standing and talking to me! Your friend is standing and talking to me! "

Bai Liu: "....."

Georgia: "....."

Armand: "....."

Georgia looks at Fang Dian with an inexpressible respect, Armand looks at Fang Dian with a certain horror.

How dare this woman hit Bai Liu, the great demon, on the head!

When Fang Dian saw that Bai Liu did not open his mouth, she raised her crossed arms and hammered him on the head again: "Say something! You're eating like an idiot!"

Armand shrank back a little in fear.

She actually hit it again!

"My friend." Bai Liu reached out to introduce himself, his eyes dark, his tone inexplicably distressed, " Georgia, Armand ."

Fang Dian nodded in satisfaction, "That's a good boy with good manners."

Bai Liu: "....."

Georgia and Armand began to look at Fang Dian with the same reverence as the top of the food chain in the house.

Fang Dian was a little confused by the look and reached out, "Why are you looking at me?

"Okay." Georgia and Armand sat down quickly, then looked straight at Fang Dian as if waiting for their next command.

Fang Dian continues to be confused: "? Clip the food."

"Okay." Georgia and Armand ate their food quickly, with a swift movement, Armand holding back his shaking hands for fear that if he disobeyed the most fearsome human in the family, he would receive a beating.

"Eat your food, eat your food!" Fang Dian greeted him happily, holding Bai Liu's shoulder with one hand, her face full of excitement, "Not bad, you've made friends with foreigners, and you're so handsome!"

"Insightful! Worth a drink!"

" Mr. Lu!" Fang Dian looked starry-eyed at Lu Yizhan, "I want a drink!"

Lu Yizhan decisively refuses: "No, you're recently sober."

Fang Dian instantly collapsed into a ball on the table, tearfully gestured out, "Honey, give me a sip, I haven't eaten at Bai Liu's for a long time, I'm happy, just one sip!"

Lu Yizhan began to falter as his throat rolled and began to falter.

Fang Dian looked blearily, "Honey, honey~"

Lu Yizhan shakes violently and slowly covers his face in defeat: "..... Just one sip, no more."

Fang Dian raised her hand and cheered, "I love you Mr. Lu!"

Lu Yizhan: "....."

He then knew that once he had achieved his goal, Fang Dian's [husband] would be gone.

Playoffs

"I've got a couple of nice bottles of wine down in the wine cabinet." Muke asked with a timely smile, "How about I bring them up to wake them up and drink them together?"

The red wine was brought up, and as the glasses were exchanged, the group of people who were not very good at drinking soon became drunk. I didn't expect that... ....."

"You two foreigners, you're good drinkers, you're bad, hiccups, you got me drunk!"

Georgia, the bad-hearted foreigner who was poured a lot of wine by Fang Dian but didn't get drunk because he was very drunk, honestly admitted her mistake: "..... was rude."

Armand is actually a little drunk, but he's a good drinker and can barely keep up appearances, and now he's looking on with a bemused expression at Mu Sicheng, who is rolling around in a drunken frenzy.

It was childish of him to get angry with such a person before.

A drunken Mu Sicheng oh so raises his hand and arrogantly yells, "The prince is my defeated champion!!!"

Armand quickly yelled back in anger, "Who's your loser you drunken monkey!"

" Armand's drunk." Georgia sounded apologetic as she held Armand down, "I'll take him away later."

Lu Yizhan, who doesn't drink much, smiles helplessly, "It's fine."

"Before I leave, I'll bring you a present." Georgia placed on the table two bags that he had been keeping handy by the shoe cupboard, he moved and spoke gently as if he didn't think there was anything in what he was taking out, "A few small tokens, I hope you'll like them."

Georgia takes the contents of the bag out.

Bai Liu's eyes glued for a moment, Lu Yizhan almost spat out his soup, and even Muke froze for a moment.

Drunken Fang Dian looks closer, touches it, says in a daze, "What is this, a golden statue ....."

On the table are two gold figures, one of Bai Liu and one of Lu Yizhan, one arm high and overflowing with gold, Bai Liu's being his single figure and Lu Yizhan's being a double figure, dressed in a black suit, with a bride with a blurred face on his arm.

"This is a gift from Bai Liu's friend." Georgia introduced in a calm tone. Georgia introduced in a calm tone, "This is Mr. Lu's welcome gift, as I didn't know what Miss Fang Dian looked like before and thus hadn't had time to carve the face yet, I will leave the craftsman here to carve it to look like Miss Fang Dian."

"No need!" Lu Yizhan waved his hand in horror, "This gift is too valuable for us to accept!"

Bai Liu's eyes narrowed as he pointed to Lu Yizhan's sculpture and asked sharply, "Why is his double, twice as heavy as mine?"

"Don't be so righteous in questioning other people's gifts!" Lu Yizhan angrily slapped Bai Liu on the head, "Give me a good chance to refuse someone else's expensive gift!"

"Please don't refuse." Georgia was sincere, "You and Bai Liu are both people who have helped the Gloren nation and it would be an insult to us if we couldn't even get a thank you gift the size of an ordinary Gloren family."

Lu Yizhan breaks down and covers his face, "!!!"

Is this already the level of thank you gift for your average family!

This is outrageous!!!

"Then accept it." Bai Liu said as he frankly reached over to take the sculpture, "A gift from a friend, and there's no point in refusing it."

You're quick to admit a friend at a time like this!

Lu Yizhan cried and laughed to stop Bai Liu's hand from reaching out, "You really can't ....."

Georgia stares at Lu Yizhan: "Are you really going to humiliate us with your refusal?"

Lu Yizhan: "....."

Georgia, is serious.

Eventually it was wanted.

"So why is Lu Yizhan's gold sculpture a double?" Bai Liu asks sincerely, "I must have given more credit to Gloren than he did, right? It's only logical that I should get twice as much gold as he did."

"Because the one for Mr. Lu is a wedding present." Georgia explains, "So it's for two."

Bai Liu stared at the golden sculpture twice the size of the one on the table, rubbed his chin, and glanced at Spades, who had been eating in silence, and fell into a pensive mood.

"So you get a double-weight gold sculpture for getting married?"

Spades: "?"

Lu Yizhan looked at Bai Liu with that familiar calculating look in his eyes and had an unsettling feeling, "What are you up to, Bai Liu ....."

Bai Liu muttered, "In that case -"

He turned his head to Georgia and said seriously, "I'm getting married too Georgia, give me double the gold sculpture, my boyfriend is 5'9" and it should cost more gold to do it in equal proportions ....."

Lu Yizhan broke down: "Don't get married frivolously over such things!"

After giving away the gold, Georgia took Armand and left.

"So there's still this kind of bonus to be had for getting married." Bai Liu was thoughtful, "Even the gold is double, no wonder everyone wants to get married ....."

Lu Yizhan collapsed face down on the sofa, as exhausted as if he had wrestled a hundred elephants: "..... No one at all but you would get married to eat such a bonus."

No more holidays for him .....

Lu Yizhan was in tears thinking, "Oooh, I want to get married!

Next day.

A hungover Mu Sicheng wakes up with a splitting headache next to the sofa and finds a small gold sculpture of himself the size of a hand, carved in the form of him being punched in the face and furious.

"????" Mu Sicheng held up the small sculpture and stood up angrily, "Which idiot carved up the way I was beaten?"

Bai Liu, who had just woken up and was holding up a cup of hot water, said casually, "Oh, this, Armand asked me to give it to you last night."

"It says it's carved down the way you lost to him, so you can remember your disastrous defeat."

"Who lost badly! He's the one who lost!" Mu Sicheng was so angry that he had to throw the sculpture in the trash, "Who wants the dog he gave us--"

"- it's a solid gold sculpture." Bai Liu, holding the cup of hot water, added the second half of the sentence without delay, "You can give it to me if you don't want it."

Mu Sicheng froze in his attempt to throw it, he slowly let it go for a moment, hesitated for a long time, took a bite from his mouth and then said in confusion, "Shit, it's soft, it's really solid gold!"

"Yes." Bai Liu replied slowly and leisurely, "A prince, after all."

--Bringing a meet-and-greet gift to a friend is not too shabby.

"Pack up and get into the game." Bai Liu raised his eyes, his tone calm, "The draw for the next playoff game comes out today and we have to get ready for the next game."

Game in the Wandering Circus Guild meeting room.

Wang Shun rushed into the conference room, he took a deep breath and propped his hands on the desk, "The results are in."

All eyes look over.

"The Deer Hunter." Wang Shun's face was a meaty tightness, "Our next opponent, the Deer Hunter."

General Directorate of Heresy Handling, lowest level of the basement.

This is a place where heretics who are very dangerous and have not yet found a reasonable way to be housed are held as over custody, and only those in captain-level positions are allowed to take the lift and come here.

After the riots started by Bai Liu, security was further tightened and in order to come here, you had to fill out a series of application forms and even bring a surveillance ring, in addition to asking for a captaincy.

Cen Buming, after putting a surveillance ring on his wrist, swiped open the lift with the captain's ID card and pressed the button for the bottom floor lift.

The lift went all the way down, he was draped in his Heretic Authority uniform jacket, an eye patch over his left eye, one arm around his chest, silent, the hem of his shirt and the top of his boots still with blood that hadn't had time to be washed, and the voice of the team member came over the surveillance ring, " Captain Cen, only stay fifteen minutes."

"Hmm." Cen Buming responded faintly, "Got it."

The lift finally landed on the last floor and slowly opened up, before which was pitch darkness, some heretics are not fit to be held in sight, so it has always been pitch dark here, only on either side of the road in the very middle, there would be faint illumination, and the air was filled with a fishy smell of seawater -

--the same disgusting scent as on Bai six.

Cen Buming moves in, the soles of his boots tapping on the metal floor with a steady, orderly footfall, something unspeakable surges in the darkness on either side, but the moment they get close to Cen Buming, they cower back as if smelling danger from a more dangerous kind.

The smell of seawater in the air creeps away again.

Cen Buming walked calmly through the darkness as if he hadn't noticed all this, and the supervisors listening to the footsteps lamented that if they hadn't known that this was a place for very dangerous heretics who hadn't found the right way to be housed and dealt with, he would have thought that their Captain Cen was not at the bottom of the pile, but walking around the playground.

Of course, tyrant instructors like Captain Cen don't usually do such time-wasting things.

But Captain Cen doesn't usually go to the last level either, and although he has access to it, he hates it so much that he rates the bottom level of the Directorate of Heresy as [a place that shouldn't exist].

"Such unculturable and dangerous heretics should be executed in time." Cen Buming comments indifferently on this final layer of heresy, "Otherwise one day these monsters will cause even more harm."

At this point, Captain Su Yang would argue disapprovingly, "This is not in line with the philosophy of the Heretics Bureau!"

"We exist to house heretics and deal with heretics, not to execute them indiscriminately!"

"You mean this naive idea from the [prophet] who died ten years ago?" Cen Buming sneered, "He's dead, it's time for that philosophy to change."

"Such naive fools who try to save even heretics will not end well."

"You!" Su Yang, a good-tempered man like him, was so angry with Cen Buming that he took a deep breath, " Captain Cen, I know that Team 2 is mainly in the field and there are many times when they are in head-to-head combat with heretics, and there are more or less casualties, so it's normal for you to have a grudge against them."

"I also know you really hate the [prophets] who set up this set of mechanisms."

--Yes, Captain Cen hates everything about [the Prophet] so much that whenever a team member brings it up, even if it's just small talk, he coldly interrupts: "Don't discuss a dead person in front of me."

This is one of the reasons why few people in the current game know that [prophets] exist.

"But you've also recently invoked the Prophet's access." Su Yang questioned to the point, "If Captain Cen hates everything about the Prophet so much, then why did you invoke the access he left behind?"

Cen Buming's lips were pursed into a straight line as he said nothing, his face so dark it could drip water.

Su Yang softened her tone: "We'll talk about the last layer of heresy later."

"I absolutely disagree with indiscriminate destruction, it goes against the very reason the Heresy Bureau was established - we are not looking for hostility towards heretics, but a more reasonable attitude and approach, to take them in, to hold them, to work out their weaknesses, we as Heresy Bureau members, the moment we step into the moment we set foot in this place-"

Su Yang raised her eyes, "The line between us and the heretics is blurred."

"What is done with the heretics is being done with us."

Cen Buming keeps moving in, gradually the light around him brightens, the heretical numbers on the door valves on either side are clearly visible - 0056, 0055 .....

These heretics had been imprisoned at a very early stage, but after all this time they had still not sought a reasonable way of being housed.

When he reached the number 0009, Cen Buming's steps stopped, and he looked up at the cold metal door for a long time.

"I don't care about the other heretics." Cen Buming's tone was cool, "but the destruction of Heretic 0009, should be on the agenda."

"Heresy 0009?" Su Yang frowned, "But that's a top secret file that [The Prophet] has set down as a heresy that must not be moved or destroyed easily, so why did Captain Cen suddenly mention destroying this heresy?"

Cen Buming looked down at Su Yang with his clear yellow right eye, his tone indifferent: "Because it's getting out of hand."

In the darkness of the tunnel, only the faintest halo of light falls on Cen Buming's shoulder patch, glowing coldly as he stands in front of the door, as if to merge with the heretics swarming around him.

A table was placed in the door and there was only one thing on the table and that was a gun.

Cen Buming walks over, pushes the gun away, looks at the heretic 0009 file pressed under the ring, drops his eyes, reaches over and turns it over -

--[Heresy No. 0009]

[Heresy Name: Generation Hunter Cen Buming].

[..... original generation of hunters, in 0317 the world line spirit completely downgraded, there was the first riot, revoked the hunter position, outlawed the prophet authority, transferred to the second detachment leader, handed it over to the third detachment leader, namely the second generation of hunters Tang Erda ... ...]

[..... so far the world line has no intention to hurt anyone, has a tendency to recover, stay on duty under observation .....]

In world line 0317, Cen Buming shoots and kills six people suspected of selling rose perfume in Bai six's [Truth or Dare] game - and the gun in this room is that gun.

Five of them did sell, but one was only involved and had not yet had the time to sell.

Lu Yizhan outlawed Cen Buming as a hunter and held Cen Buming of that world line under regulations until the end of that world.

Cen Buming died in the room where he was being held.

Lu Yizhan thought that by the next world line, Cen Buming could forget everything and start all over again, and that he would never again involve Cen Buming in his game with Bai six, and that Cen Buming could simply exist as the original captain of the second team of the Heretic's Bureau.

Catching the heretics he wants to catch, training the players he wants to train, drawing his gun to protect those he wants to protect in a precarious world, and not going to extremes because he knows too much.

But what Lu Yizhan didn't realise was that Cen Buming had already become a heretic in a cycle of over 300 lines as a hunter.

His memory could not be cleared, his soul jumped between world lines called [Cen Buming] carriers, like a monster that could not stop killing with hatred and could only remember, forever, those who had caused harm - this was the price of being a hunter, this was the pain that had to be delivered after having participated in the game.

-The Evil One smiled and said he would always remember.

He was a [hunter] who had been abandoned by the [prophets].

Cen Buming still remembers the look in Lu Yizhan's eyes when he found out he had memories - shock, disbelief, sadness.

Lu Yizhan then took him in as a heretic for the record, even retaining his position as captain of the second team and simply monitoring him.

" Lu Yizhan ." Cen Buming watched Lu Yizhan clutch his chest as he worked on his file next to him and said calmly, "Since you think I did wrong last world, you don't want to use me as a person."

"You might as well kill me."

"What's wrong is wrong, and you don't have to show me mercy."

Lu Yizhan's pen, which was writing, gave a lurch as he lowered his head and continued writing, his voice flat: "..... You've died once, and you've paid for your sins."

"The last world line is the business of the last world line, this world line is the business of this world line, and if we settle scores across time and space, then everyone will have to pay a different price for what they haven't done."

"What's the difference?" Cen Buming asked back, unmoved, "It's all the same soul, the same me."

"One more time like that and I'd still make the same choice."

"But this world line of yours." Lu Yizhan finally looked up, a clear determination in his eyes, "It's not done yet is it?"

Cen Buming and Lu Yizhan looked at each other for a moment and he slowly averted his eyes, "..... Lu Yizhan, don't you get it ....."

"No matter what world line it is, the people who do the wrong thing don't change."

"I will, one day, do the same thing as that world line."

The pen in Lu Yizhan's hand was still for a long, long time before he dropped a stroke, his voice inaudible: "..... wait until you actually do."

"I will kill you with my own hands."

-- just like Fang Dian, who killed the rebel second team leader.

Cen Buming closed the file of heretic 0009 and he turned to leave the room, before finally leaving, he looked back at the end of the cloister, the heretic numbered [0001].

--The heresy called [Future].

The reason that none of the heresies on this level can be accommodated by ordinary methods, apart from the danger and uncertainty, is that the heresies on this whole level are more or less related to people - some are heresies in human guise, such as 0009, and some are heresies with human carriers, such as [eyetun food].

To destroy this layer of heresy is to destroy the person himself, so Su Yang is not wrong in that statement.

But the only heresy that Cen Buming doesn't know what people are associated with is [the future].

It is said that everyone who has peered into the [future] has gone mad, and the only one who hasn't is Bai Liu.

Cen Buming didn't peek into the [future] because he had already guessed what his [future] would be like, and that Lu Yizhan guy didn't peek into the future either; the man rarely even made prophecies, and was always reluctant to use a skill like [prophet] when he clearly possessed it.

Cen Buming asked Lu Yizhan why he didn't want to.

Lu Yizhan always giggles and scratches his head: "Because I don't want to know."

"I was afraid that [the future] would look different than what I thought it would look like."

" Captain Cen ." The voice of the team member reminded from the surveillance ring, "Time's up, come up."

Cen Buming's eyes paused for a moment and turned, his back towards the darkness, his voice steady, "Hmm."

"Give me a half day off tomorrow, I have something to do, no field trips."

The team replied, "Yes, Captain Cen ."

In-game, Wandering Circus Guild, meeting room.

"The date of the tournament is tomorrow and there are four teams advancing to the semi-finals, apart from us, there are Deer Hunter, Killer Sequence and Gamblers Guild." Wang Shun sighed, "The ones who have the right to draw are the Killer Sequence and the Deer Hunters, and we were drawn by the Deer Hunters."

Mu Sicheng looked a bit spine-chillingly at the system panel Wang Shun had clicked out, "Their team, is there that, what, psychotic, clown?"

"Daniel the Clown, the Deer Hunter's ace main attacker this year." Wang Shun's voice trembled uncontrollably as he said the name, "Skill ..... soul crushing gun."

"CD fifteen minutes a round, after a round of shooting can shoot a green bullet, the bullet hit immediately soul shattered, the death-free gold medal is invalid ..... It is said that also died under this gun players, also can not be resurrected, the whole will be in the game directly dissipated, even log out of the game can not do. "

"This is the most dangerous and discussed skill of the year, and because of it, Joker's popularity has skyrocketed since midseason and is currently at number nine."

"And their team's president and tactician [Buming's Executioner] came in third, behind Reverse God and Spades, the second team to have two teams in the top 10 in popularity this year, excluding the Slayer sequence."

Wang Shun took a deep breath as he reached out and tapped the system panel, his tone and expression strained.

"The Executioner's skill is [Death Ring], and as we've covered before, this [Death Ring] can generate many kinds of torture props, one of the most terrifying of which is a well."

An image popped up of a dark well, in which a myriad of monsters seemed to be swarming, reaching out with sticky blood-stained hands, trying to claw their way upwards and down, the edges of the well's mouth glowing an unnatural silvery blue.

"The name of this well is called the [Well of Sinners], which can trap people whom the executioner identifies as guilty inside, and it is absolutely impossible for players trapped inside to get out on their own, and most of the players who have not been able to get out of this well have died in reality."

Wang Shun took a deep breath, "- even when an exemption exists."

"This skill has a thirty-minute CD, but again, this skill lasts for the same thirty minutes after it is activated."

"I believe you understood this skill description when you heard it." Wang Shun exhaled slowly, "Both the Executioner and the Joker have skills that some have speculated are rules skills."

"- Simply put, it's [God-given skills]."

"The only good news for us is that both the Joker and the Executioner can only target one person at a time with their skills unleashed, the [Well of Sinners] can only swallow one player at a time, and the bullets can only shoot one player at a time."

Wang Shun reluctantly smiles.

There was silence on the field, no one answered, Tang Erda's face was devoid of any emotion and a murderous aura spread around him as he spoke very slowly, "By all means, kill the Joker at the very beginning."

"Never let his bullets touch."

Playoffs

After the meeting, Bai Liu stayed behind to discuss with Wang Shun.

"I have investigated the players who died at the hands of the Joker and the Executioner in the previous matches." Wang Shun opened the system panel and handed it to Bai Liu, "It can be seen that the Joker kills at random in the tournament, but the Executioner controls him, so the players the Joker actually killed were not the ones the Joker wanted to kill, but the ones the Executioner wanted to kill."

"In short, the Joker is the executioner's killer." Bai Liu summed it up succinctly as he pondered, "But it's a bit odd, the Executioner isn't weak in his own skills, he can even ignore a death warrant, so why would he need the Joker's hand to kill?"

"Well, I thought that was a bit odd too." Wang Shun sighed, "Apart from that, there's another strange point, I went to investigate these players who died at their hands and found out that these players were more or less involved in the smuggling of heretics."

Bai Liu raised an eyebrow; "Oh?"

"Like this Kabbalah guild wanderer who got his head shot off by a clown last game." Wang Shun taps on the system panel, points to the guy on it and says, "You remember this thing called [Blood Lingerie]? A heresy used by a group of investors to clutch the blood of children to renew their lives."

"This wanderer is one of the hitmen that one of the investors keeps in the game, as his bodyguard."

"Didn't all those investors get locked up?" Bai Liu asked.

"Yes." Wang Shun nodded, "but not all of the people in their vicinity are being held, and some of these people are players and can use various props to cover up and escape."

Bai Liu seems to understand: "So the Executioner has struck, punishing them in the game."

"And what you said, why did the Executioner use the Joker's hand to carry out the execution, it wasn't actually like that before." Wang Shun slid the panel to the next page, "When the Reverse God was still in Deer Hunter, the main attacker's hand was the Executioner himself, this warband generally did not kill people, and the Executioner would release the players locked in before the game ended even if he used the skill [Sinner's Well]."

"But after the Reverse God left the Deer Hunter, the Executioner took over the tactician's position himself and he handed over the main attacker's duties to the newcomer Joker."

Wang Shun took a deep breath, "Then something changed."

Bai Liu narrowed his eyes as he looked at the densely arranged, greyed out pictures of players on the panel, "He's starting to kill people."

Community Counselling Room.

Lu Yizhan's shirt is half removed to reveal his right shoulder, still unhealed from Daniel's bullet wound, and Liao Ke, wearing rubber gloves, changes Lu Yizhan's dressing, disinfects the wound that will never heal, then presses the cotton, wraps the bandage and sighs.

"This wound won't heal." After changing, Liao Ke tapped Lu Yizhan on the shoulder, "Get up!"

Lu Yizhan was jolted by the slap, grimacing and shouting, "Mr. Liao, what are you shooting at?"

"Does it still hurt?" Liao Ke laughed, "I thought you had the guts to block Daniel's soul-crushing shot, that's enough to scrape your bones, and you're still crying out in pain?"

Lu Yizhan looked sad: "At this time, you're still making fun of me."

"Down to play the Gambler, against that old fox Charles." Liao Ke took his gloves off and threw them in the medical bin, pressing the death-free disinfectant twice to wipe his hands, "How do you set the tactics?"

" Charles will probably play a fake game, first a wave of counterattacking mad pursuit to suppress us and pull up their win rate, then forfeit and surrender when the win rate is at its highest, he should press us all the way at that moment." Lu Yizhan put his shirt back on and buttoned it up, his expression composed, "If he wants to play, let's play along with him to the end."

"So that means it's not a hard fight." Liao Ke nodded knowingly and the conversation turned abruptly, "What about Buming, what are you going to do?"

Lu Yizhan's hand stopped as he reached the last button, and he lowered his eyes without speaking.

"..... haven't you guys made up yet?" Liao Ke was a little surprised, "I thought you asked me to ask Little Cen for help with that earlier thing, you two have talked."

"Not really Mr. Lu, you two have been the front and back team in over 300 world lines before, and have fought in numerous fights, big and small, how come you two have been in a cold war for so long over such a small matter this time?"

"I never fought with him, he beat me unilaterally and I never fought back, okay?" Lu Yizhan spread his hands helplessly.

"But you can be a bit of an underdog sometimes." Liao Ke nodded approvingly, "You and Little Cen agreed at the beginning to stay at the Deer Hunter to defend Bai Liu and win the league, but then you ran away when it came down to it, and delegated your cards to Bai Liu.

"If I were Little Cen, I'd beat you up too!"

Lu Yizhan was quiet and sighed, "So I know it was my fault too, he didn't hit me back even when he did ....."

" Little Cen usually beats you up and it's over." Liao Ke asked suspiciously, "Why this time ....."

Lu Yizhan was silent for longer this time as he fastened the last button and said very softly, "It touched his bottom."

"We don't share the same philosophy, this is not something we can talk about."

The superficial peace he had spent over 300 world lines trying to maintain fell apart at that moment, and Cen Buming stood outside the door, calmly holding his gun up to him and saying, "One more time, and I'll still shoot.

It's as if Lu Yizhan couldn't get at Bai Liu the first time he saw him again.

For Lu Yizhan, what you haven't done is what you haven't done.

As far as Cen Buming is concerned, what's done is done.

"A philosophical disagreement?" Liao Ke frowned, "Is this about Little Cen killing those people? That's how you've been setting Little Cen up for work before."

"His status is that of an executioner, shooting players who have crossed the line is exactly what he should be doing as a hunter who walks the line between the Heresy Handling Authority and the game, and you would have him do that in Deer Hunter, so why would you say the philosophy is not compatible?"

"It's not the same." Lu Yizhan was quiet for a long time and shook his head, "Because he doesn't believe in [the Inquisitor] anymore."

"His execution, which lost the [trial] aspect, is something I cannot endorse."

The executioner who had lost his [judge], the hunter who had been abandoned by the [seer], acted more and more paranoid, he began to execute according to his own perceived judgement, but now at least there was no time when the line was crossed, and the people killed were indeed those who deserved it.

But when will he cross that line and become the subject of execution by the Judge?

Liao Ke was stunned and he too fell silent, and it was a long time before he spoke, "Are you going to [judge] him?"

"I hope that day doesn't come." Lu Yizhan looked up with a smile, his eyes a little red, "I don't want to judge him."

"..... Had I known, I wouldn't have wanted a hunter."

Liao Ke sighs with a complicated look in her eyes.

It's kind of ridiculous for a prophet to say he knew about it.

But Lu Yizhan is like that. The more people he cares about, the more last-minute he is, the more he is afraid to see the end. In that skill, [Listening to God's Words], God has already written the end for each of them, and Lu Yizhan only has to prophesy to get a glimpse of it.

Lu Yizhan doesn't believe in that ending, doesn't dare to see that ending, doesn't want to see that ending -

-- he would have preferred to struggle like an ordinary man who knew nothing until the last moment and then fall into the end of God.

Cinchimani family.

After Phoebe took the power of the guild and came back strong, her father disappeared - or smelled bad and ran away would be more accurate.

This man has always been arrogant and conceited, thinking he can accept life and death, measuring and testing everyone by it, but when it comes to this moment, he is still timid and far less calm than the two children he has raised.

Before leaving, the man is determined to leave Phoebe in a bit of trouble, leaving a suicide note handing over Phoebe's heirship to Daniel and, even more troubling, Daniel, who has been out of sight all this time, is really back and he's about to turn eighteen.

In five days' time, Daniel's bar mitzvah will be celebrated and, in accordance with Cinchimani family rules, the child who comes of age will inherit, and he will be the new head of the family on his eighteenth birthday.

It's not such an easy task, at least not for Phoebe, the powerful former heir to the throne.

She already holds most of the Cinchimani family's power, and with the Guild behind her, if Daniel were to take power, he would have to kill Phoebe to succeed, but obviously, that would not be easy.

The head of the family disappears, leaving behind a letter to replace his successor, and the eldest son, who has been missing for over a month, suddenly returns, accompanied by a coming-of-age ceremony.

--The entire Cinchimani family was caught in a stormy atmosphere, the servants were trembling as they wiped down the decorations, they could smell the gunpowder and blood in the air.

While everyone expected a confrontation between Phoebe and Daniel before the bar mitzvah, the current de facto head of the family, Phoebe - Cinchimani, calmly approved the bar mitzvah and invited a large number of distinguished guests to make it a rather large event.

All those who were waiting for the struggle were dumbfounded.

Everyone in the Cinchimani family knew what Daniel's bar mitzvah meant, so they became more and more confused about Phoebe's intentions - Phoebe was even more unpredictable and unpredictable than her father, it had to be said, and no one could read her mind, which made everyone more afraid of her. This made everyone more afraid of her.

Although she was only sixteen, no one thought Daniel would succeed in wresting power from her hands.

The day of Daniel's birthday will surely be the anniversary of his death.

It may have been a grand bar mitzvah or a grand jubilee laying ceremony.

Across the long, dark corridor, looking down from the jogging platform of the corner staircase on the first floor, were servants earnestly cleaning up and beginning to adorn the surrounding area with all sorts of expensive decorations, all in advance of the ball in five days' time.

While Phoebe rests one hand on the fence, her eyes downcast, her long, curly blonde hair falling from her shoulders, silently watching those in front of her, Daniel leans against the stairs, grinning and fiddling with a flower plant placed by the stairs, his attire somewhat more casual than Phoebe's modest attire, with unwashed grease on her face and a bloody footprint as she walks.

"A coming-of-age gift for me?" Daniel gave a cheeky smile, "You're really in the mood."

"Aren't you afraid I'll kill you?"

The servants below were silent, their backs bowed and pretended they heard nothing.

Phoebe looked down at Daniel and said, "Are you really ready to betray?"

"I've never been loyal to you." As if he had heard a very funny joke, Daniel shrugged his shoulders and laughed provocatively, "And what is this talk of betrayal?"

Phoebe did not answer.

Daniel withdrew his eyes in bemusement as he bounced and hummed

a little tune past Phoebe, his tone a twisted excitement, "Godfather would be so happy to get this family."

Daniel bounces one bloody footprint after another, spreading deeper and deeper into the cloister until the light cannot be found.

Phoebe withdrew her eyes and looked at the bloody footprints he had left on the ground, then with a glance at the flowers where Daniel had scratched his fingerprints, she said, "Replace the bouquet."

When the servant came up to change the flowers, he was shocked: "These are your and Mr Daniel's favourite flowers, why are they caught like this?

"Change it." Phoebe lowered her eyes, " Daniel doesn't like the flower now, so naturally he will hurt it."

--Finally, it's come to this.

Next day, rental house.

Du Sanying was sitting next to him, hesitant to go forward, when Mu Sicheng saw him like this, he grabbed him and squeezed Du Sanying's shoulder: "What's going on, why haven't you come out these days?"

Du Sanying backed away quickly, shaking his head frantically as he pressed himself against the wall in terror: "Don't come near me!"

"You're about to play a game and it's going to be bad luck!"

Mu Sicheng was unconcerned and waved his hand: "You can't have any more bad luck than this Bai Liu guy, he's our tactician, what do I care about your bad luck?"

Bai Liu: "..... Indeed."

"Why have you been avoiding us lately?" Mu Sicheng asked suspiciously, "I was looking for you to come out for dinner yesterday, but I couldn't find you for half a day and called to find that you had run out."

" Wang Shun said you don't even come to our games anymore, what's wrong with you?"

Du Sanying bowed his head and his voice was weak: "..... Aren't you guys playing a very important playoff game, I'm afraid what if I'm there and you guys are unlucky and you lose ....."

There was a silence from several people.

Bai Liu was calm - he knew why Du Sanying didn't come to see him, but he didn't like to force people, so when Du Sanying was really resistant, Bai Liu wouldn't chase after him like Mu Sicheng did to ask Du Sanying to come to dinner to see him. But if Du Sanying was more hesitant and less resistant, Bai Liu would extend the olive branch.

For example, now.

"So do you want to come and watch?" Bai Liu enquired softly, "Today is the semi-final, four to two."

"It should be a great game."

Du Sanying's eyes clearly wavered and he bit his lower lip, but did not say anything.

But it didn't go away either.

"Come and watch if you want to." Bai Liu doesn't push, "It's no fun for Wang Shun to watch the game alone, so it's good for you to keep him company."

"What do you want to see before you see it?" Mu Sicheng slips Du Sanying a hand and vows, "Then you must come and see it!"

"I'm telling you, you should have come to the last game, I was an ace last game and my opponent got beaten ....."

Mu Sicheng chattered on and Du Sanying tried to run away in panic, only to be held down by Muke next to him with a smile: "It's also an important duty as part of the Wandering Circus to see us win the title."

"But just in case ....." Du Sanying's eyes welled up with fear, "you guys get off my back!"

"I don't want anything to happen to you!"

"Not so much." Liu Jiayi waved her hand, "To say that you'd let something happen to us, you'd still have to come in behind Bai Liu."

Tang Erda nods rather approvingly.

Seeing that the crowd was about to pout at Du Sanying, Bai Liu came to the rescue by extending his hand and raising his eyes, "Wanna come into the game with us and watch the game?"

"If it wasn't for your help, we wouldn't have made it this far, and you deserve to be a part of witnessing our victory."

Du Sanying was stunned for a long, long time before he trembled and placed his hand on Bai Liu's palm, and he gave a hard, choked up sob: "You will win!"

Even if he could only remember seven days, he could feel that these people were his last friends in this world, and they were so important to him that he was willing to use all his good fortune for the victory of these people.

--Even if he has to live the rest of his life in misfortune, that's fine.

Game on, viewing pool 2.

The crowd was twice the size of the last one, and Mu Sicheng was almost shocked when he entered, so dense were the heads that you couldn't even see their faces.

"The Deer Hunters are very popular this year." Wang Shun took a deep breath to adjust his mind and explained, "Plus we won against Golden Dawn earlier and it's the semi-finals again, so our win is more uncertain than the killer sequence against the gamblers' guild where the winner is probably already decided, so the crowd for this one with particularly large."

"The betting rate has also had a particularly erratic opening move, having gone up and down three times, with a high of four and a low of just under 0.3."

"As mentioned in the pre-match meeting, the heart of this match lies in the Executioner and the Joker, the Executioner is very aggressive and the Joker, although a newcomer, has a high defense, I estimated that he can resist at least one full shot." Wang Shun let out a breath, "And both the Executioner and the Joker have a big skill that can jump death-free gold discs to death in the opening chapter, [Sinner's Well] and [Soul Crushing Gun], if they get circled, it's not just a matter of attrition ....."

"Deaths outside the [Well of Sinners] venue, Shattergun has absolutely no way to revive ....."

"I won't let the team get hit by a bullet." Tang Erda spoke abruptly, his gaze condensing, "Opening the chapter, I will control the Joker."

Wang Shun gave Tang Erda a complicated look.

Both [The Executioner] and Joker are in the main attack configuration, a very rare [double main attack] team, which puts a lot of pressure on the opponent's main attack, so their ace in the hole is, of course, Tang Erda, who has the most experience and the best psychological profile.

"Take it easy, take it easy!" Mu Sicheng proudly came over, he put one arm around Tang Erda and one hand on Bai Liu's shoulder, "And I'm an ace wanderer!"

"So, what if they have a double main attack, I can clear them out just the same!"

"Don't take it lightly." Bai Liu turned his head calmly to look at everyone as he tugged on his gloves, his gesture of readiness for battle, "Once you see Daniel make a shooting move, remember how we agreed?"

"The nearest team member quickly clears the team member targeted by Daniel, never let Daniel get a shot." Liu Jiayi repeats with a stony expression.

"Hmm." Bai Liu raised his eyes, "That's our most important tactic for this game, please keep that in mind."

"Both teams have forfeited the single and double matches and will proceed directly to the team competition." The host waved his hand, "The team competition is about to begin, please ask both tacticians to come forward and shake hands."

Bai Liu turns as he steps up the steps, while on the other side, Cen Buming removes his blindfold and, eyes downcast, places the [Death Ring] on his right hand.

The moment he puts the ring on, his appearance changes, gradually becoming a different image, his own, and Cen Buming turns coldly to the incredulous eyes of his team members and steps onto the stage.

Across the street, Tang Erda's pupils flinched at the sight of Cen Buming in this form.

Bai Liu also raised an eyebrow, he quickly calmed down and extended his hand with a smile, "So it's Captain Cen, nice to meet you."

Cen Buming looked down at Bai Liu indifferently without reaching out, "You were testing my identity the first time we met, you already guessed who I was, right?"

"Hmm." Bai Liu doesn't shy away from acknowledging it, smiling, "Mr. Cen Buming, the Generation Hunter."

Cen Buming gave an unnoticeable pause and quickly snorted sarcastically, "It seems that Lu Yizhan didn't just give you the prophet status, he even told you these things."

"-there's really enough trust in you [the werewolf]."

"He didn't explicitly tell me who you were, but he was in your group before." Bai Liu's attitude was the same even after being ridiculed, " Lu Yizhan wouldn't stay in a guild for no reason, he's [the Inquisitor] and you're [the Executioner], so your identity is a good guess."

"He is no [inquisitor]." Cen Buming's right eye reflected a sharp and eerie light like a hawk in the daylight shining down from above from the ornamental pool, "There is no such unjust [judge] in this world."

"He ceased to be worthy of being [an Inquisitor] when he chose to stand entirely on your side and rely on his singular trust in you to save the people of this world."

"You were the mistake in the middle of his trial."

"And I, as [the executioner], need to right that wrong for him to continue with a fair trial."

Ornamental pool No. 1.

Lu Yizhan's heart skipped a beat and he choked out a few coughs, covering his chest in an attempt to stop the inexplicable feeling of unease, but to no avail, his heart was beating faster and faster, as if something was about to happen that he really didn't want to see.

"What's wrong?" Liao Ke came over worriedly, "Is the wound hurting again?"

"It's okay." Lu Yizhan's face was pale as he gripped the heavy sword resting at his side, trying to find some sort of courage among the Fang Dian look-alike weapon, "..... just a little sick at heart."

Liao Ke looked across at the team ready to take the field and said with relief, " Charles the old fox won't be that desperate, at most he will apply pressure early on and will definitely forfeit late on."

"..... hmm." Lu Yizhan forced a smile, he was silent for a long time, then suddenly asked, "What do you think Cen Buming will do after he takes Daniel and meets Bai Liu?"

"..... is that what you're worried about?" Liao Ke was stunned, but he quickly sighed, "Actually I don't think Little Cen is as dangerous as you think, he has Daniel with him, on the one hand he is carrying out the execution, on the other hand he is also supervising Daniel, with him Daniel hasn't done anything out of control so far."

"Like your guardianship attitude towards heretics, I consider Little Cen to be Daniel's guardian."

In fact, Lu Yizhan thought so too, and Cen Buming had done so before, which is why Lu Yizhan did not intervene to deal with Cen Buming's use of the Guild to house Daniel.

"And for Bai Liu ....." Liao Ke sighed, "should I say you are in authority or overly worried?"

" If Little Cen really wanted to do it to Bai Liu, he would have done it by force when Bai Liu was eighteen years old, and the fact that he was stopped by you shows that Little Cen was hesitant in his mind."

"You also said that Little Cen was aware that it was wrong for him to do that and that's why he kept asking you to kill him."

"He ..... just couldn't get past himself."

"It's like you can't give up on saving any of the good guys." Liao Ke let out a long sigh, " Little Cen couldn't stand to let any of the bad guys get away either."

"He was too afraid of a repeat of what happened in the first world line, too afraid that some innocent people would die because of his hesitation."

"And this is the last world line."

Lu Yizhan bowed his head, he clenched his fists and said nothing, then he stood up, "I'll use the skill of [Listening to God's Only Words] ....."

"I equip [Prophet] Monster Book Identity to take a look at ....." Lu Yizhan's mouth and hand tapping out the skill panel were shaking as his eyes reddened, "Just a glance... ..."

"I take a look at the ending written by Bai six to Cen Buming and Bai Liu."

"Mr. Lu." Liao Ke pulled Lu Yizhan back, his eyes complex and indistinct, "Have you forgotten? You are no longer a prophet."

"If even you don't believe in your own chosen [prophet], how are you going to get Little Cen to believe?"

Lu Yizhan's hand that wanted to tap on the skill stopped, and he finally sat back helplessly, his eyes drifting off as he murmured softly, "..... you're right."

"I'm ..... no longer [a prophet]."

The host of viewing pool one raised his hand to signal, "Will both tacticians please come forward to shake hands?"

"Go on Mr. Lu." Liao Ke patted Lu Yizhan's shoulder and advised, "Play the game first."

Lu Yizhan took a deep breath and walked across to Charles.

At the same time, Cen Buming finally reached out and took Bai Liu's hand, speaking indifferently, "There is nothing to say between us."

"There doesn't need to be much conversation between the executioner and the person being executed."

Cen Buming withdrew his hand and turned to leave. Bai Liu looked down at Cen Buming's distant back, the sensation of the Death Ring still lingering in his palm.

Bai Liu didn't chastise anyone as he had done before, but rather calmly watched Cen Buming walk away.

--This man is serious.

He had really turned on him.

"Get ready to log into the game." Bai Liu returned to his team, his tone flat, "Do whatever it takes to snipe the Joker."

"Yes!"

Everyone said yes, except for Mu Sicheng who asked, a little confused, " Bai Liu, you only told us the focus of our siege, who is the focus of the other side's siege?"

Bai Liu opened his mouth to say something, but when he saw the eyes of all the players looking straight at him, he stopped: "We're not sure yet, we'll see when we get into the game."

"It's not you, is it?!" Mu Sicheng was a bit nervous, "Shit!"

"No." Tang Erda shook her head with certainty, " Bai Liu will be the safest person in this copy."

"Because there's no way for a clown to shoot him."

"I think so too." Liu Jiayi replied after some serious thought. Liu Jiayi thoughtfully replied, "I asked Phoebe, and she said that Daniel really likes Bai Liu, to the point of being jealous of all the players around Bai Liu."

"- along these lines, it should be more likely that people around Bai Liu were sniped by the Joker."

It was clear that everyone was inexplicably relieved to hear such dangerous news.

"That's good." Muke laughed lightly, a rare genuine smile, "We can go to war without shooting at Bai Liu."

"I have reservations about that, after all, there's not just the Joker on the other side, there's [the Executioner] too." Bai Liu spoke in a calm tone as he walked towards the boarding portal on the other side of the big screen, "Stay alert and get into the game first."

The moment everyone was about to log into the game, their previously playful expressions disappeared and became heavy.

Mu Sicheng had been exhaling and exhaling, the relaxed and loud look he had just given was gone, his hands so stiff with tension that he could hardly move them, Muke clutching his dagger, his eyes downcast, walking with slightly heavier footsteps than usual, Liu Jiayi repeatedly opening the system panel, his face stony as he confirmed his healing skills.

Everyone felt a sense of oppression like never before, coming from the skills of Daniel the clown.

..... Even if it is swallowed by Cen Buming's [Well of Sinners], the worst that can happen is that the exemption will be invalidated and the person will die, but as long as there are enough follow-up points and the soul exists, there is still a chance of resurrection, but if you are hit by the Soul Crushing Gun, there is really no room for maneuvering.

Not even the game, can save a player who has been soul crushed.

Tang Erda could not be clearer on this point.

He closed his eyes, took a deep breath and slowly unclenched his fists, which had been clenched all the way and were beginning to tingle, trying to calm his muddled brain down.

..... Daniel was actually on the same team as Cen Buming, which simply turned his perceptions upside down, and while each world line had different change points, there had never been such a volatile change.

The change is simply comparable, as he, the hunter, joins Bai Liu's team.

Was it a coincidence? Was it the butterfly effect of him joining Bai Liu's team? Why is Cen Buming on the same team as Daniel and what is he doing?

But it is useless to think about this now, the priority is to win the other side in order to explore the answers to these questions.

Tang Erda's dark blue eyes widened as he stared at the back of Bai Liu, who had walked into the entrance, and tightened his grip on the gun in his hand...

-- This time, he would never let his tactician, in front of his own face, touch that bullet.

[..... is loading the game .....]

[System Alert: Both players have logged into the game "The Drowning Man from the Future"]

[The (Deer Hunters) vs. (Wandering Circus), a five-man team match, officially begins].

Bai Liu opened his eyes and he was suspended in a deep, dark universe, or more precisely, he was wearing a spacesuit, equipped with safety connectors around his waist, suspended not far from a space station, with his side Fang Ke to see a huge spacecraft connected to the station.

And all around him and behind him, this vast and silent space was not the way he had seen the universe before in books or picture books, but was made up of many Earths, orbiting this huge spaceship according to some kind of law, no meteorite belts, no different shapes of stellar spheres, only one thing - the Earth shrouded in a halo of light.

-- exactly the same world line in the shape of a ball of light that Bai six had once shown him.

Behind these "earths" are scattered, broken halos of starlight, all of which glow a slight silvery blue, making one feel dizzy and very uncomfortable when looking directly at them for a long time, making one feel like sinking into some kind of deep sea, giving rise to a feeling of drowning.

Bai Liu soon discovered that looking directly at these silvery-blue halos for long periods of time would bring down one's spirit level, and he squinted - this familiar glow reminded him of a certain god.

[System Alert: You are a player who has jumped the world line and come outside the world line].

[God rejoices in your growth and welcomes you, and He presents you with His supreme masterpiece, the (game system)].

[Activate main quest: Please land the airship, find the key on the airship, control this airship and fly to the place where the world lines meet at the centre - the place where the temple is located].

"..... please return to the hatch." A mechanical announcement came over the internal radio of Bai Liu's spacesuit, "Oxygen is running out, please return to the hatch."

Bai Liu turned his helmet and looked through the transparent face window structure to see the hatch attached to the end of the safety cable moving slowly. He gripped the cable and pulled inwards, floating lightly to the hatch and retracting.

The hatch closed and a mechanical voice came from the top: "Scanning, adjusting environment in progress, activating gravity and air systems, simulating biological survival environment, please do not remove your spacesuit ....."

"Simulation complete, please enter the interior."

A white gas rises from the bottom and the feeling of floating disappears, a gravitational pull on his feet appears and the weightlessness disappears, he lands on the ground and another hatch opens in front of him.

Looking squarely past it, there is a whole metallic webbed corridor, where one can see various types of mechanical arms in operation, which place something contained in a square on another assembly line, and another mechanical arm stamps a stamp on it - [Transport Object: 0616 Worldline Reality].

[Shipment of goods: Dried Leaf Rose Graft (Heresy)]

Bai Liu slowly unscrewed his helmet and hung it aside as he walked towards the inside of this large factory-like spaceship, his eyes downcast as he surveyed what was being produced on each assembly line.

[Shipping to: 0408 World Lines (Game)].

[Transportation object: Flaming Torch (Prop)]

[Transportation object: Water bubbles (prop)]

" Bai Liu--!" In the distance, came the sound of Mu Sicheng running, panting as if he was afraid Bai Liu would touch something on the assembly line, exclaiming, "Don't touch those things!"

"I won't touch it." Bai Liu looked at Mu Sicheng who ran up to him and raised an eyebrow, "You've touched it?"

Mu Sicheng, whose face bears the marks of an attack by a robotic arm and abrasions on the sides of his face, grimaces: "I hit it when I was running too fast."

"The mechanical arm here is the one that attacks people, I originally thought it was a monster from the monster book and fought the mechanical arm for a while to trigger the monster book, but it wasn't, it was just a simple mechanical arm."

"This copy doesn't need to trigger the monster book." Bai Liu drew his eyes back from the production items on those assembly lines and spoke in a calm tone, "This whole ship, it's the backend of the system."

"Every box we've seen is a monster."

"The backstage of the system ……?!" Mu Sicheng was shocked, "You mean this place, is the backend of the system?!"

"So why are we logged in?!"

Bai Liu quickly realised that something was wrong and he turned to Mu Sicheng: "Didn't you get the system alert?"

"The background to what's going on here is [the system's back office]."

Mu Sicheng looks at Bai Liu in confusion: "No ……"

"We didn't get any system prompts, we were just told to go along with you to find the key to get to the top level and then for you to get control of this ship."

"It's clear that you're to accompany me to the top, isn't it?" Bai Liu's tone was surprisingly calm, "I'm the only one who can do this, none of you can, can you?"

Mu Sicheng looked over at Bai Liu, who nodded somewhat dazedly,

"..... Yes."

"It was made clear that it was to accompany [player Bai Liu] up to the very top and get control of the ship."

He had never seen Bai Liu s face look so ..... ugly before.

"What about you guys?" Bai Liu stared at Mu Sicheng, "What is the identity assigned to you by this game?"

Mu Sicheng also sensed something was wrong in Bai Liu's attitude and he clicked on his system panel and handed it to Bai Liu to see, "It's this."

And the moment Bai Liu saw Mu Sicheng's identity on the panel, his pupils tightened.

[System Alert: Mu Sicheng has been stripped of his player status after jumping out of the world line]

[Re-verify identity.]

[Real Identity: 0658 Worldline Transport Product, Humanoid Heretic, No. 0004--]

[- Mu Sicheng, capuchin thief].

[System ship backstage soul storage location - Level 1.]

Bai Liu's breathing stops.

--This ship, this system, not only produces and transports heretics, monsters and props to all worlds, but also stores the souls of all players who have entered this game.

Liu Jiayi, Mu Sicheng, Tang Erda, Muke, Lu Yizhan ..... The souls of these people, he owns half of them.

This system backend, has the other half.

[System warming note: When you own the ship, you own the system itself].

[Possessing the last pass to become an evil god.]

..... This is not a game at all.

Bai Liu turned his head slowly as he looked out the transparent window at the 658 [Earths] that were orbiting this ship, the pupils of his dark eyes reflecting the silvery blue of space - the 658-world line.

-- He landed on the reality that led to the final [future].

The Drowning Man from the Future

Mu Sicheng looked at Bai Liu's unprecedented expression and was stunned for a moment before he began to report, "..... I've met up with Jiayi and the others, on the last level, there are plans for the ship's construction, shall we go down and have a look?"

Bai Liu's voice started to soften because he was not right.

"Let's go." Bai Liu narrowed his gaze and headed for the lowest level, halfway down, he suddenly spoke up, " Mu Sicheng, the other side's siege is focused on me."

Mu Sicheng was shocked: "What, you? Then talk to Tang Erda quickly, and move the main attack protection focus to you ....."

"No." Bai Liu looked up at Mu Sicheng, "The main focus of protection will be you, and I've already negotiated with Tang Erda."

Mu Sicheng was anxious: "But the siege is on you! You know Tang Erda, the main attacker, will put your orders first on the field, he'll believe whatever you say, and if you say the siege is on us, he won't doubt you at all!"

"When they come around, they won't be able to stop them!"

"Even if the siege focuses on me, I won't be able to stop it at all." Bai Liu's tone was cold, so cold that it carried a sense of menace, "Neither you nor any of the team, will ever be able to put protecting me first."

"I know you're impulsive, have a keen sense of movement and combat awareness, and move fast enough that when the time comes, you'll be the first to rush to my defense, so I'm warning you in advance, absolutely not."

Mu Sicheng was about to say, when Bai Liu looked at him with eyes so dark that no light could penetrate them.

" Mu Sicheng, that's an order."

"Are you going to disobey the tactician's orders on the field of play?"

Mu Sicheng opened his mouth, but finally gritted his teeth and said, "..... I know."

So what exactly happened and why was Bai Liu so ..... nervous.

Mu Sicheng had never seen Bai Liu play the game so tightly, even hostilely. Even in a life-or-death situation, the guy could talk and laugh, but now, before the game had even started, he looked like he had seen something extremely scary, and there was not a single expression on his face.

It's just ..... a game, ah, the worst that can happen is just to admit defeat and walk away.

Bai Liu walked forward, a little glad that he was wearing such heavy and cumbersome clothes, otherwise Mu Sicheng, with his sensitivity, would have noticed that his hands were trembling in his clothes.

But from the look on Bai Liu's face, there was no sign of him, so calm that anyone would have thought he was still in control of the situation.

In fact, he also didn't understand why his hands were trembling, why his heart was beating so fast, why he was so ..... scared when he guessed what Bai six was going to do.

Don't die.

Bai Liu heard a voice deep inside himself saying very softly, a very soft, teenage voice - aren't you a monster.

[Don't die in front of me, Xie Ta.]

[You're the only friend I have, the only person who will come near me anymore].

Bai Liu took a very hard breath, he turned his head sideways and raised his hand slightly to shield his eyes from Mu Sicheng's expression, clenching into his hand to force himself to calm down and not be carried away by his fear as he began to analyse.

This is already outside the world line, then this is not a game, there is no such option as quitting the game, he just can't talk to them yet, this extreme situation will make the group fight tooth and nail to keep him ..... and there is a rather dangerous uncertainty with this outside the world line scenario - -

-- Bai six can log in to this ship at any time, as it is located outside the worldline and logging in does not interfere with the worldline.

If Bai Liu were to take on Bai six single-handed, he wouldn't be afraid, but it's not just him here, it's .....

Yes .....

Bai Liu closed his eyes as he remembered the smile of Bai six in the fifth building, holding up his soul sniper rifle and aiming it at the others.

[Having feelings makes you weak, Bai Liu.]

Mu Sicheng pushes open the door and a warm dampness comes over him, mixed with a warm glow, Tang Erda looks at him with a worried frown, Muke hands him a cup of warm tea and Liu Jiayi pauses in his speech.

"What's wrong with you?" She sensed something and frowned, "You look so pale, Bai Liu."

"Not really used to the environment here." Bai Liu took the warm tea and took a sip as he laughed lightly, his eyes dropping as if he was not concerned, "The ship construction plans are somewhere, I'll take a look."

Liu Jiayi stares suspiciously at the side of Bai Liu's face, and Muke looks away, clearly wanting to ask more questions, but Bai Liu quickly brings their attention away.

"This ship, it's a four-layer construction." Bai Liu looked at the diagram of the ship hovering over the maneuvering board, looking from the bottom to the top, then nodded to the last layer, "Here we are, the fourth layer is a production line for some monsters, and further up, a production line for some core heretics."

Liu Jiayi's eyes fell on Bai Liu's face without moving as she opened her mouth to analyse, "I suspect this is the system's back office."

"I saw the label on the box."

Bai Liu's fingers pause for a moment, and he quickly and calmly picks up, "That's my point too."

"Not only that." Tang Erda's brow tightened, "I also suspect that this is Bai six's worldline archive."

"Look at this picture, you guys."

Tang Erda swiped the ship's diagram and a brand new diagram emerged, a layer with the locations of 658 Earths, alongside various notes and archival instructions.

"..... This would be the world line we're in, no archive point has appeared yet, it's still in the game running." Tang Erda took a deep breath and tried his best to calm down before continuing his analysis, he tapped the previous [Earth], "But here, here, it's all in a game over state."

" Bai six have contaminated these world lines with heresies, and these world lines have been game over and archived."

"I don't think that's right." Muke looked to the floating diagram and tapped the tabletop to ask a question, "If the game is over in these worlds and has entered a state of archival point time stop, then there should be nothing and nothing needed in these world lines, so why are those assembly lines still producing a steady stream of props and heretics to transport to these supposedly game over when we come up from the fourth level of the world lines?"

"There's only one reasonable guess."

Muke looked up at Bai Liu, who had been silent: "That's the game in these world lines, it's not over yet."

"Impossible." Tang Erda denied with a quick shake of her head, "By the time I left each worldline, the entire worldline was so heavily contaminated by different heretics that most of the players in the game had been transformed into monsters and left behind, and game operations had ceased."

"I watched the game operations stop and confirm our failure before I was allowed to jump to the next world line, and with the world being heretical at that point and everyone in reality generating suffering and basically being tainted by heresy to the point of sanity and being a monster, Bai six didn't even have the need to continue running the game to reap the pain anymore. "

"Is that so?" Muke seemed to have an understanding, "If that's the case, what's up with all these props and heretics that are still being transported to these already archived world lines?"

Liu Jiayi stared at Bai Liu and narrowed her eyes a little: " Bai Liu, do you have any idea?"

"My thoughts are that-" Bai Liu's tone was flat, his head bowed and his expression unreadable, "the game between [the prophet] and [the evil god] did end in these world lines, [the evil god] as it were, used These world lines all ended with [the Prophet]'s defeat."

"But [the evil gods'] game in these world lines is not over yet."

Tang Erda realised what was going on and he remembered with a jolt what the [Tang Erda] he had met in the fifth building had said to him -

--Time still flows after you have left.

The suffering of all, continues and circulates, endlessly God Xiang offers, without a moment of cessation.

"I used to wonder why a heresy like [Dried Leaf Rose], which drains the life force of everyone, was put into every world line." Bai Liu continued in a calm tone, "Clearly this thing does not conform to the principles of the [evil gods], [Dried Leaf Rose] causes death, and a dead person is incapable of producing pain or value anymore."

"The heresy He likes would be the one that sustains one's base vitality, that keeps one awake, with a certain faint hope of not being able to give up, and therefore endlessly produces suffering."

"-as in the Land of Gold?" Muke asked softly and rhetorically, "Because they know Georgia is watching over them, the people will always have hope and wait for Georgia's return, won't they?

"Hmm. " Bai Liu's fingers against the console curled and his tone lowered, "Without hope, there is no pain, without ever having gained, the loss is numb."

"The pain that the dried-leaf rose can cause is indeed colossal, but only for a period of time, and in the later stages, everyone grows numb."

"Later, I understood why He allowed [the dried leaf rose] to appear and spread anyway."

Bai Liu looked up, his gaze fixed on the 658 images of the Earth in suspension: "- because he can keep time going round and round."

"He just needs to set the archive point at that moment when everyone is suffering the most, and then when everyone is about to go numb, he rewinds the clock and jumps to that archive point, making the time loop and the people inside will produce a constant stream of suffering."

"The mechanism sounds familiar, doesn't it?"

"Isn't this ....." Muke looked incredulously at Bai Liu, "- a copy of the game? "

"So the copy we log into each time is not a copy of the game at all, but some place in these contaminated world lines where archive points have been placed and are cycling constantly?!"

Bai Liu closed his eyes: "..... Yes."

"The heretics and props that were transported over there, the heretics were used to reset the copy and redistribute the contaminated copy to keep it the same as before, the props were not distributed to people in that worldline, but to players who logged into that worldline [game copy]."

"-that is, ourselves."

"The game [of the evil gods] continues in a more brutal way in the world lines where these [prophets] lose their games."

"It's the same with our own worldline, if we can't win the game, [the evil gods] will arrange copies of other worldlines that are cycling into our reality in the same way."

"No wonder ....." Muke sat back in his chair in a trance, "no wonder it's like that."

"And Bai six is worse than that, right?" Liu Jiayi's face was also very ugly, "We also met some NPCs who jumped out of the loop in the middle of the game, most of them were people who had traded with the evil god, so these people are real, they have the memories of the loop and are being tortured in a constant stream."

"-that's how they deliver suffering to the evil gods because of their dealings with them afterwards, isn't it?

--A constant loop of seven days of gameplay, increasingly realistic and realistic NPCs, and major game characters who jump out of the loop after trading with the evil god, and who trade with him with hope in their hearts, only to end up becoming more and more miserable, after being logged in by the player, in a variety of ways.

The Doctor from the Ice Age, Alex from the edge of the forest, the zombie Taoist from the village of Yinshan, Xiaokui from the festival of evil gods .....

"If we lose the game with the evil god this time." Liu Jiayi looked straight at Bai Liu, "And become such an NPC in someone else's game, yes?"

"No." Bai Liu raised his eyes, the pupils of his eyes dark, his tone clear, "You won't."

--because it's, like, the last world line.

"This system airship is equivalent to a large transit centre, transferring players from the 658 world line we are in, to copies in other world lines, and then transferring them back after the game is over, and distributing rewards and points at the same time." Bai Liu quickly continued his analysis, "Not only that, this ship is also the equivalent of a large heretic smuggling ferry."

Tang Erda, sensitive to the term "smuggling heresy", quickly looked at Bai Liu: "How?"

"On my way here, I paid attention to the source of the assembly line from which this ship produces heretics." Bai Liu continued calmly, "It was not produced using some raw material, but was extracted up from the void from various world lines."

"That is to say, Bai six first contaminates the worldline with heretics, and after the heretics have been produced in this worldline in a constant stream, then extracts the heretics from this worldline with the system backend, stores them in this huge system backend ship, and contaminates the next worldline with the heretics stored in this ship when it enters the next worldline. "

"The equivalent of all the world lines that have failed have been turned into heresy production factories for Bai six."

Bai Liu looks over at Tang Erda, whose face is dark as hell.

"That is, as long as there is a worldline in Bai six's hands that continues to function to produce heretics, then he can continuously use the system backend to extract heretics from that worldline and then distribute them as rewards to players who have logged into other worldlines, using players from these new worldlines in the game to smuggle heretics to new worldlines. "

"As long as the game exists, there are players who will enter the game out of desire, and the Heresy Authority will never be able to house all the heretics he smuggles over."

"Even if you kill the derivative Bai six in every worldline, the largest backstage ship of the smuggling system outside this worldline still exists, you cannot stop the spread of the heresy, before He said that the game is over when you kill the derivative Bai six, it is not, Bai six has misled you."

"He has deceived you, and derivatives are not the key at all."

" Bai six has been cheating from the start."

Bai Liu was quiet for a moment: "As long as the game exists, as long as this system exists in the background, you can never win against Him."

"Then how about blowing up the backend of the system?" Mu Sicheng, who had been leaning against his chest, spoke up coldly as he looked straight at Bai Liu, "Blow it up, the system doesn't exist, the game doesn't exist, and it's all over."

Bai Liu icily vetoed, "No."

"This system backend, it should never be blown up."

Mu Sicheng tsked irritably, "Didn't they say that with this system in the background, you can never win Bai six? Why can't it blow up?!"

Liu Jiayi and Muke looked over at the same time, and Tang Erda paused, his gaze condensed, "The backstage of this system is full of heretics, best destroyed."

Bai Liu shifted his gaze away from the men, his breathing unsteady for a moment, "..... show me your assigned status in this game."

Mu Sicheng was still angry because Bai Liu had been mean to him earlier, so he didn't say anything, but now when Bai Liu asked, he replied, "I showed you."

"I'm guard number 0004 here."

Liu Jiayi extends the panel, "I am the guard of 0601."

"I'm the guard of 0005." Muke raised his hand in gesture.

"I am a guardian of 0002." Tang Erda looked to Bai Liu, "Our task as guardsmen is to escort you this you get control of the ship and become the captain of this ship."

Bai Liu looked at the panel displayed in front of him with misty eyes, trying his best to control his emotional reactions, his breathing and heart rate, not to show any hints in front of these people.

[System Alert: Player Tang Erda Muke Liu Jiayi has been stripped of his player status after jumping out of the world line].

[Re-verify identity.]

[Real Identity: 0658 Worldline Transport Product, Humanoid Heretic, No. 0601/0005/002]

[Rose Hunter Bloodline Witch Assassin]

[System ship backstage soul storage location - Level 1.]

[System warm reminder: Only real players can see the real, the world you see with monsters is not the same.]

Bai Liu looked around slowly and opened his mouth as if to say something - because in the backend of this system's ruling, players are also heretics, which is why your skill status is called Monster Book.

You are also monsters.

Your soul ..... is also bound to this system backend.

So the system backend, not to be blown up.

"Let's follow the flow of the game first." Bai Liu gripped the cup of warm tea as he lowered his eyes to the ripples in the water, his voice inaudible, "First win the game and get out of here."

..... hands stop shaking.

Any more shaking is going to be seen.

"Okay." Muke followed Bai Liu's words, he looked at Bai Liu's bloodless lips and couldn't hide the worry on his face, " Bai Liu, are you seasick?"

"A bit." Bai Liu choked out a cough with a clenched fist and continued to look at the hover map as calmly as ever, "We know all about the two layers of construction diagrams underneath this ship, the second layer, from the description, seems to be full of documentation for the various world lines, recording specific information on archive points and world lines."

Mu Sicheng snickered, " Bai six, this idiot has time on his hands, remembering a whole layer."

"The archival points of the world line should of course be well documented; this is very important documentation." Tang Erda looked towards the second level, his brow had been furrowed ever since he saw the image, "I've seen it before in one of the top secret files when I inherited the [Prophet] authority, the Heretic Processing Bureau also has an archive point."

"It's an archive point for recording [prophet] parties."

Tang Erda looks to Bai Liu: "You've seen that archive site."

"- Heresy 0001, named [Future]."

"It's said that's where [the prophet] recorded the archive."

"But I've never seen it." Tang Erda's eyes were dark, "because even the prophet who recorded these [archive points] said it was [the future] that would be maddening after looking straight at it."

"[The prophet] said that hunters are absolutely forbidden to watch [the future]."

Bai Liu asks, "Why?"

Tang Erda paused, "Because something terrible will happen."

"This, right here, is the ship's control room?" Liu Jiayi fiddled with the console, zoomed in on the picture and pointed to the first top compartment on the uppermost level of the ship and said, "At the top of the ship, labeled level 0, there is a large door underneath, this is where we should be looking for the key to open this door and enter to take control of the ship."

"But this ship is a straight ladder design, somewhat similar to the Heretic Authority." Tang Erda said as she stared at the ship's construction diagram, "To get to Level 0, you have to go through Level

2 and Level 1 first."

Bai Liu looked at the ship's construction diagram, and after a moment's silence, put down his cup of tea, propped himself up on the table and rose, "Let's go, then."

"Go to level 0."

Muke glanced at the teacup, which still had ripples in it that hadn't dissipated.

He pursed his lips and looked up at Bai Liu's departing back.

Second level of the airship, archive point and worldline information reserve room.

Cen Buming realised where this was almost instantly after logging into the system ship, he sneered at the misleading information given on the system panel and quickly ordered, "Head for the upper levels of the ship!"

He'd like to see what this bitch Bai Six has recorded.

Cen Buming gritted his teeth as Lu Yizhan's voice, calm as if he had already seen everything, came to his ears - [Stop interfering, Sifu].

[The future may not be what you think it is, but all in all, not a BAD ending].

What does he know about this guy who repeatedly turns his back on his original intentions?

The prophet, who only dares to spy on God's script piecemeal through his own skills, gets a bunch of bullshit poetic prophecies that he can't even read, and has a powerful heresy like [Future] in his hand, which can clearly see fragments of [Future], but is actually used as an archive point by Lu Yizhan, who hasn't seen the future of the world even once?

Cen Buming wanted to watch it, but Lu Yizhan seriously stopped him from doing so, so Cen Buming beat Lu Yizhan up, but Lu Yizhan still let him beat him up, but firmly refused to let him watch [The Future].

Cen Buming has since learned to ignore this heresy.

Lu Yizhan and Cen Buming listened to all the good and bad endings as jokes, he didn't believe a word of it because he knew Lu Yizhan .....

The only future ever seen -

-is his own future.

[Master, I am actually quite weak as a person, and I dare not look at the future of anyone who has had dealings with me].

[I don't want to be a prophet at all. I fear that everyone's future is not what I expect it to be.]

[I'm afraid I won't be able to save anyone].

Lu Yizhan stood beside the drill ground, the wind blowing back and forth the uniform he wore as captain of the first detachment, Lu Yizhan turned back to him with arched eyebrows and a smile.

[But I've seen my own future.]

[That's a good future.]

Cen Buming, moving towards the uppermost level, said coolly, "Go further up the level."

"Don't look out of the window, it lowers your spirit level."

Cen Buming walks past the huge transparent window that glows with luminescence, his head bowed, and his desperate figure stretched long and wide across the floor.

--long enough to be practised in line with the shadows cast into the cabin by 685 world lines.

Outside the windows of the ship one can see the flow of stars, the silvery-blue dust of debris surrounding each earth, slowly flowing through space, as if jellyfish in the deep sea were surrounding their falling prey, shimmering out in a halo of light that is obviously very beautiful, like the artificially created beauty of an aquarium, but just gives one the feeling of drowning, after entering the deep sea.

It always makes one feel as if one cannot find a place for one's existence in this vast and infinite universe, only to keep sinking and sinking, unable to find where the ship lands.

Like the eternal night of the pole, the mountain village forever hidden in the gloom, the darkness before the fireworks of the annual festival -

--Sunken Sea of Mermaid Wishes.

"Won't we look two levels down, Captain?" A team member asked in a soft voice.

"Don't bother looking." Cen Buming strides forward without looking back, the Heretic Authority's team badge on his shoulder glowing shimmering in the silver-blue light, his tone calm and cold, "It's all just heretics and monsters who only use destruction."

Cen Buming walked up to the lift leading to the ground floor, he paused for a moment, reached out and pulled the straight stairs open and stepped in.

"In this game, it's just a matter of moving forward."

"Ka-da-"

"About to enter the first level."

The lift runs upwards and then stops. The moment it opens, Cen Buming, who is walking ahead of everyone, looks up and his expression and movements stop for a second or two when he sees the structure on the ground floor.

--The dark corridors, the faint smell of seawater, the labelled heretical shelters on either side, the heretics hiding in the shadows and stirring to come closer.

It's exactly the same as the bottom of the heresy handling bureau.

--the so-called [humanoid heresy] shelter.

Cen Buming paused for a few seconds, then lifted his steps and stepped out of the lift, "Let's go."

The other three members of the two teams were wary of the environment, they had never been down to the bottom of the Heretic Authority, but this was at first glance a common configuration for the Heretic Authority to house heretics and had turned their heads to Cen Buming with a serious tone, "Captain, this is the same environment as ..... we work in the same."

Daniel followed him curiously, surveying the first level of the ship with amusement, "So this is where you weird one-eyed dragon works?"

"Don't talk about the captain like that!" A member of the team got angry and tried to argue with Daniel.

Daniel's eyes narrowed and he was about to draw his gun when Cen Buming barely missed a beat as he flipped his hand over and pinned Daniel's grip behind his back, sending him to the ground.

Cen Buming's eyes looked down, his right foot on Daniel's struggling shoulder, that hawk-like right eye held a warning and a murderous intent, his voice low and hoarse: "You can call me whatever you want."

"One-eyed dragon, one-eyed blind, whatever."

"But don't let me see you pull a gun on one of my team members."

"Otherwise-"

"You'll just kill me?" Daniel answered with a playful smile, unconcerned.

"I'll kill Bai Liu." Cen Buming said indifferently, "one second before you were about to meet him, engage him, and have him recognize your abilities."

Daniel's expression darkened completely as he stared sorrowfully at Cen Buming, taking a few moments before putting the gun away in his hand, Cen Buming withdrew his foot as Daniel patted the dust off himself, tsked in annoyance, and asked in boredom, "... . why are you here?"

"Can't I just go down and kill the crew and show the Godfather what I can do?"

"Not until you find the key and master the secret to getting through this game." Cen Buming looked cold, "Even if you put a gun to your godfather's head, he wouldn't give you a second glance."

"He's not as attached to the players as you might think, and Bai Liu cares more about winning and losing games than he does about the inconsequential circus members."

--after all, it's in other world lines that can casually disintegrate their crew with a soul-crushing gun just for being badly used brutes.

"..... That's true." Daniel rubbed his chin and smiled somewhat pleasantly, "Not important exactly."

"I don't want the godfather to have something important, it will just get in the way of him moving forward."

"..... those crew members, don't shoot them until it's necessary." Cen Buming stepped forward and opened his mouth abruptly, "That's an order from the tactician."

Daniel looked curiously at the side of Cen Buming's face, whose expression was unmoving, and raised an eyebrow, "I thought you didn't like them?"

Cen Buming didn't say anything, he looked away somewhat unpleasantly, examining Daniel with one eye half closed, his tone low, "-and that doesn't mean I want you to kill them with a soul-crushing gun."

"And only when it's not necessary."

Cen Buming's tone returned to coldness as he clenched his right hand with the Death Ring: "I will kill them myself if I have to."

The silver ring is cold and cutting, and the grip feels like holding on to a razor blade with an uncomfortable sharpness.

..... He clearly logged into this game with Bai Liu with an execution mentality.

But for some reason, the sight of this corridor reminded Cen Buming of that night when Bai Liu was caught by Tang Erda in the Heretic's Bureau and Lu Yizhan used his captain's pass to access the last floor to stop Bai Liu, who was about to release all the heretics.

At that time, Cen Buming was notified that someone had used the prophet's authority and rushed back.

He also rushed to the last floor, then watched indifferently as Lu Yizhan raised his hands on the screen and said, as he stepped in front of Bai Liu, who had raised his gun, that if you want to do this, you should kill me first.

At that moment, Cen Buming was even expecting Bai Liu to shoot Lu Yizhan, he was standing by and could have saved Lu Yizhan's life in any case, and at that moment, Bai Liu had also crossed the line. Yizhan had no reason to stop him.

He no longer had to get caught up in the logical paradox of [the other person must have done something bad in order to be executed] with Lu Yizhan, a stupid, one-track minded person.

The game ended at that moment too.

But Lu Yizhan just waited, just held his hands up and waited for Bai Liu to put down his gun, and from Cen Buming's perspective he could see the light shining in Lu Yizhan's eyes, his hands were shaking, his voice was shaking, but Lu Yizhan was still smiling: "I told you, until you really do something wrong, I will never will never pull a gun on you."

"-in that case, if you're really going to do something bad, then please kill this incompetent me before you really do it."

Cen Buming knew of Lu Yizhan's hesitant attitude towards Bai Liu, but at that moment, Cen Buming saw, apart from Lu Yizhan's shaking hands, that

-- Bai Liu's hand, gripping the gun, was also shaking.

The shaking is so slight, so subtle, that Lu Yizhan, a fool standing at close range, wouldn't necessarily notice it, because Bai Liu's expression is so calm.

But Cen Buming found out, he even found out, that this shrewd and vigilant, cold-blooded monster who double-checks the loyalty of even his own soul-possessing team members, and even kills them at the slightest sign of betrayal, even when Bai Liu didn't notice that there was another one hiding in the shadows of the place because his attention was all on Lu Yizhan.

This is incredible.

--It's like the first time Cen Buming met eighteen-year-old Bai Liu, bruised and wet, crawling out of a wishing pond on the school hill and rescuing a classmate who had ill will towards him.

By that time Bai Liu was unconscious, but he had a death grip on that classmate's hand and didn't let him drown - and it was the hand of a classmate he harboured murderous intentions for.

This is the first time that Cen Buming has shown mercy to a derivative of [Bai six].

Cen Buming hides in silence in the shade and watches as Lu Yizhan steps forward to pick up Bai Liu, whose mind is already blurred, his hands rolled helplessly off Lu Yizhan's shoulders, looking only half as wide as Lu Yizhan, weak as a small animal without a nest and without any shelter.

At that time, if Cen Buming had wanted to kill Bai Liu, he might not have needed a gun, he would have simply pushed him off Lu Yizhan's shoulders and Bai Liu would have fallen to the ground, curled up in a ball, and frozen to death on the hill behind the school.

Lu Yizhan took Bai Liu to the entrance of the hill and then hurried back to deal with the aftermath of the heresy in the wishing pond, bowing with his hands together and asking Cen Buming: "Please look after Bai Liu for me and see that he gets back to the dormitory properly."

Cen Buming, with his hands on his chest and his face full of indifference, rightly tried to refuse, but Lu Yizhan looked up at him with a straight face: " Bai Liu, as the first person you want to execute, don't you want to observe more and get to know him better?"

"I don't really want to know more about the prisoner I'm putting to death." Cen Buming turned his head coldly.

"At least until the execution." Lu Yizhan, however, was very insistent, "Let's see if he's really the one you want to execute, right?"

Cen Buming was quiet for a long time as he was forcibly pushed up the hill by Lu Yizhan, following a deflated Bai Liu as he watched him return to his dormitory.

Eighteen year old high school student, thin shirt, wobbling twice with one step, choking and coughing every now and then, needing to rest against the wall to continue walking .....

Cen Buming withdrew his eyes in annoyance, a strange and violent emotion rushing through his heart.

For a moment, he even wanted to rush down and ask Bai Liu, why did you stop when you were clearly trying to kill that stupid fat guy who was bullying you?

Why do you have to get yourself into such a mess!

Why do you want me to see this side of you?

..... Such a Bai Liu is so much like a human being that he has no way of treating him as a heretic.

Cen Buming couldn't kill this guy who shivered in the lake from the cold, who buried himself in Lu Yizhan's shoulder and wept silently, who pulled his bullying classmates back from death and whose hands shook when he drew his gun on his friends, as brutally as he could kill a monster.

--There was no way he could kill this living, breathing, emotional, tearful, painful Bai Liu.

But do ..... people really change?

So many world lines, and in each one, so many heretics who have done the same wrong, who have harmed countless people, who have died again and again under his gun, showing their ugly faces because they were sunk in lust -

--Not to mention the aggregate of desire itself, a derivative of the evil god Bai six.

..... Just by changing the name and having some meagre emotional connection, do people really change that much, even against the original purpose of their birth?

Cen Buming had no way of believing that he couldn't be like that fool Lu Yizhan, over six hundred world lines later, and still have the ability to trust a monster; he could only be alert, kill, and choke out any danger in the cradle -

--This is the reason why the hunter was born in the first place.

The Drowning Man from the Future

"Confirm the hatch to level 0 first." Cen Buming gathered his thoughts and ordered calmly, "Look for the type of key to the hatch and start your search on level 1, being careful not to run into any of the heretics here, and try not to engage in combat until you have encountered the enemy and expended yourself."

"Yes, Captain!"

The team scattered, even Daniel, who was less than honest, was warned by Cen Buming and started actively searching for the key.

"Captain, judging by the hatch, the key should be a reverse cross about 10cm long, with a circuit." The team member who was confirming the hatch turned his head sideways, "After touching the hatch to level 0, a text alert popped up, which should have indicated the location of the key."

Cen Buming looks up: "What's the tip?"

"[The drowning man from the future]." The player said, "-and one more sentence."

"[Judge Against God, Final Judgement Result]."

The pupil of Cen Buming's right eye constricts very slightly and he turns sideways, looking towards the end of the cloister - where it is stored, is Heretic 0001.

--The heretic named [Future].

..... from [future] drowning .....

Cen Buming's heart pounded wildly for no apparent reason, and he started towards the end of the corridor, the light fading a little in his clear yellow right eye, his face an almost uncanny grimace.

Lu Yizhan's soft, calm voice rang in his ears.

[I want to create a special place with the last layer of the Heretical Authority].

[I want to use this layer to place a particular kind of heresy].

[--Humanoid Heresy.]

The closer he got to the last heretic, the more chaotic Cen Buming's breathing became, his mind was going blank, and all that remained was Lu Yizhan's laughing voice.

[The last layer of the Heretic Authority are all humanoid heretics, they are either spiritually descended humans or heretics with humans as their carriers, they are not ordinary objects or monsters but have become this way under the manipulation of the evil gods, and it is not fair to judge them in the conventional way].

[They're people, not monsters.]

[..... I was wondering if I could approach them in a more appropriate way, by exploring their genesis to avoid them becoming heretics again in the next world line].

With a shimmering light in his eyes, Cen Buming took a deep breath and recalled how he had answered Lu Yizhan: "I'm sorry, I'm sorry.

He sneered: [Lu Yizhan, are you always so whimsical? Who will take the risk of exploring the causes of heresies, and who will bear the risk of these unstable heresies in the process?]

Lu Yizhan thought hard and replied: [..... What do you think about the position (of guardian)?]

[Assign to heretics (guardians) and let the guardians take the risk.]

[Even if you set it up, who would want to be in a thankless position like (guardian)?] Cen Buming's expression grew more and more sarcastic, [I think you're really stupid and crazy, not only do the bad guys want to save, but now even the heretics want to save.]

[The Heresy Authority has enough work now, heretics are popping up all the time, every heretic in the house needs a team member, you set up the position [of guardian], who do you have doing it?]

[And heretics are people?]

[Even if humanoid heretics do start out with a human side, how do you prove that they can always maintain human consciousness, feelings?]

Cen Buming looked grim: [Even behind Captain Yu's eye-tunnel food, she kept attacking her teammates, devouring the eyeballs of the ones she once least wanted to hurt, how can you be sure that these heretics really possess human characteristics all the time?]

[A humanoid heretic is still a heretic after all.]

[They will all eventually become complete monsters.]

Cen Buming remembers that moment when Lu Yizhan was silent for a long, long time, then lowered his head and said in a very soft, yet insistent voice: [..... I'm sure heretics can keep human feelings all the time].

[What did you use to determine that?] Cen Buming sneers, [with your naive fantasies?]

[The Bureau of Heresy Processing is a place of evidence, and if you can prove to me that there really are heretics who can remain human consciousness without hurting people, I will agree to your whimsical proposal].

Lu Yizhan looked up at Cen Buming for a long, long time and opened his mouth as if to say something, but in the end not a word came out, just a scratch of his head and a light smile.

[..... Well, I can't prove it.]

[You are right, the proposal is indeed whimsical, no one would want to be a guardian].

[I'll be the guardian of all those heretics, then].

[You!] Cen Buming is furious, [Lu Yizhan, I really don't understand what you're thinking sometimes!]

[Are you a spy sent by the heretics? Why do you have to be on the side of the heretics? Why are you so sympathetic to these heretics?]

Cen Buming's icy sneer: [I sometimes really suspect that you are a heretic, Lu Yizhan.]

Lu Yizhan smiled with a curved eyebrow, he didn't retort: [Probably.]

Cen Buming walked one step at a time to the 0001 heretic at the end of the cloister, he raised his head, reached out his hand and touched the metal sealed room, at once a warm luminescence spread out and the metal sealed door opened and the light fell on Cen Buming's trance-like face.

A pillar made of transparent material was filled with a silvery-blue, seawater-like liquid, and in the midst of it was suspended a sleeping soul, who floated quietly as if drowning.

He is wearing the uniform of the first detachment, his smiling eyes are closed, there are very slight bubbles around his mouth and nose, his expression is relaxed and serene, and on his chest hangs a reverse cross pendant, about the size of the key to the hatch on level 0.

Cen Buming's expression went completely blank as he looked at the file of instructions on the electronic screen that popped up next to this pillar and floated in the air.

[Heresy 0001 name: Future].

[Category: Humanoid Heresy]

[Carrier proper: the spirit of Lu Yizhan, the prophet of the generation].

[..... Lu Yizhan, the prophet of the generation, was spiritually descended in world line 658 and transformed into a heretic, transported to all world lines through the system backend, and imprisoned as heretic 0001 in the deepest part of the Heretic Authority .....]

[A harmless humanoid heretic with self-awareness that has been attempting to let others know what will happen (in the future) by showing an unfortunate future to everyone who has watched it, trying to circumvent the future by doing so, but after inadvertently causing people to go insane, has adopted a self-imposed closure and has begun to discreetly show the future... ...]

[Conceptual Being, no entity .....]

[The process of creation: Because in the game of the evil gods, the prophet has to pay a painful price for each world line equal to the opening of the world line, eventually the evil gods chose to collect the pain of a generation of prophets in this way].

[He transformed the prophet into the (future) itself, a humanoid heretic that can only exist as a concept, that has emotions and consciousness, that does not want to harm anyone, that wants to save all mankind, that comes from the final world line and knows the end of all world lines, so it will do everything it can to reveal the future to the world, so that the world can avoid that future].

[But man himself fears (the future) and will fall into madness after glimpsing (it).]

[All it does is struggle feebly, but even knowing the end, the future incarnated by the prophet will never cease to struggle, and it will remain so painfully present because it has hope in its heart, imprisoned as a heretic in the deepest recesses of the earth as the unanticipated future itself].

[At the end of the game in World 658, whether the Prophet wins or loses, as part of the deal he made with the Evil God at the beginning, the soul of Lu Yizhan, the Prophet, will be recycled to the system background.]

[- And his soul, which will exist forever as a carrier (of the future).]

Cen Buming stopped in front of this illustrative file for a long, long time, without saying a word, then very slowly bowed and hammered the ground hard, his head bowed, his hair hanging down to make out his expression, droplets of water sliding down his jaw.

[I have seen my future].

Lu Yizhan smiled at him and said: [That's a good future].

Where is this considered good enough!!!

Cen Buming gritted his teeth, his eyes red, his mind and chest on the verge of burning with emotion as he struggled to keep himself from pulling out and beating the sleeping spirit of Lu Yizhan, who was locked in a pillar.

..... No wonder the guy was so anxious to find Bai Liu from the deer hunters to be the next generation of prophet successors, no wonder the guy kept saying he was coming to the end of the line, no wonder .....

Lu Yizhan, on the verge of not being able to hold out and becoming a heretic, had to pass on what was still in his hands before he became a heretic.

..... Why would he ignore it?

The connection between [Prophet] and [Future], why had he overlooked it? It was clearly right in front of him, but he had never thought of this layer.

For how could Lu Yizhan, who was always so silly and persistent, have descended mentally to the point of becoming a heretic?

How can it be a heresy!

He can mentally descend, Tang Erda can mentally descend, and everyone is mentally descending little by little over 658 long and desperate world lines into a humanoid heretic on the verge of losing control.

Of course he would.

Lu Yizhan is the closest to the evil god [prophet], he is the one who delivers the most pain ……

Cen Buming closed his eyes as he took a deep breath and clenched his hands.

…… first took in the cult of [Future] in the 0006 world line, when Lu Yizhan had seen his own [Future].

In other words, this guy knew from the sixth world line what would follow - he would keep losing, losing 657 world lines, losing until he became a heretic.

Lu Yizhan knows everything.

He knew he was going to lose the game from the moment he started it.

But Lu Yizhan didn't say anything, he pretended he didn't see that kind of future, turned to him with a smile and said it was a good future, and then reluctantly, doggedly, struggled alone with a known failure [future] until now, accompanying everyone to the last world line.

After the end of the last world line, he will become [future] forever.

What are you thinking about Lu Yizhan ?

What kind of future did you see when you entrusted everything to Bai Liu?

What exactly do you see in the future in the last line of ……?

Propping himself up on his knees, Cen Buming slowly stood up and looked up at Lu Yizhan's soul, suspended in the liquid, emitting a faint luminescence.

--Show me the future as you see it for once.

Lu Yizhan .

An icy mechanical tone came from the system ship: [Warning! Warning!]

[Touching heresy 0001, about to be contaminated!]

A snowy white light blossomed before Cen Buming's eyes as he gripped the key to the reverse cross and closed his eyes.

Second level of the system ship.

Hearing the system beep from the floorboards, the circus party who had walked to this floor and were rummaging for information stopped moving and looked up.

" Cen Buming they're up there." Tang Erda gazed solemnly at Bai Liu, "Just as you guessed, what do we do next?"

"They didn't come down and stayed on the first level, so that basically means the odds are that the key is on the first level." Bai Liu analyses calmly, and as he sees Mu Sicheng preparing to move up, he raises his hand and presses down in a gesture of stopping

"But we're in no hurry to go up there for now."

"Wait a little longer."

Mu Sicheng stared at Bai Liu, his tone a little impetuous: "What else do you want to wait for?"

Bai Liu gave a pause: "..... waiting for the right moment."

Now even Tang Erda sensed that something was wrong with Bai Liu and he looked over, frowning and asking; "The right time, what is it?"

Bai Liu's mind works faster than theirs, especially in scenarios like this, where he can figure out the key points of the game but can't explain them to his teammates in a few words, so Bai Liu will often order things to be done first and come back to explain them later.

But never has it been so vague ..... at first glance when it comes to stalling for time.

Bai Liu is a tactician of extreme tactics, he never avoids his opponent's attacks and prefers to win first, with a surprise attack, without giving his opponent a chance to counterattack.

But in this copy ..... Bai Liu has been circumventing the encounter between the two sides.

Tang Erda looked at Bai Liu, hesitant to ask, but in the end he did not.

-- Bai Liu, what are you afraid of?

You've never ..... been afraid of the game.

Bai Liu looked up, his unperturbed look again, "The right time is after the Joker and Cen Buming have spent their first skills."

"After that, we were able to have fifteen minutes of safe attack time."

"But how are we going to drain their skills if we don't even go up there?" Muke looked up at Bai Liu and asked softly, "Are you going to use roaming as bait to hang the main two skills first?"

"If that's the tactic, I can go up there and try it."

-- Muke's assassin skills are roaming and controlling, Bai Liu is usually used for raid reactions, and he held up Georgia and Armand's two main opponents in the last round.

"No." Bai Liu said calmly, "I'll go up there and wear out my skills."

Everyone frowned at this statement.

"You're the tactician, the heart of this team, you can't roam for shit!" Mu Sicheng's tone was so strong that he stared at Bai Liu with a dark look in his eyes, "Muke and I can do this job, you can't!"

Liu Jiayi also shook his head disapprovingly, "I can follow up with the match and open a poison swamp to control the field so they can easily roam, but you, as the tactician, are not allowed to take the lead in roaming."

"Even if it does come to your turn to strike, it will be if we all fail."

"It's too risky for you to go straight up there."

Bai Liu wrapped his arms around his chest, his index finger tapping his elbow once or twice, and lowered his eyes without speaking.

Sure enough it turned out to be what it is now.

They did not yet know that there was some other half of their own souls on this system backstage, nor did they know that they had been stored as heretics in this ship, which was not supposed to be their copy of this round, but rather that they were passing to some copy of another world line and jumping to this staging platform in the system backstage, when they were intercepted by Bai six, allowing them to forcefully land on They were intercepted by Bai six when they passed to another worldline and jumped to this transit platform in the system backend, forcing them to land on this ship and using it as their copy for this round.

Bai six, the psychopath, had a purpose, and since he had intervened to land them and Cen Buming on this ship, he must have had something in store for him.

And this backhand is mostly related to Joker's skill; Bai six himself has unlimited access to the Soul Crusher, and if Bai six has also landed on this ship, this translates to having two Soul Crusher guns on this ship, one of which has not yet CD'd.

Frankly speaking, Bai Liu is not sure.

So he was keen to get the Wandering Circus out of the way, he would rather be on his own against Bai six.

But therein lies the problem.

This is the backend of the system and Bai Liu has determined that the option to exit the game in the system panel is useless. With no automatic exit from the game, Bai Liu has only one option to get these players out of the game - to actively clear them out.

However, ... Bai Liu is not sure whether the conceptual prop created by the system, the Death Free Gold Medal, is in effect here in the system backend.

This is essentially a place outside the game where props are produced, it is not known if the props have an effect, and if they don't, Bai Liu is killing them by clearing them out.

So that means Bai Liu has only one option - to get control of the ship, as the system requires, and then fly this ship down to the 658 world line and bring them back inside the game lobby or to the ground.

But in the process of getting control of the ship .....

Bai Liu can't guarantee that those around him aren't acting, just acting, too many elements of danger on this whole ship, Bai six could land at any moment with the other half of their souls hidden inside the ship, the Joker's soul-crushing gun and Cen Buming who has obvious murderous intent towards him .....

He was in fear that there was no way to safely take everyone off the ship.

[Feelings that make people vulnerable.]

Bai Liu's pupils flinched as he heard Bai six's flippant laughter in his ears, cascading like waves of water.

[You were already strong enough to fight me, but just because you brought these people with you, you have become so weak].

[They're just a liability to you.]

[Throw away the tiredness so you can become strong enough].

[You can kill me.]

Bai Liu turned his head, Bai Liu's voice disappeared, the universe outside the window was like water ripples, spreading out like ripples, as if someone's laughing voice had fallen like a stone, smashing out an echo, Bai Liu looked at the vast silver-blue universe with no boundaries, Bai Liu's dark pupils were devoid of any emotion, he showed a rare empty expression.

..... this space looks .....

..... seems to have swallowed Xie Ta's water ten years ago.

Who is this water ..... going to drown today?

Bai Liu's heart palpitated for a moment, but he quickly gathered all his expression and turned his head, his eyes half-closed, his tone flat: "On the field of play, it is the consensus of all to take orders from the tactician."

"My tactic is that I go up alone first and after I drain the opponent's double skills, you guys come back up."

Muke pursed his lips, Liu Jiayi blushed strangely, Mu Sicheng hammered the fence in anger, trying to say something but holding back under Bai Liu's cold warning glare, and even Tang Erda, the main attacker who never disobeyed Bai Liu on the field, frowned and objected: "One person? "

"That doesn't make sense, Bai Liu, even if you go up there to draw skills, at least bring Mu Sicheng and Muke with you, so it's easier to play together."

"No need." Bai Liu turned, his back unmistakably calm, the light coming in through the window gilding him with a bright, silvery-blue glow, "I'll be fine up there alone."

Advertisement

"I'll draw the skills and you guys can come back up."

[Bai Liu, you're hesitating.]

Bai Liu's laughing voice, which was far away and close, spread around Bai Liu again, murmuring softly as if in a nightmare -

-- [You don't even dare to look back at their expressions].

[Is it so fearful that they will drown on this ship?]

Bai Liu's walk towards the lift paused for a moment as Bai six's voice in the air continued with a laugh.

[Why the fear?]

[Haven't we already seen this about their future?]

[I have to be honest with you, that future was not something I showed you on purpose, it was a future that another well-meaning guy, fighting tooth and nail, sacrificing himself to show you, wanted you to avoid.]

[- but still you have come here, guided by fate and me, to this future].

[At this moment, you and they are both drowning people from the future].

"I won't let a future like that come." Bai Liu stepped into the lift and he heard his voice reply very softly, "I won't let anyone drown in front of me again."

"-even in the future, no."

Bai six retorted with a smile, [But you are only a human being].

[The future destined by God, but only the overthrow of God.]

[If you want to overturn the future you've seen, there's only one way to do it - become the next generation of evil gods].

Bai Liu didn't answer, he lowered his head and drew his long whip from his back, clenching the end of it and exhaling slowly as the door to the straight staircase slowly closed behind him.

He didn't turn to look into the eyes of those staring behind him until that last moment, and if he had to do it all over again, Bai Liu felt he should have turned and looked.

--After all, that was the last time I saw them in their entirety.

The Drowning Man from the Future

The doors open in both directions and Bai Liu slowly looks up to see Cen Buming, his eyes red and his hands clenched, standing outside looking at him.

The hatred, disbelief, deception, and murderous intent in the man's eyes finally boiled over into the worst he had ever imagined.

"So that's the future the idiot saw ....." Cen Buming's face twisted into a grimace, the sneer he grunted out of his throat was like blood, he staggered, completely out of order, but extremely fast. In the blink of an eye he was in front of Bai Liu, grabbing him by the collar and pinning him to the ground, punching him in a fury, "How can you ....."

Cen Buming's voice and fists trembled, tears shifted in his eyes and his voice broke and rasped, "How can ....."

"In the [future], kill Lu Yizhan with your own hands!

"You already knew that didn't you! You've seen [the future] before! You must have known the future, Heretic 0001, was Lu Yizhan himself!!!"

"He raised you with his own hands, stood in your way again and again, did everything he could for you, forewarned you of everything, and you killed him!!!"

"Do you have a heart, Bai Liu!!!"

Bai Liu's whip stalled, his pupils shrinking to a tiny dot, all the incongruous pieces of his memory instantly connecting, his whole body feeling like it had fallen into icy water, entering a dazed and unreal state.

On the day of ....., yes, he had seen [Future], he had seen a small TV in the heresy [Future] showing footage of the future and a man who was recording archive points, wearing the uniform of the captain of the first detachment, and he took it for granted at the time that Lu Yizhan existed in this heresy as a prophet and was simply using He took it for granted that Lu Yizhan existed in the heresy as a prophet and was simply using the heretic's savings place to record the archive points.

He thought the heretic was whichever little TV was showing [the future].

He really didn't expect ..... didn't expect .....

Bai six chuckled softly in Bai Liu's ear, who was in a dazed state - [It's normal that you didn't think of it.]

[Because you didn't expect that there would be human beings in this world who could be self-aware after being used as a carrier for heretics, did you? No one would have thought that the little TV in the future is not a heretic, but that Lu Yizhan is the one who is moving around.]

[That's its soul trapped in the future.]

[Even I didn't expect Lu Yizhan to be trying to save you after what he had become.]

[It thus survives consciousness, and it believes that you can change the end of the world line.]

[-even if it had already seen the future of all world lines.]

Bai Liu pulls out his whip and shakes Cen Buming off his back. He stands up on the ground, his chest heaving violently, and when he looks up at Cen Buming, the silvery-blue glow of space through the see-through window is reflected in the pupils of his dark eyes.

The light spreads out on the surface of his eyes as dots of light that float upwards, like bubbles exhaled by a drowning man in the deep sea.

658 lines of the world turn outside the window and the light in Bai Liu's pupils dissipates, like the last bubbles exhaled by a drowning man dissipating into the deep sea.

..... is still able to maintain consciousness as a heretical carrier.

He should have thought of it, he knew it, he had seen it.

The Lu Yizhan who looked up from the last prison in the Rose Factory, covered in faded petals, smiled and said it had been a long time, the Lu Yizhan who sat on the sofa, wiped his eyes and choked up and said 50 per cent...

--the one who, as if losing all strength, stood relieved before him and said in a daze.

[I'm getting old.]

[Behind me, there is no longer a living soul].

Lu Yizhan of ..... .

He should have thought of it, why didn't he?

At this moment, even Bai Liu himself is a little confused, as there are so many pieces of facts that have been put together that only one more layer of reasoning is needed to reach a conclusion.

Why didn't you think of it?

"You have no feelings!!!" Cen Buming roared hoarsely as he gripped the Ring of Death and flung a long black blade in the silver light of the Ring, slashing at Bai Liu's head, "You did that on purpose!"

"You lied to Lu Yizhan! You knew everything, you took advantage of his trust in you and made him delegate his authority [to the prophet] to you!"

"And then you kill him again! And then you win the game!"

"Is playing with mortals and scavenging pain so much fun for a monster like you?!"

Cen Buming stabbed Bai Liu in the shoulder, pinning him to the wall of the lift, and hissed in anger, "You set this up from the beginning!"

Bai Liu looked up slowly as he gripped Cen Buming's knife, clenched it and pulled it outwards, his tone broken and hoarse: "No ....."

Blood ran down the palm of his hand where he held the blade.

"I didn't lie to Lu Yizhan ....."

"I just ..... didn't know heretic 0001 was him."

"You just what?!" Cen Buming withdrew his knife and slashed down, drawing it and slashing again, brutally jamming the blade into Bai Liu's throat and pressing, "You saw Lu Yizhan in the future, how could you not know that?!"

Bai Liu blocked with his whip, the blade and the whip made a harsh interlocking sound as the lift doors slowly closed and began to sink, Bai Liu reached his foot out and stepped on the lift door, his shoulder caught in the knife, blood stained his white shirt and slid down, staining a large area in moments.

..... can't get the lift to close down.

If they see him like this, they will definitely get involved and then the situation will be uncontrollable.

The knife in Cen Buming's hand got harder and harder, jamming into the bone in Bai Liu's shoulder, his voice had the coldness of fury at its height: "Answer me, Bai Liu --"

"Stop with this inferior excuse that I don't know about, I know how smart you are, there's no way you didn't push out that Heretic 0001 was Lu Yizhan--"

"- Did you offer to watch Heretic 0001 at that time just to irritate him and make him suffer more for your harvesting?!"

Bai Liu opened his mouth, he couldn't really answer.

For a moment, Bai Liu himself is dazed by Cen Buming's assertive questioning - is he really an emotionless monster, so he deliberately can't push it out, so Lu Yizhan can be tortured and everyone can lose the game?

But clearly, that's not what he thought.

Bai Liu's voice reappeared, soft and smiling: [It's really fun to see you in pain and confusion.]

[I have been watching you and can tell you the answer as to why you have not deduced-]

[- You actually had a premonition, but people have a fear of things they care about, like Lu Yizhan running from the future, and you're running from the fact that there's a Lu Yizhan in Heresy 0001].

[You are afraid, you don't want to, so you refuse to acknowledge that the heretic, that is Lu Yizhan himself].

[- It's like you always think you can change the future that God has ordained].

"It seems you can't answer that." Cen Buming coldly withdrew his long knife as he flung his hand out, the Death Ring slipping from his ring and taking the form of a well, "And I have nothing to say to the sinner."

"Go into the well and repent for what little is left of your life."

[System Alert: Heretic 0009 Cen Buming uses Monster Book Skill - (Sinners Well) on player Bai Liu]

[This skill imprisons someone the Heretic himself deems guilty in a well full of monsters; if the imprisoned player does not emerge from the well before exiting the game, he dies in the well (this skill ignores the death-free token), with a cooldown of thirty minutes.]

The whole system ship began to turn at that moment, jolting so hard that the well of sinners that had taken shape on the landing veered to the left, just above the long whip that Bai Liu was holding in front of the lift doors, which closed in Bai Liu's constricted pupils and flew down amidst the vibrations of the system ship.

Bai Liu fell forward, he stepped over Cen Buming to block the door and stepped on the well of sin, which began to swallow him up, Bai Liu threw out his whip and grabbed the loop in the lift, pulling himself down, he looked up, a very faint light in the pupils of those dark eyes on his blood-stained face.

"I ..... might actually be a monster."

"But I have feelings."

Cen Buming looked at Bai Liu, who was unconscious and in tears, and his brain felt like it had been hammered by something, sobering him for a brief moment from the intensity of his emotions.

The Bai Liu in front of me, who is unconscious and in tears, is the same Bai Liu who was curled up on Lu Yizhan's shoulder six years ago, in tears of peace.

[Look at the person you are going to execute].

[He's really not a monster, he's a human being].

Cen Buming's heart clenches for a moment, and as his heart clenches so does the well of sin, to the point where it wraps around Bai Liu's feet and stops, going from the size of a lift shaft to the size of a fist.

[System Warning: Heretic Cen Buming has a shaken mind and is unable to treat player Bai Liu as a sinner and is imprisoned in the (Sinner's Well), the (Sinner's Well) skill will soon be disabled.]

"Really." Bai Liu's voice, which had been floating in Bai Liu's ears for some time, finally came to life, "I didn't think Mr. Hunter would let you go after all this."

"I didn't expect to go soft on you after all, Bai Liu."

A black-gloved hand poked out from the edge of the well, ripping open the narrowed opening like a book, and peeked through the silvery-blue glowing mouth, grabbing Bai Liu's foot and dragging him downwards.

"The game still goes on." Bai six in the well, smiling, says to Bai Liu, "Then I'll have to intervene artificially."

Bai six, holding out his hand, he smiled and said, "Your soul, just go into the well with me and play some other game."

"You're the only humanoid heretic soul I have left on this system ship, Bai Liu."

At the same time, the lift doors slowly opened and Mu Sicheng and Muke, who had been anxiously guarding the lift doors, looked back and saw Bai Liu slowly falling down.

Muke's expression froze.

"What did you do to Bai Liu--" Mu Sicheng's pupils narrowed, and his hands quickly turned into monkey paws as he shot into the lift with one foot on the fence, the tip of his paws going straight for Cen Buming's throat, his voice furious. "--did what?!"

Mu Sicheng pushed Cen Buming into the lift and attacked like a tiger, Muke caught Bai Liu and passed him to Liu Jiayi and Tang Erda behind him.

"Keep an eye on him." Muke took a deep breath, "Mu Sicheng and I will go up first, you wait for the next lift once we've cleared the area up there."

Liu Jiayi nods solemnly, and before Tang Erda can say anything, Muke follows Mu Sicheng into the lift.

The lift closed in the middle of a violent fight and Tang Erda wanted to follow, but Liu Jiayi stopped him.

The calm little girl was in a state of shock, her hands trembling as she tugged at the corner of Tang Erda's coat, her eyes grey: "Tang Erda ....."

" Bai Liu, out of breath."

Tang Erda quickly half-crouched down as he checked Bai Liu's signs, and his expression hardened, he was more experienced in the game than Liu Jiayi and had seen this happen a few times: "..... Bai Liu's soul has been pulled out of his body. "

"Bai Liu, who logged out of the game, will die if he can't get his soul back."

"Until then, we must never let anyone destroy Bai Liu's shell, otherwise the life value will clear and the shell will automatically diminish, and then even if the soul comes out, it won't be able to log out of the game without the shell as a carrier."

"..... What will happen then?" Liu Jiayi looked at Bai Liu, who was not even breathing, and tried hard to control herself from crying out.

" Bai Liu's soul ....." Tang Erda paused, "will then remain on this ship forever."

"Go up first, you can't let Bai Liu's body and soul get too far apart, otherwise the connection will be broken and the subsequent fusion will go wrong."

The lift slowly opened and Cen Buming practically wrestled the two wanderers who had attacked him like mad out of the lift, the violent commotion on this side of the lift attracting the Deer Hunter crew who had gone elsewhere earlier, including Daniel who had been casually looking for his keys.

Daniel's bored expression changed and his apple-green eyes lit up at the sight of Muke and Mu Sicheng, who had been thrown to the ground by Cen Buming.

"Ciao～" Daniel crouched down and waved his right hand at Muke and Mu Sicheng on the ground with a grin, "Finally, I see you-"

"-my godfather's useless trash subordinates."

The comical clown mask on Daniel's face was askew as he smiled a very excited smile and drew the green sniper rifle from his back, "I can finally kill you all and give my godfather less of a burden!"

"Don't shoot at them!" Cen Buming drew his hand and sliced away Daniel's sniper rifle aimed at Mu Sicheng, and he chided coldly, "Obey orders in the league!"

The gun in Daniel's hand was knocked out of his hand and he shrugged, boringly stowing it behind his waist, "OK, if you have to force it."

Mu Sicheng leapt up at that moment and slashed Cen Buming in the side of the neck with his claws forming a knife, his tone vicious: "Who wants your kindness!"

The lift opened again, and this time it was Liu Jiayi and Tang Erda who came up, Tang Erda in front of Bai Liu's torso and Liu Jiayi, who also looked very cold and stern, looking at Cen Buming with an almost angry condemnation in his eyes - able to extract The only skill he could have guessed was Cen Buming's well of sinners.

After all, only Daniel's Soul Crusher and Cen Buming's Sinner's Well are rules skills.

The only way to get Bai Liu's soul back is for Cen Buming himself to open the well of sinners and spit Bai Liu's soul out.

Tang Erda picks up Bai Liu with her left hand and places him in the corner, her right hand flings out a gun and drives it straight at Cen Buming's head, while Daniel, who has just hidden the gun behind himself, looks at Bai Liu's torso, his lips curling slightly, his apple-green eyes flaring out like a savage beast that has caught a whiff of something fishy.

"The Godfather ....."

The clown smiled wryly, "I even dreamt about you last night."

"-that's a beautiful dream then."

"But what about when I wake up and you're not with me and it turns into a nightmare."

He drew his soul sniper rifle, his face hidden beneath the mask twisted with excitement, and to everyone's surprise, the Joker aimed the gun at Bai Liu lying on the ground, the muzzle of the sniper rifle coalescing with disturbing green energy, and everyone heard the sound of a green bullet capable of shattering souls being loaded.

"How can you lie so peacefully on the ground and dream when you see my first face?"

The clown said briskly and cheerfully.

As if in slow motion, Tang Erda's pupils tightened and he quickly retreated back to defend, raising his gun to aim at Daniel.

Bai Liu's torso cannot be attacked!

Liu Jiayi held onto Bai Liu for dear life, using her body to shield Bai Liu as much as possible, her eyelashes trembling with fear and helplessness, Muke gritted his teeth and tapped the panel to use [Flash Strike] -

--but all over the field, the fastest, it was the last man.

Mu Sicheng stepped in front of Bai Liu with a speed that was almost invisible to the naked eye, his face expressionless, a blank space before he could even think.

But he stepped in front of Bai Liu.

In Daniel's eyes, there was a tasteless scowl, the back of Mu Sicheng in his sights - he'd expected that if he aimed his gun at the Godfather, these guys would be scrambling to get killed.

Didn't Cen Buming say he couldn't target other players?

He didn't.

It was these stupid players who came over to get themselves killed.

Daniel laughed nastily as he pulled the trigger.

-- It only takes a little more thought for these useless pieces of rubbish to see how he could have shot his own godfather?

His targets, since the beginning, have been these fools who are not in their right mind and think how important they are to the Godfather.

Green bullets are shot.

Muke's pupils flinched, and he threw out a dagger to hit Mu Sicheng squarely in the back of the head, and Mu Sicheng was shaken by the blow and fell forward into Bai Liu's arms.

The one that hit him first was still the bullet.

Pale fire blazed through his body in an instant, and Mu Sicheng's mind was able to think instead in this moment - so this is what it feels like to be shot with a soul-crushing gun ……

Wang Shun is right, it really hurts, it's like a thousand knives scraping through your body at the same time, being cut into a million pieces.

But what is even sadder is the feeling that the thought is fading away.

It is as if your life, in this moment, has no meaning, and everything you have struggled for and survived for, is no longer interesting.

The fire reached Mu Sicheng's face and he struggled to lift his eyelids to look at Bai Liu in front of him, sleeping with no life at all, and suddenly smiled as tears fell from his eyes and then flowed down in a steady stream.

…… Now I don't even have a soul.

Are you still my friend, Bai Liu ?

I wish I could ask you to your face, you thin-skinned bastard ……

But now ……

There seems to be no way out.

Mu Sicheng's eyelids drooped and the fire burned upwards, trying to consume the last vestiges of him, and the last thing that stopped his thoughts were the words that Bai Liu had said to him the first time he played the game with him -

-- [I promised him that I would save him].

Mu Sicheng pulled back and smiled as he disappeared completely into the firelight, leaving no trace of his presence.

I don't believe you, Bai Liu.

[System Alert: Player Mu Sicheng's soul is shattered, confirmed dead, exit the game].

The Drowning Man from the Future

The Well of Sinners.

Bai six, legs folded, arms crossed, sat on the towering corpse of the monster as if on a throne, smiling and looking down at Bai Liu with a crooked smile, "I have cleaned the inside of the Well of Sinners to welcome you."

"Of course by the look on your face, you don't seem to like it here very much."

"Oh yes, that was the same look you had when you first saw me in the fifth building." Bai six tilted his head slightly, his smile becoming friendly, "Of course, now your expression is much more emotionally exposed-"

"Are you, in fact, hating me?"

"By the way, I never tell lies as far as God is concerned, remember the friendly reminder I gave you back in the fifth building?"

Bai six's right hand curled against his jaw, and he let out a soft laugh as he lowered his eyes, "I say the first person to die will be Mu Sicheng."

The moment he said this, a burning sensation suddenly came from inside the gloves Bai Liu was wearing, his fingertips burned, and his expression froze as he instantly turned them into his wallet.

The wallet was opened, and Bai Liu saw the soul note with Mu Sicheng on it burning fast and then turning into ashes.

Bai Liu pauses as he maintains the position of opening his wallet.

The ashes drifted down the cracked seam of the old purse and fell to the ground.

"Bai Liu, do you know what you look like now?" Bai six's eyelids dropped indifferently, his mouth tilted with a very light smile, "You look like a tramp who dropped an insignificant coin, and then fumbled around on his knees looking for it."

"- a poor tramp with only so many working coins, and who kept them unused in his wallet because he couldn't be bothered to keep them, and looked after each one to shine."

"But as much as you look after them, coins are just coins, they are only worth so much and don't increase in value because you can't part with them, rather they will take up space in your wallet."

"They are not worth keeping in your purse, make room for them and give up these burdens."

"You'll be able to fit more, and more valuable, notes in your wallet."

Bai Liu flung his hand violently to the right, throwing out the white bone whip, his emotionless mask of expression finally disintegrating completely to reveal a hideous interior: "Don't call them worthless paper money in front of me!!!"

"They are human, they are souls!!!"

The white bone whip was thrown hard, lifting all the monsters, and Bai six jumped down from the mountain of monsters high above him, he laughed and drew his black bone whip and threw it down at Bai Liu.

"It's a human being, it's a soul, so what can it be?"

Bai six smiled softer and softer: "It's just a toy for the gods."

"To exist or to perish is but a thought, a word, of God."

The black whip struck the white bone whip, and the unabated force pushed the whipping Bai Liu straight out and into the bottom of the well, where Bai Liu was shaken and his whole body scattered, and the sound of cracking bones came from him.

Bai six rolled up the whip with one hand, gathered it up and walked nonchalantly towards the fallen Bai Liu with a smirk in his voice: "-like now."

"I say it will be Muke who dies."

"-then he would really be dead."

On board the airship.

Cen Buming looked at the place where Mu Sicheng had fallen, his expression was frozen, as if he had not expected things to go in this direction. ...

Can't get over it.

Everything was out of control.

Muke's eyes swept to the spot where Mu Sicheng had fallen earlier, his mind stirred with emotions and confusion, but when he lifted his eyes and saw Bai Liu's still sleeping face, his mind was emptied of only one thought -

-- he wants Bai Liu to leave the game alive.

So the emotions were suspended and the mind was set in motion again under an almost cruel command.

Cen Buming's Sinner's Well skill has already been used once and the next CD is in thirty minutes, so no threat for now, but the Joker is clearly out of control, he has fifteen minutes on his skill CD and he can keep attacking Bai Liu and the others with his Punch for those fifteen minutes.

Muke gathered his thoughts and thought calmly - as an assassin, he was going to kill the most threatening opponent to his team.

-- just like Bai Liu's usual orders.

[System Alert: Player Muke uses skill (Flash Strike)]

Muke lifted his dagger and prepared to enter the flash, thinking that his look at the moment would be calm, cruel, even grim, but if he had a mirror, he would find his expression at the moment like the surface of a lake without wind and waves, very calm and composed -

--It's like Bai Liu's usual expression.

[I'm here, just leave it to me].

Bai Liu is always there, they don't have to worry about anything but bumbling and recklessness, growing up quickly in the most dangerous of games, and Muke only has to look back to see Bai Liu standing not far behind them, watching over them with a calm look in his eyes.

-- obviously a guy about his age, but always looking so reassuring.

Muke is a man who is terrified of death. From the moment he entered the game, his greatest fear was to die, and he would have knelt in front of a small TV to keep from dying, begging others to save him. Three months ago, he would never have imagined that he would be a one-man assassin and willingly be used as leverage to be thrown out by the other team over and over again in exchange for his death for the team's maximum benefit.

He hated that. As a heart patient who would only live for twenty years or so, he hated the idea of people sharing and taking advantage of his life, which was the most precious thing he had.

But Bai Liu can.

Because Bai Liu would never really let him die.

So he was really willing to die for Bai Liu.

Muke stepped into the glitter, as he had done before, headlong and righteous.

The next moment, Muke stepped out of the flash and appeared behind Daniel, his eyes cold, the dagger in his hand glinting with a sharp edge, Daniel was unable to react and was stabbed in the throat with Muke's falling dagger, blood gushing out and staining his clown mask.

"It's you?!" Daniel's face snapped, becoming twisted and angry as he realised the person behind him was Muke, " Muke ?!"

-- his most hated competitor!

An incompetent coward who covets the meaning given to him by the Godfather! A man who cannot live at all without his godfather!

Muke's attack was so intense that it took his breath away, and Daniel was caught off guard and soon covered in paint, but he was soon frantic too, and with a grin not unlike the one on his clown mask, Daniel gathered his sniper rifle and aimed it at Muke again.

"This bullet, which I have set aside especially for you, was also given to me by the Godfather." Daniel smiled slyly, "It would be an honour for you to die by this bullet, too, die when you deserve to die."

The sniper rifle in Daniel's hand suddenly emitted a silvery-blue glow, while the outer ring of Bai Liu's glove, shielded by Tang Erda and moving downwards, suddenly glowed in the same way.

Liu Jiayi turned his head to look at the outer ring of the glove and his pupils tightened - this was the outer ring of Bai Liu's glove that the residue from the furnace had refined when they had gone to Hua Ganzhong's place to refine the weapon, and they had used many methods to fail to remove it. The ring was the core of Daniel's soul sniper rifle, and Mu Sicheng mocked that the Joker was some kind of godly dog licker who couldn't get it off no matter what.

--It's like Bai Liu's soul is stuck to Bai Liu.

Liu Jiayi looked up sharply at Muke, who was fighting Daniel in front of her, and the moment her childish voice came out, she cried out, "Run! Muke!"

Tang Erda, who was covering Liu Jiayi's retreat, quickly realised what was going on and drew his gun, aiming it at Muke's back and firing through clenched teeth.

--- As long as he clears Muke out before Daniel does, Muke won't have his soul shattered!

[System Alert: Heretic Clown approaches Desire Core player Bai Liu, receives stimulus, skill changes - (Soul Crushing Gun) skill can be reset once, no cooldown required.]

The green light converged again at the muzzle of the gun and silvery rose bullets flew through the air Xiang Muke's head, Daniel's eyes glanced at the successive silver bullets and he did something crazy that no one expected, he let Muke's dagger plunge into his heart, turned in front of Muke and blocked Tang Erda's shot for Muke He then burst into a blood-curdling fit of laughter and pointed his gun at Muke's heart.

--shoot out.

"DIE!!!"

Muke's eyes remained calm for a moment, then widened and sparks spread rapidly through his heart.

"How dare you try to kill me!" Daniel, however, laughed and raged uncontrollably, two fierce emotions rushing across his face in a frenzy of madness, "You're just a tired man who won't live long, you're not even worthy to compete with me for a place next to the Godfather!"

As if one shot wasn't enough, he fired his sniper rifle at the limbs of the fallen Muke, who was bouncing on the ground as the Joker swept his body around and around.

"Die, die, die!"

Tang Erda, his eyes red with blood, wanted to stop this, what had happened to Su Yang, but as he approached, he saw Muke, who had fallen to the ground, turning his head with great effort, his expression still pale, his pupils already lax, and saying to him, word by word, in a muzzle.

[Take him away.]

[Leave me alone.]

Tang Erda stopped in his tracks, and after a two-second pause, he turned around, picked up Bai Liu with one hand and the sobbing Jiayi with the other, and strode down the road, his veins all rippling.

Muke has Daniel's memories! He guessed that Daniel's skills might be able to be reset!

He did it on purpose!

The moment he sees Tang Erda walk into the lift with Bai Liu and the doors slowly close, Muke finally relaxes the last of the nerves he had been trying to tense, his grip on the dagger loosening for a moment before Daniel steps on and crushes him, but he can't even feel it anymore.

Muke looked laxly at the top of the ship, his thoughts drifting far, far away.

..... has only survived so far, but apart from not being with Bai Liu in the championship, I don't seem to have any regrets.

He had once feared death so much, but in this moment he did have a surprising peace of mind, remembering the first time he had seen Bai Liu because he had laid him off. Bai Liu's dark eyes could not hide his dislike, but nevertheless held out his hand to him and said, "It's the second time you've seen me, but it doesn't look like you remember me. "

"But that's okay, we're in a brand new relationship now."

Muke was clutching Bai Liu's hand just so he could live a little longer. He was a coward who would have given up everything to live, so before he met Bai Liu, his mantra was always - [If I could do it all over again, I would never have been a heart patient, I would never have done anything.]

He is bored with everything in his world and always tries to start everything over because he doesn't want to die and feels that by starting over, he can avoid death.

But now, the moment death does come, Muke is in a trance-like state of mind, thinking...

-- If he had to do it all over again, he would have to have a heart attack too, go into the game with a heart attack, bawl in the game out of fear, then catch Bai Liu's eye with his desire to live the moment he passes by, then follow him again when Bai Liu reaches out his hand to him, and say to him --

-- I knew I was about to get the short life I dreaded most.

But I am no longer afraid.

I will be an assassin, brave enough to protect you until the end.

Please, take my cowardly soul, will you?

[System Alert: Player Muke's soul is broken, confirmed dead, exit the game].

The Drowning Man from the Future

The well of sinners.

He stepped on Bai Liu's shoulder and pinned him to the bottom of the well, looking down at Bai Liu's expression and raising an eyebrow in amusement.

"Let me guess, on your face, is that water from the bottom of the well, or is it your tears?"

The soul notes in the old wallet burned to embers, silently extinguished in the shallow water at the bottom of the well. Bai Liu closed his eyes and a tear slipped from his left eye, falling into the water at the bottom of the well with the ashes.

"People cry, because of their feelings, right?" Bai six smiled gently and kindly, "That's the answer you gave me ten years ago."

"In you, feelings seem to be something of value, but at the moment, I see only that they make you weak, they make you afraid, they make you miserable -"

"You bought them, for two hundred and ten points, but you paid much more than that."

"- It's already a bad deal, Bai Liu ."

Bai Liu draws his hand out with a white-bone whip, knocking Bai six back as he raises his head, his hair spreading in the fight, the ends dripping down.

Bai six smiled and tilted his head, "A murderous look."

"I do strongly encourage you to kill me, but before that-"

Bai six also drew his black bone whip, he laughed lightly and looked sideways at the white bone whip in Bai Liu's hand, "You can't kill a god with something like that and weak feelings."

The white bone whip came out of his sleeve and shot straight at Bai six's face like an arrow from the well water.

The blood spilled out, and Bai six was shaken by the blow, but he only stood for a moment and pulled out the bone whip that had been inserted into his shoulder, smiling with increasing satisfaction.

"Has it come to the point where you can hurt me with something like that?" Bai six smiled softly, his eyebrows arched, "True to form, my chosen heir."

After Bai six pulled out the bone whip, his wound was still oozing blood, but it soon healed.

"But still, a friendly reminder that this is the backstage of the system, beyond the world line, which is already the domain of the gods."

"Once again, all mortals are as fragile as ants, and can be reduced to ashes with a single word or thought."

Bai six looks down at the ashes seeping out of her old purse.

"You can't kill me, not as much as you can hurt me in this place with such a rudimentary weapon, how does that sound in your human terms?"

"-with mortal strength, can you compare yourself to the gods?"

Bai six seemed to find the phrase very amusing and read it with a smile.

"Interesting points, but I have to regret to tell you that this set of ideas cannot be generalised here in the Evil One."

"In this world, the evil gods are the amalgamation of all human desires, and no human can overcome their own desires, so no human can overcome the evil gods, so unless you are willing to take over as the new evil gods, you cannot leave here with human power, and then you will have to watch them outside in order to protect you --"

"-one after the other died."

Bai six's eyes were half closed and he rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "Speaking of which, who is it now?"

"I think it was Liu Jiayi and Tang Erda ?"

Liu Jiayi hastily covers Bai Liu's heart as she looks up: " Bai Liu's torso has hardened!"

"He's become like a statue!"

Because it's so far from the soul, that's what happens when the body and soul disconnect!

Tang Erda gritted his teeth as he drew his gun, "I'll surround Cen Buming and make him release his soul."

--Can't kill Cen Buming, if the other guy is cleared out of the game straight away, something will happen to Bai Liu's side whether his soul in the sin well is taken out of the game or the sin well stays in the space on the ship!

"Joker ....." Liu Jiayi pulled at Tang Erda, her hands and voice trembling but her expression doing her best to remain calm, "to lure the Joker away from Cen Buming or Bring Bai Liu's torso over to receive the soul, the outer ring of Bai Liu's glove will reset the Joker's skills and he'll be able to fire again."

"..... I'll distract the clown while you bring Cen Buming over."

Liu Jiayi took a deep breath and calmly explained, "I'm too weak to move with Bai Liu or do the main attack against Cen Buming, but I can do roaming tasks like luring the Joker away."

"And now that Bai Liu is unconscious, I am the second tactician on the team and you, as the main attacker, should follow my orders."

Tang Erda's teeth are clenched: "..... but ....."

"There is no but!" Liu Jiayi tilted her head, her grey eyes glistened with tears, but her expression had calmed down, "Things are urgent, there is no better way now, it has to be this way first, the Joker has a fifteen minute skill CD, as long as you keep him away from Bai Liu, the Joker's skill cannot be reset, nothing will happen to me, as long as you get Bai Liu's soul from Cen As long as you get Bai Liu's soul out from Cen Buming, it's all over."

"I'm sure you can do this, Captain Tang."

Tang Erda's brain buzzed at Liu Jiayi's call of Captain Tang - Liu Jiayi had always had a problem with him because of what he had done before, like hating a relative he didn't like very much, never calling him uncle or honorific, calling him Tang Erda when he was in a good mood, and a big idiot or a big man when he was in a bad mood.

It was the first time the little girl had ever called him Captain Tang.

Liu Jiayi's voice began to tremble a little as she took Tang Erda's wrist in both hands, her palm cold: "I will believe in you as Bai Liu believes in you!"

"..... And if Daniel gets close to Bai Liu during your fight with Cen Buming, his skills can't avoid resetting." She shuddered and took a deep breath before standing up, "I'll have my poison skill ready to suicide out of the game in time, you don't have to worry about me."

"I don't have Mu Sicheng the monkey, and Muke the deadhead, then, then ....."

Liu Jiayi clenched her fists and raised her hand to wipe her eyes, her voice vicious, as if she were cursing, but with a sobbing tone: "- so stupid! To save Bai Liu, you didn't even give yourself a chance!"

Tang Erda eventually agreed with Liu Jiayi's tactics and silently picked Bai Liu up on his back and tied a bandage around his body before the increasingly rigid shell fell off.

"As soon as I get out, I'll quickly fire a Poison Swamp move skill to control the Joker, and you take your time to take Cen Buming away." Liu Jiayi explains the tactic with a strong sense of calm, "I'll try to delay the Joker's movement, but when I can't, I'll use the Poison skill on myself and kill myself to get out of the game."

"When the time comes, you will retreat in time and not fight for long." Liu Jiayi's tone carried a warning, "because neither will I. Without me to cover you, something could easily happen, so I will kill myself and you will have to retreat."

"You have to know how to keep your head above water, you know?"

Tang Erda nods in silence.

Liu Jiayi closed her eyes as she tried to relax her tense body: "The chance is only this once, but surviving is the most important thing."

"I'm a tactician who hates it when people go out of their way to do things outside of their ability and then die in front of me, you know me on that."

"Let's go!"

They reentered the first level.

The moment the lift door opened, Cen Buming seemed to be arguing furiously with Daniel about something, but Liu Jiayi's mind went blank, and she was unable to listen to what the two men were saying to each other.

Even though she is blind, her hearing is always the best and she can easily hear every word of a conversation at this distance, Bai Liu even joked that when her eyes are better, she will have a unique advantage in hearing English in high school.

The grades will definitely be better than his English language scum.

At that time, she answered with justifiable pride and contempt - that's natural, the score is at least twice as high as yours, Bai Liu.

Bai Liu would just look at her with a smirk and say - I only get 40s in English sometimes, and you get twice as many?

She would say, quite breathlessly, that you're just plain rubbish, were you asleep during your English exam?

Bai Liu smiles and says, "Maybe so.

Now Bai Liu is literally passed out behind her, but she can't stop smiling at all.

Is the sleeping Bai Liu so frightening?

The pupils of Liu Jiayi's eyes were grey and dull, and the moment she stepped into the lift, she waved her hand and said hoarsely to Tang Erda behind her, "Go!"

[System Alert: Heretic Liu Jiayi uses personal skill (Poison Swamp)]

Liu Jiayi's eyes were fixed, biting her lip as she carefully navigated through the fog, her pupils narrowing as she saw a green sniper rifle and quickly rolled to lean over.

"Cough ....." came Daniel's choking cough from the poisonous fog and he yelled in annoyance, "Come out! Little blind man! I know you let the poisonous mist out!"

Liu Jiayi hides behind a load-bearing pillar on the ship, calm as if it were a precision machine, constantly manipulating the swamp's toxic fog as it flows around Daniel, the gas separating him from Cen Buming and pushing him towards the lift.

--As long as we can get this lunatic to the next level, Tang Erda's side of the mission will be absolutely safe.

But to get to the next level, the range she put at the beginning of the poison swamp would be a bit out of reach, and then she would need to make up another poison skill to cover the range where Daniel is now active.

Liu Jiayi clicked on the panel, she looked at the antidote and poison skills for a moment, the antidote skill had long since gone into CD, she pulled out all the antidotes and took them to Tang Erda.

--There is only one poison skill left in the major.

The skill she used to kill herself.

Liu Jiayi felt that her mind and thoughts had never been so clear and calm.

From the tactician's point of view, there was no need to expend so many big moves skills for a player who was already unconscious, especially when two players had already been lost, in fact what she hadn't told Tang Erda before was that if this chance didn't work out, she should simply give up on Bai Liu.

It's not worth it.

Even if Bai Liu dies and she loses this tournament, there are guilds that want her, and there are guilds that want Tang Erda, and to be precise, Liu Jiayi wants to win the tournament and resurrect Liu Huai after getting the wishes and points, and that's the same with any guild. To be honest, if she joins forces with Phoebe, she has a pretty good chance of winning the title next year.

It's not like you have to follow Bai Liu to win the competition, so why do you have to save him?

From her personal point of view, Bai Liu is just a shameless, big bad guy who cheated her soul with two red bean cakes and asked her to find the money. This guy is a villainous persona in any way, with no truth in his mouth, always thinking about getting money, cheeky not to mention not supposed to have any feelings for her.

She is not really a fool, unlike Tang Erda Mu Sicheng Muke, who is not in her right mind, so why should she really go to this extent for Bai Liu?

It's not necessary.

[Which family do you choose?

Bai Liu sat beside her bed and calmly asked her, "There are two families who like you very much, go with whichever one you like."

[This braid look kinda suits you].

Bai Liu laughed at the messy braids the others had made for her, and she grumbled in frustration, holding her chin in her hands, as Bai Liu stepped forward and gently unwrapped them, giving her a neat and nice new whip: "But Jiayi still looks better like this."

[There's Phoebe on the island, want to come along?]

Bai Liu smiled and said, "I don't think you hate Phoebe."

"Want to try and make friends with her? You don't have any friends your own age that you can play with yet, do you?"

Liu Jiayi stared fixedly at the panel for three seconds, she tapped on the poison skill and held the poison spray in her hand, not crying, not sad, calm as could be.

She is also a fool.

On the other side, Tang Erda overpowered Cen Buming almost explosively, fighting on Bai Liu's back like a frenzied, bloodthirsty beast, taking out two blockers in a matter of minutes, severely wounding a third, and beginning a tug-of-war with Cen Buming.

Tang Erda was shot by Cen Buming, who broke his left arm by Tang Erda, and the two hunters, on the verge of madness, fought on the ground as if they had lost their minds.

"Why did you have to kill Bai Liu!" Tang Erda shouted at the top of his lungs as he gave up on the gun and raised his fist and slammed it into Cen Buming's face, "He didn't do anything bad at all!"

"In his life, he's never done a single bad thing in his life, in his life, he's a good man!"

"He saved the children in the orphanage! He saved the people who were poisoned by the dry leaf rose! He saved all the members of the Heresy Authority on the plane transporting the heretics to the glacier! He saved all the people in Russell Cemetery!"

"He's probably saved more people than you as a second team leader!"

"Who the fuck are you to put him in a sinner's well!!!" Tang Erda's deep blue eyes burned with a furious and desperate light, and there were tears falling along with the blood on his fists, "He's not a sinner!!!"

"Put him out!!!"

Cen Buming was punched by Tang Erda until his face was dented, blood cascaded from the cracks and cuts, the hand with the death ring trembled, he clenched it and choked and kicked Tang Erda away: "..... Who said I wasn't letting go?"

"Get out of the way, I'm opening my skills!"

Even Tang Erda froze for a moment, puzzled and confused, and released his grip on Cen Buming's collar, he hadn't expected it to go so well, but Cen Buming really didn't seem like a man who would drive such a player at such a moment, and he saw Cen Buming grit his teeth and adjust his Death Ring two or three times.

..... What's going on is that from just now, there is no way to open the closed well of sinners.

It's his well, there's no way it would not even open for him, unless it was .....

--his subconscious thought that there was really a sinner in the well, and that this sinner was a sinner who must never be opened and let out.

And this man was, in his clear opinion, an unpardonable sinner.

Cen Buming's eyes sink.

Just now in the lift, the light was dim and overgrown, and he didn't really see very much of what was going on, except to see a hand appear from his well and pull Bai Liu's soul back, which he had previously thought was the work of some heretic disguised as a sinner he had put in the well, but now that he thought about it, it could only be a guy.

-- Bai six.

Tang Erda watched as Cen Buming lowered his hand, his expression turning condensed again as he pulled out his gun and pointed it at Cen Buming's head, "Open the sin well and let Bai Liu out."

Cen Buming was silent for a while, he looked up, "I ..... can't put Bai Liu ."

--because there was another sinner in the well who was highly similar to him.

He cannot fully distinguish the difference between Bai Liu and Bai six, and the well of sinners formed by his desires and subconscious mind will only judge them both as sinners, so he cannot open it.

"So ..... you were just teasing me, were you?" Tang Erda's expression grimaced as she raised her hand and threw the butt of her gun at the side of Cen Buming's face, "Your well why can't you open it?!"

"Open it!"

Tang Erda stared at Cen Buming, then he suddenly realised something and jerked his head towards the dissipating swamp of poisonous fog - Cen Buming was stalling for time!

Jiayi's big move is running out of time!

But Jiayi never gave him the signal!

From the edge of the poisonous fog, Tang Erda sees a scene that causes him to suffer a cardiopulmonary arrest as Liu Jiayi, holding a bottle of poison spray, hides in the looming fog and slowly forces Daniel back into the lift - and then puts one foot in the lift herself.

This is not the same tactic Jiayi told him at the beginning!

Jiayi said at the beginning that she was going to kill herself with her poison skill, but now that she's used up all her skills to screen back and distract Daniel, soon Daniel's Soul Crusher skill cooldown will expire, and by the time she's in the lift room with Daniel, the poison skill cooldown hasn't expired and she has absolutely no way to kill herself quickly, and Daniel has a gun.

-- Liu Jiayi is sure to get hit with a soul-crushing gun!

"Little blind man, those are the only skills I remember you having." From the almost dissipating poisonous mist came the Joker's eerie laugh, "Now it's my turn to show off my skills."

[System Alert: Heretic Daniel skill is on cooldown, do you use your personal skill (Soul Sniper Rifle)?]

[OK.]

In the dissipating fog, a gun with a green glow appears, aimed at Liu Jiayi, who is walking towards the lift.

As the lift doors slowly closed, Tang Erda looked blank as she saw Liu Jiayi, who had a gun pointed at her, turn to her side, look at him quietly and nicely through the gap in the closing lift doors, then suddenly smile sweetly and wave to him and Bai Liu with the natural gesture of a little girl going to school to say goodbye to her family, and she mouthed the words --Bye.

Captain Tang, brother of Bai Liu.

Tang Erda drew his gun and fired wildly at Liu Jiayi's back as the lift was about to close, while Cen Buming also concentrated, quickly transforming his death ring into a black pistol and firing at the fading green gun point.

"Aaaahhhh-!!!" Tang Erda went berserk, equipped with an entire monster book, shooting so fast with his spirit level down that he was just a stump, not caring anymore, his eyes red with blood, "LET HER GO!!!"

Daniel was also mad, and he chose to shoot at Liu Jiayi despite this intense fire coverage: "- you self-righteous, tired people!"

His blood-stained face was cruel and hideous, his apple-green eyes bursting with a shocking light in the darkness, and a heartfelt, delighted smile on his face: the

"All of you, to hell with me!!!"

"Without you, the Godfather can be my God!!!"

Green guns, silver guns, black guns, all firing at the same time, dense bullets weaving through the diffuse toxic mist, sliding out rays that enveloped the lift like an inescapable death cage.

Cen Buming's bullet sends Daniel's wrist flying, but he still shoots the green bullet that symbolises the shattering of a soul, which grazes the side of Liu Jiayi's face and instantly ignites into white fire, enveloping her grey eyes in flames.

She was trembling with pain, but at the moment, the little girl's hand was still on the button that closed the lift.

--she wanted to take the clown away.

This way the rest of ..... will be safe.

These are guys that she has given her all countless times to save ..... family and friends, and it makes no sense for her, as a witch, to let them die here.

She's a witch.

The witch said that tonight was a Christmas Eve.

The Drowning Man from the Future

Inside the sinner's well, the old wallet burns once more, bruised and battered, and Bai Liu, standing up once more, raises his head, water dripping from his jaw.

"This time you'll get hurt again." Bai six smiled at the Bai Liu, "No more witch's cure will save you."

Bai Liu clutched the white bone whip, which began to spread black from the end, and the blackness was so strong that in a moment it reached the end of the whip, and a silver-blue glow began to flow around Bai Liu.

"Wow." Bai six raised an eyebrow, finally smiling pleasantly, "Finally figured out you're ready to take over the position of evil god, have you?"

Tang Erda shot Liu Jiayi's back as hard as she could, Liu Jiayi fell in his gaze, his expression hollow as he staggered to stand but stumbled twice and failed to do so, the doors of the lift completely shattered in the bombardment just now, unable to close, Daniel's hand stuck on the edge of the lift, he had been blown off his right hand by Tang Erda, but he Daniel's hand was stuck on the edge of the lift, his right hand blown off by Tang Erda, but he managed to climb up with his left hand stuck on the edge.

"..... Only you are left." Daniel, bombarded with blood and flesh by Tang Erda, crawled hard on the ground, tilted his head up to look at Tang Erda, who was on her knees, motionless, and cracked her mouth with a grin that was crazy to the extreme, "Once I kill you, the Godfather's last liability will be gone."

Tang Erda looked towards Daniel, who was only half of his body, dragging himself across the floor, his mind blank, unable to think at all, his face splattered with all kinds of human blood, and muttering and repeating Daniel's words.

"..... It's just me."

A metre in front of Tang Erda was the blood of Mu Sicheng when he had been shot, the lift was covered in blood, it was impossible to tell whether it was Daniel's or Jiayi's, three bodies of deer hunters were at his feet, Cen Buming had been shot by him when he had just gone berserk and was now lying dead or alive on the floor, looking up from the middle of the chaotic and dilapidated corridor There was a pool of blood and a trail of bullet holes from when Muke had been shot by Daniel in his frenzy.

Indeed ..... is all he has left again.

Everyone, all dead.

Tang Erda slowly lowered his gun, his expression hollow and still.

Daniel's consciousness is blurred, but there is a belief in his heart that is so insistent as to be unbelievable, a twisted faith that sustains his tattered body as it moves, and he looks into Tang Erda's disoriented dark blue eyes and laughs contentedly.

"Ahem, once you're dead, the Godfather can give it all up and become a god!"

--that beautiful dream he had last night, that's what it told him.

Daniel lifted his bloodstained face, his clown mask having fallen off in the chaos of the fight, revealing a young, untouched face, looking straight at Bai Liu with those clear apple-green eyes and a smile as attached as a beast that has found its support, his expression almost somewhat naive as he reached out, propping himself up with only half a hand, to touch Not far away, his eyes are closed to his godfather.

"padrino (godfather) ....."

"Daniel sara'il tuo fedele credente (Daniel will be your most faithful believer)."

[System Alert: Heretic Clown approaches Desire Core player Bai Liu, receives stimulus, skill changes - (Soul Crushing Gun) skill can be reset once, no cooldown required.]

The clown drew his gun and aimed it at Tang Erda again.

The well of sinners.

In the old purse, before the last soul note had finished burning, the next one began to burn again, the ashes leaking through the cracks like black rain falling to the bottom of the well of sinners.

Bai Liu's neck was wrapped in a whip and he hung him up as if he were a dead corpse, his limbs dropping helplessly, except for the old wallet clutched in his right hand.

The blood kept seeping down Bai Liu's body, falling to the bottom of the well and spreading out, and the white bone whip that had fallen into the well water not far away was blackened to the point where only a thread of white remained.

"What are you hesitating about?" Bai six stepped on Bai Liu's bone whip with a pleased smile, his eyes downcast as he whispered, "What value can this thread of your persistence, this thread of your conscience, be of any value if you keep it?"

"The bum who has trouble filling his old wallet, the bum who diligently controls himself as a good man, will only end up like this."

"Any bad man in this world can trample on your most precious possessions and reduce you to nothing, as I have done."

"You were born to be a bad person, the worse you are the more valuable you are, the worse you are the richer you are, but instead you waste your talent to be a good person who is honest and over the top."

"Being the bad guy, you can be the factory manager who monopolises the world's perfume industry, the investor who invests in an orphanage to renew his life with children, the property developer who controls all the land, the mayor who sacrifices the pain of teenage girls to develop his town," Bai six explains in slow, unhurried tones, "they're all very rich, fulfilling their wishes, and doing well."

"And by being good, you can only become a heretic like Lu Yizhan, Cen Buming, Tang Erda, and even a woman like Fang Dian, who is so powerful that she is almost a god, has to sacrifice pain constantly under my control as a bargaining chip because she wants to save people."

" Bai Liu, if you had chosen to be the bad guy in the first place, you would have been the evil god of everything by now."

"Be a good man." Bai six's smiling eyes arched, "You'd just be a poor bum."

"- a result that I didn't tell you at the beginning when you entered the game by way of skill names?"

"This is the game of the evil gods, and in a world where evil gods exist, good people don't end up well."

"-because the evil gods find that, well, boring."

Bai Liu raised his head slowly, his voice hoarse from being strangled by the whip and the bone spurs sticking into it, but still clear: "I don't find good men boring."

"They ..... cough." Bai Liu grabbed the whip strangling his neck and pulled it brutally outwards, blood spurted out, but he still didn't stop and replied hoarsely, "are very valuable souls."

"I have enough of them in my wallet."

"With them, I never felt like ....." Bai Liu lifted his eyes, his features twisted and livid with anger and extreme emotional shock, his eyes were unshed tears, " ..... what a bum!"

"If indeed you have to become an evil god to put an end to this uninteresting world you have forged."

Bai Liu took hold of the whip, which became pitch black throughout, and he raised his eyes, which turned a thorough silvery blue: the

"Then I will become an evil god."

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu Desire Core changed, Monster Book changed - (Poor Tramp) changed to (Heir of the Evil God)]

[Player Bai Liu Equipped with Monster Book Identity - (Heir of the Evil God)]

Bai six looked at Bai Liu, shrouded in a silvery blue glow, and curled his lips: "Finally, this moment has come."

"My heir."

A black whip snapped out of the system ship, knocking Bai six out of it. Bai six retreated to the ground and Bai Liu stepped on the floor of the ship, backhanding another whip at Tang Erda, who was on the ground with grey and white flames burning.

[System Alert: Player Tang Erda has zero life and is out of the game.]

Bai Liu didn't stop when the whip swept, but continued straight and hard at Daniel on the ground.

Before Daniel could see Bai Liu, the manic grin on his face turned into a confused expression, "Godfather?"

"I am not your godfather." Bai Liu looked up slowly, his silver-blue eyes had an inorganic coldness to them, and raised his hand, flinging the whip straight down, "-that was just your dream, I never served as your godfather."

"You're just a clown that needs killing in my eyes."

Daniel's pupils constricted as he reached out to grab Bai Liu, but only caught the whip that Bai Liu flung at him, which threw Daniel's broken upper body straight out of the ship. Only his apple-green eyes remained fixed and unbelieving on Bai Liu, who was calmly looking away from the ship.

"Godfather." Daniel said slowly, mouthing his words as he held out his hand like a drowning man begging for help on the shore, his eyes laxly opening, "..... help me."

Bai Liu stood at the broken window, not moving, watching Daniel drift away and disappear into space.

[System Alert: Player Daniel has zero life, exit the game].

Bai six raised his eyebrows at the scene and stood up straight and pulled back as he smiled up and bowed courteously in acknowledgement, "You already have the power and necessities to become an evil god."

"The rest will need to be granted to you by the temple."

"I'll be waiting for you at the shrine."

"I hope the next time I see you, you will still retain your sanity."

With these words, Bai six pulled back the hatch and, with a soft laugh, fell backwards and disappeared without a trace.

The hatch closed again, and Bai Liu looked ahead at the wretched deck of the ship before him, motionless, and only after making sure that Bai six had really left did he take a step forward, dragging his long black whip.

Bai Liu swayed a little, quickly settled, then took another step, swayed again, and on the third step, as if drained of every ounce of strength, Bai Liu held onto a nearby wall, lowered his head and gasped for breath, his silver-blue eyes hollow.

The black dye on the whip pulsed as if it were a substance, spreading from his fingers at the end of the whip, upwards, attacking every inch of Bai Liu's sanity.

Bai Liu finally knew what the dye was that dyed this black whip black.

-is desire.

It is from 658 world lines, from all the players who have entered the game, and from the strong desire of the humans who will enter it.

This desire, using the bone whip as a medium, does not stop for a single moment, pouring into Bai Liu's brain and body, as if these intense desires, which have no place to go, continue to find a vehicle, otherwise they would drive the hosts that generate them insane.

Bai Liu is the vehicle for this.

[I want to be promoted so badly, so badly, if only my boss had suddenly died in a car accident, annoying old man, why isn't he dead yet, I want to run him over with my car].

[..... don't want to attend class, the class teacher has to be seriously ill, right?]

.....

All sorts of desires converge, enrich, and follow the whip into Bai Liu's brain. He breathes hard, trying to quell the effect they have on him, but no sooner does he take a step than more enters his shell and affects his soul.

He felt that his soul had become a vessel, on the verge of being stretched to transparency and losing its original shape by these desires that would not never cease to arise.

Is this the reason why evil gods do not have souls?

The soul simply cannot maintain its usual shape under the impact of such desires, and if it is to be maintained it must resist the effects of these desires on him.

But these desires are like water spreading from all sides, leaving one breathless, unable to climb the shore, without even a break, and resisting desire is like a person who has no driftwood and has been struggling to drown in the sea, but if one lets oneself sink into desire and falls to the bottom of the darkness .....

He really will be the next Bai six.

Bai Liu slowly slid to the floor, his back against the wall, his head tilted back and breathing hard, his eyes clouded and unfocused like a man about to drown, his hand holding the whip slowly dropping to the floor and touching the reverse cross key held in the hand of the fallen Cen Buming.

He turned his head sideways and looked at the key.

--This is the key prop of this game and the last prop he needs to become an evil god.

It is also the game they landed into and stayed with him until the end, trying to guard what he found.

Bai Liu took hold of the key and, propping himself up on his knees, he stood and stumbled, holding onto the wall, towards the hatch on level 0.

The moment he grips the key and pushes in the hatch, level 0 slowly opens and the first level of the ship, starting at Bai Liu's feet, gradually lights up with circuits, each closed heresy opening one by one, turning the otherwise gloomy first level into a brighter one.

Bai Liu lifted his head.

The moment he saw what was before him, it was as if his brain, which had been blurred by the onslaught of desire, was emptied of everything but the sight before him, and the emotions that very slowly came up and the heat at the edges of his eyes.

All around him were the souls of the players who had entered the game. They were, or more appropriately, they were strange shapes, like monsters, like human-like creatures, with pupils filled with lust, lust that could even be felt by Bai Liu through the vessel, their eyes rolling and staring at Bai Liu, their mouths cracking open as if they were looking at some mouth-watering delicacy, and before The moment Bai Liu turns his head and looks at them with those silvery blue eyes, the monsters, or rather the player's soul, shrinks in fear.

They are held in pillar-shaped containers filled with silvery-blue liquid, just as Bai Liu did when he first saw Tavel in the small town of Siren.

Bai Liu breathed lightly as he walked forward, reaching out to the humanoid heretical souls numbered in single digits and reaching out to touch the surface of the already empty vessels.

Tears slipped from silver-blue eyes.

[658 Worldline Heresy 0004]

[Name: Capuchin Thief Mu Sicheng (Soul Shattered)]

[658 Worldline Heresy 0005]

[Name: Muke the Assassin (Soul Broken)]

[658 Worldline Heresy 0601]

[Name: Witch Liu Jiayi (70% soul fragmentation, unable to revive)]

[658 Worldline Heresy 0002]

[Name: Tang Erda, Rose Hunter (75% soul fragmentation, unable to revive)]

The columnar container of souls shattered into millions of fragments, floating slowly in the silvery-blue, seawater-like liquid, like the bubbles of a drowning man's breath remaining inside, telling those who are still alive that their souls are here.

Looking in through the large hole broken off the edge of the ship, the floor is crisscrossed with the blood of different people, and the deep blue of space is orbited by 658 world lines that run slowly along some set trajectory, converging towards the central behemoth of a system backstage ship.

The silver-blue universe is drifting with glittering flecks of dust and debris, there are traces of wilting roses withering, the mermaid seems to wake up from the bottom of the sea, looking at the mirror exploding over the fire and sighing, the sun in the polar sky overlaps by a quarter, following the last afterglow, the fallen god peers into the future, it sees the gun that shattered its soul falling into the sea.

The evil god named Vagabond has finally made his way here.

He had uncountable soul notes, money, honours, laurels and victories already to wear on his head, he had it all.

He lost his best friend, his family, and himself.

He has nothing.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has gained control of the system ship].

[Congratulations to player Bai Liu for passing the game.]

Lu Yizhan was distracted several times during the game, and if Charles hadn't wanted to lose so badly, he might have had a tough time, and as soon as he finished the game, he rushed after Spades, who was in the lead, to the No. 2 viewing pool.

Lu Yizhan's heart sank as he entered viewing pool 2 and saw the whispering, confused audience and the blackened screen.

--Something's happened!

As soon as Spades scanned the big screen, his eyes glazed over and he jumped down with his backhand on the audience, directly next to Wang Shun in the centre of the viewing pool.

"I don't know!" Wang Shun was also desperate, "Bai Liu, after they logged into the game, the big screen went black and the host called for maintenance several times, but no response at all!"

"Did anyone log out halfway through?" Lu Yizhan asked with a strong sense of composure.

Wang Shun shakes his head helplessly.

Du Sanying stares deathly at the big screen, deathly clutching his fingers, biting his lower lip and cowering in the corner, away from anyone.

"Someone's logged off!" The crowd shouted excitedly, "Which team is it!"

"The Deer Hunter's!"

"Wow shit, three people logged out at once!"

"Wouldn't that be a sure win for the Wandering Circus?"

"Look, look, look, someone else has logged out!"

"It's the deer hunter side again!"

"Holy shit, it's the Joker and the Executioner!"

"It's all cleared out, the battle is fierce!"

"The circus has won?!"

Lu Yizhan turned his head sharply to look over at the deer hunter.

For a moment Lu Yizhan and Cen Buming looked at each other, but Cen Buming looked away.

--This is what this guy does when he feels guilty.

Lu Yizhan's heart jolted, a long-lost feeling of fear and loss of control returned to him, and he looked, dazed and incredulous, towards the waiting exits of the wandering circus.

The moment Wang Shun heard that the other side was all cleared out, he didn't have time to breathe a sigh of relief when he saw two men slowly fall out of the boarding exit on his side.

One Liu Jiayi, one Tang Erda, scabbarded and double-blinded.

Wang Shun was stunned and before he knew what was happening, he and Lu Yizhan, who was running next to him, subconsciously rushed forward to catch Liu Jiayi and Tang Erda.

Before Lu Yizhan and Wang Shun could really catch the two men, they disappeared from their hands.

Wang Shun's mind went blank as he reacted to what had happened and looked up at Lu Yizhan across the room.

--This is exactly the same as the last time Lu Yizhan and Spades were hit with the Soul Crusher.

This also means that .....

"Their souls are not completely shattered." Lu Yizhan squeezed the words out almost through his teeth, his face completely pale, "..... but I don't know how shattered it is and if it will still wake up."

"What about Bai Liu?" Wang Shun heard his voice shaking as he asked the question almost in fear, " Bai Liu hasn't logged out yet, so is he also ....."

The audience was once again in an uproar.

"Someone else has logged out on the circus side!!!"

Wang Shun's head snapped up and he looked over to see Bai Liu walking out of the boarding area in one piece, without a scratch on him.

The moment he saw Bai Liu's eyes, the smile on Wang Shun's face froze.

Meanwhile, the presenter on the big screen waved his hand vehemently: "The system has determined that the winner of the league is -"

"-The Wandering Circus!"

"Let's congratulate the Circus President and Tactician, Bai Liu!"

There were screams and cheers from the crowd, many of whom were so excited that they took their clothes off and waved them onto the field, not knowing what was going on in the game, but simply being lustful gamblers, betting on the right side of the game to win and feeling genuinely happy to have doubled their points.

The whole room was on its feet, and someone put two fingers in his mouth and whistled, in a shrill voice, laughing as he did so: "Wandering Circus! Gods forever!"

" Bai Liu, awesome!"

"Team Brand New Man is in the final!"

"Not exactly your standard brand-new guy, but it's pretty strong, they've got a lot of quality newbies, and that assassin and that thief are both really good."

Laughter came from all directions, while Bai Liu stood motionless at the exit, staring into the eyes of a rigid, motionless Wang Shun, with no trace of popularity left in his eyes.

Water dangled from the ends of his hair.

Wang Shun opened his mouth, his face blank, and he looked behind him at the empty, closed boarding gate, and stopped incomprehensibly.

Where are the other two?

Stray Circus, and two unlisted players?

He wanted to ask, but always felt that he was being cruel to Bai Liu with this question, but Bai Liu seemed to read his eyes and lowered his eyes and answered his question in a very soft voice: "They didn't manage to log out."

"..... soul was completely shattered away."

The moment the words came out of Bai Liu's mouth, Wang Shun shuddered violently, his tears falling only now, and he could only keep, incomprehensibly, repeating, "How could ....."

"How so?!"

Lu Yizhan looked very slowly towards Bai Liu, who must have had a very strange expression at the moment, a mixture of fear, confusion, pain -

-and the odd look of frustration.

Bai Liu looked at him, as calm as the surface of a lake where no ripples could be made by falling rocks, and then looked at Lu Yizhan in a quiet and peaceful manner, and then said in the tone of voice that he would not want him and Fang Dian to go to his room in the future when he informed him that he would live alone when he graduated from university.

" Lu Yizhan, I'm going to be an evil god."

"Keep standing in my way and I'll really kill you this time."

Lu Yizhan's heart was empty, very lightly empty, like a feather falling to the ground, a bubble floating up to the sea, and he thought that at this moment he would cry, he would shed tears, he would break down, but when he really came to this moment, he could not feel any emotion.

It was as if he had waited a long time for the sword hanging over his head to finally fall, only to find that it had rusted itself, a very dull and painful lynching, nowhere near as painful as he had first thought.

But it does leave one dazed, mind blank and unable to think.

-- it was like 317 world lines, and he felt the same way when he saw

Cen Buming pointing his gun at those people.

He had expected this day to come, he had long seen in [the future] that there was this scene, he had even watched literally as the sword fell and killed him, only he was resigned to it and so was resisting with all his might the future that God had given them.

But at this moment, Lu Yizhan felt very deeply that the illusion of peace, which he had tried so hard to maintain until now, had finally disintegrated in this moment.

The real world, at dawn.

Mu Sicheng sits hollow-eyed at the bus stop outside the school, not far from a car that is driving out of control towards him, the dazzling light of its headlights illuminating the side of his face.

He was wearing those monkey headphones, his eyes out of focus and a key clutched in his hand.

--Not the key to his dormitory, but the key to Bai Liu's rented house, where he had planned to live in the future.

Because he didn't want to go home or be alone, he wanted to stay with his friends.

He wanted to stay with Bai Liu.

So Bai Liu gave him the keys and said with a calm face that the rent was one thousand five hundred a month, and he angrily cursed the other man for his lack of conscience and snatched the keys away.

The dazzling light of the headlights approached him.

Serenity Villas.

The nanny pushed open the door, ready to clean as usual, and was a little stunned to see Muke lying on the bed; she remembered that Young Master Muke had gone out last night, and had smiled and said that he would not return tonight because he had something important to attend to.

Why are you back all of a sudden?

" Young Master Muke?" The nanny inquired tentatively and softly, "When did you get back?"

Muke suddenly flips off the bed, covering his heart and curling up into a ball, his lips have turned a reddish-purple colour and his whole face is clenched in pain.

The nanny's face was instantly white with shock and her scream woke everyone up, "Get a doctor!!!"

" Young Master Muke is having a heart attack!!!"

"Help!!!"

After a flurry of soldiers, the family doctor in his crooked clothes looked at the heartbeat monitor next to him with a grimace, "How did it suddenly deteriorate like this?!"

" Muke was so much better before!!!"

Muke in bed, wearing a simple breathing mask, his eyes drifting out of focus, he struggles to turn his head a little to look at the photograph on his bedside table -

--It was a group photo, or maybe that's not the right word. He had secretly saved and printed out a drawing of the Quan family photo from Fang Dian's circle of friends and put it in a frame.

Muke looks at each person in the frame and finally his eyes rest on Bai Liu's portrait and he smiles very lightly, his eyelids dropping down.

..... has had things in his life that would make him feel happy before he died.

Enough already.

The doctor looked at the zeroed heartbeat with a horrified face, "Hasn't the ambulance come yet!"

Residential building.

Xiang Chunhua pushes open Jiayi's bedroom door and she looks at the bulge on the bed for a moment, "Jiayi?"

-- Didn't they say they were going to play in the game today and specifically warned them not to go into the game to watch, that it would affect her, distract her and make her play badly, so why did they come out on their own?

Game over?

But Jiayi usually finishes the game at Bai Liu's place before being sent back by Bai Liu, so why did she log out of the bedroom today?

Does it mean a race?!

Xiang Chunhua's heart fluttered, a sense of foreboding came over her, she took three steps and lifted the covers, then her pupils shrank, her face went white and her voice was sharp: " Jiayi ?

Liu Jiayi cowered in the cup, shivering, apparently unconscious, huddled in a tiny ball with her doll, her shoulders and body trembling, her eyes covered in blood and bleeding all the time, her fists against her side, her mouth whimpering very softly.

"Brother, I'm in pain ....."

" Bai Liu, I'm in pain ....."

"Don't hit me, don't hit me ....."

" Liu Fu!!!" Xiang Chunhua wrapped Liu Jiayi in a blanket and shouted anxiously, "Call a car, let's go to the hospital!"

" Jiayi is injured!"

The taxi arrives at the entrance to the hospital and stops. Xiang Chunhua rushes to the emergency department with Liu Jiayi in his arms, Liu Fu anxiously at his side, as they run past the stall selling red bean cakes.

A sweet fragrance wafting through the air.

At the entrance to the neighbourhood where Tang Erda lives, Su Yang sorts out the things Tang Erda left behind at the Heretics Authority and did not take with her.

" Tang Erda." Su Yang knocked softly on Tang Erda's door, then frowned, "Not in?"

I don't think so. At this hour, it was just the time when Tang Erda, a guy with a regular routine, got up for his morning walk. He didn't see Tang Erda downstairs for his morning walk and thought that he had brought his things up because Tang Erda hadn't gone out.

Su Yang was about to go downstairs, drop his stuff off at the doorman and call Tang Erda to pick it up himself, when he turned around and, out of an instinct that comes from years of dealing with danger, Su

Yang thought he smelled ..... blood.

He turned his head and his expression froze as he looked towards the closed door.

Su Yang quickly went downstairs to inform the security guard and asked him to open the door with the spare key Tang Erda had left at the property.

" Captain Tang!"

Bai Liu logged out of the game from his rented house and he was surrounded by people who wanted to chase him and ask him a lot of questions, but that's how he logged out.

A man sits motionless in his chair in the study.

Tang Erda's and Spades' coats are still on the chairs, Muke's books are on the floor, and on the table are the fruit plates that Liu Jiayi brought in and Mu Sicheng knocked the melon rinds off the table.

Bai Liu's mobile phone vibrated and he picked it up, and Su Yang's anxious voice came through.

"Bai Liu, are you home? I suspect that Captain Tang was attacked by a heretic, he was very badly injured, I took him to the hospital under the administration of the Heresy Board and he is being resuscitated now."

"His number one emergency contact on his phone is you, he has no family or other friends that he contacts regularly, and right now he's in serious condition, can you come over for a minute?"

"I'll send you the address."

Bai Liu was quiet: "Good."

Within a second of putting the phone down, it rang again, and Bai Liu picked it up with Xiang Chunhua's panicked voice on the other end.

"President Bai, Jiayi has been injured! We took her to the hospital, but we don't know what her injuries are, the doctor is looking at her, can you come over?"

Bai Liu paused, "I'll be right over."

Before he could hang up this phone, a new call came in.

"Hello? Are you Mr. Bai Liu, the parent of Mu Sicheng?"

"I am his counsellor, we can't contact his parents at the moment, the first emergency contact on Mu Sicheng's mobile phone is you, he had a car accident this morning, his situation is very urgent, he is being rescued, can you come over quickly?

"Hello? Mr. Bai Liu? I'm Master Muke's butler, he's had a heart attack!"

"I would like to ask you if you know of any triggers for Master Muke's heart attack when you were with him recently? The doctor said that if he doesn't get it under control, Master Muke is going to ....."

It was a very strange state, Bai Liu could calmly pick up the phone and put it down again, map out the address of the hospital he received and the route he would take, then put the phone down, stand up on his desk and even add a coat, Bai Liu looked up at the familiar and unfamiliar things in the orange light in front of him.

The cozy picture these things made up gradually disintegrated in Bai Liu's eyes, disintegrated into something he could not understand, like something unreal that dazed him a little -

--did it really exist?

These people ..... these people who were leaving him, who were dying, had really been all around him, in this narrow room, laughing and joking, turning to him and smiling, saying, Bai Liu --

--We'll be with you until the end of the game.

Has ..... ever been?

Or is it all just a self-projected fantasy of emotional satisfaction for him, a human being considered by all to be a psychopath, a monster, a heretic, because he has been excluded from the mainstream of society?

For example, he sees a sunny and lively university student Mu Sicheng on the street, a well-groomed and sophisticated young master Muke in his private styling studio, the most talented child Liu Jiayi advertised on TV, and a serious-looking Tang Erda on a mission passing by.

And he's just a ..... gloomy and withdrawn monster who self-imagines this scene because he fantasizes and wants to be friends with these people.

--his high school homeroom teacher would tell him that a monster like you can only make friends through fantasy.

Maybe he did.

It would be nice if it were really a fantasy.

Bai Liu thought as she lowered her eyes.

He had always hated his high school homeroom teacher, but at the moment, he was really thinking that it would be nice if it was all, as Xu Wei had said, really all in his head.

Bai Liu took the keys and went out the door.

Three days later, the game was on.

Bai Yi cautiously poked Spades, who was upside down: "..... That, Bai Liu, how is he?"

Spades was quiet for a long, long time before he replied sullenly, "I waited for him at home for four days."

"But he hasn't been back for the last four days."

"He didn't come home and he doesn't know where he went."

"I feel like he doesn't want to see me."

"So ....." Bai Yi sighed as he sat next to Spades, glowering for a moment before speaking softly, "That's right, it's going to be a long time with a death in the family... ..."

"There are crematoriums to go to, filings to be made, relics to be disposed of, ID cards to be cancelled and funerals to be purchased, there's a lot of process ....."

"When my family died ..... I was also too busy to go home and didn't want to go home and see anyone."

The meeting room fell into silence.

Bai Jiamu leaned against the wall in silence as he reluctantly found a way to say, "Where is the Reverse God, have you seen him?"

Bai Yi shook his head, "I don't know, the Reverse God hasn't been back in the game since that day. "

"He told me he was going to take care of some work stuff and would definitely be back before the final." Bai Yi let out a long sigh, "But that face, it was as ugly as a dying man."

Bureau of Heresy, First Bureau, main entrance.

Lu Yizhan is followed by Liao Ke, who stands longingly and pauses with his head tilted.

Liao Ke let out a long sigh, "You're going to revert to being a first team captain and deal with Cen Buming yourself, aren't you?"

"Well." Lu Yizhan was quiet for a long time, "I made a deal with him."

"If he did do something that crossed the line, I would have tried him myself."

Lu Yizhan walks in.

Meanwhile, the Cinchimani family hall.

It was nighttime, and the hall was lit up like daylight with all sorts of accessories, with men and women coming and going in formal dresses and formal attire, talking intimately, distantly or demurely on the dance floor with an ineffable nobility and a carelessness towards the next person.

Hearts in the corner, dressed in a long dress gown and wearing white lace-trimmed gloves above his elbows, raised his glass of red wine to the man in the suit next to him and then took a sip, in a light tone.

"Although I don't know why you asked me to bring you here, I hope you don't regret what you've done yourself."

Bai Liu raised a glass of red wine and returned it to him in a gentlemanly manner, his tone calm: "Why do you think I'll regret it?"

Hearts paused, "Because I have a feeling, you're not very sensible, right now."

"In a way I can understand your irrationality, but to this extent I'm still a little surprised."

Hearts was quiet for a moment before he looked over at Bai Liu who was sipping his wine with his eyes downcast: "I thought you ....."

--didn't care that much about them.

At least not enough to care enough to offer to come to him for help to bring to Daniel's bar mitzvah in the Cinchimani family, looking as if he was going to do it himself in reality.

Hearts helped secure an invitation to the bar mitzvah and brought Bai Liu into the Cinchimani family as a male companion, as promised, and then Bai Liu and he waited in this corner for the party to begin. something more dangerous filled in the gap."

Bai Liu quietly sipped his wine as he looked up at Hearts and smiled very lightly, "Thought I was what?"

With this smile, something very dangerous about Bai Liu dissipated and became cleared, but became more uncomfortable to him.

Hearts shook his head, "..... nothing."

" Jiayi is really all right, isn't she?"

Bai Liu replied with a very light smile, " Jiayi is fine, she is recuperating in hospital."

Hearts stared steadily at Bai Liu for a moment, then withdrew his gaze and nodded, counting that he had heard.

--nothing to see.

He couldn't see anything.

Hearts had tried three times before the banquet to find out about Liu Jiayi, but Bai Liu's smile was unmistakable, and Hearts was unable to find out anything.

At the end of the game, after Hearts was sure that Liu Jiayi was injured, he tried to search the hospital where Liu Jiayi was, but he didn't know where Bai Liu had hidden her and Hearts couldn't find her. He chose to accede to Bai Liu's request and negotiate with him, asking him to tell him about Liu Jiayi.

But all I got was a message - [Jiayi is fine, recuperating in hospital] and nothing more.

Hearts looks down at his reflection in the red wine glass and takes a very light sip.

Liu Jiayi's injuries must have been related to the mad clown, and with Phoebe also threatened by the clown, he was ready to take on Daniel himself, when he didn't expect Bai Liu to approach him about coming to the Cinchimani family.

As soon as Hearts saw it, they knew what Bai Liu was up to.

He was starting ..... to cross certain lines that he had always abided by.

The guests around the room burst into a clamour and leaned around the corner of the terrace, and Hearts looked back, leaning over to Bai Liu and explaining softly, "The party has begun."

From the flower-filled staircase came Daniel, dressed in a plain white suit and a small green bow tie, his hair moussed back to reveal his trademark features and beautiful apple-green eyes, but his own expression was less beautiful, one of rage, irritation and a kind of bewilderment as if he had been kicked in the face by someone who was at a loss.

It was as if something had happened that he could not understand in the extreme, as if the person for whom he had been pursuing had abandoned him.

Bai Liu's eyes were averted as if he hadn't heard them, and he didn't understand them either, but Hearts was fiddling with his bracelet, his eyes half-closed, his rosewood lazy, and then the bracelet suddenly lit up, and Hearts' expression sank.

--This is the signal for the connection between Phoebe and Hearts.

Sending this red warning signal means Daniel has made a move on her.

-- Daniel really wants to kill Phoebe for power at this birthday party.

"It's about to get messy in here, Phoebe's ready to fight back." Hearts raised his eyes as his tone turned icy, "I might not be able to care about you later, so if you can't block it, get in the game."

"I'll go to Phoebe first."

Bai Liu looked up at Daniel on the platform and replied in a soft voice, "Yes."

Hearts took a deep look at Bai Liu and finally said nothing and turned to leave.

As Hearts notes, however, the hall below quickly became chaotic when Daniel appeared, and conversations among the guests became bizarre, with everyone sizing each other up and trying to figure out what the other was up to, Daniel seemed to find the scene boring and his clothes constricting, so he went up to the first floor to change and make a scene.

Bai Liu also took advantage of the chaos to go up to the first floor, he followed silently behind Daniel who was about to change his clothes and called out to him in a soft voice, " Daniel."

Daniel was changing his clothes when his unbuttoned hand stopped and he turned his head incredulously, his eyes shining and his voice rising noticeably, "Godfather!"

"You've come to my Bar Mitzvah!"

Daniel took two steps and stopped at the safest three metres of Bai Liu's distance. He tilted his head as if hoping Bai Liu would touch him and half-kneeled with great reverence, his right hand clenched in a fist against his chest in reverence, his tone one of anticipation as he finally landed on his feet.

"I knew you still needed me."

"None of them are worthy to serve you on your path to godhood, only I, only a believer who can serve you as a god, can follow you!"

Bai Liu lowered his eyes to Daniel's becoming frenzied expression and he curled his lips, not a light in his eyes, "As your bar mitzvah gift."

"-want to come into the system with me and play a game for once, Daniel ?"

The Evil God's Game

Heresy Authority, Trial Court.

The snow-white marble execution dome was surrounded by empty space.

At the centre of the execution table was Cen Buming, handcuffed and chained to his hands, sitting quietly on a seat in the round table, looking up at Lu Yizhan, who had changed into his first team uniform, and was in the mood to taunt Lu Yizhan: "How long have you been wearing this?"

"The return of the prophet, such a prestigious event, won't the Heresy Authority order you a new one?"

Lu Yizhan put on his gloves in silence, he took the gun from the execution table, raised it to Cen Buming, and took a deep breath: "Trial of heretic 0009 for assault at 6.17pm."

"Judgement Heresy Name, Generation Hunter Cen Buming ."

"The Inquisitor, Lu Yizhan, was reinstated as Captain of Detachment One three hours ago."

"Heretic Cen Buming, answer me -" Lu Yizhan looked Cen Buming straight in the eye, his gaze never looked so cold and sharp, "Did you hurt, or kill innocent people in the game? have you harmed, or killed, innocent people?"

"Did you harbour the heretic Daniel with the intention of using him for evil in the process?"

"Did you play the role of a coercer in this murder by letting the clown hurt Muke and Mu Sicheng who had done nothing wrong?"

"Were there moments when you could have prevented a tragedy, but because of your own obsessions you had to condemn innocent people as sinners to vent your resentment and anger at not being able to save others under so many worlds?"

"Have you, in the course of your reincarnation, become so overwhelmed by hatred that your purpose is no longer salvation, but revenge, and you no longer have the means to see reasonably the humans and heretics around you, to distinguish between them -"

"- Heretic 0009, have all that you can see become the object of your future execution?"

Cen Buming didn't dodge Lu Yizhan's eyes as he replied, "Yes."

"So you should have killed me a long time ago, Lu Yizhan."

"There is no need to provoke me." Lu Yizhan's tone did not rise or fall, "I will not kill you because of my own emotions, I will only judge you for the wrongs you have done."

"Two dead victims, Muke, Mu Sicheng ."

"Two victims of serious injuries, Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi."

"I want to know what you did in this game, why they died, why they were seriously injured and what was your role in it?"

"You left out one other person." Cen Buming looked up and he said without a ripple, " Bai Liu ."

Lu Yizhan's pupils flinched.

He had a hunch ..... he would really fire that shot today.

Cen Buming continued in a clear and articulate manner, "I took Daniel into the guild in the first place to shatter the soul of Bai Liu in this world line, and your leaving this guild made me realize that you could no longer be on my side and that I had to kill Bai Liu on my own, but I was required by the rules of the game not to interfere directly with Bai Liu's life, so I chose a compromise yet complete solution to the problem -"

"That would be getting Daniel into the guild."

"But there's no way Daniel could have shot Bai Liu." Lu Yizhan calmly retorts, "Your plan is full of holes."

"Right." Cen Buming looked calmly at Lu Yizhan, "So I told him that if you were strong enough and your value was high enough for your godfather to see you, he would surely choose to come to you."

"-and the best way to prove your power is to defeat your godfather."

"If you win your godfather in the middle of the game and clear out the people around him, he will definitely come to you."

"I was inducing Daniel to kill someone, and I knew that if I moved anyone around Bai Liu, Bai Liu would definitely move against Daniel in reality, and if any innocent person around Daniel was killed by Bai Liu while Bai Liu was moving against Daniel, then it would be impossible for you to let him go again. The only way to get rid of him is to kill him. "

"And Daniel, the family, is going to do something to him and it's going to involve someone else, and as soon as Bai Liu does it, there's no turning back for him."

"That was my plan from the beginning."

"From the looks of things." Cen Buming even sneered, "The plan is being executed well."

Lu Yizhan was quiet for a moment: "You were in the game, what did you do?"

Cen Buming tilted his head as he looked at Lu Yizhan, his face cold, "I put Bai Liu in the Well of Sinners, standing by while the Joker shot and killed, delaying the duress so that his skill Soul Crusher could keep CDing."

"-caused the serious injury of Liu Jiayi and Tang Erda, the death of Muke and Mu Sicheng."

"Are these ....." Lu Yizhan took two deep breaths as he spoke with a slight tremor in his voice, "what you intended in the first place, or did you unintentionally cause this to happen?"

Cen Buming was quiet for a long time this time, looking at Lu Yizhan with those clear yellow eyes and speaking in a calm tone.

"It was my purpose in the beginning and the result of what I led to, and I sought mercy."

"I fully meet the criteria for your trial, carry out the sentence, Lu Yizhan."

Lu Yizhan gripped the gun, he looked at Cen Buming silently for a long time, seeing his eyes redden, then he gritted his teeth and broke off the safety: "Heretic 0009, trial over."

"The verdict of the trial is, guilty."

Cen Buming closes his eyes.

In-game.

As the monsters were slaughtered and the level was about to be passed, Bai Liu looked at Daniel who was jumping for joy and smiled softly, "Daniel, would you like to make a deal with me?"

"Of course I do!" Daniel turned around excitedly, "What is the deal you want to make with me, Godfather?"

"I tell you, tonight, I'll kill Phoebe and get the whole family, and I'm willing to give the whole family to ..... if you want."

"Oh no, no, no!" Daniel quickly contradicted himself, his eyes shining at Bai Liu, "It's a deal is it! I know the Godfather's rules, it has to be a paper money deal! No giveaways!"

"Then Godfather you can just give me a dollar!"

"For one dollar, I'll sell you the entire Hinchmani family!" Daniel compared a one.

"No, I don't want your family." Bai Liu spoke in a flat tone, "I want your soul."

Daniel was dumbfounded, but he soon jumped up in ecstasy: "Of course!"

"When do we trade!"

Bai Liu: "Right now."

"Yes!" Daniel knelt reverently on the floor, his head tilted, his eyes all cautious expectation, like a child expecting his father to stroke his forehead and praise his usefulness, "I am perfectly willing, to offer my soul to the godfather."

"One point?" Bai Liu looked at him and asked lightly, "Is that okay?"

"Of course!" Daniel took the point coin Bai Liu handed him with great treasure, tucked it away, and tilted his head with a sunny smile, "This is the best bar mitzvah gift I've ever received."

"Is that so?" Bai Liu lowered his eyes, eyes hidden by long lashes, "I have one more game to play with you."

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu uses player Daniel's system panel to use his opponent's personal skill - (Soul Crushing Gun)]

Bai Liu drew his sniper rifle and pointed the fading green glow at the frozen Daniel, Bai Liu's gaze was devoid of emotion: "This game is-"

"- I will fire a shot into the sky, and your bullet will fall back to the ground depending on the ruling, and that shot may kill you."

Daniel was confused and puzzled: "Godfather?"

But he quickly accepted the move that Bai Liu would shoot and kill him, and with only a slightly regretful shrug, he closed his eyes, "If the Godfather finds the game of killing me interesting."

"Then the godfather will kill me."

"I am only the property of my godfather, who certainly has the right to do with me as he pleases, and I will not fail to recognise my place like those fools."

Bai Liu turned the gun back around, turning the sniper rifle into a miniature toy gun as he did so, and he put it back into Daniel's hand.

The gun coalesced into a bullet point of light aimed at Bai Liu, who looked at Daniel, whose expression instantly became frightened, and said softly with downcast eyes, "-and it could have killed me."

"You fire this one, and guess this one -"

"Will it kill you, or will it kill me?"

"Bang-!"

"Bang-!"

The gunshots in the courtroom and in the game rang out and stopped at almost the same time.

Bai Liu logged out of the game, Lu Yizhan took off his bloodstained gloves and they both paused for a moment before moving on again.

The doves that were startled into the sky by the gunfire at the edge of the courtroom and the flowers that fell to the ground from the Hinchmani family from the corner of the staircase where they were hit by a guest, all intermingled in a messy mass, the broken red of the flowers, and the scattered white of the doves, merging into a colour like blood at the end of the gunfire.

From behind Bai Liu came the terrified screams of the guests.

" Daniel shot himself!"

Cen Buming, who was sitting in a chair behind Lu Yizhan, slowly collapsed. Lu Yizhan covered his eyes and slowly adjusted his breathing as his mind recalled the last words Cen Buming had said to him.

[Brother.]

[Only accompanied you to here in the last world line.]

[I'm the one who broke my word.]

On the sixth day after the semi-final, burial is appropriate.

Muke's funeral was organized by his housekeeper, which was extravagant, but for some reason, it was also done very quickly, and Muke's parents did not show up from the beginning to the end.

Bai Liu asks why.

The housekeeper wiped his tears and said with some sadness, " Mr. Mu's father had prepared for Mr. Mu's death a long time ago, this burial kit and procedure Mr. Mu's father had prepared when Mr. Mu was a teenager, but he had never used it, now Mr. Mu really ..... used it immediately. Now Mr. Mu is really using it immediately."

"As for what Mr. Mu likes and dislikes, I don't know who to ask other than you, Mr. Mu and his parents have never been close and Mr. Mu's parents don't know what he likes and dislikes.

Mu Sicheng's funeral was basically organized by Bai Liu, but Mu Sicheng's parents only showed up in a hurry at the end of the ceremony.

Mu Sicheng's parents met with Bai Liu twice, ate twice, thanked him, said they wanted to settle the funeral expenses with him and gave him a red packet, which Bai Liu refused. The funeral of their son.

However, there is still no intention of taking over the funeral process for Mu Sicheng.

Realising what was going on, Bai Liu politely accepted the money and said that if there was nothing serious, you could go home and come back when the funeral was over.

Mu Sicheng's parents let out a long breath, and their faces, which had just been crying and still had tears on them, showed that obvious expression of relief and relief, as if they had left behind some big burden: "We are very busy at work, so we really can't help him organize his funeral properly, we will take care of the money here, the budget is less than 200,000, you look after it, organize it properly, make sure to give my son a good funeral. Make sure you do a good job for my son's funeral."

Bai Liu agreed and quietly watched the parents leave.

He could sense that Mu Sicheng's parents had grieved over Mu Sicheng's death, but the grief was so shallow that Bai Liu wondered to himself - was it normal for them to grieve like that, but not for me to grieve like that, to be a psychopath or a monster, to grieve over his friend's death? I'm a psychopath or a monster who is so upset about his friend's death that he can't rest even if he takes revenge?

Maybe he really was a monster all along.

And the monster realizes at this moment that the emotion of shedding tears between people can be so shallow.

Muke's parents also came to see him once. The parents, who were both very elegantly dressed, sat across from Bai Liu in a dignified manner, restraining their tears while expressing their sadness in a subtle way, thanking him for taking care of Muke, the exact words of which the distracted Bai Liu could not remember.

Bai Liu only remembers looking at the boy sitting next to them, who was not much younger than Muke, who had a slightly dull look in his eyes, and who looked somewhat like Muke, but, unlike Muke, always looked at him with a very light and gentle smile, and looked at him with some fear.

Or maybe it was that the way he looked at him at the moment was just terrifying.

" Mr Bai Liu?" Soon Muke's father noticed Bai Liu's sight and with his scalp tingling a little he stepped in front of his illegitimate son, his tone weak, "Excuse me, are you looking at Xiang Muke's brother, is there something wrong?"

"Is he Muke's brother?" Bai Liu took a sip of water and spoke calmly as if he were having a casual conversation, "How come I've never heard Muke mention it before?"

Muke's parents paused somewhat awkwardly before Muke's father cleared his throat and said, "We don't have anyone to give a speech either, so it's a good idea for Muke's brother to go up and give Muke a eulogy."

"A lot of people from our side of the family will be there, and we'll also take this opportunity to introduce Muke's brother to everyone, there hasn't been any proper opportunity before ....."

Oh, coming to him turned out to be the point.

Bai Liu was suddenly enlightened.

It turned out that Muke's funeral was to be used as a stepping stone to announce to everyone the new heir to the Mu family, to announce to the world that Muke, the oldest son with a heart condition who had been a drag on them for 25 years, was dead and that they now had a new, healthy, unstable and untimely heir to the Mu family, and to hope that he, Muke's apparent friend, would behave himself. friend will have the sense not to get into anything.

Bai Liu put down his glass of water and looked up at the brother, "If you let him show up at Muke's funeral."

"I'll be able to make Muke's funeral, his funeral."

Bai Liu says gently, to the horrified gaze of Muke's parents, "Now I have two funerals on my hands."

"-and I wouldn't mind one more." Bai Liu said with smiling eyes and tenderness.

The part of Muke's brother's speech was then cancelled.

The day of the funeral, early in the morning, at the internal hospital of the Heretic's Authority.

Bai Liu stands in the corridor and looks over at Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi lying in their beds in the ward, both on ventilators in the transparent critical care wards on either side of the corridor, surrounded by a pile of testing instruments, covered in various wiring and magnets, their blood pressure and heartbeats high and low, fast and slow, their faces on ventilators, their brows all furrowed as they breathe unevenly into the respirator spewed a mist that looked very faint.

With the help of Su Yang, Bai Liu transferred Liu Jiayi to a hospital within the Heretic Authority, which is why Hearts could not find out.

"He's been in a coma for almost a week." Su Yang stands in the corridor with Bai Liu, who looks on worriedly, "Why isn't he awake yet."

"Was it attacked by some heretic and hurt so badly?"

-- Bai Liu told Su Yang that both Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi had been attacked by heretics, and Su Yang did not doubt that both had indeed detected significant levels of contamination.

After visiting Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi, Bai Liu had to leave for the funeral, and the site of Mu Sicheng's and Muke's gravesite was chosen with the help of Su Yang, who had this to say -

"The Heretic Authority often has casualties, so they have good relations with many cemetery developers." Su Yang smiled bitterly helplessly, "I didn't expect to be able to use that connection for you."

"I thought it was only people in the Heretic's Authority who needed to be in constant contact with the cemetery estate agents."

When Bai Liu left the hospital, the sky was already cloudy and he wore a full black suit with only a white paper flower pinned to his chest. As the funeral was in the open air, Bai Liu took a long black umbrella to the cemetery to prevent the rain from dampening the flower.

He had the foresight to bring an umbrella, and halfway through the funeral it did rain.

The first to start complaining were Mu Sicheng's parents, whose voices were very quiet but were heard by Bai Liu.

"Why isn't ..... finished yet?"

"Has the bill for the funeral come through yet? How much did it cost?"

"That's not bad. ....."

"You don't have to say it, it's just this one time, you won't have to pay for Mak Si's living expenses in the future, it's equivalent to this money just being given to him in advance."

"Luckily we were already thinking about test tubes when we found out Mako IV was stealing ....."

"Eh, that's it, we don't owe him anything, don't join our family in your next life, it's not meant to be."

Bai Liu stands in the rain with a long-handled umbrella, droplets of water hanging from his long eyelashes as he slowly lifts them.

The discussion then began with Muke's parents, whose faces were sad and in tears, but the words came out with a strange sense of relief.

"..... Cole is a good boy, after all these years."

"But it's better to be gone, gone so he doesn't have to suffer."

"And we don't have to be tortured."

"It's good for everyone."

Bai Liu lifted his eyes, and his tone was flat, with an elusive indistinctness and chill through the rain curtain.

"There is no need for a third person, other than the deceased, to feel relieved at their death at this funeral."

"If so, please leave."

The funeral was solemn, Bai Liu, a shifty, unpredictable friend of the deceased, made everyone a little wary of him, and Mu Sicheng's parents were the first to bow their heads in anxiety and leave, while Muke's parents wanted to stay and run the funeral for a while longer, but under Bai Liu's watchful eye, they too left with nerves on their heads.

In the centre of the two already placed headstones, only one Bai Liu remains, holding a long-handled umbrella.

He looked down at the black and white photograph of the two men on the headstone, suddenly lowering his umbrella over Mu Sicheng's photograph and taking off his own black suit jacket over Muke's headstone.

Bai Liu, dressed in a white shirt and drenched in the rain, looked quietly at the two headstones and bowed deeply three times.

After bowing, Bai Liu walked back alone in the rain, stopping in the middle of the walk.

Not far away stands Lu Yizhan.

In front of Lu Yizhan is the headstone of Cen Buming, standing on one knee in front of it, holding a long grey umbrella, taking a cigarette from his breast pocket and lighting it, placing it on the headstone, silently propped up against it with his umbrella, waiting for it to burn out.

The rain drizzled between the two.

Lu Yizhan stood up, he put away his cigarette which was wet from the rain, turned around and was stunned for a moment when he saw Bai Liu, then subconsciously handed over his umbrella, blurted out, "Why don't you bring an umbrella out ....."

"Leave the umbrella to Muke and the others." Bai Liu says calmly.

Lu Yizhan's handing of the umbrella stops in mid-air.

Bai Liu and Lu Yizhan stare silently at each other through the grey umbrella that stagnates between them, as if there are many people standing underneath the umbrella when there is no one under it.

Perhaps it was because they both knew that they would never be able to walk under one umbrella again.

Lu Yizhan slowly lowered his umbrella and placed it next to Cen Buming's headstone.

Without umbrellas, they walked in the rain at a safe distance of three metres apart, without a word, towards the outside of the cemetery, and as Lu Yizhan walked he began to dig into his breast pocket, taking out the packet of cigarettes for Cen Buming and shaking it to get one out, only to find the box empty.

Lu Yizhan looked towards a kiosk outside the cemetery, where a large umbrella was propped up and a bench was underneath it.

Bai Liu walked over and Lu Yizhan bought cigarettes. While he was buying cigarettes he noticed that the kiosk actually had a freezer selling ice cream and he looked into the freezer and smiled a little for some reason at the strawberry lovelies, but the smile soon disappeared without a trace.

"A pack of cigarettes." Lu Yizhan was quiet for a moment, "Plus one of these, how much in total?"

Lu Yizhan took the food and went to sit on the bench, he sat on the left side of the bench and Bai Liu sat on the right side of the bench, he paused and handed Bai Liu the lovely multi in his hand: "Want to eat?"

"No." Bai Liu refused flatly, "It's not good."

"....." Lu Yizhan took it back in silence, he peeled off the outer skin and took a bite, the sweet and greasy texture made him panic inside, he paused and smiled with red eyes, "It's really not very good. "

"It's too sweet."

Bai Liu was quiet for a long time, then he suddenly held out his hand, and Lu Yizhan looked over at him in confusion: "I've already eaten half of it, do you want me to buy you another one?"

"It's not that." Bai Liu said calmly, "I want to smoke."

Lu Yizhan is utterly baffled.

"You don't hate ....."

"I want to smoke one." Bai Liu's hand was still splayed as he repeated it again with downcast eyes.

Bai Liu took Lu Yizhan's lighter and lit it himself. He bit down on the cigarette, his eyes half-lidded, the flickering light of the fire reflected in his dark pupils, and the white smoke that lingered through his long, drooping eyelashes scattered into clumps of fragments.

Bai Liu stopped after one puff, propped his hands on his knees and slowly bent over, looking at himself reflected in the puddles on the ground, his expression confused, and breathing deeply.

Drops of water fall from the eyelashes.

"So bitter." Bai Liu whispered, "The smoke is so bitter."

"So the smoke is so bitter."

Raindrops drip from the edges of large red umbrellas, there is a finished cigarette on an ashtray on either side of a bench that has been briefly sat on, and there is a finished cutie pie in the bin.

Lu Yizhan stands to the left of the bench and asks softly, "Are you sure you want to go this way?"

"I thought you were going to say again why I had to go against you." Bai Liu stood to the right of the bench and raised his eyes.

"No more." Lu Yizhan shook his head and he opened his mouth, "There is no other way for you to go."

Bai Liu looked calmly at Lu Yizhan: "You don't have any more either, do you?"

Lu Yizhan didn't say anything, he was just silent.

"I'll see you at the game then." Bai Liu turned away, his tone faint, "I knew you'd stop me."

"But I'm not going back either."

Lu Yizhan watches Bai Liu walk a little way to the other side, pauses for a moment, turns around and walks away to the other side.

They have finally come to this point, too, of going their separate ways.

Bai Liu returned to his rented house, changed out of his rain-soaked clothes and took a shower, as the tournament was tomorrow and he had to go into the guild today to discuss the final with Wang Shun.

For example, which are the backup players for the final on ……?

In-game, Wandering Circus Guild, meeting room.

The meeting room was empty and Bai Liu was the only one sitting on the stage. Wang Shun was dazed after two sentences on stage, and Bai Liu had to ask him to stop after two sentences.

"I really don't know what to say." Wang Shun touched his face, all with a bitter smile, "President, how can you fight when you're alone?"

"You haven't spoken to me now about the finalists' names."

Muke and Mu Sicheng ..... are out of the question, Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi are still around, but both are in a coma with serious injuries and can't log into the game at all, leaving Bai Liu alone.

"I'll fight alone." Bai Liu said very calmly.

Wang Shun was dumbfounded: "A man ..... beat?!"

"Hmm." Bai Liu lowered his eyes, "There's been a precedent for that, hasn't there?"

"That's Yuan Guang's special skill!" Wang Shun instantly understood, "But President you don't have his soul note, I remember you said ....."

Bai Liu looked up, "I have it now."

" Bai six gave it to me."

Wang Shun is utterly baffled.

After Bai Liu left, Wang Shun sat alone in the conference room, looking at the places where people would have sat and where Bai Liu had sat before, his mind empty of the information he had stored, unable to think of anything.

He had a clear sense that something had changed.

Both he and Bai Liu.

After taking care of the final, Bai Liu went back to his rented house, and as soon as he did, he heard a kind of cautious sound coming from downstairs.

--That's where Muke and the others lived before.

Bai Liu quickly went downstairs and pushed open the room where the noise had been made to see a terrified Du Sanying sprawled on the floor: " Mr Bai Liu!"

"What are you doing?" Bai Liu's eyes swept across the floor and stopped at the large mass of already packed clothes, he lifted his eyes, "You're leaving?"

"Yes." Du Sanying curled up behind his curtsy, he hugged his knees and tried his best to stay away from Bai Liu, "I-I'm ready to go back to the sanatorium, Mr. Bai Liu."

"I've contacted the people over at the sanatorium, and when I go over there, they'll prepare the cubicles I'll be kept in underground, I can have food brought to me via a food truck, and a change of clothes delivered to me by a pull-tube, and I'll never run into anyone again."

Bai Liu was quiet for a long moment: "It's not your fault what happened to them."

The words were the last straw for Du Sanying and he broke down and cried hysterically, shaking his whole body: "It's my fault!"

"If God Mu hadn't touched me, Muke touched me, they wouldn't have died!"

"If Tang Erda and Jiayi hadn't come up next to me, they wouldn't have been hurt!"

"It's all my fault! I never should have been friends with them, never should have come here, never should have met such nice people like them!"

"I've done them in!!!"

Du Sanying slumped to the ground, crying until she was in near spasm, vomiting, propped up on the floor and sobbing tears: "I've done ..... them in."

"You ran into me, too." Bai Liu reached out to pull Du Sanying to his feet, his voice still smooth, "But nothing happened to me."

"So it's not your fault."

Du Sanying raised his head, his eyes lifting from Bai Liu's hand reaching for him and landing on Bai Liu's calm face in an indescribable trance, "..... you okay?"

"How can you be okay?!"

" Mr. Bai Liu." Du Sanying choked back tears, "Obviously you're the one who got the worst of it from me."

"You've been victimized by me, and there's nothing left but you."

Eventually Du Sanying was picked up by the nursing home. He cried on the floor until he had a panic attack, and whenever Bai Liu came near him, he would become so frightened that he would even harm himself, falling to his knees and kowtowing frantically, begging Bai Liu not to come near him, as if he had a complete breakdown.

So Bai Liu stood at the door, as he had done when he picked him up, and quietly sent him away.

Du Sanying finally turned back while shedding tears, and he kept apologising.

"I'm sorry."

"Sorry ..... Mr Bai Liu."

Bai Liu returned to his rented house and, looking at the complete silence, he realised as an afterthought that -

-- he was really, totally alone.

" Bai Liu ." Someone called his name and Bai Liu looked over in a daze as he saw Spades walking out of the room.

Spades walked up to him.

Spades hugged him with all his might.

"You're back." Spades said.

Bai Liu's expression is confused and confused as he is held tightly for a moment. It is cold now, but the body Spades is holding him in is warm, so warm that he feels like he is hallucinating, that he is not alone.

So warm.

Bai Liu asked in a trance, "Hello ..... hot."

It's so hot that it's coming out of the neckline.

"I've had a long body wash with hot water." Spades replied in a low voice, "I wish I could give you a warm hug when you get home."

Bai Liu slowly closed his eyes, he gave a very soft muffled sound and buried his head in Spades' shoulder.

"It's warm."

They lie in bed, hugging each other, Bai Liu curled up in Spades' arms, his eyelids drooping, his face full of exhaustion, soon to fall asleep.

He had dealt with so many things in the meantime that when he was actually able to relax, that long-suppressed feeling of exhaustion instantly rushed up to take his whole being to dreamland.

Half asleep, Bai Liu felt Spades rise as if to leave, and before he was fully conscious, Bai Liu took hold of the corner of Spades' coat and murmured unconsciously.

"..... Don't go."

"I'm already alone, you can't go."

Because it was agreed that when he was alone, Spades would show up to keep him company and would not leave.

Spades leaned down and gave him another firm hug, "I'm going to take another hot shower."

"I'm not hot anymore."

Bai Liu shrank into Spades' arms, his voice muffled, "..... It's okay."

"Don't go."

"I don't want to be alone in this house."

"I'm scared."

So Spades paused and quickly fell asleep, taking Bai Liu into his arms, he rested his jaw against the top of Bai Liu's head and patted Bai Liu's shoulder, his eyes radiating a very light silvery blue: "Don't be afraid."

"I will always be there for you."

Bai Liu goes to sleep.

Spades looked at Bai Liu's sleeping face and he dropped his eyes and kissed Bai Liu's forehead, "I love you."

" Bai Liu ."

"I won't leave you alone."

Spades closed his eyes and he too went to sleep.

"At last." Bai six laughed softly as he appeared in Spades' dream, emerging from a dark void and saying to Spades with a smile, "I thought you'd always deny me access to your dreams."

Spades turned his head and the moment he saw Bai six, the dark dream world brightened up and everything around him became visible.

The waves lapping at the shore, the ancient temple, the stone table standing in front of it, the prophet on the verge of complete petrification, and the evil god sitting on the other side of the stone table with a smile on his face.

The evil god smiled lightly and asked Spades, "You were so resistant to my entering your dreams before, why did you agree this time?"

"Could it be that you have considered a different outcome to the deal I, the evil god sacrifice, had spoken to you about?"

"You said that I, Bai Liu and Tavel, had to have one soul to guard the door." Spades tilted his head as he spoke in a flat tone, "You said it wasn't me Bai Liu loved, it was Tavel, and that if I looked at Bai Liu and Tavel living happily together on each world line, guarding it all from the other side of the door, the pain I generated would be up to the standard of a gatekeeper."

"So you asked me if I would keep the door, become the new evil god, and could grant a wish in exchange for it."

"Yes." Bai six spread his hands and he laughed lightly with regret, "It's a pity you turned me down."

"After that, Tavel's spirit entered your body and you and he were together with Bai Liu in a state that had not yet merged."

"I am very curious about your soul, the first time I have seen my own creation produce a soul."

Bai six smiles and stands up, and the next moment he appears in a flash on the shrine, looking down at Spades standing beneath it.

"It is so interesting that you have created a soul because of your love for Bai Liu, and a dream world because you have a soul and feelings, and that your newborn dream world can reject my visit."

"It shows, in a way, that you also have the potential to become a new evil god."

"Because you can deny desire."

"And at this moment, what desire has made you give up denying me-" Bai six smiled and spread his hands, "-that you should allow me to enter your dreams?"

Bai six curled his lips in amusement, "Let me guess-"

"Is it because of Bai Liu ?"

Spades bowed his head in silence.

"I told you that your soul's presence as a vessel would only prevent Tavel from awakening, and at this moment, you feel that your presence is not of any use to Bai Liu." Bai six took one step down from the top of the temple, lowering his eyes and whispering softly, "What you feel Bai Liu needs at this moment, is a human being who can embrace him warmly."

"-not you, a monster who is so cold that you need to make yourself roll over and over again with external objects."

"He needs the one he loves, not you, a turtledove who prevents the one he loves from awakening and only imitates, born to kill and suffer as a derivative."

A black whip appears in Spades' hand and he clutches it tightly.

Bai six smirked, "- even your weapons are something Bai Liu rejects with disgust."

"He was unwilling to accept this weapon until the last moment, whereas you have been using it since birth."

Spades The hand clutching the whip loosened one finger, one finger at a time.

The black bone whip fell to the ground and shattered into points of light.

"I believe you have understood for yourself that your creation was merely a design I made to be Tavel and Bai Liu, the two heirs I had my eye on in pain." Bai six smiled softly, "But there was a little accident, you have the same appearance as Tavel, and Bai Liu looks at you with the same eyes as Tavel."

"You have a soul because of his feelings for Tavel."

"Simply put, your soul was created as a monster because you stole Bai Liu's love for Tavel."

"And for now, if you give up Bai Liu and choose to become an evil god yourself, he won't have to become an evil god, Tavel can awaken and be with him, and the others won't have to fight back for my existence, and everything can be happy."

"-only at the expense of you, the accident."

"Your heart aches for Bai Liu's solitude now, but isn't that solitude what you caused?" Bai six let out a careless soft laugh, "If you had chosen to become the new Gatekeeper at the Evil Ritual and not keep stealing Bai Liu's love for Tavel for your own selfish love, none of this would have happened."

" Muke and Mu Sicheng will not die, Tang Erda and Liu Jiayi will not be seriously injured, Bai Liu will not be so alone and in such pain."

"Isn't this all because you've deluded yourself into wanting to be with Bai Liu?"

"You must have felt how much pain Bai Liu was in, how he blamed himself internally and felt it was all his fault, didn't you feel horrified when you hugged him?"

"Obviously you're the culprit?"

Spades' chest rose and fell slowly, his fists tightening and loosening, loosening and tightening.

"Do you think that your company will really make Bai Liu happy?"

Bai six gave a soft laugh, "Now you see."

"Your company is the thing that causes Bai Liu the most pain."

Spades' pupils flinched.

"So?" Bai six walked up to Spades and held out his hand to him, smiling inquiringly, "This is your last chance."

"Are you willing to make a wish to the evil gods and pay the price of your soul to become the new evil god and stop what is happening to Bai Liu?"

Spades slowly lifted his head, his hair lengthening to long, curly silver-blue locks, the pupils of his eyes turning silver-blue, and countless spheres levitating around him, his tone earnest.

"I make a wish to you."

Spades is surrounded by the wind and his soul is lifted up and Bai six floats around him in an endless sphere of silvery blue light, and the temple disappears into a vast silvery blue universe in which 658 world lines, which have become settled, float around Bai six.

Bai six holds the 658th orb lightly in his hand, his face illuminated by the warm glow of the orb, he smiles with compassion, " Spades, what would you like to wish from me?"

Spades said very gently.

" Bai six, I want to give this person behind me all the happiness that an ordinary person in this world can have."

"I want him to have company at the loneliest times in his life, I want everything he's suffering for to dissipate, I want everything he's lost to be recovered."

"I want to have someone to play his favourite horror games with all the time."

Spades raised his head, his silver-blue eyes filled with a very light shimmer: "I think he and the one he loves will never be separated."

"They can meet in a human way, be together in a human way, and end beautifully in a human death."

Bai six curled his lips in a smirk: "What a greedy creation, these add up to much more than one wish, what would you pay for them?"

Spades was quiet for a long time before he spoke in a very soft voice: "I would give my soul for that."

"I have a soul now, and I will be the next generation of evil gods, as you wish, to guard the gate forever."

Bai six smiled up, "As you wish."

--Human emotion is such an interesting thing.

Bai six looks at Spades and Tavel, who have almost merged, and smiles.

--From the beginning to the end, there is no such thing as a vessel producing a soul.

Spades was never a vessel, and the soul inside him was, from the beginning, a soul sealed by Tavel himself, but even Tavel himself was fooled into believing that Spades had a soul too.

Emotions make people foolish, make them miserable, make them weak, and make them deceive themselves.

Tavel wished for his soul because of his own feelings, but because Bai Liu was also his soul, Bai six also wanted Bai Liu's soul, so he did not actually grant Tavel's wish, and the deal was not made.

So the belonging of Tavel's soul has always been free, not in his hands, but always in the form of Spades, an NPC in the game.

But even he, Tavel, did not know that the deal had been struck, that his soul was already in the hands of Bai six, and that the game's incarnation, called Spades, was merely a vessel.

Tavel made the same mistake as Georgia in believing that when the deal was done, Bai six would obey the outcome, but it wasn't.

The evil gods also have the option of reneging on the deal.

And this time, Bai six tricked Spades into sacrificing his soul to him in the same way again.

The same monster, the same lover, the same way of deceit, his creation is clearly not a foolish thing, but it will step into the same pit again because of the blindness of its feelings.

The evil creature who brings misfortune will always wonder about himself and whether he should really be by the side of his beloved.

Is it true that His company brings only pain.

Although he will still not get Spades' wish or his soul in the end, his favourite heir is about to arrive at the temple and he doesn't want anything else to happen to Spades, or Tavel for that matter.

--with this deal, he can trap Spades in the past.

Bai six lowered her eyes, "You said you didn't want Bai Liu to be alone."

"But Bai Liu has always been alone."

Bai six arched her eyebrows: "Would you like to go back in time and be with him in his loneliest moments?"

Spades stops in his tracks as he leaves.

"Bai Liu at the age of eighteen, isolated and bullied by everyone, he doesn't remember Tavel and has no one around him, just one step away from stepping into the game, or even dying."

"He was very, very lonely."

"He felt from the bottom of his heart that he was a monster and he wanted someone to be there for him."

"He's scared."

"Would you like to see Bai Liu at that time?" Bai six whispered, "That would be part of your wish, wouldn't it? Not to have any of Bai Liu's time."

"Don't you want to go and have your own memories with Bai Liu before you do become an evil god, forever alone, watching over the bliss of being with Tavel? Then at least in the midst of endless emptiness and desire you have something to remember instead of keeping on licking that little stolen love in Tavel's skin."

"Don't you want Bai Liu, who doesn't remember anything, to say to you that I like you?"

"If you miss this opportunity, you will never hear it again after I have fully granted you your wish."

Bai six laughed briskly, "Evil gods don't dream."

"Don't you want to give yourself one last bit of fodder for your beautiful dreams?"

Spades turned, Bai six looked into his eyes and smiled.

--Everything was going the way he had written it [the future].

The next day, Bai Liu woke up, empty, with only some warmth remaining.

Bai Liu touches the temperature, drops her eyes, and suddenly exhales very softly.

He got dressed and logged into the game alone.

In-game.

The killer sequence is a mess, and Liao Ke is in a tizzy: " Where are the Spades?

"There's a game coming up, where's he gone?"

Bai Yi and Bai Jiamu sounded weak: "Probably because they didn't want to fight Bai Liu and ran away ....."

Lu Yizhan, sitting next to him, closes his eyes.

It's not that Spades couldn't have done it.

There is no one who wants to hurt the current Bai Liu more than he does.

"Let's switch to Zhou Gong for the team match." Lu Yizhan let out a long breath as he propped himself up on his knees and stood up, "If he doesn't want to play, let's not force him, let's go."

Liao Ke walked up next to Lu Yizhan, a situation that now had everyone on edge, and inquired worriedly, "Where is your soul note in Bai Liu, fighting, nothing will happen to it, will it?"

"Only half a sheet." Lu Yizhan's voice was steady as he stepped into the viewing pool and looked across at Bai Liu standing alone, his eyes still inevitably loose for a moment but quickly calming down, "If Bai Liu can't come to full agreement with my will, there's no way he can log into my panel with this half soul note."

"The Bai Liu from before might still have the possibility of using my soul note."

Lu Yizhan looked across to Bai Liu with a slightly baffled look in his eyes, "But now ..... it's impossible."

The host waved his hand excitedly, "Will both tacticians please come forward and shake hands!!!"

"The Wandering Circus side is actually playing solo!"

"The president of Russell Cemetery has soloed out of the plug before, but that was in mid-season, which is unheard of in a playoff final match!"

"I can imagine that if Bai Liu does win this game in this way, the Wandering Circus will be the team to beat next year!"

Lu Yizhan was just about to step forward when he saw Bai Liu across from him calmly raise his hand: "We're not giving up the singles."

The presenter was stunned, "Wait!"

" Bai Liu says their team won't give up the singles!!!"

"That means, he has to fight a single match!!!"

The host was thoroughly excited, his voice almost hissing as he held up the microphone, "Does that mean that Bai Liu is going to take on the Killer Sequence solo, in pairs, and in a group match all by himself!"

"My God, this is unheard of!"

"He's only got one get-out-of-jail-free card! Then there's two games where he can't use his exemption!"

"That's just crazy!"

"Let's see how Killer Sequence will take it!" The host turned to the Killer Sequence side, "This madness will also give the Reverse Gods, who have been playing it safe, a headache, right? After all, Bai Liu won the single match against the strongest single player, Spades, and the single match will also consume the gold medal, so the Reverse Gods side will probably choose to forfeit ..... "

Before the moderator could say anything, Lu Yizhan also raised his hand, his voice steady: "The killer sequence side will not give up the single."

"Out of the race, the Inquisitors against the Gods."

The presenter was stunned: "Out of the race, the Reverse God himself?!"

Liao Ke and Bai Yi were both stunned, Bai Jiamu completely overwhelmed and dumbfounded as he watched the calm and collected Reverse God prepare to take the field.

" Captain Lu!" Liao Ke saw Lu Yizhan going up and couldn't help but shout out what he wanted to say.

Lu Yizhan turns his head over and smiles heartily, "Someone has to stop him before he really goes and does something bad."

"I've watched him grow up, there's no sense in watching him go on to become an evil god."

Lu Yizhan turned back to Bai Liu who approached him, took a deep breath and got up to walk forward, "I spoke to him."

"He's really going to be the bad guy in front of me, and the first bad thing that does-"

"-it would have to be to kill me."

"I'm not going to die, I'm not going to let him be the bad guy."

Lu Yizhan stepped up next to the viewing screen.

Bai Liu reached to his left, he let go of the death free card in his hand and raised his eyes, his tone flat, "I forfeit the death free card for this match."

Lu Yizhan paused for a moment as he also took out his own immunity card, looked across at Bai Liu, and then slowly put it down: "..... this game, I also give up."

Two exemptions from death fall to the ground.

The whole room was in an uproar.

"Wow!" The host snapped his fingers and intoned, "Another single match where both teams give up their immunity!"

"That dooms the odds that one person will die in this game!"

"And it's a single match between the tacticians of both sides, so that means that whoever's tactician dies in this single match-"

"-whichever team is the first to lose the game!"

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu Against the Gods confirms that he will not use the Death Free Medal in this match].

[..... game screening in progress ..... game loading in progress .....]

[Game loaded successfully.]

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu Against the Gods has logged in to the game copy "The Temple of Nightmares"]

Bai Liu entered a magnificent temple and opened his eyes.

He entered into the ultimate nightmare.

The Temple of Nightmares

When Bai Liu turned around, he saw Lu Yizhan, also standing in the temple, a very narrow map, narrow like an arena, like their mission.

[System Alert: The person who kills the opponent and walks out of the temple wins the game].

[The victor gets an audience with the evil god.]

They were separated only by a dilapidated pool, surrounded by pillars crawling with damp plants, and they raised their heads to look at each other, between the daylight and the wind that fell from the vault of heaven into the pool, with its damp sea air, with old memories that made discomfort tighten again.

"Why did you ....." Lu Yizhan took a deep breath, "give up the get-out-of-jail-free card?"

Bai Liu calmly asks in return, "Why did you give up?"

They lapsed into silence again.

For Bai Liu knew, and Lu Yizhan knew, that having come this far, with the exception of one of them dying, this game called Evil God -

--Impossible to end.

"I will never let you, this time." Lu Yizhan smiled with relief, his eyes brimming with tears as he hefted his heavy sword and said hoarsely, "I will cut you down here!"

Bai Liu drew out his all-black bone whip, his eyes flat and unruffled: "That would be best."

Reality.

Fang Dian was not surprised to find that Lu Yizhan was no longer there when she woke up early. Although it was a public holiday, Lu Yizhan had never had a weekend, not to mention the fact that he was scratching his head about his new position, crying and hugging her waist, complaining that he might be busier in the future.

When exactly can we get married?

Lu Yizhan sighed worriedly; he always said this, but the last time he complained he rarely mentioned it, and even Fang Dian gave him an astonished look.

When Fang Dian agreed to his proposal, she was in a trance for two days, giggling in her sleep.

However, Fang Dian is not too anxious to get married, as it is a lifelong affair between two people, not an urgent one.

There is a long way to go.

Fang Dian got up and stretched out, and started to clean up the house. While she was cleaning up, she was planning in her head whether to give Lu Yizhan and Bai Liu, two guys who don't care much about themselves, some clothes or something, and have dinner together tonight.

She slowly pulled out a small red velvet box from under the bed, with a letter underneath.

Fang Dian raises an eyebrow in amusement - after all these years, Lu Yizhan's hiding places haven't changed.

She was about to put it back as if she hadn't seen it and turn the letter over when she accidentally caught sight of the time it was sent - same city courier, that's today, so she would receive it today.

But why wasn't it sent?

Lu Yizhan is not the kind of person who forgets to do something. The fact that he hid this and hid it under his bed means that it was important to him, so why didn't he send it?

Fang Dian paused in the act of putting it back, she took the letter and the small box out with some confusion, and after a moment's hesitation, opened the letter.

[To the wife of the family.]

[It's a bit out of place to call you that, but forgive me for calling you that anyway.]

The black bone whip came crashing down from the sky into the pond, sending waves into the air. Lu Yizhan raised his heavy sword to block the whip, but the strength of the whip was so terrible that it smashed him right into the wall of the temple.

Lu Yizhan slammed against the wall and choked out a cough, the wound on his right shoulder from that soul-crushing gun hurting so badly that he let go and his heavy sword fell.

Bai Liu stepped out of the smoke from the whip, his eyes cold and unforgiving, and brought another whip down hard on his face.

[System Alert: Player Inquisitor of the Reverse Gods uses personal skill (for taijutsu)]

This is the skill of Wu Ruishu, the Bai six who believes that there is always a world line and that the good boys are the righteous judges of the cross.

Fang Dian knelt beside the bed and read down word by word.

[Even though you don't remember, you used to teach me many things, and there are many people who have taught me many things, but they are no longer there].

[I'll always miss them because the only things I have left in me are from them, and I wouldn't have lasted this long without those things].

[And what has really kept me going so far is my faith.]

[My faith, which you gave me, Captain Fang.]

Lu Yizhan caught Bai Liu's full strength whip with a hard Taiji palm, then used his strength to turn the whip back around, and drew his heavy sword again with his backhand, hissing angrily, "World line overlap!"

"Leave the temple, Bai Liu!!!"

"I will never let you become an evil god!"

"You also--" Lu Yizhan swung his heavy sword down viciously, smashing it against Bai Liu's open whip, tears slipping from his eyes, "-- -didn't want to be this evil god at all, did you?!"

[I have judged many monsters, sinners, and heretics].

[These things originally had clear boundaries in my eyes, but the further I went, the more I found that whether they were monsters, heretics, or sinners, the line between them and normal human beings was so clear that even I, the judge, could not tell which should be judged and which should not.]

[So, the moment I became a heretic myself, I was confused, Captain Fang.]

Should I be like Cen Buming, who judged all the heretics to protect more humans, or like Bai Six, who accepted all the heretics?

[I don't know how to choose the right one.]

[The more I came to the end, the more hesitant and confused I became. I was not a qualified judge or a qualified saviour, but those who were good judges and saviours, had left me.]

When I was at my most lost, I met Bai Liu.

[Bai Liu, who is only fourteen years old].

Bai Liu's whip collided with Lu Yizhan's spatial folding skill and fell to the floor in fragmented pieces, Bai Liu's entire right wrist was broken, Lu Yizhan's heavy sword was stuck in the wall, his shoulder was covered in blood, and his chest was heaving violently as he braced himself from the floor to stand.

Half of Lu Yizhan's face was red with blood, and Bai Liu's shirt was soaked with blood that only the back was white.

They looked at each other and simultaneously gave up using their weapons and lunged at each other with their bare hands.

Fang Dian turns the letter over a page.

[Bai Liu, aged fourteen, is a very peculiar child, I thought he was a monster, but he cries, laughs, loves story books, even remembers a random word of mine, gets up in the middle of the night to read for his school exams, and coldly warns me not to get ahead of myself when I find out that he's not reading because of my words, but because he wants to].

[He ..... doesn't look like a monster.]

[You told me not to look at the world with the eyes of a monster.]

[Whatever their future may be, they are, at this moment, human beings.]

[I am human, Bai Liu is human, Cen Buming is human, the former second team captain is human, we are all human, we have desires, we have feelings, we have things to fight for, we have an ending we want to achieve -]

[- There are people who want to be protected.]

[Reality is reality not because the game cannot be logged in, but because in reality, there are things we want to guard for, even if they are just a toy to the evil gods, but for us, it is something worth giving everything for, becoming a monster for, and even turning from a monster to a human again for.]

[A monster cannot always be a monster, nor can a man always be a man.]

Lu Yizhan pinned Bai Liu to the ground and, with tears streaming down his face, punched him hard: " Bai Liu! You can't go on any longer!"

"You've done enough to win this league!!!"

"Keep going and you'll lose more!"

Lu Yizhan squeezed Bai Liu's shoulders and arms and wrestled him to the ground over and over again - a tactic he used on the prisoners.

Bai Liu's body is drenched in blood, his arms and legs are covered in bruises, but Lu Yizhan is no better, his nose is bruised and battered, and his eyes, always distressed or gentle, are filled with some unprecedented intensity as he stares at Bai Liu, motionless and dead, as if ready to charge.

They brutally and unmercifully wrestled with each other.

Lu Yizhan, however, had tears leaking from his eyes, and he raised his hand to wipe his own eyes, making his face a bloody mess, before looking up and questioning him with a choked sob: "Bai Liu, what is the meaning of your existence?"

"- just to be the monster standing opposite me?"

"Aren't you alone?"

[..... The ten years I've spent with you and Bai Liu have been the happiest I've lived in a long time.]

[I often forget my duty in the midst of your company, forgetting that I am in a game with an evil god, which I know is a game, but because of your presence, how I wish it were reality].

[My reluctance to bring game props into reality and exchange game points for real currency is all because of my self-avoidance].

[I wishfully thought that if I used less of what I had in the game, the game would come to this world even a minute slower, and I always did this struggle of not being able to do anything about it, but I've seen the future and know that it's not going to be what I want it to be.]

[The end and the future, both as promised].

[- It's like I knew from the beginning that I couldn't have a wedding with you, couldn't marry you].

"But I don't want to be alone." Bai Liu tilted his head, his face deformed by Lu Yizhan, only his dark eyes still clear, his voice hoarse but still clear, "I'd rather be a monster surrounded by them."

"I don't want to be one either."

Lu Yizhan's pupils flinched.

He saw Bai Liu crying.

"What else can I lose ....." Bai Liu stood up slowly, his voice hoarse as he raised his bloodied face, "Wasn't my loss of all my future doomed the moment I was chosen by the gods? "

" Lu Yizhan, you have seen this future, haven't you?"

"You know I'll even kill you myself."

Bai Liu tilting his head, a heavy sword levitates from his hand and is held tightly in his grip.

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu uses Player Reverse God's Soul Note to log into the System Panel and use the skill - (Reverse God's Inquisitor)]

Lu Yizhan looked somewhat dazedly at the heavy sword in Bai Liu's hand - it was his heavy sword.

I knew from the moment I met 14-year-old Bai Liu that I would end up with him.

[A game that lasted ten years, and in the end he won.]

The only thing I didn't know at first was why Bai Liu cried when he won a game against me, he always likes to win and should have a smile on his face at the end, but I finally understand now.

[Because he lost his best friend].

[Captain Fang, I've been saving this ring for a long time, with my salary, and the first time I saw it I thought it would look good on you.]

[Although it is quite inappropriate to say this already, but this letter, with my guts, will most likely not be sent even if I write it in the end, so I will write it-]

[- Marry me, Fang Dian.]

The heavy sword penetrated Lu Yizhan's heart and he slowly slid down, a large stain of blood staining his heart as he collapsed on Bai Liu's shoulder.

Bai Liu tilted his head, his expression blank, it was clear that he was the one who did it, but in the end it was as if he was the one who died.

"Right no ..... up." Lu Yizhan's eyelids slowly fell as he slid down the heavy sword that ran through him from Bai Liu's shoulder to the ground, blood spilling from the corners of his mouth, a relieved smile actually on his face, "In the end, it was, self-inflicted, that stood in your way ....."

"..... made you kill your best friend with your own hands."

The Temple of Nightmares

[System Alert: Player Bai Liu has won the final game].

[Ask player Bai Liu, looking towards the pool.]

Bai Liu lowered his head as the smashed and bloody pool parted from the sides and rhythmic applause emanated from within.

"A fine duel." Bai six stood next to the suspended Fang Dian, who smiled and said, "The way you executed her lover, you've got a bit of my style."

"I have just allowed her to merge with the memories of this world line, and to watch with me the entire execution of her lover, the prophet."

"It just so happens that the seer has lost the game as well, and you saved me a few moments of work by helping me execute her in front of her."

Fang Dian slowly lifted her head, with tears in her eyes.

Bai Liu looks at Fang Dian, who is hanging from the ceiling, and the moment he meets her eyes, he is frozen in place.

[God gives creatures, lovers, friends and loved ones].

[And then deprive it thereby from the side of creation oh, as a way of creating suffering and brewing souls.]

"Enough of catching up, let us now enter the ritual of the evil god's succession." Bai six slid his finger down, and an old carved door appeared at the bottom of the pool. Bai six opened it a crack, and behind it countless orbs of silvery blue light instantly poured out.

Bai six instantly merged into these spheres, and only his laughing voice remained: "That is, kill me, the old god, and you will become the true god."

"But your current power is nowhere near enough to kill me."

"You've come this far so I can talk to you about the duties of working as an evil god."

"I believe you already know that I am a product of the Gate, that I was born to guard it, that on one side of the Gate is an endless stream of silver-blue tainted heretics, and that on the other end is a constant stream of worldlines born from my body."

"But do you want to know how the door was created?"

Bai Liu half-squinted as a mass of spheres converged in front of him, a halo of light so dazzling that he could not open his eyes. He looked in Fang Dian's direction and reached out to grab them, but Fang Dian was instantly swallowed up by these dense spheres and could no longer be seen.

The last person around him also disappeared.

The spheres form a wall around Bai Liu, confining him and preventing him from moving, and Bai six's voice is hidden within them, laughing and smiling.

"Originally there was no gate, the more ancient gods, when creating the worldline, found that human desires always lead to the destruction of the world, that their desires give birth to strange heresies that pollute the world, and in order to keep the worldline running peacefully and to keep the guardians of humanity, they spoke of the dangerous desires generated by all worldline humans coming together. "

"And to imprison these desires, they created the Gate and me, and I am the guardian of the Gate, the incarnation of the Gate, and all I have to do is purify and bear the desires of mankind, as well as imprison the dangerous desires of mankind forever on this side of the Gate."

"So on one side of the door is light and order, and on the other side is chaos and darkness, and I can only allow the worldline of light to come to the light side and the worldline of darkness to come to the dark side."

"But in time these gods too fell away, and only I remain, for the desires of men are endless, and as long as their evil desires exist for a moment, I exist for a moment."

Bai six Dropping his eyes, he looked at the sphere of light around him and nodded lightly with a sigh.

"I had existed alone for too long and began to grow bored with the whole guarding humans thing, so I let the dangerous desires and heresies on the other side of the gate through."

"A funny thing has really happened." Bai six's laugh drifted further and further away, "I found that without the door as an objective constraint, there was no difference between the world lines on either side of the door."

"Everyone generates the same evil desires."

"I am becoming more and more bored with the whole guarding humans thing, but when I was created, I could not leave this door and unless someone more suitable comes along, I will have to remain as a door."

"But to keep the door, one needs to be able to stay awake and sane all the time in the face of desire and pollution and be a strong enough soul in its own right."

"I have tried many approaches in different world lines and found that pain is an important criterion for selecting the quality of the soul. "

"The more distressed the soul, the more it can stay awake in its desires."

Bai six laughed softly, "And I've been looking for you for so long, and I've finally found you, Bai Liu."

The sphere dispersed in a flash and Bai Liu appeared in front of him, smiling lightly as he looked at Bai Liu, whose pupils tightened for a moment.

"Your soul is strong enough to bear all the desires of the world line, and you are a better evil god than I am to be a gatekeeper."

"Now that I have opened the door, the heretics and monsters on this side of the door will flock frantically to the other side, and on the other side, all the normal world lines, of course-"

"-including the 658 world line where you are."

Bai six nudged the door, which had only been gaping open a crack, and a silvery-blue mass of light burst out of it instantly.

The moment Bai Liu saw the door open, the silvery-blue dust inside quickly coalesced into a ball of light, with all sorts of strange and otherworldly images flowing through it, with hideous and distorted faces, while on the other side, the 657 world lines that had been contaminated by Bai Liu were slowly approaching the door, interspersed with the sphere of light and darkness. -The 658 worldline where he was.

"The change of the evil gods requires the opening of the door, and after the door is opened, both sides of the world line will come closer to the middle of the door." Bai six smiled softly, "For the last evil god, that is, I, am about to fall, and at the moment of my fall the door will disappear and the two sides will merge, and the darkness will come to the side of the light and the light to the side of the darkness."

"That is to say, the sides of the door will be inverted."

"And all you have to do is to absorb all the desires of the world line in this moment of inversion and stay awake, and the turnover is complete."

Bai Liu raised his head, blood dripping from his jaw, his voice hoarse, "And what about you, do I not have to kill you?"

"No need." Bai six finally smiled and stepped fully out of the ball of light, "I myself am the embodiment of desire."

"When you absorbed all your desires, I ceased to exist, or rather, you were born in my place."

"But accordingly, all the memories of my existence, all the memories of what my derivatives have done in 658 world lines will also be absorbed by you, which is equivalent to you becoming a collection of us."

Bai six smiled a very friendly smile, "And I don't know if you'll still be you at that time."

"-or maybe, you turn out to be the next me, too."

"Now, the turnover begins."

"Oh, I forgot the friendly reminder." Bai six smiled at Bai Liu, "During the turnover, you, as the door, are immovable."

"- you can only be alone, watching all the lines of the world being polluted, degraded and destroyed before you."

"Who said he was alone!" A heavy sword was flung out of the sphere of light, severing the sphere that imprisoned Bai Liu, and a harsh, crisp female voice came from the sphere, "And I'm beside him!"

Bai Liu's expression was stunned the moment he fell from the wall of the ball of light, and he even stumbled a little from his injuries as he fell, and was helped to stand up.

"Is everything okay?" Fang Dian's voice and smile were the same as ever, "I'm not too late, am I?"

"Why ....." Bai Liu tilted his head incredulously, and for the first time he could hardly contain, kept dropping tears, "and stood by me?"

"I'm going to be an evil god."

"So what?" Fang Dian said calmly, "Evil gods are human too."

"There can be good and bad evil gods."

"If you do become an evil god, I'm sure you'll be a good evil god."

[I think Bai Liu will be a good boy.]

"A good evil god?" Bai six gave a soft laugh, "Nonsense."

He drops his eyes and swings his hand downwards, the door opens fully to Bai Liu, and the silvery-blue dust inside comes swiftly like a blizzard at Bai Liu's face, instantly transforming into all sorts of monsters and heretics that hideously invade the world line on this side of the door.

In just an instant, Bai Liu's eyes turned silver blue as countless human desires and dreams flooded into his brain, bludgeoning his soul into nothingness and immobility.

..... don't.

It took almost all of Bai Liu's strength to turn his head sideways and look at the shimmering 658 worldline, which was darkening and dulling in a silvery blue glow and was about to go to the other side of the door.

..... He doesn't want to forget this world line.

He did not want to see this line of the world destroyed in front of him.

Even if he becomes an evil god, even if he will have endless world lines in the future, the world line that has brought him this far, he doesn't want to have to watch its destruction like this.

"I will not allow any of the world lines to be tainted." Fang Dian held up her heavy sword and stepped in front of Bai Liu, standing in front of the door to the endless stream of heretics coming at her, she tilted her head back, looking fierce and determined, and swung down with her heavy sword raised high, "And I won't let Bai Liu see his world line tainted!"

"Judgement of Light!"

A huge halo of pure white light erupted from Fang Dian's decapitated heavy sword, forcing all the monsters to scream and retreat behind the door, while Bai Liu stared in awe at Fang Dian's back against the light.

She held her heavy sword flat in her right hand, her voice firm and calm in the dense light: "I will never let the heretic take a step beyond the gate."

In the midst of the confusion, Bai Liu, already somewhat blurred in his consciousness by his desire, remembers only that he saw the heretic on the other side of the door keep crawling out and being hissed back by Fang Dian, who stood beside him again and again, tapping him on the shoulder to keep him awake, protecting them again and again with her body in front of the world line and him.

Never back down, never admit defeat.

Bai six sighs, "You are truly the most defiant human being I have ever met."

"Ahem ....." Fang Dian wiped the blood from the side of her mouth and looked up with a smile, "It's not like I'm not defeated."

"I know I can't win against you, so I just don't want to lose."

"The people I love are standing behind me, their souls, their beliefs are sustaining me, and if I concede defeat so easily -"

Fang Dian's eyes were red and she smiled as she waved down her heavy sword, "- then is it not true that the value of their sacrifice is as light as you, the evil god, say?"

At the end of the battle, Fang Dian, bruised and bloodied, stood in front of Bai Liu, who looked up at her and said very softly, "I killed Lu Yizhan."

"I know, I saw it." Fang Dian paused for a moment as she resisted the heavy sword to her shoulder again and let out a deep breath, "But I didn't just see you kill him, I saw the letter he left me."

" Lu Yizhan's letter tells me that he has known this ending for a long time and that he accepts it."

"So I'm sure you know that too." Fang Dian turned her head, the woman covered in blood was actually smiling brightly at the moment, she even winked at Bai Liu, "So I'm guessing this is just a little game of cheating played on the evil gods by friends joining forces for good is it?"

"I don't want to pry into your little secrets."

Fang Dian swung her heavy sword again to kill the heretic and her voice became heavy and strong: "But when it's all over, no more of this messing around!"

The door was getting closer and closer to Fang Dian, Bai Liu saw Fang Dian staggering to her feet with her heavy sword propped up, her shoulder and back covered in wounds, she looked back at Bai Liu at that moment as if she suddenly had a heart to heart, she smiled a little, the wind blowing her long hair, she said to Bai Liu with a muzzle smile.

Don't be afraid to part with the one you love, Bai Liu.

[We will meet again eventually].

[I believe you will bring us all back to this world].

The Temple of Nightmares

The door leaps forward, swallowing a smiling Fang Dian whole, and a polka-dotted butterfly hair rope falls in the air.

Bai Liu falls slowly from the cluster of spheres, a ball of light levitates from his body, the ball of light slowly floats away, Bai Liu is lost in thought and reaches out his hand, he sees the shiny black leather glove appear on his hand, he hears Bai six's laughter in his head.

[You have fully integrated me.]

[Now you are the new evil god].

Next, fuse the desires of derivatives from other worlds, and you will become even more powerful.

"Fusion ..... so that's it." Bai Liu lowered his eyes and looked motionlessly at this polka dotted butterfly hair string that had fallen at his feet, "Those derivatives, like me once, are your carriers, right?"

"Those derivatives also won the game, wanted to become gods, and you did make them gods as you made me gods, but soon after they merged with your consciousness, or desire, they were consumed by you."

"What you're looking for is not a new evil god, it's just a new carrier."

I can say yes, I can say no. Bai six smiled softly and replied, "I just can't find a vehicle that won't really consume me, they all sink too easily into my derived desires.

[If you can really make me disappear, I'd appreciate it.]

"I will not merge the desires of those derivatives." Bai Liu lifted his head and waved his hand, countless worldlines scattered around him, he clicked on the first one and his pupils lit up with a halo of light, "I will not be your new carrier either."

"Let the game of the so-called evil gods end with me."

Bai six's voice was a little startled: [What are you doing?

Bai Liu raised his eyes, "I'm going to load all the world lines, the original archive points you set up, and kill all your derivatives before it all starts-"

"-including myself."

A silver-blue light continues to spill out of Bai Liu's body, and the threads of the world that Fang Dian had protected to the last have gathered around Bai Liu, a warm glow illuminating Bai Liu's face, which seems to have many expressions, but also seems to have no expression at all, leaving only a calmness that has already thought of an ending for itself.

Bai Liu holds out his hand and he drags up a worldline, the light of which has become mostly cloudy, hovering restlessly from side to side in Bai Liu's palm, trying to pass through Bai Liu's body and reach the other side of the door. Bai Liu drops his eyes and probes his hand into this worldline and he holds something.

[System Alert: Evil God Bai Liu loading world line reset point 001.]

[So that's it.] Bai six laughed lightly, [You wanted to become an evil god in order to obtain the initial reset points for each world line from me and gain the power to reset all world lines, I'm curious how you guessed that I hid the initial reset points in the world lines when I gave you so many archive points on the ship.]

"Because ....." Bai Liu looked up at the world line, "they are all telling me not to be afraid of parting, that we will meet again eventually."

"Then there must exist something, something to start over with."

"And this is a game, and the only thing the game can start over with is a reset."

[Indeed.] Bai six said with amusement, [But Bai Liu, think about it, a reset does allow the game to begin again, as well as a new convergence of their shattered souls from this universe].

[But one's memory does not reset.]

[After you reset, they are stripped of their player status again and are just a bunch of NPCs, so they won't remember you as a player anymore, any trace of your existence, anyone else's memory of you, will disappear with you, never to be found again].

[- including their feelings for you].

[And isn't that what you want most now? After the reset, the friendship of Mu Sicheng, Muke, Tang Erda, Liu Jiayi, the affection of Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan, and even the love of Tawil will all be gone, and you will even be considered an enemy because of your identity as an evil god.]

[Are you going to guard them alone with 658 memories that no one cares about after they've been reset?]

[That's not very fair.]

The muddy Worldline 001 enveloped Bai Liu and he slowly dropped to the ground, a scene where Worldline 001 began its showdown, opposite him were the Temple's ongoing confrontation between the Massive Cross Judgement Army and Bai six .

Bai Liu saw the youthful Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian who embraced him, he stood still for a moment watching the scene, soon he was discovered and the group looked in dismay at the second Bai Liu who appeared in the temple, Lu Yizhan and Fang Dian quickly drew their heavy swords and aimed at him with hostility in their eyes: "Who are you? "Who are you?"

[You see, human emotions are so fragile.]

[If they don't remember you, they won't have feelings for you].

Bai six said with a smile.

"But I remember." Bai Liu raised his eyes, "I won't forget."

Bai Liu looked at the Bai six who was in the process of agreeing a contract with Fang Dian, drew his gun and pointed it at him, his tone calm and unruffled: "I will never forget it."

"It is these things that have transformed me from a derivative of you, to Bai Liu."

[You're a madman.] Bai six's voice took on a laughing tone, [Is this how you came up with the idea to kill me? Make yourself my final carrier, make sure I don't have the ability to create new carriers, and then kill all of them, and while it's true that I won't exist anymore, you'll cease to exist yourself.]

"Then cease to exist." Bai Liu lowered his eyes as he did not look behind him at the Heretic Authority that had become noisy and astonished, "I do not like a world where gods exist."

Bai Liu pulled the trigger, and the moment the bullet passed through Bai six, Bai Liu's body leaned back and shook violently as if he had been hit.

His shoulders were cracked and Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan looked on in dismay at the evil god who had slain him and wanted to ask something, but Bai Liu paddled out the door, opened it and turned away.

The next second, the world flickered into darkness and shut down.

[System Alert: Worldline 001 is erasing player Bai six's game trace and is resetting.]

.....

[System Alert: Evil God Bai Liu Loading World Line Reset Point 006]

The moment fourteen-year-old Bai six was about to extend his hand to trade with Wu Ruishu, Bai Liu icily extended his hand and flung out his playing cards, sending Bai six's right hand flying.

At the same time, Bai Liu's right hand began to shatter and the statue of Wu Ruishu in the temple began to awaken.

Bai Liu watches Lu Yizhan shakily patting Wu Ruishu's bewildered face, drops his eyes and turns away.

[System Alert: Worldline 002 is erasing player Bai six's game trace and is resetting.]

.....

[System Alert: Evil God Bai Liu loading 0317 world line reset archive point]

Bai Liu was at the window when Bai six opened his mouth and asked to play a game of truth or dare with Lu Yizhan, and the moment he pulled out his gun at Cen Buming, Bai Liu also pulled out his gun and aimed it at Bai six who was smiling at the game in the interrogation room inside.

At the same time, the records of Cen Buming's file were silently erased from the files of the Heretics Administration.

Bai Liu The chaps spread to the back.

[System Alert: World Line 0317 is erasing player Bai six's game trace and is resetting.]

.....

[System Alert: Evil God Bai Liu Loading 0369 World Line Reset Archive Point]

On the league field, as Daniel went berserk and shot Su Yang, Bai Liu pulled out his whip, knocking Daniel's gun away and pulling out his soul-crushing gun at the same time, aiming it at the Bai six next to him.

The game ended early with Tang Erda, white as a sheet, embracing Su Yang.

Bai Liu's shattering spread to his thighs and arms, and Tang Erda's record in the Heretics Authority disappeared.

[System Alert: World Line 0369 is erasing player Bai six's game trace and is resetting.]

.....

[System Alert: Evil God Bai Liu loading 0658 world line reset archive point]

Bai Liu comes to the orphanage where he was ten years ago, and he meets himself at the age of fourteen before he met Xie Ta, eating alone, reading alone, and keeping the church alone.

[Are you really going to kill him?] Bai six asked with a soft smile in Bai Liu's brain, [Those Bai six were indeed bad derivatives that smuggled in a lot of heretics that polluted the world before.]

[But this one in front of you, you should know better than anyone.]

[Just an ordinary human child].

Bai Liu stood at the back of the church, his eyes downcast as he watched this child sitting alone in the first row of the church reading a book by himself for a long time. Fourteen-year-old Bai Liu was reading the storybook of the long, thin ghostly figure, reading it intently, but there was no one next to him, only bits of green shade falling on his writing through the church windows in a kind of hazy interplay.

As if aware of the presence of someone, the fourteen year old Bai Liu turned his head and he saw Bai Liu, who raised his gun and pointed it at the other man.

How would a fourteen-year-old behave when faced with someone who wants to kill him for no reason?

Bai Liu can no longer recall, he only vaguely remembers imagining that someone would come and kill him and then he would .....

The little Bai Liu in front of him looked at him quietly for a moment, then closed his eyes.

"Are you here to kill me as a monster?"

"Then you kill it."

..... themselves would accept someone killing themselves.

Because he was a monster, it was only natural that he should be killed, that he should never have existed in a world without his own kind, that's what everyone around him told him at the age of fourteen, and that's what he took for granted.

No one cared for him, no one understood him, no one ..... loved him.

Bai Liu placed the gun on the church table, he sat down next to little Bai six, opened the first page of the storybook, lowered his eyes and whispered, "I'll finish this book with you."

"I'll kill you after I see it."

Little Bai Liu dutifully sat over, and after a pause he stole a glance at Bai Liu sitting next to him and whispered, "Can you watch it twice before you kill me?"

"I really enjoyed the book."

Bai Liu was quiet for a moment: "Yes."

He turned his head sideways and looked calmly at little Bai Liu who had pushed the book his way to share it with him and thought - in the next ten years, there will be many people who will come to you and read with you.

They love you and will cook you delicious food, play the most dangerous and scary games with you, huddle with you in a cramped house to keep warm and give you every birthday, and you will spend the long winter days in the middle of a steaming hot pot like the beautiful families in your most hated fairy tale books, and you will never be alone again.

But sorry.

I'm going to take them out of your [future], now.

As the storybook turned to the last page for the second time, Bai Liu drew his gun and pointed it at little Bai Liu, whose body stiffened and trembled as he closed his eyes, then Bai Liu lowered his eyes as he slowly turned the gun upside down and pointed it at his head, his voice soft and calm: "He was indeed not wrong."

"The person who did the wrong thing and shouldn't exist is me."

"Bang-!"

Gunshots rang out.

[System Alert: World Line 0658 is erasing player Bai Liu's game trace and is resetting.]

All world lines are reset, and Bai Liu's shell is like a tree that withers for a moment. In just a few moments, his shell dissipates into a field of fallen leaves, and he becomes a floating soul, sinking ever downward, downward.

He sank into the silvery blue of space, descending slowly through the deep sea of space, descending again, a halo of light illuminated Bai Liu's face, and he opened his eyes in disorientation as he saw the system backstage ships suspended in the middle of the universe, and the no longer orbiting backstage ships, all resetting, once again to pure white 658 world lines.

[My carrier is your soul. Bai Liu's laughter rang out again, [As long as your soul is not destroyed, I will always exist.]

[Have you the courage to destroy your own soul and let you disappear with me?]

[But if you destroy your soul, there will be no one left to guard the door to protect these freshly reset world lines from contamination].

Bai Liu turned his head and he looked into the deepest part of the universe at an ancient carved door that was still open, a steady stream of silvery-blue dust spilling out of that door, trying to contaminate the lines of the world after those resets. Bai Liu floated down and he gripped the pull ring of the carved door and took a deep breath, trying to pull the door tight.

..... is just a little closer, and as soon as he pulls it tight, this game is over.

[..... How did I get such a stubborn derivative as you, there is no way to close this door.] Bai six spoke with a helplessness and a sigh, [Like the door of one's desires, it never closes for a moment and needs to be guarded at all times to keep heretics and monsters from overflowing.]

[You have crushed all the carriers and cannot absorb the power of desire. With your current energy, there is no way to close the door, and forcing it shut will only break your own soul.]

Bai Liu slammed the door with all his might and his soul became deflated as a result, his voice hoarse: "..... There are ways you can close it forever."

"Didn't you tell me that in the witch's copy?"

"[The moment the brave and suffering soul leaves the body, it becomes a jewel, a jewel that fills the cracks of desire]."

"Now my soul, is it not just such a thing, this door, is it not just the seam of desire?"

Bai six lapsed into silence, and after a long interval, whispered: [Just a theoretical approach].

[If you do that, you really don't exist in the world at all, Bai Liu.]

[Your soul will become the key that closes this door, and exist on it forever, but you have consciousness, memory, and feelings, and you will become the living mass of gold in the land of gold, the mass that fills the hourglass with just ten years of suffering, and you, a soul that has been turned into a key, and you will so keep suffering with desire for millions, millions, and billions of years- -]

[- It's really not fair to you just to save the humans who have given you a modicum of affection].

[It's not a fair deal.]

"But feelings are not something that can be traded fairly." Bai Liu laughed very softly as he reached out to touch the door, a halo of light shifting in his eyes, "I think it's worth it enough."

At the moment Bai Liu's hand touched the door's handle, another hand also gripped Bai Liu's. Bai Liu stopped moving as if he had been electrocuted and looked at the hand in a daze before someone hugged him tightly from behind.

"I'm sorry." Xie Ta embraced Bai Liu's soul as he shed tears, "I'm too late."

"I'm sorry." Xie Ta repeated those three words very softly, "I'm sorry I remembered too late, I was too stupid to make you wait too long."

He turned back from the past and finally remembered everything, but the moment he saw Bai Liu's soul, he knew that things were irreversible.

Bai Liu has become the new evil god.

"It's too late to say you're sorry." Bai Liu let go of his hand, he tilted his head back, embraced Xie Ta, closed his eyes and said very softly, "I'm leaving you."

"No!" For the first time, fear was visible on Xie Ta's ever-cloudy face, and he couldn't stop the tears from falling, suspended in the air as droplets of water.

Bai Liu smiled, his forehead pressed against Xie Ta's, stroking away the tears on his face, his tone soft: "You're scared too, Xie Ta."

"Then how come you didn't know I'd be scared too when you left me in the first place?"

Xie Ta lifted her head, tears dripping from her jaw, her voice trembling softly, "I'll stay with you."

"I'll keep the door with you."

"You can't keep me company." Bai Liu curled his mouth very shallowly, "I don't want you to stay with me."

"I want you to wait for me."

"I want to torture you, I want you to know how painful it was for me to wait for you in the first place, I want you to know that I am somewhere deep in this universe, but you cannot come to see me, I want you to live a happy life but be unhappy when you think of me."

"-I will collect pain from your hands like an evil god."

"I have not charged anyone with pain since I became this evil god, and you who offer me pain are my only devotee."

"God will grant any wish of the sole believer."

Bai Liu drops his eyelashes very gently, he closes his eyes and kisses Xie Ta who embraces him in tears, unwilling to let him go.

"So pray devoutly."

Bai Liu fell into the door, his eyelids drooping and his soul attaching itself to the gap in the door: the

"..... We will meet again eventually."

The door closed and a violent silver-blue glow erupted from the other end of the door.

[System Alert: Evil God is changing, door double-sided world is about to be reset ..... reset failed ..... reset again ..... detected door is closed, can't reset .....]

[Warning! Warning! The door has been blocked, the system is unable to take energy from the other end of the door, low on energy and about to shut down .....]

[Game system off.]

The Final Future

Ten years later.

Mu Sicheng sat on the curb with a skateboard in one hand, holding a cone and licking it as he watched the entertainment news on the big screen in the mall across the street - [Liu Jiayi, a nine-year-old child prodigy, has entered secondary school with highly educated parents, admitting that he was born with the child and has no knack for nurturing it].

"Tsk." Mu Sicheng spat with narrowed eyes, "This world of internal scrolls, you start reading at the age of three."

"Fourth Brother!" Liu Huai came over with a bag of fried chicken, sweating, and handed Mu Sicheng a bottle of Coke, "The Coke you wanted, fried chicken to eat?"

"Didn't I tell you not to buy fried chicken?" Mu Sicheng said with some displeasure.

"You invited me to eat fried chicken before, and I thought I never got to treat you back, so ....." Liu Huai scratched his head, and he gave Mu Sicheng a cautious look, "Fourth Brother, you're not happy, are you? "

"Not really." Mu Sicheng took the bag, took a bite out of it with two fingers, and then turned his head and gave Liu Huai a fierce look, "I told you not to keep such accounts."

"Are you going to buy me a kidney next time I give you something expensive as a favour?"

"..... What about your father's case?" Mu Sicheng saw that Liu Huai was still arguing with himself about the topic that they had argued about countless times, so he impatiently interrupted and changed the subject, "Did you win the case against the domestic violence offender?"

"It was a bit difficult to gather evidence, but the villagers were willing to testify." Liu Huai smiles coyly, "So it's going well."

"Do you still skateboard, Fourth Brother?"

Mu Sicheng sat up from the bench and threw his empty Coke can into the bin in a shooting pose, then clapped his hands together triumphantly, "Back to work."

"It's going to be finals, go back and revise, you draw me the key points, I'm basically not listening in class, I don't know how these teachers can talk so hypnotically ....."

"..... Fourth Brother, don't blame the teacher for your own sleepiness, you still have to listen well to your major ....."

Liu Huai said, glancing back at Liu Jiayi on the big screen in the commercial street, he was in a trance for a moment, Mu Sicheng followed his gaze and raised his eyebrows: "Speaking of which, this prodigy and you have the same surname eh, five hundred years ago they were family, right? "

"It feels like your sister."

"How can a brother like me have a sister who is so good?" Liu Huai laughs as he sighs a little and looks towards Liu Jiayi, who is wearing a small dress on the big screen and is being interviewed by the media in a decent manner, "But I do have some kinship with her, she's my cousin's daughter, her mother got into university that year and was called over by my dad to tutor me, but I was beaten up so badly by my dad at that time that I was afraid of whatever he did. scared."

"I was afraid she'd get beaten up when she came over as well, and I really didn't want to study, so then this was dropped."

"My cousin is very smart, and her daughter is really good too." Liu Huai smiled very gently as he looked at Liu Jiayi, "I have an eye for Jiayi and always feel that she and I might actually be brother and sister in one life."

"But it's still not better."

Liu Huai smiles with a brow arched: "Otherwise she would have to suffer a lot to be my sister."

Mu Sicheng was just about to say something when his phone rang and he looked down to see - [Caller: Yuan Qingqing].

He paused for a moment before picking up, "Hello?"

"Hello? Mu Sicheng." Yuan Qingqing's voice was as serious as ever, "The class dinner is this Saturday at 6pm, and there are currently thirty-six visitors, so you are invited to come."

Mu Sicheng, while speechless at the tone of what a business invitation this is, spat, "..... Didn't we get together last month, and then again this month?"

"It's Mr. Ren's 60th birthday this month, so we're all getting together to celebrate his birthday." Yuan Qingqing explained seriously, "I've looked at the exam schedule of your college, you have an exam next week, right? If it's urgent and you need to revise, I'll help you Mr. Xiang explain, so you don't have to make up this point, you can congratulate your teacher alone when the time comes and the thought is there."

"..... I'm pretty much done reviewing, it's not like I can't go." Mu Sicheng's toes stomped twice on his skateboard and asked charmingly, "Do you bring family?"

Yuan Qingqing was crisp and clear: "Bring, he's coming with me."

Mu Sicheng was silent for a twisted minute, angry: "He's a man, why is he so clingy! He has to go with you on everything, can't he leave you a little privacy!"

"......?" Yuan Qingqing was confused, "He's with me, what's wrong?"

Mu Sicheng took a deep breath: "It's nothing, I'll be there then too, please let me know."

He paused, "Class president."

"It's what I should do." Yuan Qingqing gave one more instruction, "To come to dinner on Saturday, remember to study more and don't fail your classes."

Mu Sicheng hangs up the phone, squats down and repeatedly pushes his skateboard twice, his whole being falling into a kind of fleshly emo. Liu Huai next to him pats Mu Sicheng's shoulder sympathetically, he is already used to this intermittent state of lost love from his opponent.

"Learn to let go, Fourth Brother."

Mu Sicheng gets up, clips his skateboard angrily and points ahead, "Go, go back and review!"

A group of tall, well-trained men in civilian clothes walked past Mu Sicheng, led by a man with dark blue eyes who stared sternly ahead as the voice of another man came over his headset.

" Captain Tang, the heretics have entered the mall, we have cleared the cinema of visitors and the rear infiltration squad has cooperated."

Tang Erda takes a deep breath: "The former Captain Fang is also ready to collect ....."

A sudden noise erupted in the mall in front of him and Tang Erda, with a glint in her eye, rushed in and then stared at Cen Buming, who had finished housing the heretics.

Tang Erda lowered her eyes to the box of heretics being stepped on by Cen Buming and ground her back teeth before she reluctantly lowered her temper and spoke, "This seems to be the heretic we've been staring at, Captain Cen."

"Hmm." Cen Buming gave a slightly cold nod, "Took you in, no thanks."

Tang Erda took a deep breath as he lifted those untamed dark blue eyes and rolled up his sleeves to reveal a bit of inappropriate aggression.

Su Yang at the other end also saw the situation and was helpless to discourage him, " Captain Tang, calm down!"

"Don't start a fight with Captain Cen in public!"

"It's okay to have a confrontation without being in a public place, right?" Tang Erda stared obscurely at Cen Buming's back as he returned triumphantly with the heretic in tow, "Can I beat him up in his cubicle at the Heretic's Bureau?"

"If you want to get cut by Captain Fang." Su Yang sighed helplessly.

Tang Erda's back stiffened when she heard the name Captain Fang.

" Captain Fang just beat you both up for fighting last time." Su Yang held her forehead, "It's only been a week, Captain Tang, and you're still injured, right?"

"Cen Buming is still wounded, and he's taking it upon himself to cause trouble!" Tang Erda was full of anger, "I told you that we have to divide the field missions among the three teams, it's like taking his job, he's crazy to take the field missions assigned to us, what's wrong with him?!"

"It won't pay him a penny more to take in one more heretic!"

In the meantime, above the mall.

Muke, exquisitely dressed, was propped up against the fence, his long eyelashes dropping as he looked out over the mall at the heretics coming and going, and his tone was cold: "Who's that?"

"Why do you say let's shut down the mall just to shut it down?"

"Some people from the special department." The butler explained in a cold sweat, wondering in his heart how this young master with his volatile temperament suddenly had the nature to patrol his family's chain of malls today, "It's normal procedure."

"Oh yeah?" Muke returned nonchalantly, his eyes dropping in boredom, "All right, go back."

"I don't want to go to the party tonight."

The butler was shocked: "Young master, this is not possible, the master has been preparing for half a year for this banquet, just to launch you as the Mu family's heir!"

" The heir to the Mu family." Muke sneered twice in a meaningful way, "That's not what he thought when I was in bad health."

The housekeeper sighed with mixed feelings and said periodically, "But aren't you getting better now."

"It must have been a blessing from God that you became healthy."

Muke pauses for a moment.

God's blessing?

When he was unhealthy he did want the position of heir to the Mu family very badly, but when he got better he got everything he wanted, but he was extremely bored with everything he saw.

-- it was as if they had been traded for the most important thing he had.

He was always irritable and empty inside.

Muke was quiet: "I don't want to go to the party."

"Let his own bastard son come."

The housekeeper was alarmed and followed Muke's lead, discouraging him with a stern word of advice: "You can't be so capricious, Mr. Mu ....."

In the meantime, the Heresy Handling Authority.

"You're too willful and presumptuous." Lu Yizhan, sitting inside the Heretic Authority, was also speechless, leaning against the wall with his chest clutched, looking at Cen Buming, who was healing in the medical room, and asking helplessly, "Why do you always go and rob the heretics of the third team?"

Cen Buming purses his lips with a grimace.

Yu Fu, wearing a white coat, gave Cen Buming a gentle glance: "Tell me if it hurts?"

--then a hard stitch.

Lu Yizhan was so shocked that he looked at Cen Buming, who was just a little bit paler, and felt a little bit of sympathy: "Fang Dian beat you up, why don't you listen?"

--And you've messed with Fang Dian, Captain Yu has been hard on you for treatment, so it's double torture!

Lu Yizhan exclaims, "Why are you so stubborn? ....."

Cen Buming pauses: "I just ....."

"I always feel that if I take in one less heretic, a lot of things will happen, and I have to take in a lot of heretics, non-stop, in order to do that."

Seeing Lu Yizhan and Yu Fu both staring at him, Cen Buming pursed his lips and looked away, his voice stiff: "..... Just some premonitions of my own."

"I won't next time."

"There haven't been that many heretics lately that we need to be nervous about Captain Cen to this extent, have there?" Yu Fu smiled as he collected his healing equipment, "It's all within normal limits."

"The number of heretics before was indeed abnormally high, but after a certain point it became largely normal, within the load of the Heretic Authority, although there were still a large number of dangerous heretics of the red level, but-"

"- There are Fang Dian and Xie Ta, two humanoid weapons that can handle oh."

" Xie Ta ?" Cen Buming frowned at the name, "I still don't approve of Captain Fang using him as a member of the heretic intake."

"He's a heretic in his own right and also prone to contamination, and even with a surveillance ring there's no guarantee he won't get completely out of control ....."

As he spoke, Xie Ta, with a thumb-thick black surveillance ring around his neck, wearing a Heretic's Authority uniform and boots, walked through the doorway, a man with a long, elongated body and a special black invisible eye, but still with a silver-blue halo around the edge of his pupil, a man who, even in his regular uniform, had a strange coldness and inhumanity about him.

Perhaps because of her distinguished face, Xie Ta always looks cold and unpopular.

Even now, when he hears Cen Buming talking about him behind his back, Xie Ta's eyes do not wander, and he walks through the door of the medical room without a glance.

Cen Buming who was caught red-handed talking small talk: "....."

"Captain Cen should learn how to deal with colleagues properly. Yu Fu smiles and jokes, "It's not a good idea to talk about your colleagues behind their backs, otherwise you'll get beaten up by them in a sack one day if you hear about it again."

Cen Buming, who has already been beaten up by Tang Erda in a sack: "....."

Xie Ta lowered her eyelashes and knocked gently on the door of the office of the Commander of the Judicial Cross.

Fang Dian's cheerful reply soon came from inside: "Xie Ta, right?

Please come in!"

Xie Ta pushed the door and walked in. Wu Ruishu was guarding the desk, clutching a file, and pushed his glasses up in a formal manner, bowed to Xie Ta as a greeting, then turned to Fang Dian and said, "The number of heretics has indeed gradually returned to normal recently, far less than before. Team 3 field teams are currently investigating."

"I see." Fang Dian nodded as she took the papers Wu Ruishu handed her and said with a smile, "It's hard work, I'll just read the rest myself."

Wu Ruishu blushed and waved his hand excitedly: "It's not hard Captain Fang!"

"I, I'm going out first!"

He avoided Xie Ta when he walked past, and it was clear that he was still a bit scared.

"He's not quite used to working with you yet." Fang Dian smiled as she put down her papers and made a gesture to Xie Ta to sit, "How are you getting used to working at the Heretics Authority?"

" Spades, or do you prefer the name Tawil?"

The Final Future

Xie Ta sat down, he shook his head in silence, "Just call me Xie Ta."

The door of Fang Dian's office was knocked again. Fang Dian looked at Xie Ta, who shook her head to indicate that she did not care.

Lu Yizhan pushed in the door and was stunned to see Xie Ta sitting opposite Fang Dian: "Spades is here too."

"It's called Spades, it's called Xie Ta." Fang Dian corrected, "New world line, new weather, don't keep using old names."

"Okay." Lu Yizhan obeyed the order, and changed it quickly as he was told, " Xie Ta is here too."

" Mr. Lu, close the door, you sit too." The moment Fang Dian saw Lu Yizhan close the door, he instantly lost the serious image of a serious Captain of the Judgment Army of the Cross, and slumped backwards in his office chair, his eyes lax, "..... I'm so tired, I've finally dealt with all the heretics from the previous world line. It's time to take a break."

"Good work." Lu Yizhan poured Fang Dian a glass of water, a little distressed, "The number of heretics has not been so outrageous lately."

"The essence of heresy is evil desire." Fang Dian said as she sipped her water, " Bai Liu closed the door so that the desires on the other side couldn't spill over into this worldline, a worldline where everyone's desires formed heretics wouldn't be so many, within a normal range, though it would be quite a few, at least it would be barely manageable."

Fang Dian said, and the smile on her face faded.

When the name Bai Liu was mentioned, the expressions on everyone's faces disappeared.

Xie Ta suddenly got up, and said a polite goodbye: "I've finished my assignment and will go back first."

Fang Dian watched with some concern as Xie Ta left, closing the door behind her, she covered her eyes and let out a long sigh, "In this reset world line, the only people who still have memories are the three of us, you, me, and Xie Ta."

"I don't even know how you managed to keep all three of our memories from Bai six." Lu Yizhan pats Fang Dian's shoulder and sighs too.

Fang Dian replied in seconds, "A cheat, how else can you keep it, but only for three people."

"How do you cheat?" Lu Yizhan inquired with great curiosity.

Fang Dian smiles, "Some unique cheating techniques."

"..... I don't know when Bai Liu will come back." Fang Dian said and got melancholy again, she lay back and looked at the ceiling, lost in thought, "It's been ten years since the reset, and Bai Liu hasn't come back."

"I sometimes wonder if that plan you had with Bai Liu to cheat is really working?"

Lu Yizhan Half silent: "I don't know ....."

It was a very unsure plan from the start, Lu Yizhan didn't even know if Bai Liu would go along with it and was even more surprised than Bai Liu when he finally chose to.

It was a plan to cheat from the edge of the dense forest where Bai Liu first met the game's Lu Yizhan, also known as the Reverse God.

Lu Yizhan, after seeing the future, is sure that Bai six will use various means to make them move along this future, such as Bai Liu becoming an evil god and Bai Liu killing him, since in the future, no matter how much they struggle, Bai six, the god, will interfere with them to move towards this future, why can't they act out a future scene that Bai six wants to see for Bai six? Why can't they play out the future that Bai six wants to see for Bai six?

Bai six gets the results he wants to see, and they decide what process they want.

--This process they wanted was the world line [Dense Forest Frontier].

Bai six wanted to delegate the status of [Heir of the Evil God] to Bai Liu in the world line of the borderlands of the dense forest, and the delegation of this status required the disappearance of the old god. heir] identity.

As long as Bai Liu accepts this identity, but does not fully accept it, then the old gods of this worldline are dead in name only, and the new god, Bai Liu, has not yet been born.

The old evil god has fallen, and a new god has yet to be born, a godless worldline whose nominal successor to the evil god is Bai Liu, then Bai Liu is destined to get this worldline.

Then as soon as he got this world line, the subsequent Bai Liu which used Bai six to bend over and enter the game stored in the system background soul blocked the door, he still had half of his soul in his own hands - that is, in the orphanage, little Bai six sold him the soul.

--That's his soul too.

Bai Liu will be able to completely wash away his identity as an evil god by using this half soul to re-land from the world line of the dense forest frontier, and instead of being a vessel for all his desires, he will be able to return to the world line as a normal human being.

But therein lies the problem .....

Lu Yizhan took a very sad sip of tea: "This cheating scheme is very fickle."

"It's true that we didn't expect Cen Buming and Daniel to get out of hand among us and everything that followed just completely fell apart."

Lu Yizhan paused, "I'm not sure how much sanity Bai Liu maintained at the end, whether he remembered the plan or not, or even if he could remember that he was Bai Liu, a human being, and not an evil god, or a key to a locked door, after he had blocked it."

"There are many more people here waiting for him."

"I hope he finds his way back."

"It's almost time for him to enter the game in the first place." Lu Yizhan let out a long breath as he stared blankly at his own reflection in the teacup, "That was the last worldline archive point that could be fused in with the dense forest frontier."

"If you miss it, he'll never come back."

Xie Ta returned home alone, having used his bonus and salary from the Heresy Authority to buy the small house - the rental house where he and Bai Liu had lived together back in the day.

He clumsily followed his memory and renovated the house to look like that.

But the people who lived with him are no longer there.

Xie Ta opened his wardrobe and all that was hanging in there, apart from the uniform of the Heretic's Authority, was a very large and worn long, thin, ghostly leather puppet costume. position.

Bai Liu .....

I have well in pain.

When are you coming back?

The stars in the sky turned and aligned in some sort of trajectory, giving off a strange silvery-blue glow as a shooting star slid down.

Mu Sicheng's eyelids fluttered as he fell into a strange dream, a dream of many demons, a dream of Yuan Qingqing's death, a dream of something so unbelievably real, so real that he seemed to have actually experienced it -

-- dreamed of a strange man reaching out to him, wearing a white shirt.

[- Yes, I will always be your friend].

Mu Sicheng's eyes snapped open.

Liu Jiayi, who has just come out of an interview in the studio, receives the mineral water handed to her by her parents and her eyes suddenly go grey for a moment before she stops drinking.

"Around here ....." Liu Jiayi looked up very slowly at her parents, "do they have red bean pancakes?"

Her mother looked at her and was shocked: "Why are you crying, Jiayi?"

"Did I cry?" Liu Jiayi shed tears unconsciously as she covered her heart and murmured in a trance, "I don't know ....."

"I just have a sudden craving for red bean pancakes."

At the party, Muke, glamorous and crowded, looked down at his obsequious bastard son with his glass of red wine, and at his father, who was showing off his financial skills, and his irritation reached a crescendo.

..... might as well get a heart attack and leave this life early.

At least with heart disease you will encounter .....

As the idea flashed through Muke's mind, he was struck by a sudden shock.

Will meet ..... who?

Tang Erda was back at the Heretic's Office, with a grim look on his face as he watched over the heretics, and the interrogation room opposite was empty, no one had been in there for a long time, the last time anyone had been brought in for interrogation was Cen Buming.

He didn't like the interrogation room and never went in there, which Cen Buming used to make fun of him several times in a sinister way.

Normally, Tang Erda would have been fine with Cen Buming taunting him like this, and he did, but it was the interrogation room .....

Tang Erda's eyes fell steadily on the interrogation room, and he took a deep breath.

He always felt that he had, somewhere, done something very bad and subjected a person to something very tragic.

But he had never been in an interrogation room.

..... Who is this person who has left him with an unforgettable guilt and indebtedness in his heart?

When Xie Ta opened his eyes the next day, the Muppets on his body had more bruises, the house in front of him had something that said something about the popularity of the books in the study spread themselves out, fruit trays and melons appeared that he had never bought, the four corners of the table showed signs of nibbling, and on the bottom shelf of the fridge, there were two expired Cutie-Doos.

His pupils flinched.

..... This is ..... world lines are overlapping?

Xie Ta rushed out, his mind blank as he looked around the world.

So where could Bai Liu be?

The wax museum in the town of Siren no longer houses mermaids, thieves on the last last train of the night are caught red-handed stealing, the statues of the gods in the church in the broken orphanage have collapsed, and the scent of perfume in the rose factory has become mild and bland.

A moment when time and fate crossed paths and the fallen gods granted happiness to the Old Believers.

And the Old Believers never forget.

" Mu Sicheng, it's time for a birthday celebration, where are you running to!"

"Jiayi, Jiayi-chan, the interview is about to start, the studio is over there, Jiayi-chan! Where are you going!"

" Young Master Muke, later the Master will come to talk to you about the right to distribute shares in the Mu Group, this meeting is very important, you must speak to the Master properly ..... Young Master Muke where are you?!"

" Captain Tang, wait let's go rob the second team of heretics to take it out! You made a deal with us yesterday ..... eh, where's Captain Tang?"

The heart that lurks beneath the glacier, the sparks that fly in the dense forest.

I hate you.

I love you.

"This is Heresy Processing Bureau, Antarctic Bureau 4! Hello Mr. Spades, may I ask if you need us to send a special plane to pick you up and bring you here for your mission?"

"Has anyone new turned up at .....?"

"That's not true."

The evil gods traded feelings and pain for sacrifices, and on the shrine, the floating anchor was fished up for the first time to a reality other than the game.

" The Heresy Authority branch here in Luming County hasn't seen any suspicious people show up either, Mr. Spades."

"Wearing a white shirt and suit trousers, about 176, good looking, any portrait? If so, we'll post a search notice for you then."

"Lest you call and come and ask for it every day."

Foolishly thinking she was not getting love, the anchor stubbornly travelled back in time to meet the lonely teenager under Qiao Mu.

"Hello, this is Qiao Mu Private High School."

"It's you again."

"..... We assure you that there has never been a student called Bai Liu in our school, have you remembered the wrong school? Please don't call again."

Verified over and over again, disappointed over and over again, the devotee begins to wonder if the gods are deceiving him or her.

Is he really coming back?

After spending the whole night searching all the addresses, Xie Ta, as usual, had no luck. He was ready to return to his rented house, but the moment he inserted the key into the door, Xie Ta was stunned - the lock he had left behind before he left was unlocked.

He pushed the door open.

The man standing next to the window, wearing a white shirt and suit trousers, stared blankly into the rising daylight at the man who was looking at him with a smile on his face.

Bai Liu stands against the light, his smile arched in his eyes.

"I'm back."

"Do you want to join us for hotpot tonight?"

The Final Future

Chapter Notes

See the end of the chapter for notes

Of course, the hotpot didn't work out, but Xie Ta broke out.

When Bai Liu was held down on the bed, the evil god lord, who had been a key without a sex life for years, hadn't reacted to what his devotee was up to and was still catching up with great interest, "I can't believe they've all learned to live on their own, I think I left back in the day ..... Well."

Then there was no more then.

It is the next afternoon when Bai Liu opens his eyes. He wakes up slowly, and as soon as he moves, Xie Ta wakes up quickly next to him.

Bai Liu: "..... Give a mouthful of food before you do it."

Xie Ta dressed Bai Liu, pressed him to the bed and kissed him for a while, asking, "What do you want to eat?"

Bai Liu lazily nuzzles Xie Ta's neck, eyes half-lidded, and asks with a smile, "What can you do?"

Xie Ta is of course ..... will do nothing.

He had been eating in the Heretic's canteen all year, on missions all day, with few days off, usually falling asleep when he came back, and occasionally not, cuddling with a Muppet all night.

"What do you want to eat?" Xie Ta stared straight at Bai Liu, "I'm learning now."

Bai Liu: "....."

That's not necessary, I'll probably be over-starved by the time you learn.

After Bai Liu asked Xie Ta about his salary and current balance, the penniless evil god lamented in a mixed voice: "I didn't think you'd have a car, a house, five insurance and a pension, and a monthly salary of over 10,000. ....."

"You've lived the life I could only dream of back then."

Xie Ta said, "It's all yours."

Bai Liu was so relieved to hear this, he gave Xie Ta a kiss and smiled: "Let's go out to eat, your treat."

"Have the hotpot."

Xie Ta didn't know how to drive a car, but he remembered that Bai Liu liked to drive a motorbike, so he bought one, but he didn't usually ride it to and from work because he could move faster on his own than on a motorbike, so he kept it there.

"Wow." Bai Liu surveyed the garage and his eyes glowed, "You even have a garage."

" Lu Yizhan asked to buy it." Xie Ta explains, "saying that the house with a set of garages would be more convenient to live in and would be more valuable, and you would like it more, so you bought it all."

Bai Liu gave the bike a couple of twists, the handles were brand new and Xie Ta had never really used them before.

As if he had thought about it a thousand times in his head, Xie Ta naturally put on his helmet and then wrapped it around Bai Liu's waist, pulling him back and spreading his legs around Bai Liu, whose back was pressed against Xie Ta's chest, so tightly that he paused for a moment.

"You loosen up a bit." Bai Liu said.

"Why?" Xie Ta didn't let go.

"The motorbike is jarring to drive." Bai Liu euphemistically states, "It will react."

Xie Ta's tone was natural: "It's normal to react to you."

-meant to react and didn't let go, just held on, he didn't feel anything.

"....." Bai Liu exhaled while his face heated up, he had been a key for ten years, and all of a sudden he came to earth, and for a moment he didn't quite understand if the rituals of this world were not quite the same as before.

Bai Liu wondered from the bottom of his heart why this lizard, could still say such things so openly?

Hasn't he been a human being for ten years?

"No, it affects my driving." Bai Liu's tone went down firmly. "You go a bit further back."

Xie Ta paused, barely a centimetre loose, "Oh."

It sounded light in tone, but there was just something reluctant about it.

Anyway, when he finally got the motorbike out of the garage, Bai Liu was driving and heard the phone ringing on the road with Xie Ta behind him, but Xie Ta didn't answer it, so Bai Liu asked, "Who's calling?"

His smile faded a little, "Still coming to you on break, been making so many phone calls, you guys have a good relationship, right?"

After all, ten years had passed and it was only natural that Xie Ta should have an intimate relationship other than his.

Xie Ta's voice is a bit muffled: "It's a good relationship, but I don't want to talk to him right now."

"He pays my salary."

Bai Liu's tone became more sincere after a pause: "Take it, you have to support me, you can't lose your job."

Xie Ta answered the phone and Lu Yizhan's hysterical, broken voice came from the other side: " Spades, is Bai Liu at your place!!!"

Xie Ta paused for a moment, held the phone a little further away and lied lightly, "No."

"Absolutely!!!" Lu Yizhan was practically yelling, "Bureau 4 and I said you didn't even call over to ask about Bai Liu today, you must have found Bai Liu, give me Bai Liu you lizard!"

"I'm telling you, we have a lot of things to consult him on our side, all very important and serious matters, you are not allowed to sneak in and hog him all by yourself ..... dood ....."

Xie Ta hung up the phone with a blank face, tapped out Lu Yizhan's identity card, blacked it out, paused, and then turned off the phone again before tucking it back into his pocket with relief.

Bai Liu was driving his motorbike, the wind whistling in his helmet, he didn't hear much of what Xie Ta was saying, and after hearing Xie Ta hang up the phone, Bai Liu casually asked, "What did your boss tell you?"

"I told him my lover was back." Xie Ta said shallowly, "He said he'd give me two more days off to spend with you and not worry about work for a while."

Bai Liu is eerily silent for two minutes.

What kind of boss is there in this world?

How had he never come across it before?

Bai Liu parked his motorbike outside the shop, took off his helmet, locked it up and turned his head to Xie Ta with a smile on his face again, "Then let's have a good rest for a couple of days before I go out to look for a job."

Xie Ta, who was taking his helmet off, gave a start when he said, "..... looking for a job?"

"Yeah." Bai Liu takes it for granted, "I don't have any money now, I'll have to eat later, so of course I'll have to find a job."

"But I don't know what kind of suitable job I can find anymore."

Bai Liu speaks with some heartfelt bitterness: "Although the world lines have merged, most traces of me are still erased, I have no qualifications, no work experience and not many jobs that I can do."

Despite being an evil god with many strange abilities, these abilities don't make a living, and Bai Liu doesn't want to earn money with them.

"I'll have to ask you to feed me for a while." Bai Liu smiled, and he leaned over very gently and whispered in Xie Ta's ear, "I can pay you in kind for feeding me."

Xie Ta: "!!!"

What a good thing ..... No, Xie Ta took a deep breath, shook her head, shook the jumbled thoughts out of her head and looked straight at Bai Liu: "Aren't you going to see them?"

This is what he finds strange, Bai Liu came back only to him, so far not even Lu Yizhan contacted him and went to look for a job two days later and stayed with him in between .....

Is this not going to meet those people?

Bai Liu lowered his helmet and turned his back to Xie Ta, his voice calm: "There's no need to meet, is there?"

"They don't even remember me."

Xie Ta was stunned, and he was about to say that Fang Dian and Lu Yizhan remembered you, when he saw Bai Liu turn to him with a smile and say, "And knowing me would be an unmitigated disaster for all these people, wouldn't it?"

"The me that knew them before didn't bring anything good to them, and the me that knows them again now doesn't seem to bring anything other than interference with their already good and peaceful lives now."

"So it's still ....." Bai Liu raised his eyes and he intoned a smile, "That's all it takes."

"I just need to be with you."

Xie Ta's words of explanation reached his lips and were interrupted by Bai Liu's last words, which stopped on the edge of his mouth as he stared at Bai Liu, slowly repeating his words, "..... only with me, with me?"

Bai Liu nodded with an unmistakable natural attitude as he turned to Xie Ta and smiled almost a little warmly, "Yeah, with you it's fine."

Xie Ta's gaze straightened: "Good."

"Then it's just with me."

They went into the hotpot restaurant, meanwhile, outside Xie Ta's house.

Mu Sicheng hammered the door of the room with a grim look on his face, "The man is not here."

"I called Bai Liu's phone earlier, but I couldn't get through, he's probably just arrived on this world line and hasn't got a phone yet." Muke pushed his gold-rimmed glasses, the white light on them flashing as he explained in a gentle tone, "I can't rule out the possibility that Spades the lizard didn't want us to have access to Bai Liu and wanted him all to himself, so he deliberately didn't get Bai Liu a phone."

"It's not to rule out the possibility." Liu Jiayi, wearing sunglasses, she's a celebrity now and wears them when she travels, clutches her chest, her tone icy, "Yes more than likely."

"Don't incriminate Spades yet." Tang Erda called Xie Ta while taking a deep breath to reassure the group, "I work with him, he's calm and steady, he doesn't look like this kind of person, I'll call him up later and ask around ....."

"Beep - the number you have called is switched off, please call again later ....."

A group of people stared straight at Tang Erda.

Tang Erda: "....."

Spades, you dog lizard!

Bai Liu finished his hot pot and he walked out of the hot pot restaurant to the dull street lights and light snow falling from the sky.

These things dawned on him for a moment.

In the door, the passage of time was not perceptible, and he had forgotten that there were actually such things as seasons in this world.

Xie Ta took off his jacket and put it on Bai Liu's shoulders. Bai Liu was stunned for a moment as he gathered his jacket and found some warmth on it: "You ....."

"There's body heat."

"Well." Xie Ta looked at Bai Liu very quietly, his voice as soft as falling snow, as if he was afraid to scare him away, "I had it right after you shut the door."

"I still have a heartbeat."

Xie Ta placed Bai Liu's cold hand on his chest and raised his eyes to look at him intently and seriously: "Now it's a fast dance."

Bai Liu's long, snow-fallen eyelashes trembled as he looked at Xie Ta's handsome, unrealistic face in the streetlight, leaned over and slowly closed his eyes.

--This scene now is so perfect for kissing.

Xie Ta also embraced Bai Liu's shoulders, and he leaned down, eyes downcast, to kiss.

Xie Ta instantly reached out with his right hand and grasped it, his gaze cold as he turned his hand to throw it back.

"Spades, the dog lizard!" Mu Sicheng came cursing, his eyes red as he looked at the stunned, thinly dressed Bai Liu under the streetlight, and opened his mouth to curse, " Bai Liu, you're no good either!"

"I can't believe you didn't tell us when you got back! Did you not treat us like friends!"

Bai Liu was at a loss for words, he didn't know what to say, "I ....."

Mu Sicheng lunged forward, shouting hysterically as he did so, "You beast!"

He cried and hammered Bai Liu: "You're just happy to torture us! Seeing us suffer for you!"

"The new evil god set huh!"

"Don't hit Bai Liu." Muke quickly came to the rescue, looking at Bai Liu, his eyes also glowing red, and took two deep breaths before he spoke with difficulty, "But you really didn't do the right thing this time, Bai Liu."

Bai Liu, who thought Muke would be on his side: "....."

He apologised in kind, still with a little smile on his face, "Well, I was wrong."

"You're such a big animal!" Liu Jiayi raised her hand and pelted Bai Liu with a snowball as she cried, "Buy me a lifetime of red bean cakes!"

The grin on Bai Liu's face was becoming more and more obvious as he raised his hand to deflect Liu Jiayi's snowball and pretended to plead, "I'm unemployed right now, so it's a bit difficult for me to fulfil this requirement."

"Who cares!" Liu Jiayi cried and yelled at him, "Buy it for me!"

"Okay, okay." Tang Erda saw that Bai Liu's lips were white with cold, he quickly took off his clothes to give Bai Liu a hand, only to see that Bai Liu already had one on his shoulders, Tang Erda frowned and picked it up, "Who gave you that jacket, so thin?"

"Drape it over me."

Xie Ta stares coldly at Tang Erda's jacket from the side.

But there was no stopping it.

He has always had a poor sense of temperature, so his clothes are light, and his jacket is indeed a little thin for Bai Liu now.

But that's okay, this winter is sure to be warm and lively.

" Bai Liu, go and buy a coat." Xie Ta said.

Chapter End Notes

> This translation is a personal project born out of my admiration for 壶鱼辣椒 and their extraordinary ability to craft a story that transcends borders. My goal was to bring their voice to a new audience while remaining true to the essence of the original work.
>
> Working on this novel has been an enriching experience—one that deepened my appreciation for the nuances of language and the universal themes that connect us all. I hope this translation conveys the heart of the story and allows you, the reader, to experience its magic as I did.
>
> Thank you for joining me on this literary journey. Translating this book was a labor of love, and I’m grateful for the opportunity to share it with you.

Please drop by the Archive and comment to let the creator know if you enjoyed their work!

Table of Contents

Preface
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of Siren
The small town of siren
The small town of siren
The small town of siren
The small town of siren
The small town of siren
The small town of siren
The small town of siren
Lobby
Lobby
Lobby
Reality
Reality
Reality
Lobby
Lobby
Burst Last Train
Burst Last Train

Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Burst last train
Lobby
Lobby
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Lobby
Lobby
Lobby
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home

The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home
The Loving Welfare Home

The Loving Welfare Home
Lobby
Reality
Reality
Reality
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Bureau of Heresy and Dangerous Treatment
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory

The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory

The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
The Rose Factory
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age

The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
The Ice Age
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
Reality
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands

The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Dense Forest Borderlands
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
The Game Pool
Reality
Reality
The Game Pool
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village

Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Yinshan Village
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to own Five buildings

How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Buildings
How to Own Five Building
How to Own Five Building
How to Own Five Building
How to Own Five Building
How to Own Five Building
How to Own Five Building
How to Own Five Building
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
Pre-season
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The First Word Line
The First World Line
The First World Line
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
Living Together (Extra)
The Challenge
The Challenge
Evil God Festival - Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse

Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse
Evil God Festival – Boathouse

Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
Qiao Mu Private High School
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
The Challenge
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky

City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
City in the Sky
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
The Lost Land of Gold
Playoffs

Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
Playoffs
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Drowning Man from the Future
The Evil God's Game
The Evil God's Game
The Temple of Nightmares
The Temple of Nightmares
The Temple of Nightmares
The Temple of Nightmares
The Final Future
The Final Future
The Final Future
Afterword